PREFACE TO FIRST EDITION

The second volume of the History of Dharmaśāstra was published in the third quarter of 1941. In the Preface to that volume I held forth hopes that the next volume dealing with the remaining subjects comprised in Dharmaśāstra might be placed before scholars in about three years thereafter. The Great War was then being fought in Europe and it was generally believed that India would remain free from the fear of actual invasion. But such fond hopes were shattered by the sudden attack on Pearl Harbour by Japanese bombers on 7th December 1941. Japan gained rapid and phenomenal victories and within about three months from the attack on Pearl Harbour vast territories from the Philippines to Burma fell into the hands of the victors. Calcutta and Trincomalee were bombed. Serious fears were entertained about an invasion of the mainland of India by land, sea and air. There was great panic in such coastal cities as Madras, Bombay and Karachi. The matters uppermost in the minds of Government officials and the members of the public were A. R. P. measures, the recruiting of men for the army, navy and air force and the removal of families and valuables to places of safety in the interior. Important and rare books from the libraries of the Bombay Asiatic Society and of the University of Bombay were taken to distant places for reasons of security. During almost the whole of 1942 it was very difficult for me to work on the preparation of the third volume in the midst of a general atmosphere of panic caused by the fear of invasion and the removal of valuable reference books from Bombay. Owing to the war there has been great scarcity of paper and printing also has become very costly. I decided upon writing only on a few of the several subjects that remained to be dealt with and chose Rājadharmā, Vyavahāra and Sadācāra, the treatment of which is now placed before the public. Scarcity of paper and labour is responsible for the fact that this third volume has been in the press for nearly three years. The present volume increased in bulk beyond expectation. The fourth and last volume will deal with the following subjects: Pātaka, karmavipāka and prāyaścitta; antyesti, āsauca and srāddha; tīrtha; vrata; kāla and muhūrta; śānti; Paurāṇa dharma; the influence of the Pūrvamīmāṃsā and other śāstras on dharmaśāstra; the religious and philosophical background of dharmaśāstra; the essentials of our culture, its future, the coming social and other trends and their impact on the dogmas and ideals of Dharmaśāstra. I am personally anxious to finish all the remaining work as early as possible. But looking to my age (I am nearly 67 now), to my ailments and to the number of subjects that remain to be dealt with, it is impossible for me to say when the next and last volume may be published. This volume also is full of quotations, refers to many inscriptions, judicial decisions and legislative enactments. The reasons for this have been stated at length in the Preface to the second volume and I do not desire to repeat them here. In the general index to the second volume full references to works like the Manusmṛti were not given, because such works were quoted on almost every page. But some critics found fault with this, therefore in the index to this volume full references to all works are inserted.

All that now remains is the pleasant duty of acknowledging my obligations to others. Bloomfield's Vedic Concordance, the Vedic Index of Professors Macdonell and Keith and several volumes of the Sacred Books of the East have been very useful in preparing this volume as in the case of the preceding one. I wish to mention specially the debt I owe to the late Mahāmahopādhyāya Kamalakṛṣṇa Smṛtīrtha for his editorial work on twelve volumes on the different branches of dharmaśāstra, which have been of great use to me in writing all the volumes of my History viz. Hāralatā, Vivā daratnākara, Gṛhastharatnākara, Kṛtyaratnākara, Tīrthacintāmaṇi, Varsakriyākaumudī, Dānakriyākaumudī, Śrāddhakriyākaumudī, Suddhikaumudī, Dandavivēka, Rājadharmakaustubha and Agastyasamhitā. I am highly obliged to Paramahansa Svāmi Kevalānanda Sarasvatī of Wai for frequent help and guidance in solving some intricate problems of Dharmaśāstra, to Prof N. A. Gore, M. A. of Poona for help in the careful correction of proofs, to Tarkatīrtha Raghunāthaśāstri Kojke of Lonavla and Mr. N. G. Chapekar, B. A., LL. B. (retired F. O. Sub-judge), of Badlapur for reading through the whole volume and suggesting some additions and corrections.

Assistance in various ways during the progress of the work for the last four years was very kindly rendered by a host of friends and acquaintances, among whom I should like to make special mention of Prof H. D. Velankar, Dr R. N. Dandekar, Dr. S. K. Belvalkar, Rao Bahadur Prof. Rangaswami Aiyangar, Dr. A. S. Altekar, Mr. P. K. Gode, Dr. Raghavan, Mr. S. N. Joshi of Bhārata-ītiḥāsa-saṁśodhaka-maṇḍala at Poona, Mr. Bhabatosh

Bhattacharya (son of M M Kamalakrsna Smrtitirtha), Mr S L Katre of Ujjain, Prof. A. M. Paramasivanandan of Pachaiappa College at Madras, the late Pandit Rangacarya Raddi. Thanks are due to all these and many others for help and interest in this volume. It need not be expressly stated that I alone am responsible for the views and mistakes contained in this volume. I sincerely thank the Manager of the Aryabhushan Press, Poona, for carrying out the work of printing with care and promptitude in spite of difficulties caused by war conditions and paper and labour shortage.

In a work bristling with thousands of quotations and references it is likely that many slips have escaped attention. The indulgence of the reader is sought for forgiveness in the matter of several misprints in the footnotes caused by loss or displacement of the parts of letters in the process of printing.

RĀJADHARMA

(GOVERNMENT AND STATECRAFT)

CHAPTER I

Rājadharmā has been a subject of discussion in works on dharmaśāstra from very ancient times. The Āp. Dh. S. II 9 25.1 says 'The general and special *dharma*s of all varnas have been explained: but now we shall declare the dharma of a king in particular'. Āp then states that the king should cause to be built a capital and a palace, the gates of which both should face the south; that the palace should be in the heart of the capital; that in front of the capital there was to be a hall called 'āman-trana' (hall of invitation); that to the south of the town there was to be an assembly house with doors on the north and south. Āp requires that in the king's realm no brāhmana should suffer hunger, sickness, cold or heat; Āp gives regulations about the assembly house and about persons who were to be allowed to engage in gambling; he prescribes that (the exercise in) arms, dancing, singing and music should not go on anywhere except in the houses of the king's servants, that the king was to see that there was no danger from thieves in villages and forests, that the king should donate fields and money to brāhmanas according to their worth without detriment to his servants, that the king who meets death in recovering the property of brāhmanas and other warlike persons who meet death in fighting for a similar worthy cause reap the merit of a sacrifice (i. e. reach heaven as reward); that the king should appoint in towns and villages officers and their subordinates, who are pure and truthful, for the protection of the subjects against thieves and who are to be made to make good what is stolen; that they are to collect lawful taxes for the king from the people except from learned brāhmanas, women of all castes, minors, students staying with teachers and ascetics fulfilling the rules of their order, śūdras who do menial work for the higher castes (such as washing their feet), persons that are blind, deaf or dumb. Āp. then lays down punishments for adultery and rape, for slander and defamation, for manslaughter, for theft and appropriation of another's land, for breach of contract to cultivate the field of another, for a herdsman leaving his herd or negligently allowing it to perish. He states that if the king does not punish the guilty he incurs sin, that in disputes judges should be men of learning, clever and fulfilling their duties, that witnesses were to tell the truth and were to be punished if they be untruthful. It will be noticed how Āp briefly covers the whole field of rājadharmā. In the Śāntiparva of the Mahābhārata rājadharmā is dealt with at great length in chapters 56-130 and to some extent in 131-172. The Manusmṛti also states at the beginning of chap VII (1) that it will expound rājadharmas. That great literary activity on the science and art of government went on for many centuries before the Christian era follows from several considerations. The Anuśāsanaparva (chap 398) speaks of the śāstras composed by Brhaspati and Usanas. The Śāntiparva (581-3) names as expounders of rājasūtra Brhaspati, Bharadvāja, Gaurasīras, Kāvya, Mahendra, Manu Prācetasā and Viśālākṣa. Śāntiparva (102 31-32) opposes the view of Śāmbara to that of ācāryas<sup>1</sup>. The Arthasāstra of Kautilya mentions five schools (viz those of the Mānavas, the Bārhaspatyas, the Ausānasas, the Pārāśaras and the Āmbhīyas), seven individual teachers (V. 5, and I. 8) only once (viz Bāhudantīputra, Dirgha Cārāyana, Ghotamukha, Kaninka Bhāradvāja, Kātyāyana, Kṛiṇjalka, Pisunaputra,) and several times mentions the views of Bhāradvāja, Kaunapadanta, Parāśara, Pisuna, Vāṭavyādhi, Viśālākṣa. Kautilya also cites at least 53 times the views of ācāryas, almost in every case for dissent. Śānti 103 44 refers to a Bhāṣya on rājasāstra. Is it possible to see in this a reference to one out of the bhāṣyakāras indicated in the verse appended at the end of the Kautilya or to the Kautilya itself? Another fact indicative of the systematization of the science of government is that in the Mahābhārata, the Rāmāyana, Manu and Kautilya ideas expressed by numbers had already been stereotyped long before those works were written viz such as saptāṅga rājya (State with seven constituent elements), sāḍgunya (the six ways of policy viz alliance, declaration of war &c), three śaktis, the four upāyas (sāma, dāna, bheda, danda), astavarga, and pañcavarga (Manu VII 155), the 18 and 15 tīrthas (Sabhāparva 5 38)<sup>2</sup>. about the Rājāsāstras of Brhaspati, Uśanas, Bhāradvāja culled from the Mahābhārata and other ancient works vide my paper on them in the Journal of the University of Bombay, vol. XI part 2 pp. 73-83, 1942.

The fulfilment of their duties and responsibilities by rulers was of paramount importance to the stability and orderly development of society and to the happiness of individuals in the State and therefore one often finds that rājadharmā is said to be the root of or the quintessence of all dharmas. Śāntiparva (63.25) states 'know that all dharmas are merged in rājadharmā; that rājadharmas are at the head of all dharmas' and (141.9-10) 'the welfare, good rains, sickness, calamities and death among people owe their origin to the king<sup>3</sup>'. It was the king's duty to see that the people in his kingdom acted according to the rules laid down in the smṛtis for the several varnas and āśramas, to administer justice and to interfere when his help was sought for by a parisad (assembly of learned men) in enforcing the prāyaścitta (penance) prescribed for various lapses. Vide Gautama X. 7-8, XI. 9-11, Āp. Dh. S II. 5. 10. 13-16<sup>4</sup>, Vasiṣṭha 19.1-2, Viṣṇu III. 2-3, Nārada (prakīrṇaka, 5-7 and 33-34), Śāntiparva 77.33 and 57.15, Matsyapurāṇa 215.63, Mārkaṇḍeya-purāṇa 27.28 and 28.36 and H. Dh. vol. II. p. 965. Therefore it may be said with truth (as done by the Mahābhārata) that rājadharmā was the highest goal of all the world, that it comprehended within itself all rules of ācāra, vyavahāra (administration of justice) and prāyaścitta (penance). It is on account of this all-pervading influence of government or royal power that the Mahābhārata frequently emphasizes that the king is the maker of his age, that it is he who can usher a golden age or an age of strife and misery for the country<sup>5</sup>. The Sukranītisāra (I.

59-60) remarks that one should learn from śāstra what are good and evil actions, give up evil deeds and perform good ones and that the king is hence declared to be the cause of (good or evil) times according as he does good or evil acts Śukra IV. 1, 60 states that the king is the prompter of his age

Though rājadharma was thus an integral part of dharmaśāstra and was one of the most important subjects therein, yet apart from the works on dharmaśāstra separate treatises dealing with rājadharma alone came into existence in very early times Śāntiparva (chap 59) states that originally in the Kṛta age there was no king nor punishment, that then moha (delusion), greed and lust entered men, that in order to provide against the complete destruction of dharma, Brahmā composed a work in one hundred thousand chapters on dharma, artha, kāma and mokṣa (verses 30 and 79), that part of this work on Nīti (science of government) was abridged by Śāṅkara Viśālākṣa (verse 80, and so it was called Vaiśālākṣa) into 10000 chapters, that Indra studied it and reduced it to 5000 chapters (and the work was called Bāhūdantaka, verse 83), that it was compressed into 3000 chapters by Brhaspati (and so was called Barhaspatya) and that Kāvya (Uśanas) reduced the work to 1000 chapters. The Kāmasūtra (I 5-8) contains a somewhat similar story that Prajāpati composed a work in one hundred thousand chapters, that Manu abridged it as regards dharma, Brhaspati as regards artha and Nandī abridged in 1000 chapters the science of erotics. The Śāntiparva (69) gives (verses 33-74) a summary of the contents of the work of Brahmā on rājadharma which remarkably agrees with the principal topics of the Kautīliya

The Nītiprakāśikā (I 21-22) states that Brahmā, Mahēśvara, Skanda, Indra, Prācetasas Manu, Brhaspati, Śukra, Bhāradvāja, Veda-Vyāsa, Gaurasīras were the expounders of Rājasāstra, that Brahmā composed a work on rājasāstra in 100000 chapters, which was gradually reduced in size by each of the above-mentioned founders until Gaurasīras reduced it to 500 chapters and Vyāsa to 300 The Śukranītisāra (I 2-4) states that Brahmā composed nītiśāstra in 100000 verses, which was subsequently abridged by Vasistha and others (including Śukra)

It is interesting to note the names given to the science of government The most appropriate word is 'rājasāstra' and it is employed by the Mahābhārata, which speaks of Brhaspati, Bhāradvāja and others as 'rājasāstra-pranētārah' (vide p 2 above) The Nītiprakāśikā (I, 21-22) also dubs the divine and human writers on government 'rājāsāstrānām pranetārah.' The same word is employed by such ancient classical writers as Āśvaghosa in his Buddhacarita (I. 46).<sup>6</sup> The first verse in P1 of Edgerton's reconstructed Pāṇcatantra performs obeisance to Manu, Brhaspati, Sukra, Parāśara and his son and Cānakya as the authors of nṛpaśāstra (science of kingship). Another name is Dandāniti. The Śāntiparva (59. 78) explains why Dandāniti is so called viz 'this world is led (on to the right path) by danda (the power of punishment, sanction) or this science carries (or sets forth) the rod of punishment; hence it is called dandāniti and it (faces) pervades the three worlds'. In Śāntiparva 69. 76 it is stated that 'Dandāniti controls the four varṇas so as to lead them on to the performance of their duties and when it is employed by the ruler properly, it makes them desist from adharma'.<sup>7</sup> Śānti 63. 28 identifies Dandāniti with rājadharmas. The Kautiliya (I. 4) explains 'Danda is the means of the stability and welfare of Ārvikṣiki, Trayī (the three Vedas) and Vārta; the rules that treat of danda are called dandāniti, which is a means of acquiring what has not been acquired, which safeguards what is acquired, which increases what is guarded and distributes (increased wealth) among the deserving'.<sup>8</sup> The Mahābhārata says (Śānti 69. 102) that a wise ksatriya, putting dandāniti in front, should always desire to acquire what is till then unacquired and should guard what is acquired.<sup>9</sup> The Nītisāra (II. 15) says that dama (control or chastisement) is called danda, the king is called 'danda' because control is centered in him; that the niti (rules) of danda is called dandāniti and niti is so called because it leads (people).<sup>10</sup> Śānti (69. 104) says that dandāniti is the special concern of the ksatriya (rājan). It is said in the Vanaparva 150. 32 that without Dandāniti this whole world would break all bounds Vide also Śānti 15,29, 63,28, 69,74 ff (eulogy of Dandanīti) Dandanīti is said to be the support of the world (Śānti 121,24) and to have been produced by Devī Sarasvatī (Śānti 122,25)

Arthaśāstra has been a synonym for dandanīti When the Āp. Dh. S. II. 5 10 16 requires the king to appoint as purohita a brāhmana well-versed in dharma and artha, it is clear that Āpastamba has in view dharmaśāstra and arthaśāstra The Anuśāsanaparva says that Brhaspati and others composed arthaśāstras (39,10-11) Dronaparva 61 speaks of a science of artha composed by Manu (Mānavī arthavidyā) Vide Jayaswal in 'Manu and Yājñavalkya' (pp. 5, 7, 16, 25, 26, 41, 42, 50, 84, for Manu and Artha) Śānti (71,14) states that a king whose sole concern is with arthaśāstra does not secure dharma and kāma and that all the wealth of such a king vanishes in (the pursuit of) improper objects. Vide Śānti 302,109 which speaks of arthaśāstra as resorted to by the best among kings. The Rāmāyana (II 100,14) states that Sudhanvā, Upādhyāya of Rāma, was an adept in arthaśāstra. The arthaśāstra of Kautilya starts with the statement that it is the quintessence of all the arthaśāstras composed by former teachers in the whole world and at the end Kautilya states that that śāstra which is a means of acquiring and guarding the earth is arthaśāstra This mentions two of the four objects of dandanīti stated in the Kautilya itself (as shown in n 8 above) Only two objects are mentioned by Kautilya (as in Śānti 69,102) since they are the first and principal ones to be gained by the practice of the science of government. It is not meant that there was, as regards the topics to be dealt with, any distinction between Dandanīti and Arthaśāstra The four objects mentioned by Kautilya are always placed before the ksatriya by Manu (VII 99-100), Śānti 102,57 and 140,5, Yāj. I 317, Nītisāra I 18 (while I 8 mentions only two purposes of rājavidyā) At the end (XV 1) Kautilya states 'artha is the sustenance of human beings, that is, the earth peopled by men That śāstra which is a means of acquiring and guarding that earth is arthaśāstra' Men derive their sustenance from the earth and all wealth also arises from the earth. Mr Jayaswal (Hindu Polity p 5) is not right when he translates 'Artha is human population' Vide U Ghoel's 'Hindu Political Theories' p 74 n and p 76 for the various interpretations of this passage by Jayaswal and others Authors a few centuries later than both the Mahābhārata and the Kautilya treat the two as identical. Dandin in his Daśakumāracarita (VIII) expressly says that Visnugupta composed his work on dandanīti for the Maurya king in 6000 ślokas, though the Kautilya states at the very beginning that the work is an arthasāstra. Dandin in the same context refers to 'Arthasāstras as helping to polish the intellect' and speaks of some of the predecessors mentioned by Kautilya as writers on the śāstra (viz. the Arthasāstra).<sup>11</sup> The Amarakośa treats the two as identical.<sup>12</sup> Medhātithi on Manu VII 43 holds that the word 'Dandanīti' therein refers to the works of Cānakya and others. The Mitāksarā or. Yāj. I 313 paraphrases dandanīti by arthasāstra and on Yāj. I 311 explains dandanīti as the lore useful in the acquisition and guarding of wealth (only the two objects mentioned by Kautilya in connection with arthasāstra). According to the Sukranītisāra (IV. 356) 'that is said to be arthasāstra in which instruction about the conduct of kings and the like is given without coming in conflict with Śruti and Smṛti and in which the acquisition of wealth with great skill is taught'.

The words arthasāstra and dandanīti are applied to the science of government from two different points of view. Artha is defined in the Kāmasūtra (I 20) as 'education, lands, gold, cattle, corn, domestic utensils and friends and the augmenting of what is acquired' (vide H. Dh. Vol. II part I p. 9 note 22). Therefore when wealth and prosperity of all kinds is the spring and motive of giving a name the science treating of these is called arthasāstra and when the government of the people and the punishment of offenders are the main ideas the same is called dandanīti. Though works like Kautilya's Arthasāstra place a high value on dharma they are principally concerned with the treatment of central and local government, taxation, the employment of sāma and other upāyas, with alliances and wars, appointment of officers and punishment. Therefore Arthasāstra is mainly what is called dṛstārtha smṛti, as stated by the Bhaviṣyapurāṇa (quoted by Aparārka p. 626, the Smṛticandrikā p. 24, vyavahāra and Vīramitrodaya, parabhāṣā p. 19). Medhātithi on Manu VII 1 explains that dharma in that verse means

'duties' (dharmaśabdah kartavyatāvacaṇah), that the duties of the king are either dr̥stārtha (i.e. the effects of which are worldly and visible) such as the employment of six gunas (sandhi, vigraha &c) or adr̥stārtha (that have no visible effect but have a spiritual result) such as Agnihotra; here (in chap VII-IX of Manu) the remarks relate principally to dr̥stārtha matters since it is well-known that the word rājadharmā is applicable to such matters (the six gunas &c) only<sup>12</sup> Medhatithi here declares that the rules of rājanīti are not based on the canonical books of dharmaśāstra but principally on the experience of worldly affairs

Another name for the science of government is Nitisāstra or Rājanītisāstra Śānti<sup>14</sup> 59 74 says that in the nitisāstra are set forth all those means whereby people are prevented from forsaking the right path. The Nitisāra of Kāmandaka<sup>15</sup> (I 6) does obeisance to Viṣṇugupta who extracted the nectar of Nitisāstra from the vast ocean of Arthasāstra (works). The Pañcatantra p 2 holds that Arthasāstra and Nitisāstra are synonymous. The Mitākṣarā on Yāj II 21 remarks that the arthasāstra referred to by Yāj is rājanītisāstra that is part and parcel of dharmaśāstra. The word 'rājanīti' occurs in Raghuvamśa 17 68. Vide Bhagavadgītā X. 38, Āśramavāsikaparva 6.5, Manu VII 177, Śānti 111 73, 138, 39, 43 and 196, 268 9 and Anuśāsana 163 7 for Nitisāstra meaning Arthasāstra or Rājanīti and Drona 152 29 and Śānti 37 9 for the word rājanīti. Another noteworthy word is 'naya' which means 'line of policy' and is employed by the Arthasāstra (I 2) when it says 'naya and anaya (bad policy) are treated of in Dandanīti'. It is also used in several classical works, such as the Kirātārjuniya (II 3, 12, 54, XIII 17).

The relation of arthasāstra to dharmaśāstra has now to be understood. As stated above rājadharmā is a very important subject of dharmaśāstra. Arthasāstra which is principally concerned with the rights, privileges and responsibilities of the ruler is therefore properly speaking a part of dharmaśāstra. As shown above it is supposed to have like dharmaśāstra a divine source But works on arthaśāstra enter into great details about the government of a country in all its aspects, while dharmaśāstra works generally deal only with a few salient features of rājaśāstra Just as the Kāmasūtra (I 2 14) states that dharma is the highest goal and kāma is the lowest of the three puruṣārthas (vide H. Dh. vol. II part 1 p 9), so Arthaśāstra also sets the highest value on dharma The Kautilya states (III. 1. at end)<sup>16</sup> 'In any matter where there is a conflict between dharmaśāstra and practices or between dharmaśāstra and any secular transaction, (the king) should decide that matter by relying on dharma. If śāstra comes in conflict with any rational and equitable rule then the latter shall be the deciding factor and the (strict) letter of the text will be nowhere'. But Kautilya and other writers on arthaśāstra lay the greatest emphasis on artha In the eager and relentless pursuit of worldly prosperity means may be recommended or followed which may come in conflict with the strictly ethical standpoint of the dictates of dharmaśāstra. In such cases of conflict dharmaśāstra works lay down (e.g. Āp. Dh. I.9. 24. 23, Yāj. II 21, Nārada, vyavahāramātrkā chap. I 39) that dharmaśāstra rules are to be preferred to the dictates of arthaśāstra. Viśvarūpa (on Yāj. II 21) states that according to some predecessors of his the conflict between the dictates of dharmaśāstra and arthaśāstra is illustrated as follows. Manu VIII 351 (which is the same as Viṣṇu-dharmasūtra V. 190 and Matsyapurāṇa 227. 116-117) when dealing with vyavahāra (a subject that pre-eminently belongs to arthaśāstra) provides that in killing an ātātāyīn, no fault attaches to the killer: while Manu XI 89 in the chapter on *prāyaścitta*s (which is pre-eminently a topic of dharmaśāstra) states that no penance is prescribed (i.e. there is no prāyaścitta for removing the guilt) when a person of set purpose kills a brāhmana. The result is that the latter rule prevails and sin is incurred by killing a brāhmana even if the latter be an ātātāyīn (though there may be no punishment by the king). Viśvarūpa does not accept this illustration. The Mitāksarā also refers to this example, disapproves of it and gives its own example. The Arthaśāstra declares that a king should endeavour to secure friends, since the acquisition of friends is superior to the acquisition of gold and land (as is laid down in Yāj I 352). The rule of dharmaśāstra is that a king has to dispense justice, being free from anger and avarice and in accordance with dharmaśāstra. Therefore when a suit comes before a king he must decide it according to law, even though he may lose the friendship of a person if his decision goes against the latter. The Vīramitrodaya follows the Mitāksarā. Dharmaśāstra went by the name of smṛti (Manu II 10), while arthaśāstra was treated as an Upaveda. The Viṣṇupurāṇa III 6, 28, Vāyu 61. 79 and Brahmānda 35 88-89 mention the four Upavedas<sup>17</sup> viz. Āyurveda, Dhanurveda, Gāndhārvaveda and Arthaśāstra as affiliated to the four Vedas respectively viz. R̥gveda, Yajurveda, Sāmaveda and Atharvaveda. Kautilya (I 5) states that the king should listen to the recital of itihāsa in the latter part of the day and includes both dharmaśāstra and arthaśāstra under itihāsa<sup>18</sup> and requires the minister knowing arthaśāstra to advise the king (with examples and precepts derived) from itihāsa and purāṇa.

Though Arthaśāstra is in theory for keeping to the path of dharma, one cannot blink one's eyes to the fact that the Mahābhārata and the Kautilya both support in several places the adoption of means entirely divorced from all rules of fair dealing and morality. In Ādiparva 140 we have a discourse by Kanika said to have been a mantrin of Dhrtarāstra and a profound student of Rājāśāstra, which is almost on the same lines as Śāntiparva chap 140 where Bhīṣma sets out what lines of policy (nīti) should be followed by the ruler in adversity and how he should give up all thoughts of kindness in such straits. He is supposed to give the substance of the dialogue between the sage Bhṛadāvya and Satrunṭapa, king of Sāvīra. The whole chapter is full of Machiavellian advice. A few specimens may be set out here. One should be very courteous in speech, but like a razor at heart (verse 13); one desirous of prosperity may fold one's hands, may take an oath, may use sweet words, place his head on another's feet and even shed tears, one may carry on one's shoulders one's enemy till one accomplishes one's object and when a fit opportunity arises should break him like an earthen pot on a stone (17-18); the king should raise hopes promising their fulfilment at a distant day, but should put obstacles in the fulfilment of the hopes raised in others (32); when one is reduced to a wretched state one may extricate oneself from it by any act whatever whether gentle or horrible and practise dharma after one becomes able to do so (38); one should inspire confidence in one's enemy by some means which appear to be true (to the enemy), but one should strike him down at the right moment when he takes a wrong step (44); whoever causes obstacles to the purpose of the king, whether son or brother or father or friend, should be killed by the king who desires to prosper (47); without cutting the vitals of others, without committing horrible deeds and without killing indiscriminately as the fisherman in the case of fish one does not secure high prosperity (50); when about to strike one should utter sweet words and even after striking one should use honeyed words; even after severing another's head with a sword one should lament and shed tears (54); if some remainder is left in the case of a debt or fire or enemies, there is a tendency to grow and so no remainder should be left of these (58). It is to be noted that this chapter deals specially with what should be done in difficulties and cannot be supposed to be the real teaching of the Mahābhārata which is generally in line with the higher code of dharma-śāstra. It embodied probably the words of earlier arthaśāstra writers like Bhāradvāja. After hearing this discourse on calculated cruelty and deceit Yudhisthira stood aghast and frankly told Bhīṣma that the course of conduct outlined by him did not differ from that of robbers and that he felt bewildered and would not exert himself in the way pointed out. In chap. 142 Bhīṣma replies to this by saying that he did not base his discourse merely on the sacred texts, but also on reason and the essence was distilled by wise men, that the considered rule of conduct for the king is twofold, viz. straightforward and crooked, that one should not ordinarily employ the crooked course of conduct, but should employ it as against an enemy who employs a crooked policy and effectively meet him by such policy. He further says that rājadharmā cannot be based on a single source (v. 7) and that policies are to be pursued not merely by reliance on the sacred codes of law but on reason as well

(v 17) and that Indra himself has declared this rule which he derived from Brhaspati. In Śānti-parva a weak king is advised to harass a very powerful ruler's state by sword, fire and poison. In chap 130 it is stated that the preservation of the state is the paramount consideration and that a king whose treasury is depleted and who is therefore in difficulties may replenish his treasury even by harassing his subjects (except tāpasas and learned brāhmanas). In chap 138 it is said that self-interest makes friends or foes and that anuvāsa (putting trust in no one) is the grand line of policy for kings. So it is clear that the Mahābhārata was prepared to give up in certain circumstances the strict rules of dharmaśāstra for kings and to allow them to pursue devious modes of action that were far from moral i.e. it tries to effect a synthesis of dharmaśāstra and arthaśāstra.

The Kautīliya also discloses how arthaśāstra writers did not shrink from giving advice which, to say the least, was most cruel, selfish and immoral. For example, in the section called 'guarding the prince' (Kauṭ. I. 17) the views of several teachers are set out. Bhāradvāja says that princes are of the nature of crabs eating up their parent; so it is better to finish them in secret when they have no love for their father. Viśālākṣa abhorred this advice as cruel, as unsanctioned murder and as destructive of the seed of ksatriyas and recommended that it was better to keep them confined in a single spot. Vāṭavyādhi recommended that princes should be made addicted to sensual excesses. Kauṭ. disapproves of this as living death (for the princes), recommends proper care before conception and after birth and instruction in dharma. In Kauṭ. V. 6 Bhāradvāja is quoted as saying that when the king is on his death-bed, the minister may set up the kinsmen of the king and the principal princes against one another, that whoever attacks should be killed by inciting the people against him, or having secretly punished the kinsmen and chief princes and brought them under control, the minister should himself take possession of the kingdom. Kautīliya does not approve of this. But even he advises (XIV Aupaniśadika) the employment of poison, herbs and incantations against those who are irreligious or wicked. In I. 18 even Kauṭ. does not shrink from advising that secret emissaries (of the reigning king) may kill an abandoned prince with weapons and poison and in V. 1 Kauṭ. remarks that, when a king cannot openly put down the principal courtiers or chiefs who are dangerous to the kingdom, he may inflict punishment on them in secret or may induce the brother of the officer to be punished to attack the latter by promising to give him the position and wealth of the officer and then destroy that attacker with weapons or poison saying that he was guilty of fratricide. In V. 2 for replenishing a depleted treasury Kautilya coolly asks the king to deprive the temples in the kingdom of their wealth through the superintendent of religious endowments.

Sanskrit literature on rājadharmā is very extensive. Apart from the meagre materials contained in such ancient dharma-sūtras as that of Āpastamba, the following works deserve close study and have been utilized in this section; the Mahābhārata (Vanaparva 150, Sabhā 5, Udyoga 33-34, Śānti 1-130, Āsrama-vāsika 5-7), the Rāmāyana (Ayodhyā, chap. 15, 67, 100; Yuddha 17-18, 63), Manusmṛti VII-IX, Arthaśāstra of Kautilya (which is the leading work on rājadharmā), Yājñ I 304-367, Vṛddha-Hārīta-smṛti chap. VII, verses 188-271, Bṛhat-Parāśara chap. X, pp. 277-285, Visnudharmasūtra III, the Nītisāra of Kāmandaka, Agnipurāṇa chap. 218-242, Garuḍapurāṇa 108-115, Matsya 215-243, Visnudharmottara II, Mārkaṇḍeya 24, Kālikā 87, the Nītiprakāśikā attributed to Vaiṣampāyana (ed. by Oppert), Śukranītisāra (ed. by Jīvānanda, 1890), the Abhilasītārthacintāmaṇi or Mānasollāsa (first four vimśatis) of Someśvara, Yukti-kalpataru of Bhoja, Nītivākyāṃṛta of Somadeva (959 A. D. 1675-1680, ed. by Prof. H. D. Velankar), Dandanīti of Keśavapandita (edited by V. S. Bendrey, Poona, 1943). In recent times there is a deluge of works mostly inspired by the publication of the Kautilya dealing with ancient and medieval Indian polity in its various branches. The most important of these and a few other works independent of Kautilya are mentioned in the note below.<sup>19</sup>

19. Some parts of the Śāntiparva may be later than Kāmandaka's work, since Śānti (123. 11-12) refers to the dialogue of Kāmandaka and Āṅgaṇastha king of Aṅga. But it need hardly be said that it is not absolutely necessary to hold that the extant Nītisāra of Kāmandaka is referred to by Śāntiparva.

In my treatment of rājadharmā I have generally restricted myself to data derived from Sanskrit works on dharmasūtra and arthaśāstra and have rarely ventured into works in Pāli. Similarly it has to be borne in mind that the works referred to cover a period of several centuries and further that India is not one country but a continent of which northern India formed one more or less homogeneous unit, while the Deccan formed another and South India formed a third unit. The institutions of these, particularly of the last of the three, differ in many particulars from those of the other two. But the authentic data furnished by South India are later by centuries than those supplied by the north and besides are comparatively meagre. Therefore in this work one has to confine oneself principally to Sanskrit works composed in North India or the Deccan.

proposed is to indicate and dilate upon only the fundamental ideas and principles of the several matters falling under rājadharmā. Nor is it possible to enter here into formal and lengthy refutations of the several views propounded by Western and Indian writers about the forms and functions of Government and the state of society in ancient India. Most of the modern works referred to in note 19 above are more or less based on the same material in Sanskrit and Pāli, but the emotional or subjective element is different in each case. Some western writers have without very solid foundations indulged in a facile and sweeping generalization that the great Empires of antiquity such as those of the Assyrians, the Babylonians, the Medians and Persians and the Indians were mainly tax-gathering institutions (vide Sir Henry Maine's 'Early History of Institutions' 1875, pp. 384 and 390; and Prof. Rangaswami Aiyangar's 'Ancient Indian Polity' 1935, pp. 5—6 and pp. 66—69 (where passages from T. H. Green and others are cited); while some Indian writers vehemently assert that the Government in Ancient India was always some form of limited monarchy. Both characterisations are in my opinion misleading. An endeavour will be made to present from the original texts as true a picture of the polity of ancient and medieval India as it is possible for me to do. It will do no good to label the ancient institutions of India with concepts and terms current in the West during the last one hundred and fifty years or so. Even in the West true democracies or real democratic governments did not exist and the masses in no country had elective popular assemblies or councils before the last quarter of the 18th century. Such assemblies do not exist even now in several countries of Europe. Even in the ancient Greek city states the number of slaves who had no voice in the government was several times as large as the free citizens and those states were no democracies at all in the strict sense.<sup>19a</sup> Indian polity has a recorded history of over two thousand years from at least the 4th century B. C. Its growth was gradual but its aims and ideals and its main elements have been the same throughout the centuries. India need not feel ashamed or fear

If western countries could boast of so-called republics and city states in ancient Greece and Rome, India also had several republics in ancient times. ## CHAPTER II

SEVEN AṄGAS OF RĀJYA

According to almost all of our authorities a state (rājya) is constituted by seven elements<sup>20</sup> viz svāmin (ruler or sovereign), amūlya (minister), janapada or rāṣṭra (the territory of the State and its people), durga (fortified city or capital), kośa (accumulated wealth in the ruler's treasury), daṇḍa (army), mītra (friends or allies). These seven are called aṅgas or prakṛtis. The word prakṛti in works on politics is also used for the constituents of a circle of states (of a maṇḍala). Vide Manu VII. 156 and Kautilya (VI.2). The word also means ministers as in Śukranitisāra II. 70-73 and 'subjects' in Khāravēla's Inscription (E. I vol. 20 p. 79 l. 4), Nārada (prakīrnaka 5), Raghuvamśa VIII. 18. The order in which these are arranged and their names vary a good deal. The quotations given below will indicate how the order differs. The sequence is important for the reason that some of our authorities expressly state that when calamities befall or deterioration sets in each of the seven elements, those that befall each preceding one are more serious for the State than those of each succeeding one (Kautilya VIII. 1, Manu IX. 295). For janapada sometimes the word jana or rāṣṭra is used, for 'daṇḍa' the word 'bala' and the word 'pura' for 'durga'. The Āśramavāsīparva (58) speaks of eight aṅgas of rājya. According to Sumantu quoted by the Sarasvatīvilāsa (p. 46) daṇḍa means "punishment bodily or monetary" and 'army' is included under 'kośa'. Sumantu says that the svāmin has to be preserved by himself, the ministers by showing them proper respect, the people by keeping them contented, the fortified capital by abundance of wealth and grain, the kośa by proper expenditure, daṇḍa

by following one's dharma, friends by truthfulness. The authorities are agreed that the ruler is the most important or the first of the seven. Kautilya puts the matter very forcibly and realistically when he states that the briefest exposition of the elements of rājya is to say that the king is the State<sup>21</sup>. This is really not the same doctrine as that emphasized by Louis XIV of France when he said 'L'Etat c'est moi'. Kautilya makes his position clear (in VIII 1) by saying that it is the king who appoints ministers and servants and superintendents, who takes measures of relief against calamities befalling the other prakṛtis and measures of prosperity, that it is he who appoints other ministers when those already appointed are under calamities, that if the ruler is prosperous he transmits prosperity to his prakṛtis, that the prakṛtis bear that character which the king has and that hence the ruler occupies the position of a permanent, never-exhausted centre of power. The Sukranītisāra II.4 remarks that if the king begins to act at his sweet will, it leads to calamities, to loss of ministers and of the kingdom. The Sukranītisāra (I 61-62) compares the seven angas of rājya to the organs of the body viz, the king is the head, the ministers are the eyes, ally the ear, treasury the mouth, the army the mind, capital and rāstra are hands and feet. It is emphasized by Kām. (IV.1-2) that each of the seven elements is complementary to the others, that if the state is defective even in one out of the seven elements it does not pull well. the Śāntiparvā it is stated that it is not possible to say categorically that any one of the seven excels the others in merit, but that at different times a different element assumes importance over others, since that particular element is in the particular circumstances capable of accomplishing the purpose in hand. This shows that Manu and the Mahābhārata held that there was an organic unity in the several elements of rājya. All must work harmoniously towards one ideal or end. Manu (IX 296-297) says this by means of a simile 'Just as among the three staves tied together (by a rope of cow's hair) used by a sannyāsin no particular staff is superior (to the others), so among the seven elements of the state no particular one can be said to excel the others, since each of them has a particular excellence of its own; a particular element is pre-eminent in some particular matter and therefore the superiority of one to the others when expressed (as e. g. in Manu IX. 295) is to be confined to that matter alone.' Manu here emphasizes the harmonious working or unity of the seven elements though they are diverse in their individual characters. The analysis of the elements and nature of the State led ancient Indian writers to hold that a mere conglomeration of people did not by itself constitute a State, but that for a State there must be people who live within certain definite geographical limits (rāstra), they must be bound by the bond to render allegiance to a ruler (svāmi), have a certain system of government (amātya), must have a regulated economic system, a force for defence and international relationships. That is, the most essential elements of a state are (1) a sovereign, (2) a system of government, (3) a definite territory and (4) a population of some size. These four were known even to the most ancient sūtras. Vide Gaut. XI 1 (rājā), Āp. II 6. 25. 10 (amātya), Āp. II 10. 25. 11, II 10. 26. 4 (visaya, nagara, grāma), Gaut XI 5-8 (prajā).

These seven elements will now be dealt with one after another.

It should be noted that neither Kauṭilya nor Kāmandaka defines rājya. Etymologically it means the 'karma' or 'bhāva' (activity or state of a king), being derived from 'rājan' with the affix 'ya' (syañ or 'yak', acc. to Pāṇini V. 1. 124 and 128). This is the etymological meaning. But 'rājya' is employed in the sense of 'kingdom' in popular parlance and also in the smṛtis and works on polity as in Manu VII. 111, Kām. XIII. 81-82. But when it is said that 'rājya' has seven elements then 'rājya' has a very wide meaning and stands for the king, the ministers, the country and its people and the economic and military resources and in such a case it is proper to translate the word as 'the State' (as including both the Government and the governed). In some cases 'rājya' should be rendered as 'government' which includes only the king and his ministers and conveys also in modern times the agency or machinery through which the will of the State is formulated, realized or carried out; vide Mānasollāsa II 8, verses 688, 689, 691. The Nītivākyaṃṛta (p. 43) says "rājya means the activity of the ruler that would be appropriate to protecting the earth".

Medhātithi on Manu VIII. 1 remarks that rājya means 'a prosperous people'. In XIII. 4 Kauṭilya states (na hyajano janapado rājyam janapadam vā bhavātīti Kauṭilyah) it as his opinion that a territory without any inhabitants cannot become a rājya (a kingdom) or a janapada (as one of the seven elements). Śābara on Jai. II. 3. 3 has a discourse on the derivation of rājya.

Prof. Bhandarkar in 'Some Aspects of Ancient Indian Polity' (pp. 66-89), Jayaswal in 'Hindu Polity' part II p 9, Prof. B K Sarkar in 'Positive Background of Hindu Sociology' Book II pp 34-39 and others maintain that this ancient analysis of rājya into seven elements shows that the idea of the State as an organism, that is, the organic theory of the State was known to Hindu thinkers and that this doctrine of saptāṅga rājya<sup>21a</sup> satisfies the definition of the State given by Bluntschli and others. On the other hand Mr Anjaria in chapter IV of his 'Nature and grounds of political obligation in the Hindu state' after pointing out how there are different versions of the organic theory of the state denies vehemently that the Hindu theory can be called a proper organic theory of the State, particularly because the Hindu thinkers did not regard the State as a moral organism, because they attached a permanent stigma of inferiority to large sections of the community on the bare ground of birth and that the Hindu conceptions did not harmonize the authority of the State and the liberty of the individual. It would be far beyond the scope of the present work to enter 'into any discussion of this problem. All that may be said is that Mr Anjaria tilts the balance to the other side too much. The faults he points out in the Hindu theory and practice beset almost all theories of the State almost in all countries. Even in the times of Plato and Aristotle huge populations of slaves had no voice in the affairs of the state. Up to the 19th century true democracies never existed even in Europe.

The Ruler—The necessity of a ruler is forcibly emphasized in several works. The Ait. Br. I. 14 says that the gods thought they were worsted because they had no king, that therefore they elected one by 'consent. This shows that military necessities 21a Korkunov in 'General Theory of Law' (tr by W G Hastings, New York, 1922) says 'Bluntschli' assimilates government to the head, as it is the head of the State, the ministry of the interior to the ears, and that of foreign affairs to the nose' (p. 274).

led to kingship. Manu VII 3 (=Śukranitisāra I 71) says 'the Creator created the king for the protection of all this world when everything ran through fear hither and thither, as there was then no ruler in the world'. It goes on to say that the Creator proceeded to create Danda (the power of punishment) for the sake of the king and that if the king does not sedulously employ danda for punishing those that deserve it, the strong would torment the weak as fish are fried on a pike or as in water fish devour each other (Manu VII 14 and 20, the last also showing a variant 'jale' for 'śūle'). This idea of mātsyanyāya (the maxim of the larger fish devouring the smaller ones or the strong despoiling the weak) is frequently dwelt upon by Kautilya, the Mahābhārata and other works. It can be traced back to the Śatapatha-brāhmana XI 1. 6. 24 'whenever there is drought, then the stronger seizes upon the weaker, for the waters are the law', which appears to mean that when there is no rain, the reign of law comes to an end and mātsyanyāya begins to operate. Kautilya says 'if danda be not employed, it gives rise to the condition of mātsyanyāya, since in the absence of a chastiser the strong devour the weak' and 'the people overwhelmed by the operation of mātsyanyāya made Manu Vaivasvata their king.'<sup>22</sup> That in the absence of a king (arājaka) or when there is no fear of punishment, the condition of mātsyanyāya follows is declared by several works such as the Rāmāyana II. chap. 67, Śāntiparva 15. 30 and 67. 16, Kāmandaka II. 40, Matsyapurāna 225. 9, Mānasollāsa II. 20 verse 1295. Numerous works contain eulogies of danda. The king is called dandadhara in many works e.g. in Śāntiparva 67.16 and Kām. I 1. Gautama XI 28 says that the word danda is derived by the wise from the root 'dam' (to control), that he (the king) should control by means of danda those who observe no restraint and (XI 31) that the instructions of the teacher and the power of punishment (wielded by the king) guard those who violate the rules of varnas and āśramas. The Matsyapurāna<sup>23</sup>

225. 17, Agnipurāṇa 226. 16 and Śāntiparva 15. 8 state that danda is so called because it suppresses those that are not restrained (from the root 'dam') and punishes those that are imprudent or ungentlemanlike (from the root 'dand'). Danda is raised to the position of a divinity by Manu <sup>24</sup> VII. 25 (= Visnudharma-sūtra III. 95 = Matsya 225. 8), Yāj. I. 354, Śānti 121. 15. Danda rules over all people, it protects all of them, danda is awake even when (the guardians of law) have gone to sleep, the wise regard danda as dharma (Manu VII. 18 = Śānti 15. 2 = Matsya 225. 14-15). The whole world is under the heel of danda, for it is difficult to find a man who is pure by nature (Manu VII. 22 = Śānti 15. 34). The conception of danda is therefore this that the State's will and coercive power keep the individual and nation within the bounds of dharma, punish for breaches and effect the good of the whole. The gods, dānavas, gandharvas, the rākṣasas and reptiles—these also tend to bring about enjoyment for men because they are pressed down by danda (Manu VII. 23) <sup>25</sup> The Bhagavadgītā (X. 38) identifies danda with the divine Kṛṣṇa 'I am danda in the hands of those who control others, I am nīti (i. e. rājanīti) for the conquerors'. For the detailed effects and long eulogies of danda, vide Manu VII. 14-31, Matsya 225. 4-17, Kāmandaka II. 38-44. These eulogies of danda presuppose the theory that people obey law and the dictates of the śāstra through the fear of force or punishment. Danda should be neither too severe nor too mild, but should be appropriate to the fault committed (Kaut. I. 4, Kāmandaka II. 37, Manu VII. 16, Śānti 15. 1ff, Śānti 56. 21, 103. 34). Śānti 57. 41 advises that one should first secure a king, then wife and then wealth, for in the absence of the ruler there would be no wife nor private property <sup>26</sup> This shows that the institutions of family and private property and the protection of the weak are bound up with the existence of a ruler. Kātyāyana (in Rāja N. P. p. 30) says the king is the protector of the helpless, the home of the homeless, the son of the sonless and the father of the fatherless

In order to magnify the importance of the kingly office, certain works state that the king has in him parts of the gods. For example, Manu says "the Creator created the king with the essential parts taken from Indra, the Wind god, Yama, the Sun, Agni, Varuna, the Moon and Kubera the lord of wealth and therefore he surpasses all beings by his majesty (VII. 4-5 and compare Manu V. 96); one should not disrespect a boy-king with the thought 'he is a human being (like others)' for it is a great deity that stands (before people) in human form as a king" (Manu VII 8=Śānti 68. 40). This conception goes back to Gautama XI 32 ('Therefore a king and a spiritual teacher must not be reviled') and Āp. Dh. S. I 11. 31. 5 ('he shall not speak harsh or abusive words of the gods or of the king'). Manu VII 3-4 are the same as Śukranītisāra I 71-72. The Matsyapurāṇa 226. 1 states that the king was created by Brahmā by taking portions of gods for wielding the power of punishment for the protection of all beings. Manu (IX. 303-311) puts forward a slightly diluted theory, viz. the king should possess the majesty of and imitate in his actions the first seven deities enumerated above with the Earth as the 8th and Manu sets out what the eight characteristic actions are. Matsya 226. 9-12 are the same as Manu IX. 303-306. The Agnipurāṇa (226. 17-20) states that as the king exercises the functions of nine deities viz. the Sun, the Moon, Vāyu, Yama, Varuna, Fire, Kubera, the Earth and Viṣṇu he has the form of these. Vide Śukranītisāra I 73-79 for similar ideas. These verses do not amount to the express theory of divine origin, but assimilate by analogy the king's functions to those of certain deities. The Nārada-smṛti (prakṛnaka section, verses 20-31) contains<sup>27</sup> several interesting dicta. It says that in the form of the king it is really Indra himself who moves about on the earth (v. 20), that a king even when devoid of qualities deserves honour from the people, that kings exercise the functions of five deities viz. of Agni, Indra, Soma, Yama and Kubera (vv. 26-31). The Mārkaṇḍeyapurāṇa (27. 21-26) mentions the same five deities. 'The Veda says that when a king is chosen it is Indra himself that is chosen; one desirous of prosperity should honour the king just as one worships Indra'—says Śānti 67 4 Śānti 69 states that all the gods are invisible, but the king is a deity that can be seen. The Vāyupurāṇa (57. 72) remarks <sup>28</sup> that in all past and future manvantaras universal emperors (cakravartin) are born on the earth with parts of Viṣṇu. The Matsyapurāṇa (226. 1-12) mixes up the theory of the creation of the king from parts of the gods with the lesser idea of his functions being similar to those of certain deities. The Bhāgavata-purāṇa (IV. 14. 26-27) states that Viṣṇu, Brahmā, Śiva, Indra, Vāyu, Varuna—these and other gods—exist in the body of the king and that the king is full of (the parts of) all gods. It is to strengthen this conception that ancient kṣātriya dynasties and their panegyrists tried to trace for those dynasties descent from the Sun or the Moon and in later times from Fire. The practice of addressing the king as 'deva' in Sanskrit dramas is due to the same tendency of the glorification of the royal office. Aśoka was styled 'devānām priya' (beloved of the gods) and Kushana emperors like Kaniska and Huviska styled themselves Devaputra (E. I. vol. I. pp 371 at pp 381 and 386). This phenomenon is not confined to India. Alexander the Great and Julius Cæsar had their descent traced to gods and goddesses. Alexander was deified during his life-time in 324 B. C. by the Greek world (vide Cambridge Ancient History, vol. VI p 433) and Cæsar's image was carried among those of the immortal gods. Kautilya (I. 13) makes a spy say among pauras and jānapadas 'kings are (in) the place of (perform the functions of) Indra and Yama, since they visibly inflict punishment and bestow favours. Even divine punishment affects those who despise them (kings). Therefore kings should not be despised'. Hence it must be said that the conception of the divine nature of the kingly office was well-known in Kautilya's days and he was not above recommending the employment of this conception for safeguarding the king's position. Vide Rāmāyana, III. 1. 18-19 and VII. 76. 37-45 and Mārkaṇḍeyapurāṇa 24. 23-28, Viṣṇudharmot-tara II. 2. 9 for similar ideas. The phrase 'nā viṣṇuḥ prthivīpatiḥ' is well-known and may be interpreted in two ways viz. the ruler of the earth is Visnu incarnated as man or no king is not Visnu i. e. every king is Visnu. The Pañcatantra<sup>29</sup> (I. 120 p. 19) states 'Manu has declared that the king is made up (of parts) of all gods'. The Rājanītiprakāśa is careful to point out that the idea of the king having in him parts of the deities applied only to the mahārāja (the sovereign ruler), while the idea of a ruler doing the functions of five deities applies to vassal kings.<sup>30</sup> For eulogy of the kingly office, vide Manu VII 6-17, Śānti 63. 24-30, Śānti 68, Kām. I. 9-11, Rājanītiprakāśa pp. 17-31.

But it should not be supposed that this glorification of the king resulted in the full-fledged theory of the divine right of kings or that every king, however bad, was looked upon as a divinity or could do what he liked. In the first place, the Rājanītiratnākara<sup>31</sup> (p. 83) when speaking of the coronation of a prince by his abdicating royal father quotes a verse where the people (prajā) themselves are called Viṣṇu. In the second place the king's authority over brāhmanas was limited (vide H. Dh. vol. II. part 1 pp. 139-140). The Gautama-dharmasūtra (XI 1, 7 and 8) says<sup>32</sup> 'the king rules over all, except over brāhmanas; all, except brāhmanas, should while sitting low on the ground wait upon (worship) him (the king) who occupies a high seat; they (the brāhmanas) too should honour him'. From the time of the Ait Br. (37. 5) the harmony between the king and the brāhmanas and the king's following the advice of brāhmanas had been insisted upon. Vide Ait. Br. 40. 1, Gaut. VIII 1. XI 27. Further the Śukranītisāra (I 70) states that a king who oppresses the subjects and causes loss of dharma is made up of the parts of rākṣasas.<sup>33</sup> Manu (VII 111-112) states that the king who harasses his subjects loses his life, family and kingdom. Moreover stories of kings killed for their tyranny are found in the ancient Literature. For example, Vena, who was jealous of the gods, wanted sacrificial offerings to be made to himself (and not to the gods) and violated dharma, was killed by the brāhmanas (Śāntiparva 59 93-95, Bhāgavata-purāṇa IV. 14). The Anusāsanaparva<sup>34</sup> (61 32-33) solemnly sanctions the killing of a king in certain circumstances "The people should gird themselves up and kill a cruel king who does not protect his subjects, who extracts taxes and simply robs them of their wealth, who gives no lead. Such a king is Kal (evil and strife) incarnate. That king who after declaring 'I shall protect you' does not protect his subjects should be killed (by the people) after forming a confederacy, like a dog that is afflicted with madness". Manu (VII 27-28) states that the great principle of danda if properly wielded conduces to the advancement of the three puruṣārthas, but if a voluptuous, mean and unjust king wields it, it recoils on his head and destroys the king together with his relations. Kām 2. 38 makes it clear that danda foolishly wielded might exasperate even hermits. The Śāntiparva 92 19 recommends that a king who has false and very wicked ministers and who puts down dharma should be killed by the people. Even as early as the Tai S II 3 1 it appears that kings were driven away, while the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa (XII 9 3. 1 and 3) mentions a king Dustaritu Paumsāyana who had been expelled from the kingdom which had descended to him through ten ancestors. The Sautrāmāṇi is prescribed as a rite for a king to regain a kingdom from which he had been driven away (vide H Dh vol II p 1227). Śānti 92. 6 and 9, Manu VII 27 and 34, Yāj I 356 appear to justify at least deposing a king, if not tyrannicide. Similarly, the Śukranītisāra (II 274-275) states<sup>35</sup> that a king, though of a noble pedigree, should be abandoned, if he violates dharma, if he hates good qualities (in others), lines of policy and the army and if his conduct would lead to the destruction of the kingdom and that the family priest with the consent of the principal officers of state should place on the throne another scion of the royal family who is possessed of the requisite virtues. Nārada props up the theory of divine right by stating that the king secures dominion over (lit. purchases) his subjects by his austerities (performed in former lives) and therefore the king is their lord (prakīrnaka 25). Śukranīti I. 20 also brings in the doctrine of Karma 'the king holds the earth by the actions of his former lives and by his austerities' Compare Manu VII 111-112, Śānti 78. 36. The Śukranītisāra (IV. 7. 332-333) says that brāhmanas may even fight and destroy an oppressive ksatriya king and would thereby incur no sin. The Yaśastilaka (III p. 431) gives examples of kings killed by their subjects, one being a Kalinga king who made a barber his commander-in-chief. In fact in all works on polity we find comparatively little about the king's rights and special privileges, but on the other hand the greatest emphasis is laid on the king's duties and responsibilities. Some works describe the king as a servant of the people whose wages or remuneration for the protection he affords is the taxes he raises. Vide Baud. Dh. S. I. 10. 1, Śukranīti I. 188, Nārada (prakīrnaka 48), Śānti 71. 10.<sup>26</sup> It may be said here that the apparently inconsistent dicta about the divinity of the king and about his being liable to be deposed or even killed for evil deeds are delivered from two different standpoints and are addressed to different persons. The writers believed in maintaining the status quo about the duties of varnas and āśramas, in the privileges of the respective castes and in the progressive deterioration of dharma in the ages to come and wanted a strong king to preserve the social order; therefore the king was raised to divinity and absolute obedience to his orders was demanded. This was addressed to the people in general. There was danger however of bad kings and ministers oppressing the people by misrule. Hence the king and his ministers were threatened with destruction and death. These dicta were principally meant for the king and his advisers.

In the Kautiliya V. 3 we meet with these words "In Rājasūya and other solemn (or elaborate) sacrifices the 'rājā' gets three times the salary given to others who are as learned as he is" (samānavidyebhyas-trigunavetano rājā rājasūyādisu kratusu). Jayaswal (in 'Hindu Polity' part II, p 136) seizes upon this passage to show that the king was a salaried person like the prime minister or the commander-in-chief. The words 'in Rājasūya and other kratus' should have raised doubts in his mind about his interpretation, but he entirely missed the significance of the passage. Kautilya in that passage is not referring to the king himself but to his representative or deputy when the king is engaged in numerous ceremonial duties during sacrifices of long duration like the Aśvamedha. The Āp Śrautasūtra (XX 3. 1-2), Baudhāyana Śrauta XV 4, Satyāsādha Śr. XIV. 1 24-25 state that the adhvaryu priest was to deputize for the king when the latter was engaged in the Aśvamedha <sup>37</sup> (which was spread over a period of about two years). The salary referred to by Kautilya is to be paid to the adhvaryu when representing the king. Vide H. Dh. vol II p 1232 for this. In X. 3 it is said by Kautilya that a virtuous king on the eve of a battle should urge on his soldiers the fact 'I am a wage-earner like yourselves, this kingdom is to be enjoyed by me along with you. You have to strike down the enemy pointed out by me' <sup>38</sup>. Here the theory of the king being a wage-earner or a servant of the State is emphasized in a striking manner.

The word 'rājan' is derived in the Nirukta (II. 3) from the root 'rāj' to shine, but the Mahābhārata (Śānti 59. 125) likes to say that the king is styled 'rāja' since he keeps all people contented, that is, it derives the word 'rājan' from the root 'rañj'. Great poets like Kālidāsa (Raghu IV. 12) follow the Mahābhārata in this, as also in deriving the word 'ksatriya' from 'ksata' and the root 'traī', meaning one who protects from wound and injury (Śānti 59. 126 and Raghu-vamśa II. 53). Br. quoted in the Rāja Dh. K. (I p 5) appears to derive the word both from 'rāj' and 'rañj' (balena caturangena yato rañjayāti prajāh । dīpyamānah sa vapusā tena rājābhidhiyate).

Atharvaveda VI. 87 and 88. 1-2) has been taken as an election hymn by some writers (e. g. Jayaswal in 'Hindu polity' p. 7). But one is constrained to say that it is probably nothing of the kind. The only words that may lend some colour to the theory of election are 'let all the people desire thee (as king)' in Rg. X. 173. 1, but those words may apply as a benediction even in the case of one who is already a king. In the Atharvaveda III. 4. 2 there<sup>29</sup> is a reference to the election of a king by the people 'the people (viśah) chose thee to govern the kingdom, these quarters, the five goddesses (chose thee)'. In Atharvaveda III. 5, 6 and 7 also there is a faint allusion to the election of a king by nobles, king-makers, sūtas and headmen of villages, by the clever makers of chariots and the skilled workers in metals. These 'king-makers' are called 'ratnins' in other Vedic texts and the Tai. Br. I. 7.3 states in connection with the twelve offerings in the Rājasūya called 'ratninām havīṃsi' that the 'ratnins' give the (rāstra) kingdom (to the king). Vide H. Dh. vol. II. p. 1215 n 2648 and p. 1216 for the 'ratnins'. So it appears that the conception was that the king got the kingdom from nobles, high functionaries and the common people. For the coronation bath (and its implications) mentioned in the Ait. Br. vide note 105 below. The Ayodhyākāṇḍa (chap. 1 and 2) describes how Daśaratha when he grew old desired to make his eldest son Rāma the Crown Prince (yuvarāja), how he called together an assembly of vassal kings, citizens and rural inhabitants and placed before the assembly his idea, how they acclaimed loudly the old emperor's proposal and readily gave their consent. This shows that though kingship became hereditary in course of time some element of popular approval was sought for. But such passages referring to the approval of the people cannot be stretched to mean that the king was chosen by a parliament the members of which were elected by the people. All that happened appears to have been only this that citizens that approved assembled spontaneously and expressed their feelings in the assembly. In the Rāmāyaṇa II. 67. 2 it is said that when Daśaratha died sages like Mārkaṇḍeya and Vāmadeva declared along with the amātyas in the presence of the family priest (purohita) Vasistha that as Rāma and Lakṣmana had gone into exile and Bharata and Śatrughna were in the Kekaya country, some scion of the Ikṣvāku race should be chosen as king. These sages and ministers are spoken of as king-makers ('rāja-kartārah') here and in chap. 79 1. In the Ādiparva 44. 6 it is stated that all the citizens of the capital in one voice elected Janamejaya, though a boy, as a king on the death of Parīkṣit and Janamejaya ruled with the help of his ministers and purohita. There are historical examples of the election of kings. The kṣātrapa Rudradāman was elected king by the people of Surāstra (who at one time formed a republic, acc to Kautilya XI. 1) and he took an oath as stated in his Junagadh inscription in the year 72 (150 A. D.)<sup>40</sup> Vide E. I. Vol. VIII p. 36 at p. 40. Gopāla, the founder of the Pāla dynasty of Bengal (730-740 A. D.), was elected a king (E. I. Vol. IV. p. 243 at p. 248 and Jayaswal's 'History of India,' 150-350 A. D. pp. 44-45). It appears that it was the business of the chief ministers and brahmanas to propose somebody as king and such persons were called 'rājakartārah'. In Ayodhyā 67. 8 they say 'our country is without a ruler and may therefore encounter disaster'. Arājaka does not necessarily mean in Ayodhyā 67 anarchy but a condition in which there is no king nor ruler. Though this is so, it is not possible to agree with Mr. K. P. Jayaswal ('Hindu Polity', part I, pp. 97-98, 134, 173) that 'arājaka' was 'an idealistic constitution, that it was an extreme democracy almost Tolstoian in ideal, that it was based on a legal and communal basis, that it was a case of extreme individualism in which government itself was regarded as an evil'. Ayodhyā 67 8-31, Ādi 41 27 ff, Śānti 67 3 ff, Matsyapurāṇa 225. 8-9 are the principal passages on arājaka. A perusal of these will convince any one not carried away by the over-patriotic desire to find the latest European thought in our ancient books that arājaka was viewed as a state of chaos and the negation of any constitution; that when a country was without a ruler, no private property in anything existed or was respected and people preyed upon each other like fishes (Ayodhyā 67 31) and that no Tolstoian ideals were present before the eyes of the writers that drew such a harrowing picture of a State without a ruler. The famous Chinese traveller Hiouen T'sang notices (vide Beal's Buddhist Records of the Western World, 1884, vol. I pp. 210-216) that when Rājyavardhana was treacherously murdered by king Śaśānka, the great minister Bhandin (who was also a cousin of Harsa) called an assembly of ministers and made to the young Harsavardhana a proposal to assume the royal authority, which proposal was backed up by all the ministers and magistrates, that thereupon Harsa agreed to become king after consulting the oracle of Avalokiteśvara Bodhisattva. After the death of Parameśvaravarman II (of the Pallava dynasty), when the Pallava kingdom was subject to anarchy, the subjects chose a king. For the details of this election, vide the important constitutional document of the Vainkuntha Perumal temple (Dr. C. Minakshi's 'Administration and Social life under the Pallavas', 1938, p. 38). The Rājataranginī narrates (V. 461-463) that Yaśaskara who was originally a poor man was chosen as king by the brāhmanas.

In some other places a theory somewhat like the theory of social contract expounded by Rousseau is adumbrated. The theory of social contract is presented in modern times under two forms. In one there is supposed to be a tacit or explicit agreement between the Government and the people. In the 2nd form it is supposed that a political society was constituted by a compact among individuals (to which the ruler was not a party). This theory puts forward the notion that government depended on the consent of the people. Kautilya (I 13) refers to the legend that Manu Vaivasvata was made a king by the people, who agreed to assign one-sixth of the grain raised by them as the king's share in return for the protection afforded by him. But Kautilya is silent as to whether Manu made any promise to the people. Śāntiparva, chap. 59, states how Vainya, the first king, was called upon by the gods and sages to take an oath and how he promised them that he would protect the world, and would carry out his duties as laid down in the science of government and not act at his sweet will.<sup>41</sup> When this theory of an agreement between the king who took an oath and the people spread among the people, the theory of the divine right of kings, if ever seriously held, would recede more and more into the back-ground. Vide Dr Beni Prasad's 'Theory of Government in Ancient India' chap. VIII and 'Pre-Buddhist India' (1939) by Mr R. N. Mehta, chap. II pp. 79 ff. and 101 for election of kings and for Buddhist theories of government. It is not possible to hold as Jayaswal, U. Ghosal and others do (e. g. 'Manu and Yājñavalkya' II, 'Hindu Polity' part II pp 54-57) that the theory of social contract was the earlier one and that the theory of divine right of kings was later on propounded by the Manusmṛti to support the brāhmaṇa empire of Pūṣyamitra. Jayaswal is wrong in saying (in 'Hindu Polity' part II p. 57) 'the theory of the Mānava was never approved or adopted by a single subsequent law-book'. It has been shown above that Nārada and others espoused the same theory. Manu himself eulogises the supreme power of danda over the king himself (Manu VII. 28). He makes use of both the theories as occasion demands

The germ of the theory of Divine Right of kings probably goes back even to the Rgveda. Rg IV. 42 is a hymn of king Trasadasyu, son of Purukutsa. Some of the ideas therein are startling enough. He says 'the gods rely on the might of Varuna, while I am the lord of the people (verse 1, kratum sacante Varunasya devā rājānu kṛṣṭeh &c); I am Indra and Varuna, I am the wide and the deep Heaven and Earth, I am the son of Aditi (verses 3 and 4)'. Here there is an explicit claim by a king to be identical with the mightiest and greatest gods of the Vedic pantheon. In the Atharvaveda VI. 87. 1-2 it is said about the king 'May all the people long for you, may not the kingdom be lost from your hands, may you stand firm in the world like Indra and may you uphold the kingdom'. In the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa V. 1. 5. 14 (when describing the shooting of arrows in the Vajapeya) it is said 'the rājanya is most manifestly of Prajāpati, while being one he rules over many'. Here the position of the rājanya appears to be regarded as due to his being the representative of Prajāpati. In the Śat Br V. 4. 3. 4 the sacrificer in the Rājasūya is identified with Indra and it is said that that position is due to two causes viz. (1) his being a member of the kṣatriya order and (2) his participating in a solemn sacrifice. But passages like the last and Śat. Br V. 1. 3. 4, V. 1. 4. 2, V. 2. 14 should not be relied upon in support of the theory of the divine right of kings (as done by U. Ghoshal in 'Hindu Political Theories', pp. 28-29), since every participator (whether a brāhmaṇa or a kṣatriya) in such solemn sacrifices as the Agnistoma and Vajapeya was supposed to possess a celestial body after dikṣā and Pravargya and was often spoken of as identified with Indra and other gods. Viśvarūpa on Yāj. I. 350 quotes a long vedic passage (āgama) in which it is stated "the gods said to Prajāpati 'we shall arrange for a king in human form by taking from the moon, the sun, Indra, Visnu, Vaiśravaṇa (Kubera) and Yama respectively majesty, brilliance, valour, victoriousness, liberality and control" and that the king thus formed asked the gods to give to him Dharma as his friend and that then he would protect the people and then the gods made Dharma (i. e. danda) his friend.

We may examine the theories of the origin of kingship in the Mahābhārata. The Śāntiparva deals with this subject in two places, in chap. 59 and 67. In chap. 59 Yudhishthira asks the great warrior and statesman Bhīṣma how the title 'king' arose and how one man, who has fundamentally the same physical and mental equipment as other men, rules over all men. These are not really two questions but only two aspects of the same question. Then Bhīṣma starts by saying that there was originally a state of perfection (Kṛtayuga) in which there was no king, no kingdom, no punishment and no chastiser. Gradually moha (delusion or aberration of mind) spread among people and then greed, sexual desire and passions arose and the Vedas and dharma perished. The gods did not receive offerings and went to Brahmā, who composed a vast treatise as stated above (p. 4) that dealt with the four goals of existence for the benefit of the world and that was the cream of learning. Then the gods went to Visnu and requested him to appoint (as king) one who deserved to be the best among men. Visnu created a son from his mind called Virājas who did not want to be a king. Fifth in descent from Virājas was Vena who destroyed dharma and so the brāhmanas killed him and from his right arm they churned Prthu, handsome, well-armed and proficient in the Vedas, Vedāṅgas and Dandanīti. Gods and sages asked him to follow settled dharma, to control his senses and to take an oath (set out above in note 41). He was crowned by the gods and sages for the protection of the people. Visnu himself established him saying 'Oh king, no man will go contrary to your order' and then Visnu entered the king Prthu (verse 128) and it is therefore that this world since then bows to kings as to gods. In this account the oath administered to Prthu was so administered by the gods and sages and not by the people in the mass, nor does Prthu expressly promise anything to the people as such. Probably it was thought that the promise to the sages was impliedly a promise to the people in general. But the account, such as it is, rather appears to emphasize the divine origin of kingship.

Chap 67 contains a much shorter version of the origin of kingship, probably because a few chapters before another version has already been given or because it embodies the views of some prior work or teacher. It begins by saying that the most desirable thing for a State is to crown a king, that in a kingless country there is no dharma, no security of life nor of property, that therefore the gods appointed kings for protecting people. Then it proceeds to say that the people assembled and made compacts (samayān) amongst themselves that whoever would commit libel or assault or adultery and break the compacts made by the people should be abandoned. All people went to Brahṃā and requested him to appoint a ruler whom they would all honour and who would protect them. Brahṃā appointed Manu for that purpose, but Manu did not at first like the idea, saying 'Government is a very difficult business among men who are always deceitful and I am afraid of the sinful acts of men'. The people asked him not to be afraid as the sins committed by men will affect the perpetrators (and not Manu) and that the people would give him shares of produce (one-tenth of grain, one-fifth of cattle, one-fourth of their dharma &c.) Manu then agreed, went round the world, terrorizing evil-doers and making them conform to dharma. This story about Manu and the people is alluded to by Kautilya (vide p. 31 above). Even here Manu promises nothing expressly, while the people agree to pay taxes and answer for their own sins. There is no doubt that some of the details in the two chapters are different. In chap 67 there is no reference to an original state of perfection nor to a vast work nor to any oath; so also in one it is Vainya who becomes the first king and in the other it is Manu. But the conception in both is mythological and the fundamental fact in both is the same. God gives a king to the people in both, when they were without a king and degeneracy had set in. Though there is no offer to give a share in chap 59 yet it is to be inferred from the prajñā of Vainya that every subsequent king was deemed to do the same. It may be said that in chap 67 there is a blending of the theory of Divine Right and of an original compact between king and people. In both, however, the emphasis is on the theory of the divine origin of kingship. Śānti 67.4 states 'one desirous of prosperity should honour the king as one honours Indra', while chap. 59. 139 asks 'what is the cause but the divine character (the king possesses) on account of which people remain under his control'? It must be said that in both chapters of the Śāntiparva there is no proper theory of contract between king and people.

The Nāradaśmṛti as indicated above (pp. 23, 27 and note 27) is a thorough-going advocate of the theory of divine right. It says (prakīrnaka 20-22) 'It is Indra himself who moves about on the earth as king; people can nowhere live after transgressing his orders. Since the privilege of protection is his because of his supreme power (majesty) and on account of the fact that he is benign to all creatures, the settled rule is that whatever a king does is right. Just as the husband, though weak, must be honoured by the wife, so a ruler though devoid of qualities must be honoured by his subjects'. Verse 25 inculcates the duty of obedience to the king.

According to Mr. J. N. Figgis in his book 'The divine right of kings' (1934) pp. 5-6, the theory of the Divine Right of kings in its completest form involved the following propositions: (I) monarchy is a divinely ordained institution; (II) hereditary right is indefeasible i. e. the right acquired by birth and descending by the law of primogeniture cannot be forfeited through any acts of usurpation, or by any incapacity of the heirs or by any act of deposition; (III) kings are accountable to God alone, i. e. a limited monarchy is a contradiction in terms; (IV) non-resistance and passive obedience are enjoined by God i. e. in any circumstances resistance to the king is a sin and leads to damnation and that when the king issues a command directly contrary to God's law, the latter is to be obeyed and also all penalties attached to the breach of the king's law are to be patiently borne. This theory was very much to the fore in the 16th and 17th centuries when in Europe theology and politics were in close union.

It is to be seen how far the ancient Hindu theory agreed with this full-fledged theory of the divine right of kings. As regards proposition I it has been shown above that the Manusmṛti, the Mahābhārata and other works held that the king was either God himself, or god's vicar or vicegerent performing functions similar to those of several gods. As regards proposition II all Sanskrit works recognised hereditary right and primogeniture, but they allowed exceptions as will be shown later on. Our ancient books did not accept the third and the fourth propositions in toto. They say that the king cannot do as he likes, that he has to carry out the dictates of dharma, his power to make new rules is limited and if he does not act up to the rules of dharma he may be deposed, disobeyed or killed. Vide quotations from Śukranīti and Anuśāsanaparva cited above. When Manu (VII. 111-112) says that a king who harasses his kingdom loses his life, his family and his kingdom, it is implied that people are not bound to suffer silently all the wrongs heaped upon them by a bad king but that they may turn round and either depose him or kill him. Fick (pp. 103-104) gives examples from the Buddhist Jātakas where bad kings were killed by the people and others were elected in their place. There is no doubt that obedience to the king is enjoined by Nārada and others, but it is due to the king only so long as he does not swerve from the path of right and virtue. Nārada<sup>42</sup> (prakīrṇaka verses 12 and 32) says 'on account of his majesty and sanctity a king and brāhmana are not to be abused if they do not swerve from the right path; one should not treat with contempt or scold the king, one should abide by his order, since (the penalty of) death may follow from violating it (king's order)'. Here the duty of obedience is not based on the divine origin of kingship, but on the practical worldly ground that an offended king may punish with death. Nārada's doctrine does not lead to the requirement of absolute submission and non-resistance to a wicked king.

It is impossible to hold that the theory of divine right was put forward as a counterblast to the theory of social contract. The theory of divine right would arise very naturally even in the oldest days, while the theory of social contract is the product of a more advanced stage of political thought. The theory of divine right is not more absurd than the theory of social contract and was popularly held not only in India, but in many Christian countries, relying on passages in the Bible such as Daniel 4 and Romans 13. 1-7. The theory of divine right was circumscribed in India by another theory from very ancient times. The cry of the American colonists against England in the 18th century was that taxation and representation went hand in hand; that of the ancient Hindu political and dharmaśāstra writers was that taxation and protection went hand in hand (see n 45). Baud. Dh. S. I. 10. 1. says 'the king being hired for the sixth part (that he takes as tax) should protect the subjects'. Yāj. I. 337 states 'The king shares half of that evil which the subjects do when not protected by the king, since he takes taxes (from the people)' and Yāj. I. 334 lays down that a king who protects according to śāstras receives the 6th part of the merit (punya) of the subjects. Śāntiparva (57. 44-45) states 'One should abandon six persons like a leaking boat in the ocean viz. a teacher who does not explain, a priest who does not study the Veda, a king who does not protect &c.' Śukranīti I. 121 affirms 'the gods destroy a king who does not protect, a brāhmana who does not perform austerities, a wealthy man who makes no gifts.' Vide Vasistha I. 44-46, Gaut. XI 11, Visnu Dh S. III. 28, Udyogaparva 132. 12, Śānti 67. 27 (4th part of punya), Śānti 24. 12 (4th part), Śānti 72. 20, Āśramavāsi 3.40, Anuśāsana 61.34 and 36, Kām. II. 10 for the idea that the king receives a part (generally 6th part) of the punya (and also sin) of the people. The king had to protect even forest hermits who paid no taxes, as he would share in their punya<sup>43</sup>. Vide Rāmāyana III. 6. 14. Kālidāsa echoes this in the Śakuntala II. 13 Ādiparva 213. 9 looks upon the king who takes the sixth part as tax and affords no protection as the arch-sinner in the world. Śānti 71. 29 says that the spiritual merit that a king gathers by protection according to the sacred code yields rewards for him in heaven for ten thousand years.

From the preceding pages it is clear that the following are put forward as the grounds on which the obligation to render obedience to the ruler is based: (1) the king has divinity in him, (2) the great utility of the ruler affording protection as regards life, liberty and property, (3) the fear of punishment (Manu VII. 22), (4) a primeval contract between the ruler and the people, (5) the interdependence of the ruler and the people as parts of one organism (viz. the State). Vide Medhātithi on Manu IX. 294 for this last.

Who should be king? There were several views on this point. One meaning of the word 'rājan' is 'ksatriya'. Manu (VII. 1) states that he will declare rājadharmas and in the very next verse he employs the word 'ksatriya' and remarks that a ksatriya who has undergone the upanayana saṃskāra (or abhiṣeka according to some commentators) should afford protection to all in his kingdom. Therefore a ksatriya is the most proper person to be a king. Some of the works such as the Rājadharmakaustubha, Rājanītiprakāśa, the Nītimayūkha, and Par. M. vol. I. pp. 449-451 refer to the discussion in the Pūrvamīmāṃsā works on the topic of the Avesti sacrifice. On Jaimini II 3.3 Śābara and Kumārila hold an elaborate discussion. The Vedic texts say 'rājā rājasūyena yajeta' ('the Rājasūya should be performed by a rājan'). Among the numerous constituents of that sacrifice there is an ṛṣi called Avesti, with reference to which a Vedic passage says 'if a brāhmana performs avesti, he places the āhuti (offering) for Brhaspati in the middle, if a ksatriya performs it the offering to Indra is placed in the middle of the offerings &c.'. The pūrvapakṣa (prima facie view) is that the word 'rājan' applies to any one (whether a brāhmana, a ksatriya or a vaiśya) who protects the people. The siddhānta (the established conclusion) is that in this text the word rājan means a ksatriya and that by the other passage about brāhmanas &c. what is meant is that brāhmanas and vaiśyas may independently perform the Avesti sacrifice, but that only a ksatriya can perform the Avesti as part of the Rājasūya rites. Śābara makes the interesting remark that in the Āndhra country the word 'rājan' is applied to a man of the ksatriya caste even though he does not pursue the occupation of protecting a country or a city; while Kumārila observes that persons of all the four varnas are seen as rulers of kingdoms.<sup>44</sup> In the literature on dharmaśāstra the word 'rājan' is understood in the sense of 'one who rules over or protects a country' (i.e. the pūrvapakṣa view in the Pūrvamīmāṃsā). Vide Medhātithi on Manu VII. 1. Aparārka<sup>45</sup> (on Yā. I 366) remarks "when he who is not a ksatriya performs the work of a ksatriya (i.e. becomes a king) he should do all this (that a ksatriya king has to do) since the maxim is 'that by assuming the position or the work of a particular person or thing one receives what is due to that other' and the duty of protecting the subjects arises from the fact of taking taxes from them. For everyone when giving wealth does so with reference to a purpose related to himself and there is no purpose except one's protection that is intended in rendering taxes. Hence it is established that whoever receives taxes must secure protection of the subjects". According to Kullūka the word 'rājan' means 'any person who is crowned king and protects the country and capital' and is not used in the sense of 'a person of the ksatriya caste'. The Rājanitiratnākara (p. 2) after citing Kullūka and Kāmadhenu states that many hold that 'rājan' means 'any one who takes upon himself the task of protecting the subjects'. The Rājanitiprakāśa holds<sup>46</sup> a long discussion (pp. 10-15), states that the word 'rājan' may have three meanings viz. any one who protects people, a ksatriya in general or a ksatriya who is crowned and ultimately gives it as its opinion that the word 'rājan' is applied in popular usage to any one, whether crowned as king or not, who is the ruler of a country. The Vaijayanti on Viṣṇu Dh. S. III. 44 explains 'rājūm' as 'of ksatriyas' by following the Avesti maxim.

Several brāhmaṇa families founded kingdoms and empires, Pusa-yamitra, founder of the Śunga empire, was a brāhmaṇa (Hariyamaśa III. 2. 35 ff, E. I. vol. 20 p. 54); the Kānvāyanas, who followed the Śungas, were brāhmaṇas and so were the Vākātakas, the Kadambas (vide Talagunda pillar Inscription of Kakusthavarmā in E. I. vol. VIII. p. 24) and several others. Vide H. Dh. vol. II. pp. 122-123 for texts on the question as to when a brāhmaṇa should follow the profession of arms. Manu XII. 100 states that a brāhmaṇa who knows the Veda deserves to be made a king, a commander-in-chief, the wielder of the power of punishment. Kumārila's dictum that persons of all varṇas are seen to be rulers has been already quoted. Gopāla the founder of the Pāla dynasty of Bengal was a śūdra. Manu IV. 61 directs a brāhmaṇa not to stay in a country where the ruler was a śūdra. Medhātithi<sup>47</sup> explains this by saying that the prohibition applies only to a country where all the seven high functionaries such as the chief minister, the commander-in-chief are of the sūdra caste; compare Āp. Dh. S. I. 11. 32. 18. Manu's dictum related to a time when there was hardly any sūdra king. But the logic of facts was too much for Medhātithi who had to twist the plain words of Manu. Medhātithi on Manu VIII 1 remarks that 'persons of other varnas who subvert by the mode prescribed for ksatriyas have power over the kingdom and have to protect the people'. Śāntiparva remarks that whoever protects people from the hordes of dasyus and wields the power of punishment according to smṛti rules must be considered as king. The Harivamśa (III 3. 6 'aksatriyāśca rājāno viprah sūdropajvinah') and some of the Purāṇas in depicting the awful degeneracy of the Kali age in a prophetic strain state that the kings in the Kali age will be mostly sūdras and that sūdra kings will celebrate Āsvamedha sacrifices. Vide, for example, Matsya 144 40 and 43 and Lingapurāṇa 40. 7 and 42. Hiouen T'sang notices that in the first half of the 7th century A. D. Sindh was under a sūdra king (Beal's B. R. W. W. vol II p 272)

46. दृष्टमहणेन जनपदैश्वर्यवतोधिकारमाह । प्रमाणान्तरमूला ह्यत्र धर्मा उच्यन्ते न सर्वे वेदमूलाः । मेधा on मनु VII. 1; तथा विज्ञानेश्वरोपि अभिवेकादिगुणयुक्तस्य राज्ञः प्रजापालनं यतो धर्मः । तथापि दृष्टमहणतमभिव्याहारादुपनिषिक्तं यि जनपदैश्वर्यवति लोकमसिद्ध्या राजज्ञानेनो वसति । राजनीतिम्. p. 14, अश्वेष्टिन्पापेन राज्ञां क्षत्रियाणां न पार्थिवानामेव-वैजयन्ती.

It is not clear who दुष्टकारिक (inflicter of punishment?) is. Should we read दुष्टपाशिक (as in the Valabhi plates in E. I. XI pp. 83 and 94 or XV. p. 257) or दुष्टनायक (as in E. I. IX. p. 289 or E. I. XX. p. 7)?

It was almost a universal rule that a male alone was to be the ruler. There appear to have been stray exceptions. The Śāntiparva (33.43-46) enjoins<sup>48</sup> upon a conqueror the duty to place on the throne of a conquered country the brother, son or grandson of the vanquished king and if no prince be available, then to crown even the daughter of the late king. The Rajataranginī (V 249 and VI 332) describes at great length the regime of the notorious queens Sugandhā (904-906 A. D.) and Diddā (980-81 A. D.) of Kashmir. In India for many centuries there has been no Salic Law expressly declaring that daughters cannot inherit land, though on account of the general position of women, the requirements of disturbed times and military necessity women did not generally assume the role of sovereigns. In a copper-plate grant from Ganjam (of about the 13th century) it is stated that when a certain king named Subhākara died his queen ascended the throne and after her her daughter Dandīmahādevī, who is styled 'parama-bhattārīkā-mahārājādhīrājā-parameśvarī' ruled the earth for a long time (E. I. vol VI p 133 at p. 138). Whether the grandiloquent titles were deserved by the queen or were only the exaggerated effusions of a courtier, it is clear that the widow and daughter of the last male ruler succeeded to the throne. The Raghuvamśa (XIX. 55, 57) states that the widowed queen of king Agnivarna sat on the throne and carried on the government with the help of hereditary ministers.

Apart from conquest and election in rare cases, monarchy was hereditary and generally descended by primogeniture. The passage from the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa (XII. 9.3, 1 and 3) mentioning the descent of kingship for ten generations in succession has already been referred to (p 26). Though succession was hereditary it was the general rule that the eldest son ascended the throne when the reigning monarch died or abdicated. The rights of the eldest son or daughter as against the younger son or daughter were very jealously guarded in the vedic age. It has already been shown how marrying before one's elder brother or sister was condemned in the vedic age and also in the times of the smṛtis (H. Dh. II. pp. 546-549). Even the R̥gveda several times refers to jyāsthya (rights of seniority) of Indra (R̥g. I 5.6, III 50.3). The Tai. S. II. 2.11.5 states that the gods agreed to treat Indra as the 'jyestha' (the eldest) and Tai. S. II. 5.2.7 refers to the ancient practice of giving all wealth (of the father) to the eldest son. The Ait. Br. 19.4 narrates the story that the gods did not accept Indra's position as the eldest and most exalted among them and that Indra then induced Bṛhaspati to perform the Dvādaśāha sacrifice for him, whereby he secured that position. The Nirukta II. 10 sets out the interesting story that Devāpi and Śantanu were two brothers, scions of the Kuru family, of whom Devāpi was the eldest, but Śantanu the younger one got himself crowned king and so Devāpi practised austerities. The result was that there was a drought in Śantanu's kingdom for 12 years. The brāhmanas said to him 'You are guilty of having violated dharma in that passing over the eldest brother you got yourself crowned. Therefore God does not send down rain.' Then Śantanu desired to give the kingdom to Devāpi, who however said that he would be his purohita and make him perform a sacrifice. The R̥gveda hymn X 98 was then composed by Devāpi for bringing down rain. This story shows how long before Yāska the popular belief was that it was a great sin to pass over an elder brother in marriage and other matters and doing so brought down the serious displeasure of the gods. Vide Brhad-devatā VII. 156-157 and VIII. 1-9 for the same story in a little greater detail, viz that Devāpi suffered from a skin disease, that when Devāpi said to the subjects that he did not deserve the kingdom and that Śantanu should be their king, the subjects crowned Śantanu as king. When Yayāti desired to pass over his elder sons Yadu and others because they disobeyed him and wanted to make the younger Pūru his successor the brāhmanas and citizens protested 'How can the younger son secure the kingdom passing over the elder one<sup>50</sup>?' Arjuna upbraids Bhīmasena who got enraged against Yudhishthira 'who would act against one's eldest brother that follows the path of dharma?' (Sabha 688). In the Rāmāyana<sup>51</sup> Daśaratha addresses Rāma (II. 340) 'you are born of my eldest queen, who is of the same class as myself (i.e. of ksatriya blood)' and Vasistha says to Rāma 'Among all Ikṣvākus the eldest son becomes the king; a younger brother is not crowned king when the elder exists' (II 11036). The Ayodhyakāṇḍa in several places (8.23-24, 101.2) reiterates the idea that all the sons of a king do not succeed but only the eldest, although the other sons may be equally fit and endowed with qualities. Kautilya (I 17)<sup>52</sup> states that people esteem rulership going to the eldest except in the case of some calamity. Manu IX. 106 says that by the very birth of the eldest son, a man becomes free from the debt he owes to his pitrs and therefore the eldest deserves to get everything from the father. The Rājadharmak. (pp. 234-235) after quoting the Kālikāpurāṇa and the Rāmāyana lays down the following propositions: (1) the aurasa son of a king alone succeeds in preference to the eleven kinds of secondary sons (whether he is junior or senior in age); (2) if the son of a junior queen (of the same caste) is senior by birth, he succeeds in preference to the son of the senior queen, who (son) is younger in age; (3) if two sons are born to two queens at the same moment, the son of the senior queen is preferred; (4) if twins are born to the senior queen, the son who is born first is to be preferred.

If the eldest son suffers from a physical or mental defect (such as blindness or lunacy) he is to be passed over and his younger brother becomes king (vide Manu IX. 201 for grounds of exclusion from inheritance). Ādiparva<sup>53</sup> 109. 25 states that Dhṛtarāstra because he was blind did not succeed to the kingdom. Vide also Udyoga 147. 39. The Śukranītisāra (I. 343-344) states that if the eldest prince suffers from deafness, dumbness, blindness, leprosy or impotence he is unfit to rule and that in such a case his younger brother or son should succeed.<sup>54</sup> The Śukranītisāra further points out that by dividing a kingdom among the several princes no benefit results, but on the contrary the small parts would fall an easy prey to enemies; therefore when the eldest alone succeeds he should make his younger brothers provincial governors or superintendents over the treasury, horses &c. (I. 346-348). The Rājadharmakaustubha lays down a few additional propositions: (1) even if the eldest does not succeed owing to some mental or physical defect, his son's right will remain intact and R. D. K. quotes the words of the fisherman chief to Bhīṣma in Ādi 100. 92.<sup>55</sup> The Bālabhāṭṭi on Yāj. I. 309 and Rājantīprakāśa p 40 say the same. Another example is that of Ansumān who became king when his father Asamañja was exiled from the state by Sagara for his misdeeds. (2) When a younger son is crowned king because the eldest is disqualified, then after the former's death his son succeeds and not the son of the disqualified eldest son who is born after the coronation of the younger (e g. Yudhiṣṭhira deserved the kingdom on Pāṇdu's death and not Duryodhana). The Nīti-vākyāmrta (sec. 24 p. 249) lays down the order of succession in the case of kings as follows: the son, full brother, half-brother, uncle, a male of the same family, daughter's son, a stranger (who is either elected or who takes up the kingdom<sup>56</sup>).

Sometimes a king selected a younger son to succeed him. There are famous historical examples. The great Gupta Emperor Samudragupta though a younger son was nominated by his father Chandragupta I to succeed and by his brilliant and most successful career Samudragupta more than justified the choice. Vide the Allahabad Pillar Inscription verse 4 (Gupta Inscriptions p 6) Similarly Chandragupta II, though younger, was nominated by his father Samudragupta to succeed himself. Yayāti selected his youngest son Pūru because he was devoted and obedient and the eldest and other sons disobeyed him. Vide Adiparva chap 75 ff and above p 42. The principle of hereditary succession was so strong that even a boy king was placed on the throne. Vide Raghu XVIII 39.

In almost all works on rājaśāstra there is a disquisition on the qualities that a good king should possess. Vide Kaut VI 1, Manu VII 32-44, Yāj I 309-311 and 334, Śankha-Lukhita quoted in R. D. K III p 14 and Rājaniti-prakāśa p 116, Śānti 57 12 ff. and 70, Kām I 21-22, IV 6-24, XV 31, Mānasollāsa II. 1 1-9 (p. 29), Śukra I 73-86, Visnudharmottara II 3. Only one or two passages can be set out here. Yāj (I 309-311 and 334) states 'a king should have great energy, should be generous, mindful of past (good or bad) turns done by others, dependent on those who are advanced (in austerities, knowledge and experience), possessed of a disciplined mind, endowed with an even temper (in good or bad luck), born of a noble family (on both sides), truthful, pure (in body and mind), prompt in action, of strong memory, not mean-minded, not harsh (in words or acts), observant of the rules of dharma (as to varnas and āśramas), free from vices, talented, brave, clever in concealing secrets (or acc. to Bhāruchi and Aparārka 'clever in scenting the secrets of his enemies'), guarding the weak points of his state, well-taught as regards logic, the science of government, the science of wealth and the three vedas. He should be forbearing towards brāhmanas, straightforward towards his friends, wrathful towards his enemies, and should be (kind) like a father towards his servants and subjects'. Manu VII 32 is very similar to Yāj I 334. The Mit says that the qualities specified in Yāj I 309-311 are antaraṅga (inward or more essential). The 2nd quality 'sthūla-lakṣa' occurs also in the inscription of Rudradāman (E. I vol. VIII. at p 44). From I 312 Yāj. states the bahuraṅga qualities viz selection of ministers, purohita and sacrificial priests, gifts to worthy brāhmapas, protection &c.

Kautilya VI. 1 contains several lists of the king's qualities from several points of view. First, there is a list of qualities that make the king win the heart of the people (or make him approachable) viz. being of a noble family, godly, spirited, consulting the aged, virtuous, truthful, not failing in his promises, grateful, taking broad views (not pusillanimous), highly enthusiastic, not given to procrastination, powerful enough to control his feudatories, firm in mind, having a council of ministers of no mean calibre, desirous of self-discipline. These are called 'ābhigāṃika-guṇas' which word occurs in the Palitana plates of Dharasena II (of Valabhi) in EI vol. XI p 83 and in the Māliya plate of the same king (Gupta Ins. pp. 164, 169). The Daśakumāracarita VIII appears to make a pointed reference to this list when it makes a character say that the king (there referred to) has in him all the qualities beginning from good family (sarvāivātma-sampad-abhijanāt-prabhṛti &c.) Then the intellectual qualities he should possess are: desire to learn, study, understanding of what is studied and retaining it, reflection, discussion and devotion to the principles accepted after discussion. Almost the same qualities of the intellect (dhi) are mentioned by Kām. IV. 22. The word 'śakyasāmanta' (in Kaut. VI 1) occurs also in Agnipurāṇa 239. 4. The qualities that are the different aspects of his enthusiasm (or energy) are: valour, non-endurance (of the might of others), quickness (of action) and assiduity. The same occur in Kām. IV. 23. Then follows a long list of qualities that go to make up the personal endowment of the king (ātma-sampat). Gaut. (XI. 2, 4-6) requires that the king should do what is right (acc. to śāstras) and speak (or decide) rightly, should be pure (at heart and externally), should control his senses, be possessed of qualified servants and endowed with knowledge of the means of policy, should be even-handed towards all his subjects and look after their welfare. The long list of Śāṅkha-likhita agrees more or less with those of Kautilya and Yaj. Śāntiparva 70 states that the king should possess 36 qualities, viz. he should not speak bitterly, he should be godly, not wicked, not haughty, of agreeable address &c. Kām. I. 21-22 mentions 15 qualities that lead to the well-equipped personality of the king (ātma-sampat), viz. study of śāstra (Dandanīti), intellect, serenity, cleverness, boldness, power of comprehension, energy, eloquence, firmness, capacity to endure the worries of adversities, majesty, purity, kindness, liberality, truthfulness, gratefulness, noble family, character, self-restraint. Then Kām. in IV. 15-19 sets out the qualities called ātma-sampat, which generally agree with Kauṭilya's enumeration (in VI 1). Acc to Kām. IV 24 liberality, truthfulness and valour are the three greatest qualities in a king, who, when endowed with these, acquires all other qualities. The Mānasollāsa (II 1 2-7) first enumerates 44 qualities such as truthfulness, spiritedness (which agree more or less with Kauṭilya's enumeration) and then states that the five most essential qualities in a king are truthfulness, valour, forbearance, liberality and capacity to appreciate the worth of others. The Agnipurāṇa (239. 2-5) enumerates 21 qualities such as noble family, character &c. In the Paraśurāma-pratāpa 96 qualities are enumerated in the Rājavallabhakānda (Ms 239 of Visrāmabāg collection II, folio 21b). The Sabhāparva 5 107-109 and Rāmāyana II. 100 65-67 require the king to avoid 14 faults viz. atheism, falsehood, hot temper, carelessness, procrastination, not seeing the wise, laziness, addiction to five pleasures of sense, considering state matters alone (without mantrins), taking counsel with those who do not know politics, not starting to do what is decided upon, not guarding secret royal policy, not practising auspicious acts, taking up undertakings on all sides at one and the same time. Vanaparva 251. 5 says that subjects do not like a king who is very timid, very weak, procrastinating, careless and immersed in pleasures on account of vices. Sabhā 5 125 states that sleep (by day), laziness, timidity, hot temper, softness and dilatoriness are six calamities in a king.

The works on dharmaśāstra and arthaśāstra devote a good deal of space to the education of the king and to his moral discipline. Gaut XI 3 requires that the king should have received instruction in Trayī (the three Vedas) and Ānvīksiki. This last has been differently interpreted by different writers. Kaut I 2 says that Ānvīksiki comprehends Sāṅkhya,<sup>57</sup> Yoga and Lokā-

Some read आन्वीक्षिकी (Jolly's ed of अर्थशास्त्र) but आन्वीक्षिकी seems to be more grammatical and to be the reading of most classical works. The Trivandrum ed reads आन्वीक्षिकी. Patañjali in his Mahābhāṣya has a sentence बर्णिका मातुरी लोकायतस्य (Bhāguri expounds the Lokāyata system), vol III p 325 on Pāṇini VII 3 45. yata and that it examines the relative strength of the three other vidyās with reasons, and thereby benefits the world, steadies the mind in calamities and prosperity and imparts excellence in intellect, speech and actions. It is always the torch of (sheds light on) all vidyās, it is the means of (inducing to go in for) all undertakings, it is the source of all *dharma*s. Kautilya derives the name from the root 'iks' with 'anu' and he takes it to mean the science of ratiocination. It is somewhat strange that Lokāyata is included in Ānvīksikī, one of the subjects of study for the prince. But it appears from the remarks he makes that Kaut. uses it only in the sense of logic based on premises derived from ordinary experience (loka) though in later literature Lokāyata came to mean 'nāstika' (atheist, materialist). III. 3 53 and 54 states that the Laukāyatikas held the view that consciousness is a quality of the body (and there is no soul over and above the body). The Tantravārtika runs them down as fools and apes (on Jaimini 1. 3. 3). In the Rāmāyana Rāma asks Bharata not to resort to Lokāyatika brāhmanas, who, though childish, look upon themselves as learned and who relying on the knowledge acquired by Ānvīksikī speak nonsense in spite of the fact that there are principal Dharmaśāstras (that point out the sensible path). काश्चित् लोकयतिकान् ब्राह्मणस्ततः सेवते । अनर्थकुशला ह्येते पालाः पण्डितमानिनः ॥ धर्मशास्त्रेषु मुख्येषु विद्यमानेषु दुर्बुधाः । बुद्धिसान्नीधिकीं प्राप्य निरर्थं प्रवदन्ति ते ॥ अयोध्याकाण्ड 100 38-39. The Kāmasūtra (I 2 30) says that the Laukāyatikas hold that a kārsāpana (copper coin) which one is certain of is better than a niska (a gold coin) which is doubtful. चरं सांशयिकमिच्छादसांशयिकः कार्षापण इति लोकयतिकाः । कामसूत्र I 2. 30 Rājasekhara in his Kāvya-mīmāṃsā p 37 (Gaekwad's O. series, ed of 1934) refers to the opinion of the Laukāyatika logicians that the consciousness in human beings arises from the bhūtas (elements) just as the power of intoxication (in wine) is due to the mixture of several ingredients (none of which may by itself be intoxicating). The Nītivākya-mṛta p. 76 remarks "the Lokāyatika view leads to the effectuation of worldly affairs, for the king is able to uproot the thorns of the country by the help of Lokāyata". ऐहिकयवहारप्रसाधनपरं लोकयतिकम् । लोकयतसो हि राजा राष्ट्रकण्ठकावच्छेदयति । नीतिवा p. 76. to the Amarakosa, Visvarūpa on Yāj I 306, Haradatta on Gaut. (XI 3), Aparārka and several others Ānyiksiki means 'Logic'. Acc. to Kām. II 7 and 11, the Mit on Yāj I 311, Śukranīti I 158 it means 'Ātmavidyā' (Metaphysics), while Śukranīti I 153 and Rājanīti-prakāśa p 118 combine the two by saying that it is logic that leads on to or is useful for acquiring knowledge of the Self. The Nītimayūkha (p. 34) includes logic and Vedānta in Ānyiksiki and Mīmāṃsā and smṛtis under Trayī. The Bārhaspatyasūtra (II 5-6) advises the king to follow the Laukāyatika doctrines at the time of securing artha (wealth) and the Kāpālika-sāstra in achieving his sexual and similar desires<sup>59</sup>

Great divergence of views prevailed as to the vidyās that were essential for the education of the king. According to the Manusmṛti VII 43, Śānti 59 33, Kaut I 2, Yāj I 311, Kām II 2, Śukranīti I 152, Agni. 238 8, the subjects for the king's education are four viz, Anviksiki, Trayī, Vārtā and Dandanīti. Kaut notes that the school of the Mānavas held the view that the vidyās were three and regarded Ānyiksiki as a special branch of Trayī; that the Bārhaspatya school was of opinion that they were only two, Vārtā and Dandanīti, since Trayī only acted as a screen (to obscure the intellect) of one (the king) who wants to know the ways of the world; and the Ausanasas regarded Dandanīti as the only vidyā for a king, since according to them, the efforts to learn all vidyās are tied down to it (i.e. are ultimately intended to lead on to the mastery of Dandanīti). It will be seen how the Ausanasas and Bārhaspatyas had an entirely secular view in the science of government and divorced it from the study of sacred books and metaphysics in the case of the king. The Dasakumāracarita VIII (that displays a deep study of Kautilya) says that the vidyās for the king are four (catasro rājavidyās-trayīvārtānyiksikīdandanītiḥ). The Bārhaspatyasūtra I 3 (Dandanītireva vidyā) holds that Dandanīti is the only (essential) vidyā for the king. Kautilya further explains that dharma and its opposite are learnt from the three Vedas, viz. Sāmaveda, R̥gveda and Yajurveda, that the Atharvaveda and Itihāsaveda (i.e. Itihāsa and Purāna) are the other Vedas and that the six Angas also (viz. phonetics, ritual, grammar, etymology, metrics and astronomy) are comprehended in the word 'Trayī'<sup>60</sup>. Śukranīti I. 155 says that the 14 vidyās (enumerated in Yāj. I. 3) are comprehended in Trayī. Gaut. XI. 19 expressly says that in doing his duty of making the people observe the rules of the sacred codes the king would have to rely on the Veda, Dharmasāstras, the Āngas, Upavedas and Purāṇa. In the Rāmāyana, Rāma and his brothers are often spoken of as proficient in the Vedas, Vedāṅgas, in Dhanurveda, Gāndhārvaveda, Rājavidyā &c. (I. 18. 24 and 26, II. 1. 20, II. 2. 34-35, V. 35. 13-14). In the Vanaparva 277. 4 it is said that the princes were proficient in the Vedas with their secret doctrine and in Dhanurveda. In the Ādiparva 221. 72-74 Abhimanyu is said to have learned from Arjuna before he became 16 the Dhanurveda in four sections, the knowledge of asthas, and the theory and practice of these. Vide also Anuśāsana 104. 146-147. Khāravela in his Hathigumphā Inscription (E. I. vol. XX. p. 79 ll. 2 and 5) states that he learnt Lekha (official correspondence), Rūpa (currency), Ganānā (Accountancy) and the administration of justice, when he was the crown prince and also Gāndhārvaveda (music). In the Junagadh Inscription of Rudradāman (E. I. vol. VIII at page 44) the Mahākṣatrapa is said to have attained great fame by his deep study, retention, and actual practice of grammar, artha (either lexicography or politics), music, logic and other vidyās and to have been a fine rider of horses, elephants, chariots and a great adept in wielding the sword and shield and in wrestling<sup>61</sup>. The personal attainments of Samudragupta (in Gupta Inscriptions No. 1 pp. 12, 15-16) show how thorough the education of at least some princes was or at least what the ideal about their education was. Vide H. Dh. vol. II. p. 364 for the education of princes and Dr. Beni

Prasad's 'Theory of Government in Ancient India' p. 218 for an ideal course of education for a prince quoted from the Buddhist work, Sūtrāṅkara of Āśvaghoṣa. The Nītiśāstra<sup>62</sup> adds a long list of the accomplishments which a prince should possess viz. all scripts, valuing of jewels, knowledge of arms &c. On reading the ideal courses prescribed for the education of the prince by ancient Indian writers one cannot help feeling that they were probably actuated by the same sentiments that are attributed to Socrates by Plato in his 'Republic' (tr. by Jowett, ed. of 1875, vol. III. p. 357) viz. 'Until philosophers are kings or the kings and princes of this world have the spirit and power of philosophy and political greatness and wisdom meet in one and these commoner natures who follow either to the exclusion of the other are compelled to stand aside, cities will never cease from ill-no, nor the human race as I believe-and then only will our State have a possibility of light and behold the light of day &c' The Agnipurāṇa (225. 1-4) prescribes that the prince should be taught dharmasāstra, kāmasāstra, arthaśāstra, science of archery (dhanurveda), the various arts and crafts by trusted teachers, that he should not be allowed to be associated with those who are angry with the king or disrespected by him or who are greedy and that if it is impossible to impart good qualities to him he should be confined, surrounded by pleasures. The princes were sometimes educated in their own capital or in a nearby college. Vide H. Dh. vol. II. p. 364. Sometimes, it appears, princes went to such famous seats of learning as Takṣaśīla (vide Jātakas ed. by Fausbøll II. 87, 278, 319, 323, 400, III. 158, 168, 415, 463) The subjects of study there were the three vedas and 18 śilpāni or vidyās (Jātakas, vol. II. 87, III. 115). Kautilya (I. 4) explains that Vārtā is constituted by agriculture, the rearing of cattle and trade; it benefits (the State) by bringing in grain, cattle, gold, baser metals, and free labour; by means of vārtā the king secures treasury and army whereby he brings under control his own side and the enemy. In the Sabhāparva<sup>63</sup> 5. 79 and Ayodhyakāṇḍa 100. 47 it is declared that when the world relies on vārtā it easily prospers. The Śānti-parva (263.3) gives the warning that this world would cease to exist if vārtā was given up, that this world is rooted in vārtā and is sustained by the three vedas (68.35). The Vanaparva (150.30) states that the whole world is sustained by vārtā i.e. by merchandise, mines, trade, agriculture and tending cows, she-goats and ewes. The Nītivākyaṃṛta (p. 93) after defining vārtā as above emphasizes that the king secures the abundance of everything when vārtā is prosperous and that the man who has his own agriculture, milch-cattle, plot for growing vegetables and a well in his own house has indeed all the pleasures of this world. These quotations indicate what importance was attached to agriculture and the economic structure of society. The result is that in the Arthasāstra economic matters occupy a very large space.

Kautilya (I 5) starts by saying that the three vidyās (except dandānīti) in the case of the prince depend upon danda, that danda in its turn is based upon discipline, which is of two kinds, natural and induced (or acquired). Vidyās produce discipline (of the 2nd kind) in him who possesses the qualities of intellect specified above. Then he goes on to say that the prince should learn the alphabet and arithmetic after his aula is performed (in the 3rd year or later) and after upanayana he should learn the three vedas and ānvīksiki from the śiṣṭas (those learned in the veda), vārtā from the heads or superintendents (of the various departments thereof) and dandānīti from expounders (of the vidyā) and from practical politicians. Vide Manu VII. 43 (= Matsya 215. 54 and Agni 225. 21-22) for directions as to from whom the prince was to learn the four vidyās. Kautilya prescribes that the prince should study these up to the 16th year, should then marry and that in order to foster the growth of the discipline of the intellect he should always associate with those who are advanced in the vidyās enumerated above (after his 16th year) and that the king should spend the first part of the day in practising the riding of elephants, horses, chariots and in the science of arms and the latter part of the day in listening to Itihāsa which comprises Purāna, history, stories, panegyrics, dharmasāstra and arthasāstra. A king whose intellect is thus disciplined and who is devoted to disciplining his subjects also and to doing good to all will be the sole ruler of the earth. The Nītivākyaṃṛta (p. 162) defines vmaya as 'acting with humility towards those who excel in vratas, vidyās and are aged' Manu VII. 38-39. Kām. I 19-20 and 59-63, Śukra I. 92-93 (taken from Kām. I. 19-20) extol the value and importance of vinaya, and waiting upon the aged and the learned. Manu (VII. 40-42) states that many kings perished with their vast paraphernalia through want of discipline while others, though residing in a forest (i.e. without an army &c.), gained kingdoms through vinaya, and names Vena, Nahusa, Sudās son of Pijavana and Sumukha Nimi as those who perished through lack of vinaya and gives Prihu and Manu as examples of those who secured kingdoms through vinaya. Matsya 215.53 is the same as Manu VII. 40. Ancient Indian writers harp on the education of the prince so much because their ideal of kingship was that the king should be a rājarṣi (a royal sage). Kālidāsa frequently speaks of this e.g. in Śikuntala II. 14 and Raghuvamśa (I. 58). They were aware, like Socrates, that until either philosophers became<sup>64</sup> kings or kings philosophers States will never succeed in remedying their short-comings (vide p. 50 above). Not only was an extensive course of intellectual training prescribed for the king, but both dharmaśāstra and arthaśāstra works strongly and frequently insist upon the necessity of moral discipline and the right direction of the emotions and will in the case of the king.

Kautilya (I. 6) emphasizes that control of the organs of sense is the cause of (proficiency in) vidyās and discipline should be attempted by giving up the six enemical tendencies viz. lust, hot temper, greed, vanity (māna), haughtiness or insolence (mada), overjoy. He says that (the whole purpose or insistence of) all sāstras is the restraint of the senses, that even a supreme ruler of the whole earth up to its four borders whose senses are not under control will at once perish and cites two examples on each of these six tendencies, viz. Dāṇakya Bhoja who attempted to rape a brāhmana girl through lust and perished with his kingdom and kinsmen and Karāla king of Videha; Janamejaya (perished) who attacked brāhmanas through hot temper and Tālajangha who did so against the Bhrgus, Aila who exacted through greed excessive taxes from persons of the four varnas and Ajabindu, the king of Sauvira; Ravana who did not restore another's wife through his conceit and Duryodhana who did not give even a part from his kingdom; Dambhodhbhava who despised all beings through his insolence and

Arjuna of the Haihaya dynasty; Vātāpi through overjoy when he attacked Agastya and also the oligarchy of the Vṛsnis when they attacked Dvaipāyana<sup>65</sup>. These six evil tendencies are called śatru-śaḍ-varga or ari-śaḍvarga. Kautilya adds that by the conquest of these six evil tendencies Jāmadagnya (Paraśurāma) and Ambarisa enjoyed the earth for a long time. Kām. (I. 55-58) and Śukra. I. 144-146 give six of the twelve examples of Kaut and Kām. I. 58 is the same as the last verse of Kautilya I. 6. Vide Mārkaṇḍeya 27. 12-13. In the Vāsavadattā of Subandhu (Hall's ed pp. 273-276) there is a long list of the kings of antiquity (Purūravas, Nahusa, Yayāti, Sudyumna, Nala and nine others) who suffered owing to some failing or other in themselves. The Udyogaparva (74. 13-18) mentions by name 18 kings who by their evil career destroyed themselves, their friends and relatives (such as Mudāvarta of the Haihayas, Janamejaya of the Nīpas, Bahula of Tāla-janghas, Dhautamūlaka of the Cīnas). This shows that Cina does not probably stand for modern China in the epic. Manu VII. 44 (= Matsya 215. 55) also emphasizes the necessity for the king incessantly to curb the senses and not to fall a prey to vices arising from kāma and krodha. Manu (VII. 45-48) enumerates ten vicious tendencies due to kāma (desire for pleasures) viz. hunting, gambling, sleep by day, finding fault (with others), women, drunkenness, (excessive indulgence in) dancing, singing and instrumental music, and aimless wandering; and eight vicious tendencies due to krodha (hot temper) viz. tale-bearing, violence, treachery, envy, slander, (improper) seizure of property, reviling and assault. Manu further declares (VII. 50) that among the vices due to kāma, drinking wine, gambling, women and hunting are the most harmful, each preceding one being worse than each succeeding

65. Most of these stories occur in the Mahābhārata, Purāṇas, and Buddhist works. Vide Jolly's ed. of the Kautilya vol. II. p. 5. But the story of the Vṛsnis and Dvaipāyana is not known. For Janamejaya (different from the descendant of Arjuna, the Pāṇḍava) incurring the sin of brāhmana-killing, vide Śānti 150. 3. For Arjuna (called Kārtavīrya) king of Haihayas, vide Sabhāparva 22. 24, Vanaparva 115. 12, Anuśāsana 153. 3 ff., Śānti 49. 35 ff. and Āśvamedhikaparva 29, Matsyapurāṇa 43, Vāyu 94. For Agastya and Vātāpi vide Vanaparva 96. In the Mārkaṇḍeya the instances of kings that came to grief through kāma, krodha, lobha &c. are different except that of Aila (chap. 27. 14-17). For Dambhodhbhava vide Sabhā 22. 24 and Udyoga 96. 7 (cr. ed 94. 7). For the story of Danda who raped a maiden of the Bhṛgu family vide Rāmāyana VII. 80-81. one and (VII 52) that among the vices due to hot temper, causing physical injury, reviling and deprivation of wealth are the worst. Manu (VII 52) has a sly hit that these seven vices are more or less prevalent among kings (sarvātravānusanginah) and therefore the only choice is that of the lesser or least of evils. Kautilya (VIII 3) has a lengthy disquisition on the views of his predecessors about the relative harmfulness of the three vices due to hot temper and of the four due to kāma and states his own opinion that arthadhūśana meaning loss of the means of livelihood by gifts, exactions (by the king), loss or abandonment of property is more harmful than reviling and dandapārusya is more harmful than arthadhūśana. He points out the benefits derived from hunting viz exercise, the disappearance of phlegm, bile, fat and sweat, the acquisition of skill in aiming at stationary and moving hodies, the ascertainment of the minds of beasts when they are provoked and occasional travel<sup>66</sup>. These are echoed, almost in the same words by Kām XIV 25 and in the Śakuntala (II 25) by Kālidāsa. Vide Sabhā 68 20, Udyoga 33 92 for the seven principal vices. Kām (XIV. 6 and 7) enumerates the three vices of hot temper and the four of kāma and holds an elaborate discussion on their respective demerits. He defines arthadhūśana (XIV. 17) somewhat differently (viz as the abandoning of an important object or of great wealth in order to show that what really merits blame is not so). Vide the Visnudharmot-tara II 65 12-15 for the two meanings of arthadhūśana<sup>67</sup>. Kām does not agree that hunting has many good points in its favour and advises the king to prepare a separate well-guarded hunting ground of one-half yojana in length and breadth if he really desires to hunt (XIV. 28-42). The Mānasollāsa (vol II) in the 15th chapter of the 4th vimsati deals with hunting as a sport for kings and points out how a forest is to be preserved for royal hunting and how it is to be guarded and enumerates 31 methods of hunting. Kām warns the king who wants to retain his kingdom against fondness for women (XIV. 57-58). He further says that a king may even indulge in fondness for women and may even drink moderately, but he must totally avoid gambling and hunting (XIV. 65). Kautilya regards gambling as the worst of the vices for a king (VIII. 3 last sentence in prose). In the Daśakumāracarita (VIII) there is an elaborate (but ironical) description of the mental and other benefits derived from the four principal vices due to kāma. Kām. I. 54 states that hunting, gambling and wine in the case of kings must be condemned, since calamities befell Pāṇḍu, Nala and the Vṛṣṇis (respectively) by being addicted to these. Even an ideal king like Rāma was fond of hunting. Śukra (I. 332-333) points out that hunting has much in its favour, but there is one great defect in it viz. slaughter of animals. Śukra (I. 109-119) denounces gambling, drinking and fondness for women as the worst of vices and points out that Indra, Daṇḍakya, Nahusa and Rāvaṇa came to grief through their passion for women (I. 114) and that a king who is excessively fond of dancers, singers, courtesans, wrestlers, eunuchs and men of low birth falls an easy prey to his enemies (I. 128). Kām. (I. 40-46, which are almost the same as Śukra I. 102-107) gives a poetic description of how animals like the deer, the elephant, the moth, the fish and the bee meet death or become confined by extreme attachment to one only out of the five objects of sense and emphasizes that man who can and does enjoy all the pleasures of the five senses must practise great restraint.

CHAPTER III

DUTIES AND RESPONSIBILITIES OF THE RULER.

All works are agreed that the first and foremost duty of the king is the protection of subjects Sāntiparva (68 1-4) notes that all the seven expounders of polity (*rājasāstra*pranātārāḥ) named by it extol protection as the highest dharma of the king Manu VII. 144 states that the protection of subjects is the highest dharma and Kālidāsa in Raghuvamśa 14 67 alludes to this dictum of Manu. Protection consists in punishing internal aggression (such as by thieves and robbers and by persons who invade a man's rights) and in meeting external<sup>68</sup> aggression Vide quotation from Brhaspati below Gautama (X. 7-8) prescribes that the special responsibility of the king is to protect all beings, to award just punishment and that he has to protect the several varnas and āśramas according to the rules of śāstra and to bring them round to the path of their proper duties when they swerve from it (XI 9-10) Vasistha (19 1-2) states that the wise say that protection is a life-long satra in which he has to give up fear and softness of heart. Vas 19 7-8 and Viṣṇu Dh S III 2-3 are similar to Gaut XI 9-10 The Sāntiparva (23 15) repeats a gāthā of Brhaspati 'As a snake swallows mice lying in holes, so the earth swallows these two viz a king who does not fight (an invader) and a brāhmana who does not go on a journey (for acquiring knowledge from famous teachers)<sup>69a</sup> Manu IX 306 states that the king protecting his subjects according to the śāstra and meting out punishment to those who deserve it performs every day sacrifices in which the fees are one hundred thousand cows (i.e. he secures the spiritual reward of very solemn sacrifices) Yāj I. 335 is to the same effect Kautilya also lays emphasis on the duty to keep the varnas and āśramas to their duties 'Therefore the king should not allow the people to swerve from their duties. He, who keeps dharma intact (without breach), enjoys bliss in this world and the next'. Nārada<sup>69</sup> (prakīrnaka 33) states 'His duty is to protect the subjects, to (honour or) listen to the aged and the wise, to look into the disputes of people and to be energetic in his functions as king'. Śukra (I. 14) says that the highest dharma of the king is to protect the subjects and to put down the wicked. According to Atri (verse 28),<sup>70</sup> to punish the wicked, to honour the good, to increase the treasury in the right way, to deal impartially with litigants and to protect the kingdom—these five are declared to be sacrifices in the case of kings. The Visnudharmottara (III. 323. 25-26) refers to the five sacrifices in very similar words. In Śānti 77. 33 the king's duty to restrain brāhmanas from engaging in unworthy actions is specially emphasized. These passages establish that the principal duties of the king were conceived to be to protect the subjects, to see that the rules of varnas and āśramas were carried out by them, to punish the wicked and to do justice.

The duty to protect involved fighting and probable death. Therefore the ancient works on dharma-śāstra always insist that it is the duty of the ksatriya to fight and that death on the battlefield is to be his highest ideal. Manu (VII. 87-89) enjoins upon the king, when protecting his subjects against invasion, not to run away from battle and promises heaven as the reward for kings who die fighting in battle. Yaj I 324 holds forth the same reward for all soldiers who are killed in battle. Vide Striparva 2. 16 and 18 and 11. 8-9. The Bhagavadgītā (II. 31-37) most solemnly declares that there is nothing higher for a ksatriya than a righteous war, that a ksatriya's duty requires him not to quail in battle, that if he dies in battle he goes to heaven and if he survives he rules over the world, that he should fight as a duty without caring for gain or loss, victory or defeat and if he fights with this attitude no sin attaches to him. Śānti-parva 78. 31 states that just as those who join in the bath of the king at the end of the Āśvamedha are purified of all sins, so all soldiers (of whatever caste and on whatever side) killed in battle become pure by the destruction of their sins. Manu (VII 94-95) sets out the results for a soldier when he flees from the battlefield. Parāśara<sup>71</sup> III 37 says "Two men pierce the orb of the sun (i.e. reach heavenly worlds) viz. an ascetic endowed with Yoga and a soldier killed while facing the enemy" and the following verses (III 38 ff) dilate upon how the slain warrior is waited upon in heaven by divine damsels. A verse of the Rgveda X 154 3 (= Atharva 18 2 17) appears to hold that warriors losing life in battle reap the same rewards that those who make gifts of a thousand cows in sacrifices secure.<sup>72</sup> It is probably this passage which Kautilya has in mind when in X 3 he refers to the Veda for inciting the soldiers to fight without regard to life. Āp Dh. S. (II 10 26 2-3) states that a king, who strives to recover the wealth of brāhmanas (stolen by thieves) and dies in the effort, is said to perform a sacrifice, in which his body is the sacrificial post and the fees are incalculable and that other valiant men losing life in fighting for a (good) cause are in a similar position. To die fighting for the protection of cows and brāhmanas is specially commended (vide Śānti 21. 19 and 77. 28 and 30). The Visnudharmasūtra III 44-46 prescribes 'there is no duty for kings equal to losing one's life in battle; those who meet death in protecting a cow, a brāhmana, a king, a friend, their own wealth and their wife enter heaven as also those who meet death in preventing confusion of varnas (caused by adultery &c.)'. On the eve of battle the great warrior Bhīṣma says to his officers 'it is a sinful act for a ksatriya to die in his house from some disease; the ancient code of conduct for him is that he should meet death from steel' (Bhīṣmaparva 17 11). The same idea is presented in Śalyaparva 5 32, Śānti 97 23 and 25.

Kāmandaka<sup>73</sup> (V. 82-83) makes it clear that the subjects require protection against the king's officers, thieves, enemies of the king, royal favourites (like the queen and the princes) and the greed of the king himself. As an extension of the king's duty to protect, the works lay down that it is his duty to support students, learned brāhmanas, and sacrificers.<sup>74</sup> Vide Gaut. The Hindu kings of ancient and medieval India followed this advice with great liberality for centuries and the subject has already been treated in vol. II. pp 113, 856-864. The functions of Government were not supposed to end with the maintenance of peace and order, but Government must be an instrument of the diffusion of culture. The king is also called upon to support helpless and aged people, the blind, the cripple, lunatics, widows, orphans, those suffering from diseases and calamities, pregnant women by giving them medicines, lodging, food and clothing according to their requirements<sup>75</sup>. Vide Vas 19. 35-36, Visnudharmasūtra III 65, Matsya 215. 62, Agni 225 25, Ādiparva 49. 11, Sabhā 18. 24, Virātaparva 18. 24, Śānti 77. 18. The Rājāniti-prakāśa (pp. 130-131) quotes<sup>76</sup> the Visnudharmottara requiring the king to honour and protect chaste women (pativrātās) and Śāṅkha-Likhita to the effect that even ksatriyas and vaiśyas who cannot maintain themselves by the methods prescribed by the śāstras for them should approach the king who should help them with the means of livelihood and they should work for the king in the manner laid down for them and that sūdras also should apply their skill and crafts for the benefit of the king when so maintained<sup>77</sup>. Medhātithi on Manu V. 94 states that when a king supports his subjects in a famine by distributing food from his treasury no question of his being in mourning would come in the way. These provisions for the old, the blind, the widows, orphans and helpless persons and for the relief of unemployed ksatriyas, vaiśyas and sūdras strike one as rather modern in tone. In many modern countries the State has become the means of providing services for the greater part of its subjects, not only armed forces and the police, but social services such as education, public health, medical attendance, insurance against unemployment, old age, widowhood, and orphanage, relief of poverty &c. In ancient India, though there were naturally no Acts of Parliament guaranteeing the above services to the subjects, public opinion, the views of eminent writers and the practice of the best kings created an atmosphere in which it was thought that it was imperative for the king representing the State and its resources to encourage learning, to care for the blind, the decrepit, the old and the widowed and to give employment to those who were unemployed. Asoka constructed hospitals for men and animals (2nd Rock Edict at Kalsi in C I I vol 1, p 28), alms-houses, rest houses, watering places, shady trees on the highways and irrigation works, visited and supported the aged (8th Girnar Rock Edict in C I I p 15). In the 2nd century B C Khāravela, emperor of Kalinga, declares in his Hathigumpha Inscription (E I vol. XX p 71 at p 86) that in the very first year of his reign he constructed embankments round the Kūbīra lake in the Kalinga capital and renovated all public gardens. Rudradāman in the 2nd century A. D. repaired the Sudarśana lake at great cost from his own treasury without levying fresh taxes or benevolences (pranaya) or forced labour. The Anuśāsanaparva says that good kings should<sup>78</sup> construct meeting halls, prapās, tanks, temples and lodging places for brāhmanas. The Matsyapurāṇa 215. 64 remarks that the king should give to those who stay in hermitages food, oil and pots. Vide Āp. Dh. S. II. 2 4, 21 and Haradatta thereon as to provision for śūdra guests. It is quite possible that these rules of the texts were not literally followed by all kings, but it is well-known how even legislative enactments are carried out by the subordinate staff in all countries including those of the West. One has only to turn to Dickens' 'Oliver Twist' for some indication of the administration of Poor Laws and work-houses in England about a hundred years ago.

detailed rules, which have been already set out (H. of Dh. vol. II pp. 805-806) Every day on rising from his bed the king was advised (by Manu VII. 37) to wait upon brāhmanas learned in the three Vedas and endowed with wisdom and to abide by their directions. Vas. I. 39-41, Gaut. XI. 13-14 say the same. In giving this advice exaggerated claims were made for brāhmanas which have been already set out before Vide H. Dh. vol II pp. 135-136 and Anuśāsana 33 2-8. The king was also expected to show himself to all people every day (Ayodhyā 100 51, Sabhā 5. 90)<sup>79</sup>.

An extremely high ideal was placed before the king by the Kautiliya, the Mahābhārata and other works. In the Arthashastra I. 19 Kautiliya<sup>80</sup> proclaims the magnificent ideal 'in the happiness of the subjects lies the happiness of the king, in their welfare lies his welfare; the good of the king does not consist in what is pleasing to himself, but what is pleasing to the subjects constitutes his good'. Similar words occur in the Visnudharmasūtra III last verse<sup>81</sup> The Mahābhārata (Śānti 69. 72-73) purports to quote two verses of Angiras (i.e. Bṛhaspati), one of which says 'of what use is tapas to that king or of what use are even sacrifices to him who has well looked after his subjects? He is surely one who knows all dharmas' Kautiliya compares the king to the performer of a sacrifice, in which his vratas<sup>82</sup> (in the case of the sacrificer observances about food, scratching the body &c.) consists in being ever active, the sacrifice consists in issuing orders for carrying out the business (of the State), the sacrificial fee (that the king pays) is his

These words remind one of the famous proclamation of Queen Victoria in 1857 (called an impossible charter by a notably energetic but retrograde Viceroy) which breathes the same high and noble sentiments 'in their prosperity will be our strength, in their contentment our security and in their gratitude our best reward'.

82 Vide Āp Sr X 12-15, Band Sr VI. 6 for long lists of observances (vratas) some of which are set out in H Dh. vol II pp 1139-1140 and ibid p. 1135 for the bath of the sacrificer.

impartiality to all (lit behaving in the same way to all), and his coronation corresponds to the bath of the person who is consecrated for a sacrifice Śāntiparva<sup>83</sup> (56. 44 and 46) and Nītiprakāśikā VIII 2 declare that a king like a pregnant woman should not do what is pleasing to him, but what would conduce to the good of the people and the ancient dharma for a king is to keep the subjects contented. In Śānti 90 1 and 5 it is said 'the king is there for the upholding of dharma and not for acting as he likes and that all beings have to depend on dharma which in its turn depends on the king'. In Udyogaparva 118. 13-14 a king exclaims 'the wealth I possess is for the benefit of the urban and rural population and not for my own enjoyment; for, that king who at his sweet will gives away what (really is not his but) belongs to others does not become endowed with spiritual merit nor with fame'. King Marutta is warned by his grand-mother in the Mārkaṇḍeya<sup>84</sup> (130. 33-34) that the king's body is not meant for pleasures but for undergoing great trouble in protecting the earth and carrying out his duties. Ancient writers loved to dwell upon the rule of the king as paternal. Kaut., II 1 states that the king should favour like a father those who are outside the rules for remission of taxes Yāj I. 334 requires the king to be like a father to his subjects and servants Vide Śānti 139. 104-105 for the same idea.<sup>85</sup> In the Rāmāyaṇa II. 2. 28-47 and V 35. 9-14 the virtues of the prince Rāma are set out in great detail, where it is said that Rāma behaved like a father (II 2 39), that he sympathized with the people in their sorrows and was pleased like a father when the subjects celebrated festivals The Rāmāyaṇa<sup>86</sup> III 6 11 declares that it would be a great adharma on the part of that king who takes a sixth part of the produce (of fields) and does not protect his subjects as if they were his children. These sentiments are echoed by classical poets like Kālidāsa in the Śākuntala V. 5 and VI. 23 and the Raghuvamśa (I. 24). In the Harsacarita (V) the dying king Prabhākaravardhana consoles his young and favourite son Harsa by exhorting him to reflect over the idea that kings are to be deigned to have relatives in their subjects and not merely in agnates.<sup>86a</sup> Asoka also in his Edicts harps on the paternal relation 'all men are my children' (the first separate Jaugadh Edict, C. I. I. vol I pp. 111 and 114).

There were, it appears, several grades of rulers from the most ancient times. The word rājā occurs in numerous places in the Rgveda. It is applied to such gods as Mitra and Varuna (Rg. VII 64. 2), Varuna (Rg. I 24. 12 and 13, X. 173. 5). It appears to be used in two senses, viz (1) 'king' as in Rg. I 65. 7, III 43. 5 ('will you make me the protector of people, the king, O Indra'), IV. 4. 1, IX. 7. 5, X. 174. 4) and (2) 'noble' as in Rg. IX. 10. 3, X. 78. 1, X. 97. 6 ('where the plants come together as nobles in an assembly' rājāṇaḥ samitāvina). In Rg. VIII 21. 18 it is said<sup>87</sup> 'Citra who gave thousands and ten thousands is the only king, others are only small chiefs along the bank of the Sarasvatī'. The word 'samrāj' is known to the Rgveda and is used as an epithet of Varuna (in Rg. VI 68. 9) and of Indra (in Rg. VIII 16. 1) and the word sāmraja also occurs in relation to Varuna in Rg. I 25. 10. In Rg. VIII 37. 3 Indra is said to be sole ruler of the world (ekarāt). It is not unlikely therefore that the idea of an emperor who had suzerainty over several kings was known, though it is possible that in Rg. VIII 37. 3 the word is used only in a metaphorical sense. In Rg. VII 83. 7-8<sup>87a</sup> it is said that ten kings though they formed a confederacy could not vanquish king Sudās and that in the ten kings' battle (dūśarājñe) Indra and Varuna helped Sudās who was surrounded by them on all sides. A very large number of kings is mentioned by name in numerous places in the Rgveda (e. g. I 53. 8 and 10, I 54. 6, I 100. 17, VII 33. 2, VIII 3. 12, VIII 4. 2). Besides these it appears that there were tribal chiefs or governments of such clans or tribes as the Anus, Druhyus, Turvasas, Pūrus, Yadus (Rg I 108 8, all in the plural, VII 18 6 and VIII 6 46) But sometimes these words are used in the singular, when they mean 'a king or chief of that clan'. Vide Rg VIII 4. 7, VIII 10 5, IV 30 17 In the Atharvaveda III 4 1 (may you shine forth as the sole ruler of men) that word (ekarāt) is used in its literal sense and in Atharva VI 98.1 (may<sup>87b</sup> Indra conquer and may he never be defeated, may he shine as the overlord among kings) the idea of an emperor (adhmāja) is clearly set forth In Rg. X 128 9<sup>88</sup> the word 'adhiraāja' must be taken in the same sense The Atharvaveda speaks of an Ugra which word seems to mean a formidable king (or emperor) 'Then you chase away disease as a formidable (king) who is in the midst (of many kings presses hard each of them)' IV 9 4 In the Atharvaveda III 4. 3 it is said 'May the ugra see a lot of tribute'. In Rg X 34 8 the word ugra has probably the same sense viz 'a formidable king' In the Tai S II 6 2. 2 it is said that men are held (supported or restrained) by the king (tasmād rājñā manusya vidhrtāh) In the Tai S I 8 10 2 occur<sup>89</sup> the words in the śrīd formula recited in the Rājasūya 'May the gods extract for men great power, great overlordship, great sovereignty over people, this, O Bharatas, is your king, while Soma is king of us brāhmanas'. The exact relation of the two words 'ādhipatya' and 'jānarāja' is not clear. Similar words occur in Vāj S IX 40 and X. 18 and in Kāthaka XV 5 In the Ait Br (39 1) it is said<sup>90</sup> that 'whoever desires the king to attain supremacy over all kings, to attain to the rank of emperor and desires that he be the supreme ruler, the sole emperor (ekarāt) of the whole earth bounded by the sea up to its very extremities should be consecrated and crowned with the Āindra Mahābhuseka after making him take an oath.' relation to sovereignty over people are not clear. They are probably hyperbolic and grandiloquent words to convey supreme power. Even a brāhmana, according to vedic texts, may perform the Vājapeya if he desires 'svārāja' which means supereminence. Paramesthin means 'Prajāpati' and so pāramesthya simply means godlike power. Further there is no apparent reason why, after rising high from sāmrajya to 'pāramesthya' there should be a descent to mere 'rāja' and 'māhārāja'. Sāyana<sup>91</sup> takes 'rāja' and 'māhārāja' at the end of the passage as referring to the position of the king in the next world. This is rather far-fetched. Jayaswal (in 'Hindu Polity', part I pp. 89-90 and p. 133) takes these words to mean 'the Bhaujya constitution &c.' relying on the occurrence of the Bhojas in Aśoka's Rock Edicts V and XIII and in Khāravēla's Inscription, on the appearance of Bhojas as rulers in Western India and the town of Bhuj in Cutch and 'vairāja' as kingless system and 'svārāja' as 'self-ruling system'; but this is all unwarranted and is a fair sample of the way in which some of Jayaswal's theories are built up. It passes one's understanding how a paramount sovereign is promised vairāja (in Jayaswal's sense) in the Ait. Br. In the R̥gveda (V. 66. 6) we have the word 'svārāja' (which probably means the same thing as 'svārāja') in 'Let us strive for an all-embracing sovereignty, which will afford protection to many'<sup>92</sup>. In the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa the distinction between a king (rājan) and an emperor is very clearly expressed as follows: 'For, by offering the R̥jasūya he becomes king and by the Vājapeya he becomes emperor; and the office of king is the lower and that of emperor higher' (V. 1. 1. 13). Śatapatha IX. 3. 4. 8 contains the same idea again. In Śatapatha I. 6. 4. 21 it is said 'before the slaying of Vṛtra he was Indra, it is true; but after slaying Vṛtra he became Mahendra, even as a king (rājan) becomes a māhārāja after obtaining victory'. These passages are sufficient to establish that the idea of a suzerainty extending over many kingdoms was known in the times of the R̥gveda and had been fully developed before the composition of the Aitareya and Śatapatha Brāhmaṇas.

91. सायण (on ऐ. ब्रा. 37. 2 where also these words occur) explains 'साम्राज्यं धर्मेण पालनं भोज्यं भोगसमुद्भिः स्वाराज्यमपराधीनत्वं वैराज्यमितरेभ्यो भूपतिभ्यो वैशिष्ट्यम् । एतद्वृत्तमेविकम् । अपासुत्तिकमुच्यते । पारमेष्ठ्यं प्रजापालिलोकमातिः । तत्र राज्यमेभ्यः साहाराज्यं तत्रत्येभ्य इतरेभ्य आविष्कृतम् ।'; वायुपुराण 45. 87 says 'अथ लोकस्तु वै सम्राट्सरीक्षो विराट्सुतः । स्वराट्स्यः स्तुतो लोकः पुनर्वक्ष्यामि विस्तरम् ।'

92. आ यद्वासीयच्छसा नित्र वयं च धृरयः । षपदिष्टे बहुपाप्ये यतेमहि स्वराज्ये ॥

The Aitareya Brāhmaṇa mentions by name twelve emperors of ancient India and the Śatapatha thirteen (XIII. 5. 4. 1-19) Pāṇini explains (V. 1. 41-42) 'sārva-bhauma' as 'the lord of the whole earth'. The Amarakośa states that the words 'rāj', 'pārthiva', 'kṣmābhrt', 'nrpa', 'bhūpa' and 'mahīksit' are synonyms and mean 'king', that a king before whom all feudatories humble themselves is styled 'adhiśvara', 'cakravartin', 'sārvabhauma' i. e. these three last words are synonyms. The word 'cakravartin' is derived<sup>93</sup> by Keirasvāmin as 'one who wields lordship over a circle of kings' or 'who makes the circle (i. e. kingdom) abide by his orders'. The word 'cakravartin', though not so ancient as 'sārvabhauma', has been employed from very ancient times. The Maitri Upaniṣad 1. 4 mentions<sup>94</sup> 15 cakravartins. The Rājantiprakāśa (p. 58) quotes<sup>95</sup> a passage from the Sāmavidhāna Brāhmaṇa (III. 5. 2) 'the priest should perform the coronation with the Ekavṛsa Sāman for that king whom he desires to be the sole ruler and whose circle of territory (he does not desire) to be overwhelmed (by an enemy)'. Here probably is one of the earliest references to the derivation of the word cakravartin. In the Mahāvagga (Selasutta, S B E. vol X p 102), Lord Buddha is made to say 'I am a king, an incomparable, religious king (dharma-rāja); with justice (dhammena) I turn the wheel, a wheel that is irresistible'. Here the idea of the secular cakravartin is carried into the moral and spiritual sphere. In the Nānāghāt Inscription (of about 200 B C) occurs the word 'apratihatacakasa' (i. e. —cakrasya) Vide A S W I, vol. V p 50 at p. 60. Khāravela is styled Kalinga-cakravartin in the Mañchapuri record of his chief queen (E I. vol XX p 86n), 'supavataṭṭijaya-caka' (supravṛttavijaya-cakra, in l. 14) and 'pavata-caka' (pravṛtta-cakra in l. 17) of his Hāthigūmpha Inscription (E I. vol. XX at pp. 88-89) Kautilya (IX. 1) defines the land of the cakravartin<sup>96</sup> as the territory on the earth spreading towards the north from the sea to the Himālaya, which is a thousand yojanas in extent when measured in a straight line. The same idea occurs in the Kāvyamīmāṃsā of Rājasekhara (p. 92). Kautilya also employs the expression 'cāturanto rājā' (a king of the earth up to its four boundaries). Śānti-parva<sup>97</sup> speaks of a ruler who brings the whole earth under one umbrella. On the birth of Harsa, the chief astrologer told his father Prabhākaravardhana that the boy would be the leader of the seven cakravartins (Harsacarita IV). In some works the six cakravartins are said to be Māndhātā, Dhundhumāra, Hariścandra, Purūravas, Bharata, Kārtavīrya. The Sabhaparva (15. 15-16) mentions five emperors of old viz. Yauvanāśva (Māndhātā), Bhagiratha, Kārtavīrya, Bharata and Marutta. Vide Dr. N. N. Law's 'Aspects of Ancient Indian Polity' pp. 17-21 for exhaustive lists of ancient emperors, from the Mahābhārata, the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa and other works. This ideal of cakravartin was set before them by all ambitious and energetic Indian rulers from ancient times. The result was that constant wars took place. We have a galaxy of historical emperors that emulated such mythical heroes and emperors as Māndhātā and Bharata and practically realized the ideal. To name only a few, Candragupta, Aśoka, Puṣyamitra, Bhavanāga of the Bhāraṣivas, Pravarasena Vākātaka, Samudragupta and Harsa are great names in our ancient history. Even if this ideal of universal empire had not been there, wars could not have been avoided. That was a very usual thing everywhere in the ancient world. Only about 700 years ago, Britain, which is a very small country compared to India, had three kingdoms engaged in constant warfare.

The Matsya-purāṇa (114 9-10) first gives the dimensions of Bharata-varṣa from South to North (from Cape Comorin to the source of the Ganges) as one thousand yojanas, states that its extent is ten thousand yojanas (when measured upwards across the boundaries) and that on all borders of it there are Mlecchas and that Yavanas and Kirātas dwell to its east and west (verse 11) and that the king who conquers the whole of Bharatavarṣa is styled 'samrāt' (verse 15). Vide Brahmapurāṇa 17. 8 ff for almost the same words. The Śukranitisāra (I. 183-187) states that a sāmanta is one whose yearly revenue is from 1 to 3 lakhs of silver karsas without oppressing the people, the revenue of a māṇḍalika is from 4 to 10 lakhs, that of a rājan is from 11 to 20

lakhs, of a mahārāja from 21 to 50 lakhs, of a svarāt from 51 lakhs to a crore, of a virāt from two crores to ten, of the sārva-bhauma (who wields suzerainty over the whole earth i. e. Bharatavarṣa) from 11 crores to 50. Though these definitions may be regarded as scholastic and too rigid to have been practically followed they do convey a sufficiently clear idea about the power of a feudatory, a king and an emperor. The Sabhāparva<sup>98</sup> (15. 2) says 'there are kings in each house, who do what pleases them, but they do not reach the position of emperor, which title can be acquired with great difficulty', and 'that king under whose sole dominion the world abides secures the position of samrāj'. In these and other places 'world' means 'Bharatavarṣa' for which see H. Dh. vol. II pp 17-18. Sovereignty (sāmrajya) consisted in ancient India not necessarily or invariably in acquiring control over vassal kings in all their affairs. Generally the supreme ruler did not hanker after territory so much as after having his superior prowess acknowledged. The descriptions of digvijayas (world conquests) in the Mahābhārata (e g. of Pāṇḍu in Ādi 113, of Arjuna and the other Pāṇḍava brothers in Sabhā, chap. 26-32) show that there was no aggrandizement by acquiring fresh territory but all that was desired was to make the several kings submit and pay tribute or offer presents. Arjuna expressly says in Sabhā 25.3 that he would bring tribute from all kings and the conquered kings are generally represented as submitting and making presents of gems, golds, horses, cows to the conqueror. The Allahabad stone pillar<sup>99</sup> Inscription of Samudragupta (Gupta Ins p 8) states that the pratyanta (bordering) kings of Samatata and other countries and the Mālava and other tribal oligarchies fully gratified Samudragupta's commands by giving all tribute, by obeying his orders and by coming to perform obeisance. Śānti 96 insists that conquests should be made according to dharma. Empire did not mean imposition of the language or the government system of the conqueror on the conquered country. The conqueror's duty as understood by ancient Indian works was quite different as will be presently shown. Kautilya (XII. 1) declares<sup>100</sup> that there are three kinds of invaders, viz. dharmavijayin (who is satisfied with mere submission or obeisance), lobhavijayin (who is satisfied with gain in land and money), asuravijayin (who is not satisfied with land and money only but robs the defeated king of his son, wife and life). The Nītivākyaṃrta (pp. 362-363, Yuddhasamuddesa) defines the three almost in the same words. This shows that in the first two kinds of conquests the conquered state retained its own institutions, organization and government intact. Bāna gives<sup>101</sup> in very striking language what Harsa proclaimed when he started against the treacherous king of Gauda and on digvijaya. It appears that even the queens of vanquished chiefs had to perform the duties of maids at the time of the coronation of the emperor and empress, as queen Yaśomati says to Harsa (in Harsacarita V). Vide Sabhā 31. 73-74 where Bibhīṣana is said to have come with presents to Sahadeva. Aśoka (in Kalsi Edict No. XIII in C. I. I. I, pp. 44 and 46, ed by Hultzsch) speaks of his conquest being dharma-vijaya. This means that he foreswore greed and cruelty and wanted that his influence be only acknowledged. The Pallava king Śivaskandavarman (of Kāñcī) who had performed the Agnistoma, Vājapeya and Aśvamedha sacrifices calls himself dharmamahārājādhirāja (a dharma-vijayī emperor) in E. I. vol. I p. 5. In the Dudia plate of Pravarasena II, Prthivīsenā is styled dharma-vijayin (E. I. vol. III p. 258 at p. 261). Samudragupta's conquest of South India seems to have been only a dharmavijaya. As time went on the titles of kings grew in grandiloquence. Aśoka whose empire extended at least from Afganistan to the Bay of Bengal and included some part of the Deccan and Mysore calls himself 'rājā'. Khāravela is styled only mahārāja and Kalingādhīpati in the Hāthigumphā Inscription.

Huviska, the Kusana emperor, is styled Mahārāja-rājātirāja-devaputra (E. I. vol. I pp. 371, 386). Samudragupta is simply mahārāja (Gupta Inscriptions p. 8). But later emperors styled themselves paramabhattachāraka-mahārājādhirāja (Gupta Inscriptions p. 70, Indore copperplate of Skandagupta of Gupta year 146 i. e. 465-66 A. D.) or sometimes 'parama-bhattachāraka-mahārājādhirāja-paramēśvara' (Gupta Inscriptions No. 39, p. 176 copperplate of the Valabhi king Śilāditya in 447 of the Valabhi era i. e. 766-67 A. D.). Ancient works are not very particular about the epithets they employ when speaking of a king or an emperor Śānti (68.54) says that a king is praised with the epithets rājan, bhoja, virāt, samrāt, ksatriya, bhūpati and nrpa.<sup>102</sup> Dasaratha is styled rājā in Ayodhyā 22. and mahārāja in 18.15 and 57.32. The Rājantīratnākara (pp. 3-4) holds that kings are of three kinds; viz. emperor (samrāt), one who pays tribute and one who does not pay even tribute (but is not a samrāt), quotes several verses from a work of Nārada on politics and states that the words cakravartin, samrāt, adhiśvara and mahārāja are synonyms. Kings aspiring to be called samrāt performed the Rājasūya and Āśvamedha in ancient India. The Sabbhāparva 13.30 speaks of Rājasūya as fit to be performed by a samrāt. Senāpati Pūsyamitra (about 180 B. C.) is said to have performed two Āśvamedhas (vide E. I. vol. XX p. 54, 57). The Ghosundi Inscription (E. I. vol. 16 p. 25 and E. I. vol. 22 p. 198) speaks of Sarvatāta, a great devotee of Viṣṇu, as a performer of Āśvamedha. Khāravela (who was a Jain) performed Rājasūya (E. I. vol. XX at p. 79). The Vākātaka king Pravarasena I had performed four Āśvamedhas (E. I. vol. III p. 258 and Gupta Inscriptions No. 55). In the Vākātaka copperplates the Bhārasīvas are extolled as having performed ten Āśvamedhas (E. I. III 258 at p. 260). The Śālikāyana king Vijayadevavarman, whose capital was at Vengi in Āndhra, is said to have performed an Āśvamedha (E. I. IX p. 56, about 350 A. D.). The Čalukya king Pulakeśin I had performed Āśvamedha (E. I. vol. VI p. 1 and IX. p. 100) about 550 A. D. Pūsyamitra is styled simply Senāpati in the Mālavikāgnimitra Act V when he sends a message to his son about attending the Rājasūya in which he had been engaged. For the significance of the Abhi-secanīya rite in Rājasūya vide H. of Dh. vol. II pp. 1216-1218. The Kadambas are said to have performed Āśvamedhas in the Nilambur plates (E. I. vol. VIII p. 148). The Viṣṇukundin Mahārāja Mādhavavarman performed eleven Aśvamedhas and one thousand Agnistomas (I. H. Q. vol. IX p 278). Vide H. Dh. vol II pages 1238-1239 for a few more historic examples of the performers of Aśvamedha.

Kautilya (VII 16) prescribes that the conqueror should not covet the territory, wealth, sons and wives of the slain (in battle), that he should re-instate the late king's kinsmen in their proper places (or positions), that he should instal the son of the deceased king on the throne of his father and adds that the emperor who kills or imprisons the kings that submit and covets their lands, wealth, sons or wives provokes the maṇḍala (the circle of States) and makes it rise against himself. Yājñavalkya (I 342-43) prescribes that it is the duty of the conqueror to protect the conquered country in the same way as his own country and the conqueror is to respect the customs of the conquered country, its laws and the usages of the families therein.

The Visnudharmasūtra<sup>103</sup> (III 42 and 47-49) enjoins upon the conqueror not to uproot the usages of the conquered country, to establish in its capital some kinsman (of the slain king) and not to destroy the royal family unless it be of low birth. Manu (VII 202-203) and Agnipurāṇa 236-22 prescribe similar rules. The Rāmāyana (VII 62-18-19) requires the conqueror, after uprooting the king, to establish another king there in order to ensure stable government. Vide Sānti 33-43-46 quoted above on p. 40. Kātyāyana (q in the Rājanītiprakāśa p. 411) prescribes that even when the (vanquished) king is at fault, the conqueror should not ruin the country (for the fault of the vanquished king), since he (the vanquished king) did not start (on his career of) wrong-doing with the consent of his subjects. The Rājanītiprakāśa draws from this the conclusion that the ministers with whose consent the war was started may be harassed by the conqueror. This advice was generally followed by ancient conquerors and emperors. Rudradāman (150 A. D.) is styled the establisher of kings that had lost their territories (in the Junāgaḍh Ins., E. I. vol. VIII at p. 44) and in the Allahabad Stone Pillar Inscription of Samudragupta it is said that his fame travelled over the whole world because of his having re-established several royal families that had lost their kingdoms (Gupta Inscriptions, p 8). The Śukranītisāra (IV. 7-397-399) requires the conqueror to support the well-behaved son and the queen of the vanquished king or to give a fourth of the conquered kingdom to him and only  $\frac{1}{4}$  part of it to one who is not endowed with good qualities and the conqueror may appropriate the whole treasury of the conquered

The coronation of a king was a very solemn and important ceremony. Reasons of space forbid any lengthy treatment but something must be said about it. In the medieval text-books, various procedures are described from different sources. The Rājanītiprakāśa (pp. 42-112), the Nīti-mayūkha (pp 1-13) and the Rājadharmakaustubha (pp. 237-374), the Rāja Dh K (II. pp. 6-10) quote procedures of coronation from the Ait Br., the Gopatha Br., the Sāmavidhāna Br., the Brahmapurāṇa, the Visnudharmottara and other works. The procedure from the Purāṇas probably originated when persons of the śūdra caste frequently became kings. The Rājanītiprakāśa<sup>104</sup> (p 112) says that there being different procedures of coronation rites based on Vedic texts, some hold, following the dictum of Śābara (on Jaimini II. 49), that the coronation rite should comprehend all the different items mentioned in the several vedic texts (provided they do not contradict each other), while others hold that there should be no comprehensive inclusion of all items but each vedic or smṛti procedure should be followed separately by itself. Mitra-miśra concludes that the purohita should follow that course which is nearest to his own śākhā. The Rājadharmakaustubha (p 339) says that as the rite described in the Visnudharmottara contains the largest number of details, one who is able to do so, may follow that Purāṇa, while for those who cannot do so there is an option or students of the Rgveda may follow the Rgvidhāna mode, of the Sāmaveda the Sāmavidhāna Br and all may follow the Purāṇa mode of coronation. I shall first briefly indicate what procedure was followed in some vedic texts such as the Gopatha Brāhmaṇa, the Sāmavidhāna Br. and in the Grhyasūtras, then point out what was done in the times of the

The Aitareya Brāhmaṇa (38) describes the Great Coronation of Indra (Aindra mahūbhiseka) and in that connection mentions how the kings of the Sātvatas in the south were called 'Bhoja' after coronation, the kings of the eastern countries were called 'samrāt', the kings in the west were called 'svarāt' and the kings of the north i. e. of countries beyond the Hīmalāya (viz. Uttarakurus and Uttaramadras) were called 'virāt'. Then (in 39) it states that the ksatriya king is to be made to take an oath and is to be crowned in the manner of the Aindra Mahābhiseka<sup>105</sup>. The oath which the ksatriya is to take before the priest with faith is: 'the merit of sacrifices and good works that belongs to me from the night I was born up to the night on which I shall die, my worlds, good deeds, life, progeny,—these you may destroy if I hate (or prove false to) thee'. Vide note 41 above for the coronation oath in Śānti 59. 106 ff. It will be noticed that this passage of the Ait. Br. contains no undertaking given by the king to the people to rule according to dharma or for their welfare. So this passage cannot strictly be interpreted as postulating a contractual basis for the authority or power of the king, as done by Jayaswal ('in Hindu Polity' part II. p. 28). The Ait. Br. sets out the materials (sambhāras) for the coronation of a king (in chap. 39.2) viz. fruits of nyagrodha, udumbara, aśvattha and plakṣa trees, grains of small rice, large-sized rice, priyangu and barley, a couch of udumbara with span-long feet, a spoon with a four-cornered scooped basin of udumbara and an udumbara vessel, on one of which two the other materials were to be placed and curds, honey, clarified butter and rain water gathered when the sun is shining. The mantras to be recited are mentioned in 39.3-4 and the fee in 39.6. In the Rājāsūya (to be performed only by a ksatriya) described in the Brāhmaṇas and sūtras, the principal rite is the Abhisekaniya in which the king is bathed with waters brought from seventeen sources in seventeen vessels of udumbara wood. Vide H. Dh. vol. II. pp. 1216-1218 for the rite. The Rājantiprakāśa (p. 92-107) explains the procedure of coronation from the Ait. Br. In the Rājāsūya, among the preliminary rites are the offerings called 'ratninām havīmsi' (the offerings in the houses of the jewels, which are twelve). Vide H. Dh. vol. II pp. 1215-16. They have a symbolical value. The person to be crowned recognizes the importance of his high functionaries and is declared to be their king and they are supposed to approve of him as king. In the Abhisecanīya rite of the Rājasūya, there are two parts, a religious and a popular. First, the adhvaryu and the other priests sprinkle the king with holy water collected from various sources in vessels; then the king's brother, a friendly ksatriya and a vaiśya also sprinkle him with the holy water. This last is symbolic of the popular approval of the coronation.

The Tai Br. II. 7. 15-17 deals with coronation. It first gives the seven mantras for seven āhuts that are offered. A tiger skin is spread on which the king is seated and he is sprinkled with holy water in which sprouts of barley and dūrvā grass are mixed up; the king ascends a chariot to the accompaniment of mantras, then the four wheels of the chariot are touched, the purohita and charioteer are addressed with mantras; Anumati, the Earth (as mother), and Heaven (as father) are implored to approve of the coronation, the king is made to look up towards the Sun and then the king looks on the subjects; the king then undergoes shaving when seated on a chair of udumbara wood, then his arms and head are anointed with milk blended with clarified butter collected the materials required such as bilva fruit, viz. sixteen jars, sixteen bilva fruits, earth from an ant-hill, all kinds of husked grains, all liquids, and all kinds of grains (unhusked). There should be four jars each of gold, silver, copper and clay. Having filled them, keeping their mouths up, with water from a deep reservoir of water or a lake to the accompaniment of the mantra 'nāmaināma' (?) and having put the jars down on the surface of the altar, he (the priest) should place one bilva fruit apiece in each of the 16 jars and cast (into the jars) the husked and unhusked grains and all fluids, adding them (to the water) in the golden jars with the mantras called Abhaya (Atharvaveda 19.15), Aparājita, Āyusya (Atharvaveda I. 30) and Svastyayana <sup>107</sup> (Atharvaveda I. 21, VII. 85. 1, VII. 86. 1, VII 117.1), in the silver jars, with the mantras called samerāvyā (Atharvaveda 19.1) and Samsikṭiya (Atharvaveda II. 26), in the copper jars with the mantras called Bhaisajya (Atharva VII. 45 'janād') and Amhomuc and in the earthen jars with Samveśa, Samvargya and Śantāṭiya mantras and with the Prāna hymn (Atharvaveda XI. 4). He should then bathe the king with (the water of) the jars held by very holy and learned brāhmanas (śrotṛiyas). He should consecrate the king seated on the throne with the mantra (Atharvaveda IV. 22.1) 'O Indra, make this my ksatriya prosper'. (The king) being thus bathed should eat the several liquids, should make gifts of a thousand cows to the brāhmaṇa priests who assist the chief priest, bestow a good village on the chief priest. He (the king) thereby acquires great glory, enjoys the earth and always vanquishes his foes'.

The Nītimayūkha pp. 4-5, Rājantiprakāśa pp. 42-43, Rājadharmakaustubha pp. 335-336 quote a passage from the Gopatha Brāhmaṇa<sup>106</sup> on the rites of coronation as follows.— We shall expound the rite of the coronation of the king Having

The राजधर्म-काण्ड (p. 7) quotes from the ब्रह्मपुराण a long passage in which the mantras to be recited by the purohita are stated to be these 'त्रयोदश महामन्त्रान् तर्पयेज्जाते-दुस्ति । यत्नं चैवामतिरथं सत्यधर्मगणौ तथा । आनुष्यमभयं चैव तथा स्वस्वयमेव वरम् । वैष्णवानथ मन्त्राश्च तथा पौरन्दुरानयि । सावित्राहोरोद्राश्च वाक्पानथ सर्वदा' ॥ and explains कृतापाहिति त्रयोदश मन्त्राः । गणाः ईदृगन्पादुहेत्यादयः । अमतिरथः आहूः शिषान इति । सत्यगणः आगास्तत्यमिति । धर्मगणः पास्ते अग्ने चोरास्तनुवः इति । अभय-स्वस्वयमेव यत् इन्द्र स्वस्तिदा इति । कृतापाहू is the first word of वाज. सं. 18, 38, अमतिरथ is अ. The Sāmavidhāna Brāhmaṇa<sup>108</sup> (III. 5) describes a shorter rite: "(The priest) should crown the king when the moon is in the Pusa or Śravana constellation. Having brought waters (separately in separate jars) from famous holy rivers (like the Ganges)<sup>109</sup> and from the sea and having mixed in them rice, barley, sesame and māsa (black beans) grains and curds, honey, flowers and gold, he should bathe the king seated on an auspicious throne made of udumbara wood on which is spread tiger-skin with the hair outside, from horn-pipes cut off from the horns of living cows to the accompaniment of the rahasya mantra 'abhrātrvyah' (you are without an enemy &c, Rg. VIII. 21.13, Sāmaveda 399 and 1489). He should bathe the king to the accompaniment of the Ekavṛsa hymn (instead of Rg VIII. 21.13) whom he desires to be the sole ruler (of the earth) and whose circle of kings is desired by him not to be overwhelmed by an enemy. On the priest performing the coronation rite the king should bestow the best village, a hundred maid servants and a thousand cows and (the king) should be obedient to him (the officiating priest)".

The Baud. Grhyaśeṣasūtra (I. 23) contains the procedure of coronation, the whole of which is quoted by the Bālabhāṭṭi on the Mītāksarā on Yāj I 309. It is briefly as follows:—On the 5th or 13th tithi of the bright half when the moon is in Pusa or Śravana or in any other auspicious constellation (nakṣatra), two brāhmanas are fed (the day previous). Then a worthy purohita is chosen, who mutters certain texts. At sunset the purohita makes a lotus-like circle in which are collected the materials viz. waters of the ocean and of rivers mixed with rice, barley, sesame, māsas and pañcagavya, and a bhadrāsana made of udumbara, a tiger-skin, and golden jars and horns of cows. In the north-east part of the palace, a homa is performed with eight thousand āhuts (oblations) of rice &c to the accompaniment of the vyāhrtis, the Gāyatrī and the mantra to Tryambaka

(Tai. S. I. 8. 6. 2). The priest first propitiates the goddess Lakṣmī with the hymn <sup>110</sup> to Śrī and then washes the crown with cow's urine and dung, milk, curds, clarified butter and with water mixed with kuśas to the accompaniment of appropriate mantras, and ties an amulet (pratisara), and sprinkles the king and his conveyance (horse). At sunrise next day (the day of coronation) the tiger-skin is spread on the throne, the king sits thereon facing the east, the priest takes the golden jars and sprinkles the king with water falling upon him from the cone-like horns of cows with several mantras (such as those addressed to waters, Varuna &c.). After the king is made to take a bath, a fee of a thousand ṃskas and a hundred dūsīs is paid to the brāhmanas. Then the crown is placed on his head and drums are beaten.

The Kausikasūtra of the Atharvaveda (in 17.1-10) describes the abhiseka (called laghu) performed on the Yuvarāja, Māṇḍalika, Sāmanta and Senāpati and (in 17.11-34) describes the mahābhiseka of the king.

In the Rāmāyana there are numerous references to coronation. In the Yuddhakāṇḍa 131 we have a lengthy description of the coronation of Rāma. Some of the salient features are: Rāma was shaved that day, had a bath and put on costly clothes. Sītā also was suitably dressed and ornamented. Rāma sat in a chariot and went through the capital, when Bharata held the reins, Śatrughna held the umbrella, Lakṣmana the white chourie; then Rāma rode an elephant; drums were beaten and conches were blown; as auspicious signs gold, cows, maidens, brāhmanas, men with sweetmeats in their hands passed in front of Rāma; the citizens had raised banners on every house; Jāmbavān, Hanumān and two others brought four jars full of sea-water and waters of five hundred rivers were brought in jars; the aged Vasistha, the family priest, seated. Rāma and Sitā on a jewelled throne; Vasistha and other sages sprinkled Rāma with the holy and scented waters, then maidens, the ministers, soldiers, the guilds of merchants also sprinkled Rāma; Vasistha placed an ancient crown on Rāma's head, there was dancing and singing; Rāma gave presents to the priests and to his friends and to such helpers as Sugriva, Angada, Bibhisana and others and Sitā gave a necklace to Hanumān. In the Ayodhyākāṇḍa 15 we have a description of preparations for the abhiseka of Rāma as yuvarāja. The Raghuvamśa XVII. 10 mentions the coronation of Kuśa's son with waters of holy rivers (tīrthas) from golden jars.

110. The Visandharmottara (II. 128. 2-6) states that the hymn to Śrī is different for each veda; the hymn of 15 verses beginning with 'Hiranyavarṇam barhiṇim' occurring in the parīṣṭa to the Rgveda is the one for Rgveda, the hymn of four verses beginning with 'rathe aksen vrsabhasya vāje' (Tai. Br. II 7. 7) is the Śrisūkta for the Yajurveda, the verse 'srāyanta iva' (267, 1319) for Sāmaveda and 'śrīyam dhātur mayi dehi' is the one for Atharvaveda. The Agnipurāṇa (237. 2-17) contains a hymn to Śrī, which is not vedic but paurāṇic. Similarly the Rājadharmakāustubha (pp 367-370) contains a long paurāṇic hymn (said to have been repeated by Indra) to Śrī which is to be recited while the king was to be seated on the throne after coronation. It is taken from the Viṣṇupurāṇa I. 9.

In the Mahābhārata also there are several references to and descriptions of coronation. Vide Sabhā 33 (where people of all castes including sūdras were invited at the Rājāsūya, vv 41-42) for the coronation of Yudhisṭhira; Śānti 40 (in verses 9-13 the materials for coronation are described); Ādi 44, 85, 101 (only references).

The sambhāras (materials required) of coronation are stated in the Pratimānātaka (I. 1) ascribed to Bhāsa and in the Pañcatantra III (after verse 75)

In the Agnipurāṇa, chap 218 deals with coronation and chap 219 sets out the mantras. The following are the principal items in the ceremony; bath (with water in which sesame and mustard are mixed), seating on bhadraśana, proclamation of abhaya (security and non-injury to all), releasing some prisoners from jail, Aindri Śānti, fast by king, recital of mantras, sanctifying the head and other limbs of the king with earth taken from the top of a mountain and from other places, sprinkling pañcagavya, sprinkling of water from four jars of gold, silver, copper and earth by amātyas of the four varṇas, abluseka by a Rgvedin with water mixed with honey, by Chandoga with water mixed with kusa grass, by Yajurvedin and Atharvavedin brāhmanas touching king's head and throat with yellow pigment, singing and beating of musical instruments, holding of chowrie and fan before the king, king's looking into a mirror and clarified butter, worship of Viṣṇu and other gods, sitting on a tiger-skin below which there are four skins viz of lion, cheeta, cat and bull; purohita to give madhuparka, to tie patta (a fillet or tiara) round the king's head and to place the crown on his head; presentation of ministers by the prathārā;

king to give presents to the priests and other brāhmanas; going round fire; doing obeisance to elders; touching a bull; worshipping a cow with calf; riding a horse; honouring an elephant and riding it; procession in the capital; honouring all people and taking leave of them.

There are descriptions of the abhiseka of a yuvarāja (as of Bhīma in Śānti 41), of a great commander (as of Bhīma in Udyogaparva 155.26-32), of Drona in Dronaparva 5.39-43, of Skanda in Śalyaparva 45.

The Rājānitiprakāśa (pp. 49-83), the Rājadharmakaustubha (pp. 318-363) and Nītimayūkha pp. 1-4 quote from the Visnudharmottara almost the whole of chapters 21-22 of the 2nd khanda that deal with the rites and mantras of coronation. It appears that the Kaustubha appropriates all the glosses of Mitrāmīśra. The Visnudharmottara (II. 19) sets out first the Śānti (propitiatory) rite in honour of Indra (called the Paurandari or Aindri Śānti). It is impossible to give the details here, but a few matters may be noticed. The purāṇa (in II. 21) includes all the details from the Vedic texts (such as Svastyayana, Āyusya, Abhaya and Aparājita hymns) and adds other rites also. It mentions the procedure stated above from the Agnipurāṇa and employs Vedic mantras in doing so. In II. 22 the Visnudharmottara gives purāṇa mantras in 182 verses, in which such gods as Brahmā, Naksatras (from Kṛttikā to Bharanī), the planets, 14 Manus, 11 Rudras, Viśve-Devas, Gandharvas and Apsarases, dānavas, dākinīs, birds like Garuḍa, nāgas, sages like Veda-Vyāsa, emperors like Prthu, Dilīpa, Bharata, vedas and vidyās, rivers &c. are invoked to crown the king.

The Rājadharmakaustubha gives the most elaborate description of coronation. First a śānti rite is performed, then on the next (2nd) day, a sacrifice to Īśāna (Rudra); on the 3rd day worship of the planets and other deities like waters, the earth, Nārāyaṇa, Indra &c and the invocation of naksatras; on the 4th day a yāga for naksatras; on the 5th day at night a sacrifice to the goddess Nīrti (a clay idol seated on an ass with dark vesture); on the sixth day Aindri Śānti (propitiatory rite in honour of Indra); then the rites prescribed in the Visnudharmottara purāṇa.

The Visnudharmottara notes (II. 18. 2-4) that on the death of the reigning king, there is no waiting for an auspicious time.

The successor should be bathed with water, in which sesame and mustard are mixed, proclamation should be issued in his name that he has succeeded as king, the purohita and astrologer should show him to the people while he occupies a seat other than that occupied by the late king ; the king should honour the people, proclaim peace and security, set free some prisoners and wait for the formal coronation. The Rājanītiprakāśa ( p. 62 ) adds that on the death of a king his successor should be crowned one year thereafter and that when a king abdicates his successor may be crowned on any auspicious day without waiting for a year. From the fact that the Kalinga king Khāravela was crowned in his 25th year and the fact that the Bārhaspatya-sūtra<sup>111</sup> ( I. 89-90 ) states that up to the 25th year the prince may spend his time in play and education and then in earning wealth, Jayaswal ( in 'Hindu Polity' part II p 52 ) concludes that a Hindu coronation could not take place before the 25th year. This is proving too much. The Bārhaspatya-sūtra says not a word about the age of coronation. Authorities like the Visnudharmottara require waiting for a year only after the death of the former king.

The Visnudharmottara<sup>112</sup> ( II. 7 ) specifies at great length the qualities of the principal queen (agra-mahisī), which are quoted by the Rājanītikaustubha pp. 249-250. The chief queen should have the coronation rite performed along with the king or she should be separately crowned after the king. Manu VII. 77 advises the king to marry a lady of noble family, of the same caste, of charming appearance and possessed of good qualities. The Rājataranginī ( VIII. 82 ) notes that Jayamati, the queen of the good king Uccala of Kashmir (1101-1111 A.D.) always occupied half his throne.

The Nītimayūkha and Rājadharmakaustubha give the most detailed description of the Aindri Śānti. For want of space it has to be passed over. The Rājanītiprakāśa ( pp. 63-66 ) and Rājadharmakaustubha ( pp 340-346 ) contain in one place a summary of the whole ceremony after Aindri Śānti commencing one day previous to the actual day of coronation. One detail of the rites is interesting, viz. after the learned brāhmanas and priests sprinkle the king with holy waters from several jars to the accompaniment of mantras and a R̥gvedin brāhmana touches the king's head and throat with powder of gorocanū with the mantra 'gandhadvārām' (Tai. A. X. 1.10), principal virtuous ladies, whose sons are alive, of the four varnas and also of mixed castes reciting auspicious songs (except the sūdra ladies who remain silent) should sprinkle the king with the waters derived from the sea and other holy places.<sup>112</sup> There is a graphic description of the coronation of Shivaji<sup>113a</sup> the founder of the Marathi Empire in 1674 A. D. in the chronicle (balhar) compiled by Krishnaji Anant Sabhasad (ed. by K. N. Sane, pp. 98-104), where it is said that a costly throne was prepared, from 108 places waters were brought in 108 golden jars (95 tirthas are actually named), Gāgābhata and other brāhmanas officiated and sprinkled waters on the king, large gifts including the sixteen mahādānas were made. Eight ministers stood round the throne (whose names and offices are set out), the head of the ecclesiastical department called Panditrao being to the right and the prime minister (mukhya pradhāna) to the left, an umbrella (chatra) set with jewels was held over his head, new golden coins were struck and a new era was started called 'Rājyābhiseka' era commencing from that year. In a small work called 'Shivarāja-rājyābhiseka-kalpataru' (published in the quarterly Journal of the Bhārata-itihāsa-saṁsodhaka Maṇḍala at Poona, vol. X part I pp. 28-40) in 236 verses it is stated that a Yogin named Niscalapuri, an adept in Tantrika rites, got a second coronation of Shivaji performed over three months after that performed by Gāgābhata, with Tantrika mantras on Wednesday the 5th of the bright half of Āśvina śaka 1596, one interesting fact stated being that Shivaji went through a form of marriage with vaidika mantras with his wives that had already been married to him with paurāṇic mantras.

113a. For a detailed and graphic description of the coronation of King Shivaji in 1674 A. D. vide 'Shiva-chatrapatmahārāja-caritra' by Malhar Ramrao Chitnis (ed. in 1882) pp. 120-125 (in Marathi). Shivaji's upanayana was performed on the 5th of the bright half of Jyestha, for seven days various rites went on; Vināyakaśānti, Grahāśānti, Andrī and Paurāṇdarī are said to have been performed and he was actually crowned on the 13th of the bright half of Jyestha. In Sambhāji-rāja-caritra by the same author (edited by Rao Bahadur K. N. Sane, 3rd ed. of 1915) at p. 8 there is a description of the coronation of Sambhāji, son of Shivaji.

The symbols of royalty viz the umbrella, the chowries and the cane stick are brought in to the king by principal ministers. The Visnudharmottara (II 12) states that the cāmara for the king must be made from the tails of camarī deer and must be all white with a handle of gold or silver and that the one for a councillor or purohita should be yellowish, while the same purāna in II. 13 describes the requisites of a royal umbrella. That the umbrella and cāmaras were inseparable emblems of sovereignty is emphasized by Kālidāsa in Raghuvamśa III 16. Vide the Brhatsamhitā, chap. 71 and 72, for cāmara and umbrella.

It appears that sometimes a king took another name on coronation which was called abhisekanāma. Vide Dr. R. C. Majumdar's 'Champā' p. 157 for a list of such names from Champā and Dr. Minakshi's 'Administrative and social life under Pallavas' p. 39 for the Pallava Rājasimha having the coronation name Narasimhavarman. Certain kings, when they performed Aśvamedha, assumed new titles e. g. Kumāragupta I seems to have assumed the title of Mahendra, as is clear from some of his coins on which his name and title occur.

The Brhatsamhitā of Varāhamihira (chap. 48) lays down that the patta (tiara) for the king and others should be made of pure gold, that their length should be double of the breadth in the middle of it, that there should be five algrettes in the king's tiara, three in the queen's and yuvarāja's, one in that of the commander-in-chief and none in the one that the king may give to a person as a mark of favour. Utpala in his com on the Brhatsamhitā says that patta is the same as mukuta, while acc to the Nitimayūkha (p. 13) and other works patta is tied on the forehead and mukuta (crown) is placed on the king's head. Vide Rājanitiprakāśa (pp. 54-55) and Rājadharmakaustubha (p. 324) for further details. The Visnudharmottara (II 14) describes the characteristics of bhadrāsana (the throne) for the king; vide also Rājanitiprakāśa pp. 51-52. It must be made of gold, silver or copper or a tree from which milky juice oozes when cut, it was to be one cubit and half high for a samrāt,  $1\frac{1}{2}$  cubit for a king and one cubit high for a feudatory (sāmanta).

The Visnudharmottara (II 162) states that on every anniversary of the first coronation when the moon is in the same nakṣatra as that on which the first coronation took place the king should repeat the rites of coronation. The Brahmapurāṇa quoted by the R. D. K. (p. 10) also says the same.<sup>113b</sup> Vide Rajanitiprakāśa p. 115 and Kaustubha p. 379 also.

Manu (VII. 217-220) warns the king against poisoning 'The king should partake of food that is well examined and prepared by servants that are trust-worthy (lit. as if they were his own self), that know the proper times (for dining), that cannot be won over and over the food spells destroying poison should have been muttered. He should mix up in all that he partakes medicines that are antidotes against poison and should always wear gems that work against poison. Only women devoted to him and well examined and found safe as regards their dress and ornaments should be allowed to touch him when fanning or bathing him or applying perfumes to his body. The king should take care in this way as regards his vehicles, bed, food, bath, applying perfumes and all ornamentation'. Kām VII. 8 and Matsya 219,10 are very similar to Manu VII. 220. Kautilya (I. 17) states that the king should first secure his personal safety against his sons and wives and then the security of the kingdom against near and distant enemies. He first deals with safety from his own sons, the princes. The opinions of various authors on polity are cited (some of which have been noted above) viz. secret punishment (acc. to Bhāradvāja), keeping under guard in one place (acc. to Viśālākṣa), keeping the prince in a fort under the boundary guard (acc. to the Pārāśaras), keeping the prince away from his own kingdom in a fort belonging to a feudatory (acc. to Pisuna), sending him to his maternal relations (acc. to Kaunapadanta), making the prince addicted to sensual pleasures (acc. to Vāṭavyādhi), proper pre-natal care and proper education after birth about dharma and restraint (acc. to Kaut.). This symposium shows how the problem of the king's safety against bad princes taxed the ingenuity of all ancient writers on Arthasāstra and how Kautilya advocated the only reasonable course possible. The Matsyapurāṇa, chap. 220, also relies on training, discipline and gradual transfer of responsibility and advises the imprisonment of a bad prince in a well-guarded place furnished with comforts suitable to his position <sup>114</sup> In I 20 Kautilya gives practical hints against the danger of fire and poisons : e g he says that poisonous snakes will not enter a building provided with Jivanti, Sveta and other plants; that cats, peacocks, mongoose and spotted deer when let loose eat serpents, that certain birds like parrots, manas, malbar bird shriek when they suspect snake poison, the heron loses his consciousness in the vicinity of poison, the pheasant (jivanti-jivaka) feels exhausted; the young cuckoo dies, the eyes of raikona become redder <sup>115</sup>. Kām (VII 10-13) repeats the words of Kaut 1 20 and the Matsya (219 17-22) refers to the effects of poison on the same birds and a few others. The Matsyapurāṇa in chap 219-220 closely follows Kaut and Kām and appears to be based on them (e g Matsya 219 30 latter half is the same as Kām VII 24 first half). Vide Yaśastilaka III pp 511-512 for the effects of poison on birds almost in the same words as those of Kaut and Kām. Vide Śukra I 326-328 Kaut I 21, Kām VII 15-26, Matsya 219 9-32 state that part of the food for the king should first be cast into fire and offered to birds and the effects noted, they dwell at great length on the different tints of the flames of fire and of the smoke when different kinds of food are cast into fire, they point out the actions and gestures of the poisoner, they prescribe that the cook and the doctor giving medicines for mixing in food as antidotes should be made to partake of the food and then the king should himself partake of it. The king has to be careful in the harem, when receiving presents or anything sent by others, when sitting in a conveyance or riding a horse or travelling in a boat or when attending festivals (Kaut I 20-21, Kām VII 28-47). Kaut I 20 and Kām (VII 44 and 50) advise the king not to trust women and even the queen and to approach even the queen after she has been examined by men 80 years old and women over 50 years in the harem and found <sup>116</sup> safe. Kaut. (I. 20) and Kām. (VII. 51-54) both name seven kings that met death in their queen's chambers by the stratagems of the queens themselves or those that were incited by them; viz. Bhadrāsena killed by his brother concealed in the chamber of his queen (who was in love with the king's brother), the king of Karūsa killed by his own son who had concealed himself under the bed of the queen (who was angered by the king's promise to give the kingdom to the son of a rival queen), the king of Kāśi killed by his queen who mixed fried rice with poison pretending that it was honey; the queen of the king of Sauvira killed him with a jewel in her girdle that was smeared with poison; Vairantya was killed by his queen with her anklet smeared with poison; Jalūtha (or Jarūsa in Kām.) was killed with a mirror (with a razor-like edge) covered with poison; Vidūratha was killed by his queen who had concealed a weapon in her braided hair. The Harsacarita (VI) of Bāna mentions with additional details the cases of Bhadrāsena king of Kalinga killed by his brother Virāsena, the king of Karūsa (Dadhra by name), Kāśirāja (named Mahāsena) whose queen Suprabhā killed him to secure the kingdom to her son, Jarūtha king of Ayodhyā, Vairantya named Rantideva, Vidūratha of the Vrsnis killed by Bindumati, the Sauvira king Virāsena killed by queen Hamsavatī. In the Brhatsamhitā (77 1-2) two of these, Vidūratha and Kāśirāja, are mentioned, but the latter is said to have been killed by his estranged queen with an anklet smeared with poison. Medhātithi on Manu VII 153 quotes four of these seven. The Nītivākyāmṛta (rājaraśāsamuddeśa 35-36, pp. 231-232) sets out six other examples of kings killed by their queens. The king has also to beware of treachery from ministers and officials. Kaut. (in I. 10) describes how ancient writers devised methods of ascertaining the purity or impurity of ministers by putting before them allurements regarding dharma, wealth, sexual desires and playing on their fears and gives it as his own opinion that temptations that have direct reference to the king or queen should not be placed in the way of the ministers. In the Harsacarita VI, Skandagupta, the commander of the elephant arm of Harsa's army, warns the Emperor against putting trust in everybody and gives 19 instances of kings that met misfortunes, death or destruction through their own carelessness and the stratagems of those about them (apart from the seven mentioned above and two more who fell victims to the wiles of their queens) Some of them are famous and deserve mention here, viz the king of Vatsa (i e Udayana) who was imprisoned by the soldiers of Mahāsena that jumped out of a faked elephant; Maurya Brhadratha killed by his Senāpati Pusyamitra (called 'anārya' by Bāna on account of his treachery to his master); Kākavarna Śāisunāri (Śāisunāgi?), Sumitra, son of Agnimitra, whose head was cut off by Mitradeva while the king fond of dancing was in the midst of actors, the Śunga Devabhūti killed by his minister Vasudeva; Candragupta (of the Gupta dynasty) who dressed as a charming woman cut off the king of Śakas; the foolish Maukhari king Ksatraparman killed by bards Vide Kāmasūtra V 5 30 for two other examples of the Ābhira king Kottarāja and Jayatsena king of Kāśi The Nītivākyāmṛta (Dūtasamuddeśa) p 171 states that Cānakya killed one of the Nandas through a dūta and that two other kings met death from presents of poisoned clothes and a jewelled box containing snake poison. The Yaśastilakacampū (III pp 431-432) sets out many instances of kings that met with death from the wrath or the machinations of their ministers, purohita &c

From these examples one should not draw the facile and sweeping conclusion that in India the life of no king was safe. In the vast continent of India there were always numerous kingdoms at the same time It is no wonder that in the course of several thousand years and over such vast territories, some kings met death by treachery and stratagem. This is not a phenomenon restricted to India In a small country like England we have within two hundred years instances of the murder of the boy king Edward V and his brother prince Richard, of Lady Jane Grey nominated by Edward VI as his successor and the further fact that Cromwell during the last few months of his life was afraid of being assassinated During about 150 years from 1789 out of 30 Presidents of the U S A several such as Lincoln, Garfield and McKinley met death at the hands of assassins

The truth is that in a monarchy the king was the pivot of the whole State. As the Matsyapurāṇa (219.34) finely puts it

'the king was the root and the subjects were the tree; in saving the king from dangers the whole kingdom was on the road to prosperity and therefore all were to make efforts to guard the king'

Hereditary monarchy was the norm of government in ancient and medieval India. Kautilya expressly states (I. 17 at end) that the practice to make the eldest son the king is honoured except in the case of a calamity. At or about the time of Buddha and a few centuries thereafter there were a few oligarchies or (as some scholars prefer to call them) republics. But our Dharmaśāstra or Arthasāstra authorities contain rather very meagre references to them. The Mahābhārata in Śānti 107 furnishes the following data about ganarājyas (government by groups): Internal dissensions are the root of the ruin of gana; it is very difficult to keep lines of policy secret when there are many (when the government is that of many, i. e. an oligarchy or a republic); all members of the gana in their entirety do not deserve to hear the line of policy decided upon, but the chief persons among the ganas should meet together and arrange among themselves to secure the welfare of the whole gana; if disputes that arise among the families (or clans) are connived at by the heads of the clan, the ruin of the clan takes place which leads on to dissensions among the whole group (gana) Danger from internal dissensions must be guarded against (in the case of ganarājya), external dangers are not serious (in the case of ganarājya). All members of the gana are equal by birth and family, but they are not equal in energy, intelligence, bodily appearance and wealth. By their enemies ganas are broken by means of internal dissensions and bribes; therefore the greatest safety of ganas lies in union<sup>117</sup>. In these words the author of the Mahābhārata unerringly puts his finger on the weak spots of the rule of many viz. secrecy cannot be kept, there is corruption due to greed and jealousy, which bring about their downfall. In another place (Śānti 81) the Mahābhārata refers to the saṅgha of the Vṛsnis, of whom Kṛṣṇa was the president, and the great truth that the ruin of saṅghas is brought about by internal dissensions and corruption and it hits off the qualities required in the wise leader of the saṅgha to be four viz sagacity, forbearance, self-control and giving up the acquisitive spirit. The words saṅgha and gana are employed as synonyms in the Mahābhārata. Pāṇini (III 3 86) states that saṅgha means gana. Patañjali in his Mahābhāṣya (vol II p 356) states that saṅgha, saṃūha and saṃudāya mean the same thing. Pāṇini knows two kinds of saṅghas viz āyudhvaṅm (who practised the profession of arms) and those that were not so and further he also indicates that in the Vāhika country saṅghas included<sup>118</sup> brāhmanas, ksatriyas and others (vide V. 3 114). He names the saṅghas of Vṛkas, Trigartas, Yaudheyas, Parśus (V 3 115-117) as āyudhvaṅm. Kātyāyana by his vāṇika 'ksatriyādekarājāt saṅghapratishedhārtham' on Pāṇini IV 1 168 shows that saṅgha was differentiated from monarchy. Acc to Kāṭilya (p 53 above) the saṅgha of the Vṛsnis perished when it came in conflict with Dvaipāyana. In another place Kāṭilya says that (in some cases) the kingdom may be ruled by a clan, for the confederacy<sup>119</sup> of a clan is invincible, it is free from the calamity of a kingless State and therefore exists on the earth very long. Kāṭilya devotes one section (Adhikaraṇa XI) to the dealings of the ambitious king with saṅghas. There he states that securing the saṅgha on one's side is far better than securing an army or allies and makes the most interesting remark<sup>120</sup> that the corporation of the ksatriyas and others in

118 In the Karna-parva the country of Vāhikas is severely 'condemned' and it is said to be the country between the Indus and the five rivers of the Panjab (chap 44 7) पञ्चाना सिन्धुपद्माना नदीना येन्वराश्रिताः । तान् धर्मबालान् दुष्टीन्वाहीकानपि वजयेत् ॥ In chap 44 10 it is stated that their chief city is Sākala and in verses 11-30 and 35-38 their condemned practices are set out, and verses 31-34 say that the country of the five rivers is called Āratia and Vāhika. In Karna-parva 45. 6-13 the interesting fact is mentioned that in that country only one brother in a family acts as a brāhmaṇa should and that their sons do not inherit but their sister's sons take the inheritance. the countries of Kāmbhoja and Surāstra practise rūlā (husbandry and trade) and the profession of arms, while those of the Licchivikas, Vrijikas, Mallakas, Madrakas, Kukuras, Kurus and Pāñcālas live on the title of vājān applied to them (i.e. they are not cultivators of the soil and soldiers, but are only chiefs or nobles). What Kautilya means by 'vārtā-śāstropajivinah' appears to be that they were agriculturists ordinarily but were ready with their swords to defend their country when occasion required. Kautilya then describes in detail without any scruples how the conqueror may by various subterfuges cause dissensions among the members of the sangha and its leader or leaders (sangha-mukhya). In VIII. 3 Kautilya remarks that dissension becomes particularly rife owing to gambling among sanghas and noble clans that have the sangha constitution and they are destroyed. From about the 5th or 6th century A. D. the oligarchic States or Republics became rare and gradually disappeared. We get further data about these gānarājyas from Buddhist works, Greek sources (like the fragments of Megasthenes), coins and inscriptions. Rudradāman (in Junāgadh Inscription of 150 A. D.) boasts that he had uprooted the Yaudheyas who had become puffed up and unbending on account of the title of heroes (vīra) that was prominently applied to them among all ksatriyas<sup>121</sup> (E. I. vol VIII at p. 44). Samudragupta (in the first half of the 4th century A. D.) subjugated the Yaudheyas, Mālavas, Ārjunāyanas &c. In Gupta Inscriptions No. 58 p. 251 there is mention of a mahārāja-mahāsenāpati who was made their leader by the Yaudheya-gana. The Bṛhatsamhitā in several places refers to the Yaudheyas and Ārjunāyanas (e.g. 4.25; 5.40, 67, 75; 14.25 and 28; 16.21; 17.19) and speaks of Yaudheya-nrpa in 9.11. Vide Rapson's 'Indian coins' pp. 11 and 15 and Plate II, nos 13-15 and Plate III, no. 20 for the coins of the Yaudheyas and Ārjunāyanas. Arrian writes in 'Indika' (tr. by MacCrindle IX. p. 208, ed. of 1926) 'from Dionysus to Sandrakottos the Indians counted 153 kings and a period of 6042 years, but among them a republic was thrice established'. MacCrindle's 'Invasion of India' (p. 121) speaks of an aristocratic government on the

Hyphasis or Beas The Greek writers describing the invasion of Alexander speak of the democracies of the Oxydrakai (Ksudrakas), Malloi (the Mālavas), the Siboi (Śibis), Sambastai (the Ambasthas) and several others. Vide K. P. Jayaswal's 'Hindu Polity' part I. chap. VIII (pp 63-79) for Hindu Republics mentioned in Greek writings. Rhys Davids in 'Buddhist India' pp 19 ff. summarizes the data about Indian republics derived from Buddhist works. On p 22 he gives the names of eleven republican clans with their capitals, some of which like the Śākya (of Kapilavastu), the Mallas (of Kusinārā and Pāvā), the Videhas (of Mithilā) and Licchavis (of Vesālī) are well-known. Rhys Davids states (p. 19) that the administrative and judicial business of the Śākya was carried on in a mote-hall (santhāgāra) at Kapilavastu, that a single chief was chosen (but how and for what period is not known) who presided over the sessions and (when no sessions were being held) also over the State, that he bore the title of ājā. He mentions that at one time Buddha's cousin Bhaddiya was ājā and that in another passage Buddha's father Śuddhodana is styled rājā. He further points out (p. 26) that the Vajjians had eight confederate clans of which the Licchavis and the Videhas were the most important. K. P. Jayaswal in 'Hindu Polity' part I pp 25-165 brings together all the data about Hindu oligarchies (or republics as he calls them) and his work deserves the serious attention of all those who are interested in the study of ancient Indian political institutions, though here and there one cannot approve of his interpretations and theories. To take only one example, he holds that the procedure prescribed by Buddha for the deliberations of the saṅgha in the Mahāparinibbāna-sutta was borrowed from the procedure followed by the republics in their deliberations and therefore he describes the procedure of the Buddhist saṅgha in great detail ('Hindu Polity,' part I chap XI pp 103-117). Dr D R Bhandarkar also (in 'Some Aspects of Ancient Hindu Polity' pp 121-125) adopts this theory. This to say the least is a gratuitous assumption. The mere fact that Buddha told the prime minister of Ajātasatru, king of Magadha, who contemplated attacking the Vajjan confederacy, that the latter would not decline but prosper as long as they observed seven conditions and the fact that those very seven conditions were prescribed by the Buddha for the welfare of the saṅgha do not lead on to the further inference that the procedure followed by the monks in the deliberations of the meeting of the saṅgha (which is set out in such passages as the Mahāvagga IX 3, S.B.E.

vol. XVII p. 264 ff, Cullavagga IV. 9, S. B. E. vol. XX pp. 24-27) was the procedure of the meetings of the oligarchies. The seven conditions (both for the welfare of the Vajjians and the Sangha) are set out in the Mahāparinibbāna-sutta, chap. I. (S. B. E. vol. XI. pp. 3-8) viz holding full and frequent public assemblies, meeting together in concord and carrying out undertakings in concord, enacting nothing not already established and abrogating nothing that has been already enacted and acting in accordance with ancient institutions established in former days, honouring and revering and supporting elders and hearkening to their words, not detaining women or girls of their clans by force or abduction, honouring and supporting Vajjian shrines in town or country and not allowing proper offerings and rites to fall into desuetude, protecting and supporting the Arahats among them. On the most important points in connection with a republic or oligarchy we have no information at all, viz. who were entitled to vote, what were the qualifications for membership of the assembly that governed the State, how voting took place, what was the period for which members of the assembly were elected, whether the president was elected for life or a shorter period or was elected at all, what were the powers and procedure of the assembly. Vide Dr. Beni Prasad in 'Hindu Political Theories' p 158 for criticisms. Rhys Davids (in 'Buddhist India' p. 41) says that according to the Jātakas there were at Vesālī (modern Basadh in the Muzaffarpur District), the capital of the Licchavis, 7707 ājṇā (or chiefs). In the Bhaddasāla-jātaka (Fausboll, vol. IV p 148) there is a reference to a tank reserved for the bath of the families of the ruling chiefs (rājās) of the gana in the city of Vesālī. In the Mahāvastu (ed by Senart vol. I. p. 271) it is stated that there were twice eighty-four thousand nobles (rājānā) among the Licchavis. This explains what Kautīlya means by 'rājāsabdopajivināḥ'. These people called 'rājās' were probably the scions of the several branches of the Licchavis, who had in their hands the government and who were not doing manual (or agricultural) work. Vide Government Epigraphic Report for 1899 p 23 and Indian Historical Quarterly vol. IV p. 652, where it is said that in an inscription from Uttaramallur the extent of land and of Vedic learning required in a candidate for election are specified as also the method of writing on tickets the names of candidates. But such records, even in South India, are very few and refer to village sabhās and there is nothing in the works on dharmaśāstra or arthaśāstra about the methods of election to political assemblies and the qualifications of candidates. Vide Dr D R Bhandarkar's 'Some aspects of Ancient Hindu Polity' (1929) pp. 101-121 for a concise statement of several types of republics in Ancient India.

Another important question is whether in monarchical states there were popular assemblies of elected representatives or, in modern language, Parliaments. The words 'sabhā' and 'samiti' require consideration in this connection. In Rg I 91 20 Soni is said to confer a son who is 'sādanya, vidathya and sabheya, from which it follows that sabhā is in some respects different from 'vidatha'. In Rg II 24 13 a vipra (a priest or composer of hymns) is said to be sabheya 'clever or eminent in a sabhā'. In Rg X 34 6 'sabhā' <sup>122</sup> appears to mean a gambling hall. In Vāj S XXX 6 sabhācana seems to mean only 'sabhāsad', a member of a judicial tribunal, while in XXX 18 the sabhāsthānu is given up to Āskanda in the symbolic Purusamedha. In the Vāj. S XVI 24 there is an obeisance to sabhās and sabhāpatis (presidents of sabhās). In Atharvaveda VII 12 1 'sabhā' and 'samiti' are said to be the two daughters of Prajāpati, from which it may be argued that they were very similar but somewhat different. In Atharvaveda XV. 9 2 also sabhā and samiti are separately mentioned. In Tai. Br III 7 4 the word sabhāpāla occurs and sabhā is explained as 'gambling-hall' by Sāyana. In Rg X 97 6 and Vāj S XII. 80 it is said 'that vipra is said to be a doctor (bhisak) in whom medicinal herbs come together as nobles (rājānah) in a samiti (meeting or battle)'. In Rg. X 191 3 the word 'samiti' seems to mean no more than a meeting or meeting place. In Atharvaveda V 19 15 <sup>123</sup> we have 'the assembly (samiti) does not suit him (or is not won over by him) who harasses a brāhmana'. In the Chāndogya Up. (V 3. 1) Śvetaketu is said to have repaired to the assembly (samiti) of the Pāñcāla country, where the king Pravāhana Jaivali asked him five questions which the former could not answer and then he approached the next morning the king who was in his sabhā. Here it seems that both words are applied to the same assembly. It is impossible to say how the sabhā or samiti was constituted in the Vedic period. All that we can say is that it was an assembly of people to which the king, learned men and others went. It is extremely doubtful whether it was an elective body. Probably it was an ad hoc assembly of such people as cared to be present. K. P. Jayaswal (in 'Hindu Polity' part I p 11) holds that 'samiti' in the vedic age was the national assembly of the whole people, that it was the king's duty to attend it (ibid. p. 12) and that 'sabhā' was the standing and stationary body of selected men working under the authority of the samiti (ibid. p. 18)'. This is all conjectural, as Jayaswal himself admits 'the sabhā was certainly related to the saniti, but its exact relationship is not deducible from the data available' (ibid. p. 18).

These frantic efforts by such scholars as Jayaswal to prove that India had elective assemblies are made to counteract the sinister propaganda of many English writers that East is East and West is West and that the democratic institutions of the West cannot be transplanted with success on the soil of India. This is mischievous propaganda. There were no democracies even in Europe a few hundred years ago; even in England, France and a few other countries democracies have been introduced and have thrived within a short time. There is no reason why they should not do so in India, if honest efforts are made and difficulties are not purposely created by vested interests. Korkunov in 'General theory of law' (tr. by Hastings, 1922, New York p 296) says 'According to the historical school the political organization of England is good for England alone, for it corresponds to a natural genius very peculiar.. This doctrine of the historical school is false, since we have already seen that a change produced in the social ideal may bring about a change in the whole social development. The influence of one people on the life of another is a proof of this. The ideal is a force supporting the social life and this ideal may be the result not merely of our own special experience, but also of the experience of neighbouring peoples'.

Two other words require consideration, viz. Paura and Jānapada. The word 'paura' occurs in Rg V. 74. 4 where it has three applications, viz. to the Aśvins, to the sage Paura (who was an Ātreya) and to the cloud (acc. to Sāyana). K. P. Jayaswal (in 'Hindu Polity', part II pp 60-108) devotes considerable space to 'Paura' and 'Jānapada' and one may at once admit that he displays great learning, industry and ingenuity in his discourse on this subject. He holds that the Paura and the Jānapada were elective parliamentary bodies or what may be called the Hindu Diet and he sums up (on p. 108) their functions as follows 'we had an organism or a twin at p. 45 or in the Rāmāyana II. 2. 51, II. 111. 19 'paurajānapadam janam'). Lastly if the paurajānapada organization had (as said by Jayaswal in the quotation cited above) the power to depose kings and pass even hostile statutes, is it not a contradiction in terms to say that, instead of the Parliament or Diet deciding to remit certain taxes, it was the king who remitted taxes and bestowed favours (or privileges) of lakhs of rupees on the supposedly all powerful Paura-Jānapada assembly? In all passages that he quotes from the Rāmāyana and other classical sanskrit works the ordinary meaning of paura (residents of the capital) and jānapada (inhabitants of the country other than the capital) is quite enough and it is impossible to hold that any elective body is meant. In most passages the plural 'paurajānapadān' is used. If 'Paura-jānapada' stands for one elective body or two bodies, no explanation is offered why the plural should generally be used and not the dual. Kautilya (I. 19) states that the king should in the 2nd part of the day (divided into eight parts) look into the causes of the paurajānapadas. Jayaswal (in 'Hindu Polity', part II p. 95) misinterprets this passage by saying that the king had to set apart one period daily for the business of the paurajānapada assembly. Here again the plural is used and the dictum of Kautilya is the same as that of Yāj. I. 327 who says that the king should look into the law-suits (vyavahāraṇ) of the people. The word 'kārya' is employed by Manu VIII. 43, Nārada and other writers on vyavahāra in the sense of 'law-suit'. Yāj. II. 36 says that the king should restore to the jānapada property stolen by thieves. Jayaswal (in 'Hindu Polity', part II. p. 93) presses the singular 'jānapadāya' into his service and holds that it was the popular assembly that demanded the restoration of the things stolen. This, to say the least, is twisting the plain words of Yāj. The Mit paraphrases the word to mean 'to the person dwelling in his country from whom the property was stolen'. The corresponding passage of Manu VIII. 40 (dātavyam sarva-varnebhyo rājā corair-bṛtam dhanam) is quite clear, since it fortunately does not use the word jānapada and Medhātithi explains it as 'it should be restored to those from whom it was stolen'. Jayaswal (in 'Hindu Polity' part II p. 79) holds that a passage in the Arthasāstra (II. 14) refers to the fact that the Paura-Jānapada assembly got gold coins minted by the royal mint-master.<sup>124</sup>

124. सौवर्णिकः पौरजानपदानां स्वयमुत्कर्षणमावेशनिभिः कारयेत् । निर्विद्वकालकार्यं च कर्म कुर्यात् । अर्थशास्त्र II. 14.

But the plain meaning is that the mint-master was to mint standard silver and gold coins for all people when they brought bullion to him to have coins struck. One striking circumstance to be considered is that, though in all works on polity a raṅga is said to have seven elements, none of them includes a political elective assembly (like the paura-jānapada postulated by Jayaswal) among them. They only enumerate the country and the capital and declare even these as of lesser importance than the king and the ministers. Another matter that makes the existence of powerful elective political assemblies in monarchies most unlikely is the total absence of any reference in works on polity to the method of election, the system of voting, the qualifications of members, the period for which the assembly was elected and allied matters. When medieval writers like Aparārka on Yājñ 11 1 (p 600) quote from Brhatspati verses about four kinds of sabhā, they refer only to judicial tribunals of various sorts and grades (the same verses are quoted as Hārita's in Rājadhīratnākara p 20). Vide n 368 below.

If elective popular assemblies did not exist, then it may be asked whether the king was an absolute monarch or a despot or whether there were any checks that mitigated or regulated the power and doings of monarchs. The answer is that there were such checks and limitations. These were of various kinds. Exhortations addressed to the king himself exercised a restraining influence. For example, Kāt (10) says 'the king who gives way to wrath without proper thought would reside in a horrible hell for half a Kalpa'. The importance of dharma as an all-embracing institution was impressed upon the king by our writers so frequently that it must have had its psychological effect on every king. The idea that danda personified as a Deity might strike down the bad king himself (Manu VII 19, 27, 28, 30, Yājñ I 354-356) would tend to keep even a whimsical king within bounds. The views of ancient writers have already been cited according to which the king was not to act as he pleased, but was to regard his high office as a sacred trust and was to rule according to the dictates of the sāstras. These views created public opinion which must have certainly influenced the king's acts. The ideal king Rāma is depicted as having abandoned his queen Sītā (whom he knew to be pure) because the people could not accept her as pure after her long stay in Rāvana's prison. Vide Rāmāyana VII 45. Then there were the ministers whose advice the king was enjoined to seek. Besides there was the purohita and there were learned brāhmanas, who were to propound what dharma was, whose directions he was to carry out and who were supposed to have power to ruin a bad king (vide Vas I. 39-41, Gautama XI. 12-14, Manu IX. 320). Vide H. of Dh. vol. II. pp. 138-145 for the peculiar sanctity attaching to the person of a brāhmana and the superior position of brāhmanas as a class vs-à-vis the king. There was a deep-rooted faith that the rules of the śāstras (the Śrauta and Smṛta dharma) were divinely inspired and were above the king. Observance of dharma was the great social and political ideal from very ancient times for all including the king. This is most emphatically put in the Br. Up. I. 4. 11-14, where it is stated "even after creating the four varnas He (the Creator) did not think that stability had been attained. He then created the most excellent Dharma which is the might of the mighty (i. e. more powerful than the warrior caste) There is nothing higher than dharma. Even a very weak man hopes to prevail over a very strong man on the strength of dharma, just as (he prevails over a wrong-doer) with the help of the king. So what is called dharma is really truth. Therefore people say about a man who declares the truth that he is declaring dharma and about one who declares what dharma is they say that he speaks the truth. These two (dharma and truth) are this" (i. e. one).<sup>125</sup> Kāmandaka I. 14 stated that the Yavana king ruled over the earth for a long time because he ruled according to the dictates of dharma. In his administration of justice the king was to be checked by the judge and sabhyas, who were fearlessly to render advice to the erring king (as will be shown in the section on vyavahāra). Besides corporations and guilds were powerful and had a sort of self-government. Manu (VIII. 336 and Yāj. II. 307) went so far as to prescribe a heavy fine which the king was to inflict on himself for his illegal exactions and punishments and to direct that the king should distribute among brāhmanas wealth forfeited by grave sinners (Manu IX. 243-244). Lastly there was the final sanction that the śāstras allowed the subjects to abandon a worthless king or even to kill a misguided one or tyrant, as stated above (vide Manu VII. 27-28, Arthashastra I. 4).<sup>126</sup>

Kautilya (VIII. 3) when dealing<sup>127</sup> with the evil results of want of discipline in a king states that kings who are hot-tempered are known to have fallen victims to popular fury (or the fury of ministers) We may say that in theory and so far as ordinary people were concerned the sovereign's power was absolute and unlimited as Manu IX. 9-12 aptly illustrate and as Brhat-Parāśara states 'the king is Brahmā, Śiva, Viṣṇu, Indra, he is the giver, the destroyer, and the enforcer according to the karma of his subjects'. But there were (as stated above) very real checks and limitations that effectively prevented him from exercising his undoubtedly unlimited powers. These checks, though real, cannot be called constitutional in the sense in which that word is used in modern times. As said by Nārada the subjects are dependent while the king is uncontrolled, but he could not go against the sāstra (vide Haradatta on Gaut. XI. 2)

In modern times the activities of a sovereign person are three-fold, viz. executive, judicial and legislative. The judicial activities of the ancient Indian king will be dealt with in another section on law and the administration of justice. One great difference between ancient and modern societies is that the legislative action of the king was extremely limited in ancient times, while in modern times people are more and more looking to legislation for regulating all manner of things. Manu (VII. 13) lays down that since the king has in him the glory of all deities, whatever rule as regards desirable matters the king establishes and whatever action he declares as undesirable among those actions that are harmful, should not be transgressed by any one. In his gloss on this verse Medhātithi carefully points out what orders the king can issue and on what subjects he cannot issue orders. He gives the following instances of orders of both kinds: 'To-day all should observe a festival in the capital, all should attend a marriage ceremony at the house of the minister; animals should not be killed to-day by the butchers and birds should not be caught. debtors should not be harassed by creditors on these days (to be specified), no one should associate with such and such a man (an undesirable person); no one should allow a certain (undesirable) person to enter the house'. Medhātithi adds that the king is not authorised to interfere with the sūtric rules governing the varnas and āśramas such as the performance of agnihotra.<sup>127a</sup> This gloss of Medhātithi occurs word for word in the Rājanīti-prakāśa (pp. 23-24), which gives a more correct text than the printed editions of Mandlik and Gharpure. Kautilya (II. 10) devotes a chapter to the drawing up of śāsanaś, particularly with reference to their linguistic elegance and diplomatic etiquette. The Śukranītisāra (I.312-313) prescribes that the king's edicts (śāsana) should be proclaimed to the subjects by beat of drum, that his edicts should be written and displayed where four roads meet, and that the king should declare that breaches of the orders would entail heavy fines. In I. 292-311 Śukra gives instances of such orders, the most important of which are: Watchmen should take rounds in the several streets every one hour and a half at night in order to prevent thieves and paramours moving about; people should not employ abuse or beating towards their slave, servant, wife, son or pupil; no one should practise deceit in respect of measures, weights, coins, resins, metals, ghee, honey, milk, fat, flour; no document should be got by force; no bribes should be taken nor should any bribes be given to persons engaged in doing the king's work; no one should offer shelter to bad characters, thieves, paramours, those who hate the king, the enemy; parents, persons worthy of honour, learned men, men of good character should not be disrespected or ridiculed; no dissensions should be sown between husband and wife, master and servant, between brothers, between teacher and pupil, between father and son; no interference or obstruction should be caused to wells, parks, boundaries, dharmaśālās, temples, roads or to those who are deficient in a limb; without the king's permission no one should engage in gambling, selling liquor, hunting, bearing arms, sale or purchase of cattle or elephants or horses or camels or she-buffaloes or slaves or immoveable property or silver, gold, gems, intoxicants, poisons, drugs, the profession of medicine or should pass a sale deed, deed of gift or give a decision about a debt; no one should falsely accuse another of the great sins, nor take treasure trove, nor frame new rules for clubs or convivial gatherings (samāja) nor should publish slander against a caste, nor should appropriate property which is without an owner or has been lost, nor divulge the (king's) lines of policy, nor babble about the vices of the king; the people should not even think of forsaking their dharma, speaking untruth, committing adultery with another's wife, giving false evidence or fabricating documents, accepting gifts secretly, committing thefts and engaging in other desperate acts, engaging in sedition; public servants should not exact more than the tax already settled; only such weights and measures are to be used as bear the royal stamp; all subjects should strive to possess good qualities; desperadoes should be arrested and handed over to the king; bulls let loose (in memory of the dead) should be kept well controlled and fed by those who let them loose. Medhātithi on Manu VIII 399 states that a king may prohibit the export of foodstuffs from the kingdom in a famine. The several edicts of Aśoka show that his orders were framed on the same lines that are contained centuries later on in the Śukranītiśāstra. Most of his proclamations insist on moral virtues such as truthfulness, obedience and reverence to parents, elders and preceptors, honouring brāhmanas and śramanas, kindness to animals, tolerance of other faiths. Proclamations that may be called positive laws are very few, such as his order in Pillar Edict IV to give three days' respite to criminals condemned to death (C I I. vol. I p 125) or his regulations restricting the killing of animals contained in the 5th Pillar Edict (C I I. vol. I. p 138) or in the First Rock Edict at Girnar (p 7) 'no living being must be killed or sacrificed and no festival meeting must be held'. In the reign of Avantavarman of Kashmir the killing of living beings was prohibited for ten years (vide Rājataranginī V 64). Law-making in the modern sense is almost entirely lacking in the smṛtis. Gaut XI 19-25 show<sup>128</sup> that the king was to find the law required for the decision of causes from the following, viz (1) the Veda, Dharmaśāstras, the Āngas (lores auxiliary to the Veda such as grammar, exegesis, metrics etc.), Upavedas, Purāṇas; (2) customs of countries, castes and families that were not opposed to the Veda; (3) the usages of husbandmen, traders, herdsmen, money-lenders and artisans; (4) ratiocination, (5) the opinions<sup>129</sup> delivered parisad and traividya were more or less synonymous, by the assembly (parisad) of men deeply learned in the three Vedas. The authoritativeness of customs, usages and conventions and their relation to śāstra will be discussed later on. In the decision of causes there were four deciding factors, dharma, vyavahāra, caritra and rājāśāsana, which will also be dealt with later. So royal edicts or orders first came to be made in the administration of justice and probably served as laws or precedents in later times. Vide H. of Dh. vol. II. pp. 968-970 for the role of parisads in religious matters. Yaj I. 9 and Śākhya speak of parṣat or assembly of learned men as final authorities on dharma.

The executive functions of the king required a large number of ministers and officers. This topic will be dealt with immediately below.

There is another way of looking at the king's functions viz. they were religious and secular. The first required him to do certain acts for propitiating gods and unseen powers and removing dangers therefrom with the help of the purohita and sacrificial priests (vide Gaut. XI. 15-17, Yaj I. 308) and he had to guard dharma. His secular functions included those that led to prosperity, that helped the people in famine and similar calamities, dealing even-handed justice, guarding person and property from thieves and trespassers and against invasion.

The Mahābhārata records the tradition that many kings of former times abdicated the throne in favour of their sons and resorted to the forest as hermits. Vanaparva 202.8 mentions Brhadāśva who crowned his son Kuvalāśva. Vide also Vāyu 88.32. Dhrtarāstra says to Yudhisthira that in their family it was customary for kings to transfer the sovereignty to their sons and resort to a forest towards the close of their lives (Āśramavāsi 3.38). Vyāsa says that that was the practice of all rājarsas (Āśramavāsi 4.5) and the Āśramavāsi parva (20) mentions the names of several such kings. Vide also Śānti 21.15. In Ayodhyā 23.27, 94.19 this practice is referred to.<sup>129</sup> In the Raghuvamśa (I. 8, XVIII. 7, 9, 26) Kālidāsa says that in the family of Raghu kings in their old age became mums (hermits) and in chap. VIII. 11-23 he draws a fine contrast between the lives of Aja and his father Raghu (who had become a yati). There are Jain traditions of some antiquity that connect the

S for 1913 pp. 656-658) says that there is in this probably a reminiscence of abdication by Aśoka King Lavanaprasāda of the Vāghela dynasty in Gujerat abdicated in favour of his son Viradhavala (1233-38 A. Kautilya (VIII 2) speaks of a novel rule called 'dvairāja'<sup>121</sup> (sovereignty of two) and distinguishes it from 'vairāja'. The Mss differ in their readings, but the reading given in the footnote by Dr Sham Sastri seems preferable. Kaut remarks "As between dvairāja and vairāja (foreign rule) the former perishes on account of mutual hatred and rivalry; but the latter according to the ācāryas is enjoyed by foreigners as it is, when it pays attention to winning over the subjects; 'No' says Kautilya 'dvairāja' (generally) exists between father and son or between two brothers, their welfare is the same and therefore by reason of the influence of amātyas (over the two rulers) it can last, but vanāyja comes into existence by being seized from another king who is living and therefore the (foreign ruler) thinking 'this country is not mine' impoverishes it and carries off its wealth or treats it as a chattel (for sale) or when he finds that the country is disaffected towards him abandons it and goes away". This remarkable passage contains the mentality of foreign rulers in a nutshell. Manu IV 160 in a lucid and laconic manner states how individual and national happiness lies in freedom Kālidāsa in his Mālavikāgnimitra<sup>122</sup> (Act V) appears to refer to the conception of dvairājya when he makes Agnimitra say that the latter desires to establish a dvairājya for the brothers Yajñasena and Mādhavasena on the north and south banks of the river Varadā, who would both remain under the command of the king (Agnimitra). In the Mahābhārata a similar rule of two brothers, Vinda and Anuvinda in Avantī, appears to be referred to (vide Udyogaparva 166, cr. ed. chap 163). MacCrindle in 'Invasion of India by Alexander' p. 296 quotes Diodorus to the effect that Alexander sailing up the river came to Taula (Patala?) a city of great note with a political constitution drawn on the same lines as the Spartan, for in this community the command in war was vested in two hereditary kings of two different houses, while a council of elders ruled the whole State with paramount authority. ## CHAPTER IV

MINISTERS

Amātya—The second of the seven elements of rājya is the amātya, which word may be translated as 'minister.' There are three words that are interchangeable though sometimes distinguished, viz. amātya, saciva and mantrin, the first being the oldest of the three. A Kārikā on Pāṇini (IV. 2 104) teaches the formation of the word with the affix tyap (tya) from amā meaning 'near or with' (vide Mahābhāṣya, vol. II p 292). In Rg IV. 4. 1<sup>133</sup> there is the germ of this word 'O Agni! Go like a king riding an elephant, accompanied by his ministers'. Yāska (in Nirukta VI. 12) explains 'amavān' as 'amātyavān,' though two more explanations of the word are offered by him. The word amātya itself occurs in Rg. VII 15. 3, but there it is an adjective and means 'our own' or 'abiding in our house'. In some of the sūtras like the Baudhāyanapīṭṛ-medhasūtra (I 4. 13, I 12 7) the word amātya is used in the sense of 'near male relations in the house'. Vide H Dh. vol II. p. 588 n. 1375. The word 'amātya' occurs in the sense of minister in Āp Dh. S II. 10. 25 10 'The king should not live better or more luxuriously than his gurus (elders) and his ministers (gurūn-amātyānśca nātīyvet)'. The word 'saciva' occurs in the At Br (XII 9) where it is said that Indra considered the Maruts as his 'sacivas' (helpers or comrades). The necessity of amātyas or sacivas is stated in graphic language by several writers. Kautilya (I 7 last verse) says 'kingship is possible only with (the aid of) assistants, a single wheel cannot work (a chariot), therefore the king should appoint ministers and listen to their opinions'. Manu (VII 55 = Sukra II. 1) says 'it is difficult for a person single-handed to accomplish even an easy task, how can government particularly, which has great good as its aim, be accomplished without helpers'? The Matsya-purāṇa (215. 2) prescribes 'the king, while his head is still wet with the waters of coronation, if he wants to supervise his State, should choose his helpers, as in the latter the kingdom secures stability'. Matsya 215 3 is the same as Manu VII 55 Vide

Visnudharmottara II. 24. 2-3 which are the same as Matsya 215. 2-3; also Śānti 106. 11 and Rājantiprakāśa p. 174. From Arthasāstra I. 7 and 8, Mann VII. 54 and 60, Kām. IV. 25, 27, XIII. 24 and 64 it appears that they use the words saciva and amātya as synonyms Rudradāman in his Junāgadh Inscription<sup>134</sup> (E. I. vol. VIII. p. 36 at p. 44) states that his great enterprise to repair the Sudarsana lake was disapproved of by his advisory (matī-saciva) and executive councillors (karma-saciva) who were all endowed with the qualities required in amātyas and yet who were averse to the project and had no enthusiasm for it, since the breach to be repaired was very great. Here sacivas are divided into two sorts, those who give advice and those who execute the business decided upon and the word saciva seems to be a synonym of amātya. Anāra<sup>135</sup> states that the amātya who is a dhisaciva (i. e. malisaciva) is called a mantrin, while amātyas other than the mantrin are called karmasacivas. These distinctions are often not observed. Sumantra is called amātya in Rāmāyana I. 7. 3 and the best of mantrins in I. 8. 4. In Ayodhyā 112. 17 amātya and mantrin seem to be distinguished. From Kaut. I. 8 (last verse) 'Having divided the spheres of their powers and having taken into consideration the time and place and the work they have to do, all these persons should be appointed as ministers (amātyas), but not as mantrins,' it follows that mantrins were regarded by Kautilya as of a higher grade than amātyas in general. The R. N. P. p. 178 says that the amātyas are also styled mantrins. Kautilya states (I. 10) how amātyas are to be tested by upadhās i. e. by means of tempting them as regards each of dharma, artha, kāma, and bhaya (fear) and to be employed if found honest after any one of the four tests, while mantrins were to be appointed only if their integrity and loyalty were proved by all the tests combined. Upadhā<sup>136</sup> is defined by the Nītiśāstra as p. 111 as 'testing the mind of a person as regards dharma, artha, kāma and bhaya by various devices' (employed by secret agents). Kāt. (4-5) quoted by R. N. P. p. 136 states that the minds of kings always go astray on the (slightest) cause by reason of the fact that they possess great valour, knowledge, wealth and particularly the fact that they possess absolute power; therefore brāhmanas should always enlighten the mind of the king as to the duties of a king.

About the number of members in the council of ministers there has been a great divergence of views from ancient times Kauṭ. I 15 and Kām. XI. 67-68 state that according to the Mānava school the council (parisad) of ministers should be constituted of twelve amātyas, acc. to the Bārhaspatyas of 16, acc. to the Auśanasas of 20, but Kautilya's own opinion was that the number is determined by the power or exigencies of the State (yathāsāmarthyam). The Bālakānda (7 2-3) states that Daśaratha had eight honest and devoted amātyas (who are then named) Manu VII 54 and Mānasollāsa (II 2. verse 57) require that the king should select seven or eight ministers who should be hereditary, versed in the śāstras, brave, born of high family and well-tested. This advice was followed by Shivaji, the founder of the Maratha empire, who had a council of eight ministers (Pradhānas). Vide Ranade's 'Rise of the Maratha Power' pp 125-126 where he describes the functions of the eight ministers called 'Mukhya-pradhāna' (Prime minister), Pant Amātya (Finance minister), Pant Sachiva (General Accountant and Auditor), Senāpati (Commander-in-chief), Mantri (in charge of king's private affairs), Sumanta (Foreign Secretary), Panditrao (in charge of the Ecclesiastical Department), Nyāyādhīsha (Chief Justice). This list was probably taken by Shivaji's advisers from the Śukranītisāra II 71-72 where almost, the same eight are said to be the ministers according to some. Vide also Grant Duff's History of the Marathas, vol. I p. 193, and Rao Bahadur Wad's selections of śanads and letters (in Marathi) published by Messrs. Mawajee and Parasnis in 1913, where the names of the eight ministers of Shivaji are stated and their duties are described (p. 123). In the Śāntiparva (85. 7-9) it is declared that the king should have 37 sacivas, of whom 4 should be learned and bold brāhmanas, 8 valiant ksatriyas, 21 prosperous vaiśyas, 3 śūdras and one śūla versed in the Purānas, but verse 11 adds that the king should discuss and settle lines of policy in the midst of eight mantrins and Śānti 83 47 says that mantrins should not be less than three. In the Rāmāyana (II 100. 71) Rāma whom Bharata came to meet in the former's exile asks him whether he held consultation with three or four mantrins and (in verse 18 = Sabhāparva 5. 30) Rāma hopes that Bharata did not settle his policies by himself alone or in consultation with too many ministers. Kautilya also (I. 15) lays down that the king should hold consultation with three or four mantrins. The Nītivākyaṃṛta (mantrisaṃuddheśa pp. 127-128) holds that they should be three, five or seven, that unanimity is difficult to secure in a group of persons of different characters and that when there are many ministers they are jealous and try to carry out their own ideas. These passages show that firstly there was to be a small cabinet of three or four ministers, secondly there was to be a council (parisad) of ministers who might be eight or more in number according to requirements and thirdly there was a large number of amātyās or sacivas (high functionaries concerned with various departments). The council is mentioned in the 3rd and 6th Rock Edicts of Aśoka (Corpus I. I. vol. I. p. 4 'parisā pi yute ajñāpayisati') in the words 'the council will order the officers called Yuktas'. The qualifications of ministers (amātyas) are laid down in several places e.g. in Kautilya I. 9, Manu VII. 54, Yaj. I. 312, Kām. IV. 25-30 (of which verses 28-30 are almost the same as the words of Kautilya), Śānti 118. 2-3 (14 qualities of mantrins are mentioned), Śānti 80. 25-28, Balakāṇḍa 7. 7-14, Ayodhyakāṇḍa 100. 15, Medhātithi on Manu VII. 54, Agnipurāṇa 239. 11-15 (= Kam. IV. 25 and 28-31), Mānasollāsa II. 2, verses 52-59, Nītivākyaṃṛta p. 108, Rājanītiratnākara pp. 13-14 (quoting Nārada and Hārīta), Rājanītiprakāśa pp. 174-178, Rājadharmakaustubha pp. 251-254, Budhabhūṣana pp. 32, 57-58. Only the qualities required by Kautilya in amātya are set out here: He must be a native of the country, born of high family, influential, well-trained in arts, far-sighted, wise, of good memory, vigilant, eloquent, bold, intelligent, endowed with enthusiasm and dignity, capable of endurance, pure (in mind and actions), well-disposed, firmly devoted (to the king), endowed with character, strength, health, spiritedness, free from arrogance and fickleness, affectionate, who would not have recourse to hatred (even when offended by the king). Kautilya states that amātyas are of three kinds, the best, middling and inferior, of which the first must be endowed in full with the qualities set out by him and the other two are deficient by one quarter and a half respectively. In Śānti 83. 35-40 the faults that disqualify a person for being a mantrin are stated and verses 41-46 set out the qualifications for a mantrin, one of which deserves special notice, viz. (verse 46) he should have secured the confidence of the pauras and jānapadas. Many works prescribe that the ministers were to be hereditary if the son was capable like his father, e.g. Manu VII 54, Yāj I 312, Rāmāyana II 100 26 (= Sabhāparva 5. 43), Agni 220 16-17, Śūkra II 114. The Matsya 215 83-84 and Agnipurāṇa (220 16-17) add the very sensible remark that such hereditary ministers should not be allowed to dispose of the cases of their dāyādas (agnates). The Viṣṇudharmottara (II 24 55-56) contains the same rule. This hereditary character is borne out by many inscriptions. For example, in the Allahabad stone pillar ins. of Samudragupta, Harisena is himself a Mahādanda-nāyaka whose father Dhruvabhūti was also a Mahādanda-nāyaka (Gupta Inscriptions pp 10, 15) and in the Udayagiri cave Inscription of Candragupta II (ibid p 34) Virasena is described as 'anvayaprāptasācivya' (who hereditarily obtained the post of saciva). The R N P (p 176) after quoting the Matsya-purāṇa expressly states that the hereditary principle was to be given up, if the son or grandson of a former minister had not the requisite qualifications, but that such a descendant was to be employed only in such state work as was suited to his<sup>137</sup> attainments. The mantrins should, according to most authorities, be chosen from among brāhmanas, ksatriyas and vaiśyas, but not from śūdras, even if the latter be endowed with qualities (vide Śūkra II 426-427, Nītivākyaṃṛta p 108)<sup>137a</sup>. The consultation with the council of ministers was to be in secret. Kautilya (I 15) says 'All administrative undertakings must be preceded by consultation with ministers. The place for consultation should be so secluded that the conversation going on inside will not be heard outside and that even birds cannot see it, for it is narrated that secret consultations were divulged by parrots, mamas, dogs and other lower animals'.<sup>138</sup> The Harsacarita VI states that Nāgasena of the Nāga dynasty met destruction in Padmāvatī because his secret policy was divulged

Vide for a similar rule Manu VII. 105 (=Śānti. 140 24 which is also the last but one verse in Kaut. I 15).<sup>139</sup> The king presided in the council, but if he was not present the chief minister presided (Manu VII 141). In the Mālavikāgnimitra (V) the king's decision to make a dvajāyā is conveyed to the council of ministers and then the amātya (who here means the chief minister or President of the council) informs the king that the council agreed with the king, whereupon the king asks the council to depute the commander-in-chief Virasena to carry out the proposal. Kaut. further says (I 15) that all business was to be transacted in the presence of the ministers; but if any one was absent his opinion was to be elicited by despatching a letter. In matters of emergency (or great danger) the king is to call his cabinet ministers and the council of ministers and what the majority decide or what would lead to success is to be carried out by the king. Śūkra I 365 also refers to the view of the majority. It is the duty of the ministers, according to Kām. IV. 41-49, to prevent a king from pursuing an evil course, it is the duty of the king to listen to the advice of his ministers and such ministers are not merely his friends but are really his gurus.<sup>140</sup> Śūkra (II 82-83) asks 'How can the kingdom be brought to prosperity by those ministers whom the king is not afraid to offend? They are no better than ladies who are to be decked with ornaments and fine clothes. What is the use of those ministers, whose advice does not tend to the advancement of the kingdom, the people, the army, the treasury, good government and to the destruction of onomios? The ministers, however, must have found it difficult to please the king and also to placate the subjects. A well-known subhāsita states that one who looks to the benefit of the king comes to be hated by the people and he who looks to the good of the people (only) is abandoned by the king; when there is this great conflict it is rare to find a person who can secure the aims of both the king and the people.<sup>140a</sup> Manu (VII 56-59) prescribes the matters in which consultations are to be held with ministers and the procedure thereof, viz. peace and war, sthāna (i.e. army, treasury, capital and the country), sources of revenue, protection (of himself and of the country), the proper bestowal of the wealth obtained, the king is to ascertain the opinions of ministers separately and then jointly and then do what is beneficial; he is then to hold consultation on the most important affairs relating to the six means of policy with a wise brāhmana who is the most distinguished of all ministers and always to rely upon him, to settle all lines of policy finally on his advice and then to act. Yāj I 312 also requires the king to consult his mantrins, then a brāhmana (purohita) and thereafter to decide himself the course of action. The principal matters which mantrins have to concentrate themselves upon, acc to Kām XIII 23-24 (=Agnipurāna 241 16-18), are: mantra, securing the fruit of the line of policy adopted (such as conquering a country and protecting it), the carrying out of the business (of the State), predicting the good or evil effects (of an action taken), revenue and expenditure, government (i.e. punishing those who deserve punishment), subduing enemies, measures against calamities like famine, guarding the king and the kingdom.<sup>141</sup> The Nītivākyaṃrta (p 185) concisely puts the same by saying that amātyas have to concern themselves with revenue, expenditure, guarding the ruler (i.e. his body, his dharma, wife and children), looking after the army in all its arms.

Yāj I 343 says 'since the State depends upon mantra (i.e. lines of policy arrived at after consultation with ministers), the king should keep his lines of policy secret in such a way that people should not know them till the results of his undertakings manifest themselves'. Kautilya (X. 6 last verse) emphasizes the importance of mantra in 'an arrow discharged by an archer may kill one man or none at all, but a (well-considered) scheme put into operation by a wise man may destroy even those who are only conceived' <sup>142</sup> Both Sabhāparva 5. 27 and Ayodhyā 100. 16 have the same verse, viz mantra is the root of victory. <sup>143</sup> Kautilya and the Nītivākyaṃṛta p. 114 say that mantra accomplishes the following, viz. the apprehension of what is not or cannot be seen, imparting the strength of definite conclusion to what is apprehended, removal of doubt when two courses or opinions are possible, inference of an entire matter when only a part is seen. <sup>144</sup> In most works such as Kauṭ. I. 15, Kām. XI. 56, Agnipurāṇa 241. 4, Pāṇcatantra I p 85, Mānasollāsa (II. 9 verse 697 ff, p 92) it is said that mantra has five elements which have to be considered (it is pañcāṅga), viz. means of carrying out actions (or works), plenty of men and materials, proper allotment of time and place, remedies against pitfalls, the (happiness of the kingdom or people) that will result from the accomplishment of the course decided upon. <sup>145</sup>

The high functionaries and office-holders have been different at different times. In the Vedic age, in the performance of the Rājasūya, there are certain offerings (generally twelve in number) which are called 'ratninām, havīṃsi'. Their order and names differ in different texts, though most are the same in all. Besides the king (the sacrificer), the eleven 'ratnas' (jewels) or 'ratnins' are (according to the Śat Br. V 3. 2). the commander-in-chief, the purohita, the crowned queen, sūta grāmaṇi, ksattr (chamberlain), saṅgrahit (treasurer or charioteer?), on the Yaśastilaka I. p. 91 differ as to the names of these 18.<sup>148</sup> The Rājataranginī I. 120 informs us that in former times there were only seven departments (karmasthānas), that later on they became 18 and that five more were added to these eighteen (IV. 142-143 and 512) viz. mahāpratihāra, mahāsāndhivigraha, mahāśvaśāla, mahābhāndāgāra, mahāsādhanaabhāga (and so the Heads were called 'adhigata-pañcamahāśabda' i. e. to whom five titles with 'mahā' in them were given).<sup>149</sup> The Agni-purāṇa 220 mentions several high functionaries like the senāpati, pratihāra, dūta and heads of departments. The Śūkrānītisāra (II. 69-70) enumerates ten principal high functionaries of the king (prakṛtis) viz. purodhas (purohita), pratinidhi, pradhāna (President of council), saciva (war minister), mantrin (Home minister), prādvivāka (minister of justice), paṇḍita (minister of ecclesiastical matters), sumantra (Finance minister), amātya (revenue minister) and dūta (minister of diplomatic relations) and remarks that others omitted purodhas and dūta from this list of ten and held that these eight should all receive the same pay (verses 71-72), while Śūkra was of opinion that the ten high dignitaries should each receive in order one tenth more as pay than the succeeding one (v. 71), that the purohita was the most eminent of all, that among the rest each preceding was more eminent than each succeeding one (II. 74-77), that after these high dignitaries came the other officers (adhikārigana, II. 279), that then came the darsaka (secretary?), and lekha (clerk), then the menial servants who waited on the king and lastly the lowest were those who carried out dirty work. In II. 84-87 Śūkra briefly brings out the special functions of the

149. This is a meaning of pañcamahāśabda which is peculiar to the Rājataranginī. Elsewhere that title generally means one before whom were beaten the five musical instruments. In the Talcher grant of Kulastambha in the 9th century the epithet 'samadhigata-pañcamahāśabda' is applied to a king (mahārājādhirāja) in E. I. vol. XII p. 157, while in an Inscription from Yewur of about 1040 A. D. it is applied to a mahāmaṇḍaleśvara (E. I. vol. XII. p. 269). In the Pimpri plates of Dhārāvārsa Dhruvarāja dated Śaka 697 the same title is applied to a minister described as mahāsamādhigata-pañcamahāśabda (E. I. vol. X, p. 89). Vide J. B. B. R. A. S. ministers from pratinidhi to dūta<sup>150</sup> and then in II. 88-105 at length. In I. 353-361 Śukra lays down how the king's public darbar should be arranged, viz. the king's throne should be in the centre of the western half of the hall on which the king should sit well-dressed, wearing his crown, armour and a drawn sword; his sons, grandsons, brother's and sister's sons should sit behind him, his daughter's sons should sit on his right and on his left should sit in order his uncles, chief agnates, members of the assembly, commanders; in front of the king to his right should be seated his maternal grandfather's relatives, the mantrins, and to the left his father-in-law, wife's brother, officers &c. The Śukranītisāra (I 374-376) lays down certain very practical rules for the king: 'he should personally observe villages, towns and districts every year; he should see whether his subjects are kept contented or are harassed by his officers, he should not side with the officers (with the man on the spot) but rather should take the side of the subjects, he should remove an officer who is hateful to many (lit. a hundred) people and an amātya should be removed if he is found to commit several illegal acts Śukra (in II. 107-113) further advises the change of portfolios among the ministers (e. g. sumantra should be appointed amātya or vice versa); he says that for each department three should be engaged, one the most clever being the head and two others being darsakas (secretaries) who should be changed every three, five, seven or ten years; one man should not be allowed to hold the same high office for a long time, since otherwise he becomes intoxicated with power,<sup>151</sup> servants should not do any business without a written order nor should a king order anything to be done except in writing-(II. 290).

The words in Aśoka's Edict III 'pañcasu pañcasu vāsesu niyātu' probably refer to the practice of the transfer of high officers every five years. The 6th caste mentioned by Megasthenes (Fragment 1 p. 41 and Fragment XXXIII p. 85 in McCrindle's 'Ancient India') was that of overseers who inquired into and superintended all that went on in India, and made reports to the king or, where there was no king, to the magistrate. Megasthenes probably confounded the ministers and adhyaksas (who were often hereditary) with a caste. Vide also Fragment XXXIV pp. 86-88 about the officers of state and their duties. It is probably on account of some such rule as is stated in Śukra about frequent change of portfolios that in the inscriptions high functionaries have epithets prefixed to them which indicate their connection with several portfolios e. g. in the Banskhera plate of Emperor Harsa (E. I. vol. IV p. 208 at p. 211) Skandagupta (who is probably the same as the Skandagupta mentioned by Bāna in the Harsacarita VI as commander of the elephant arm) was the dūtaka of the grant and is described as 'mahāpramātārahmahāsāmanta'; in the Allahabad stone pillar Ins. of Emperor Samudragupta (Gupta Inscriptions p. 10 and p. 15 n. 4), Harisena is described as 'Sādhivigrahika' (minister for peace and war), 'Kumārāmātya' (the minister of the Yuvarāja?) and Mahādandanāyaka<sup>152</sup> (commander of an army); Prthvisena (a brāhmana) is described as mantrin, kumārāmātya and then mahābalādhikṛta (in E. I. vol. X p. 72, of Gupta Samvat 117). In theory and practice the king was to issue orders in the presence or under the advice of his principal ministers. We read in the grant of Rājārāja I of the Eastern Cālukya dynasty that he issued his command in the presence of the mantrin, purohita, senāpati, yuvarāja, dauvārika and pradhāna (E. I. vol. IV. p. 300 at p. 302). Śukra (II. 362-370) describes the procedure followed in issuing orders about State business. First the mantrin, prādvivāka (Chief Judge), pandita (head of ecclesiastical department), and dūta should write out the business relating to their departments, then the amātya should write thereon (sādhulikhnam-astu, the writing is good), sumantra adds 'samyag vicāritam' (it is well considered), the pradhāna writes 'satyam yathārtham' (it is the truth, it is as the business requires), pratinidhi should write 'āṅgikartum योग्यम्' (it is proper to accept this), the yuvarāja should write 'āṅgikartavyam' (it should be accepted), the purohita should write 'lekhyam svā-

bhimatam' (this writing is approved by me); all then should make their seals after their remarks and then the king should write 'angikrtam' <sup>152</sup> (it is accepted) and affix his seal

The Rājataranginī shows that persons often rose to ministerial positions from low birth e g. (V. 73) it states that an engineer of Avantivarman was a foundling, (VII. 207) a watchman became chief minister.

It is necessary to say a few words about some of the great officers of State. First comes the Yuvarāja Kautilya devotes one chapter (I. 17) to taking care of the prince. The subjects of the prince's education, his association with state business, treatment of princes, good or bad, the coronation of a yuvarāja have already been dealt with (pp. 49, 83 &c.). The younger brother or eldest son was made yuvarāja (Crown Prince) during the reigning king's life (Ayodhyā, chap. 3-6, Kām. VII 6, Śukra II 14-16) Rāma on his coronation as king made Bharata the Crown Prince when Lakṣmaṇa refused to be so (Yuddha 131.93). The yuvarāja and princes were often sent as governors of different parts of the realm. The Divyāvadāna (XXVI p 371) states that Aśoka was sent by his father Bindusāra to Takṣaśilā to pacify popular disturbances and Emperor Aśoka himself is said to have sent his son Kunāla from Pāṭaliputra to the same town to pacify the citizens that had been offended by the arrogance of the amātyas (ibid pp 407-8) Khāravela in the Hāthigumphā Ins (E I. vol XX at pp. 79, 86) was a yuvarāja for nine years from his 16th to his 24th year From the Mālavikāgnimitra we learn that while Puṣyamitra was virtual emperor of Bharatavarṣa his son Agnimitra was ruling at Vidiśā and had the authority to divide the kingdom of Berar between two brothers, Yajñasena and Mādhavasena The yuvarāja is not generally enumerated in the lists of mantrins, but he is one of the 18 tirthas and from Śukra (above p 115) it appears that he had a seal and important matters passed through his hands along with those of the ministers. According <sup>154</sup> to

Compare the word 'dr̥ṣtam' occurring at the beginning of Chamṃak and Sivani grants of the Vākātaka emperor Pravaraśena II and the same word in the plate of the Pallava king Śivaskandavarman (in E I. vol I at p 9) In most plates of the Vākātakas the word 'dr̥ṣtam' occurs at the beginning, vide E I vol 22 p 167

Śukra (II. 12) the yuvarāja and the group of amātyas are the two arms or eyes of the king, but Śukra V. 17 warns the king against transferring all power to the Crown Prince except when the king is about to die. The Matsyapurāṇa 220. 7 quoted in the Budhabhūṣana (p. 33) prescribes that the king should entrust to the well-disciplined prince at first unimportant offices and then gradually important ones.<sup>155</sup> If a prince was ill-behaved he was not to be abandoned as he would go over to the enemies and harm the king, but he should be kept confined in a guarded place (Kām. VII 6, Budhabhūṣana pp. 33, 35, verses 77, 93). As regards his emoluments he was placed on the same footing as the mantrin, purohita, senāpati, the queen, the king's mother (Kaut. V. 3). What office is meant by the Kumārāmātya in some of the Inscriptions (e. g. Gupta Ins. pp. 10, 50, E. I. vol. X p. 72, E. I. vol. XI p. 83) is not clear. It does not probably mean 'a royal prince who was also an amātya', but rather some minister attached to the yuvarāja, as contradistinguished from rājāmātya (which office occurs in Gupta Inscriptions, p. 218). It appears that in ancient times provincial governors could be total strangers to the royal family. From Rudradāman's Junāgaḍh Ins. we learn that the governor of Surāstra under Candragupta Maurya was a vaiśya called Puṣyagupta and under Aśoka a Yavana noble or king called Tusāspa<sup>155a</sup> (E. I. VIII p. 36 at p. 43).

Next comes the purohita. In H. Dh. vol. II pp. 40 and 363 it has been already shown how purohitas existed from the most ancient period of the Rgveda, how the purohita was thought to be half the soul of the king and how the co-operation of the spiritual teacher and the secular head (the king) was deemed absolutely necessary for the prosperity of the kingdom, how Gautama (XI 12-14) and Āp. Dh. S II 5 10. 16 prescribed the qualities of the purohita. Our authorities show that the purohita was not a mere priest. The Ait. Br. (40. 2) calls the purohita 'rāstragopa' (the saviour of the kingdom). The Śukranīti also, 155a It is strange that Dr. Beni Prasad in 'The State in ancient India' (p. 189) remarks "the former governor is designated rāstriya while the latter is called adhīsthāya" " Adhīsthāya " in Rudradāman's Ins. is only a gerund of 'sthā' with 'adhi' and means 'having ruled over' राष्ट्रिय is formed from राष्ट्र according to राष्ट्रवात्पराराद्ध् चलो (Pān. IV. 2 93) and means 'one ruling over a province, a Provincial Governor'. In dramas राष्ट्रिय means 'king's brother-in-law'. Kṣīrasvāmī says 'नट्यादुच्यते राष्ट्रियो राष्ट्रियः'.

though a very late work, similarly describes the purohita (II. 74) as 'rājaraśtrabhrt' (the supporter of the king and the kingdom.) In the Rgveda III. 53. 12 we find the idea that the hymns and the spiritual power of the purohita Viśvāmitra protected the Bharata clan<sup>156</sup> He made the king ready for battle and accompanied him in battle murmuring 'where the arrows fly &c'. (Rg. VI. 75 17) while the fight went on (vide Āśv. Gr III 12 19 quoted below n. 308) The Visnudharmasūtra III 70, Yāj I 313, Kām. IV 32 require that the purohita was to be well versed<sup>157</sup> in the vedas, itihāsa, dharmasāstra or dandanīti, in astrology and portents, in rites of propitiation contained in the Atharvaveda, of high family, endowed with all vidyās and good acts as stated in the śāstras and with austerities. Kaut. (I 9) states almost the same qualifications for the purohita, requires the king to honour his advice as a pupil honours his teacher or a son his father or a servant his master and says that royal power advanced by brāhmanas, enforced as with a spell by the consultations of mantrins and endowed as with a weapon by the observance of śāstric rules becomes invincible and secures success Vide Ādi. 170 74-75, 174. 14-15, Śānti. 72. 2-18 and chap. 73, Rājanītiprakāśa pp 59-61 and 136-137, Rājadharmakaustubha pp 255-257 for qualifications expected in the purohita Kautilya (X 3) states that while a battle is going on the (chief) minister and purohita should urge on and encourage the soldiers by exhorting them with verses from the Veda and classical Sanskrit, promising great rewards in the next world for those who fall in battle The Śukranītisāra (II 78-80) requires in the purohita among other qualities the study of dhanurveda, proficiency in arms and in formations of armies for battle and possession of so much religious merit as to be able to pronounce an effective curse A purohita was to be distinguished from a rtvij (a sacrificial priest) as Manu VII 78 and Yāj I 314 show Vide Mānasollāsa II 2 60 (p 34), Rājanītiratnākara pp 16-17, Visnudharmottara II 5, Agni 239 16-17 for further passages on purohita Some authorities include the purohita among amātyas or mantrins (e. g. Vijñāneśvara on Yāj. I. 353, Śukra II. 69-70), while others like Yāj. I. 312 regard him as distinct from mantrins. The purohita was often hereditary. Acc. to Kautilya quoted above he was to employ means declared in the Atharvaveda to remove calamities, divine and human. The great divine calamities acc. to Kautilya IV. 3 are fire, flood, disease, famine, rats, wild elephants, snakes and evil spirits.<sup>158</sup> According to Manu VII. 78 the purohita was concerned with the religious rites laid down in the śrauta and grhya sūtras and Āp II. 5. 10. 14-17 show that the purohita had complete jurisdiction in matters of penance for offences. Vas. (19. 40-42) provides that if the king lets off an offender deserving to be punished the king had to fast for a day and the purohita for three days and to perform the heavy penance of Krcchra if the king punished the innocent. According to most authorities he played a role that was pre-eminently religious. He is not mentioned among the 10 limbs of the sabhā in the administration of justice. Kāt. 24 (quoted in S. V. p. 20) does not require him to be an expert in arthaśāstra, though Kāt 56 quoted by the Mit. on Yāj. II. 2 and Sm. C. (II. p. 14) say that the king should enter the Hall of Justice with learned brāhmanas, the ministers, the chief justice, the purohita &c. Yāj. I. 312 and the Mit. on Yāj. I. 312-313 on the other hand prescribe that even after consulting all mantrins, the king was finally to consult the purohita in all secular and religious matters. The Nitivākyāmṛta (purohitasamuddeśa) p. 160 states that the divine calamities are: shower of fire (fall of lightning?), excessive rainfall, epidemics, famine, damage or disease of crops, swarms of locusts and other vermin, diseases, goblins and female evil spirits, snakes, wild elephants, rats. The purohita is required to know ritual of five kinds,<sup>159</sup> viz. that dealing with the propitiation of Naksatras, that of śrauta sacrifices, that of the samhitās (of Tantra worship), that of Atharvashiras and that of sāntis (such as grahaśānti &c.). Calamities, according to Kām. XIII. 20-21, are of two sorts, divine (daiva) and human: there are five kinds of the first viz. fire, flood, disease, famine and epidemic, all of which can be met by human effort and by propitiatory rites, while human calamities should be withstood by constant effort and by proper lines of policy. The same verses are Agnipurāna 241 14-16.

Acc to Kautilya (V 3) 48000 panas were the salary of the (royal) sacrificial priest, ācārya (teacher), mantrin, purohita, commander-in-chief, crown prince, the king's mother, the queens and he holds that "with that amount of maintenance they would not yield to temptation or revolt (against the king)".<sup>160</sup> The amātyas, the chief judge and even the purohita could be punished by the king, acc to Manu, if any of them went wrong (VIII 335 and IX 234) and Kaut. (IX. 3) prescribes that when the purohita is guilty even of a great offence, the remedy is to imprison him or banish him. Some great ministers, though not exactly purohitas of the king, were learned brāhmanas and led simple lives such as Cānakya and Mādhava. There is divergence of views about the salaries set out in the Arthaśāstra (V. 3). Jayaswal (in 'Hindu Polity' part II p 136) holds that the salaries were yearly and the panas in which they were paid were silver ones. Prof Dikshitar (in 'Mauryan Polity' p 151) holds that the salaries were monthly. Confusion is caused by the fact that there were panas of copper, silver and gold. Vide Rājānitiprakāśa p 294. The Rājataranginī VII 950 speaks of dinnāṣas of gold, silver and copper. Rao Bahadur K. V Rangaswami Aiyangar holds that the salaries (in the Arthaśāstra) were monthly and in golden panas (in 'Ancient Indian Polity' pp 44-45). Therefore this matter must be investigated. Manu (VIII 13) promises that those names of copper, silver and gold coins which are well-known among the people (of its day) for purposes of trade will be described by him. Acc. to Manu VIII. 134 and 136, Viṣṇu Dh S IV. 6-10, and Yāj I 363-365 five kṛṣṇaṣas are equal to a māsa, 16 māsaṣas are equal to a suvarṇa, 4 suvarṇaṣas (or five acc. to some) are equal to a pala, a karsa is equal to  $\frac{1}{4}$  of a pala and a piece of copper one-fourth of a pala in weight is called a pana, which is the same as karsāpana<sup>161</sup> (equal to 80 rakṣakāṣas or guñjā berries). A pala was equal to 320 raktikās. Kaut II. 19 says practically the same thing. In Kaut. V. 3 the salaries range from 48000 to 60 panas from the highest functionaries to the lowest servants. They must all be taken to be for the same period in every case and in the same metal, since Kaut expressly states no different periods and no difference in metal. Ordinarily the words pana and kārsāpana (as stated by Manu VIII 136 and the Mit. on Yāj. I. 365 and the Śukranīti IV. 1. 116) refer to copper pieces (used as coins) and bearing a stamp. Another table given by Manu VIII 135-136, Visnu Dh. S. VI. 11-12, Yāj. I. 364 is: 2 raktikās<sup>168</sup> or kṛṣṇaśas = one (silver) māsa, 16 māśas = one

162. A raktikā was found by General Cunningham after many experiments to weigh on an average 1.8 grains (vide his 'Coins of Ancient India' pp 45-46 and also Rapson's 'Coins' pp. 2-3) So that a silver dharana or purāna (of 32 raktikās) should weigh about 57.6 grains and a copper pana (of 80 raktikās) should weigh 144 grains. It appears that the weights of Indian coins in different parts and at different times varied a good deal. Cunningham ('Coins of Ancient India' p. 5) states that gold was cheap in India, being as one to eight rates of silver. But in medieval times i. e. about 1300 A. D. (vide Śukra IV. 2 92-93) gold was 16 times the price of the same weight of silver, which again was 80 times of the price of the same weight of copper. Though, as stated in note 161 above, a copper pana was usually equal to eighty raktikās, a copper pana of 100 raktikās (i. e. of 20 māśas) was known. Nār. (pariśista verse 58) speaks of māsa as the 20th part of the kārsāpana and the Mit. on Yāj. I. 365 and Vy. Nirṇaya p 207 quote a verse (attributed to Uśākas by Haradatta and Maskarin on Gaut. XII 19) that a māsa is a twentieth part of pana (पाणो विंशतितमो भागः पणस्य परिकल्पितः). The Agnipurāna (227 2) appears to have known a pana of 120 kṛṣṇaśas (कृष्णशसनां तथा पदव्या कर्षाणि राम कीर्तितम्). The verses in Nār. (pariśista 58-60) are ascribed to Kāt by the Sm C II. p 99 and it is stated by both that those terms are in vogue in Pāṇanada (Punjab). When the pana of copper was equal to 20 māśas (and 100 guñjās), the copper coin would have been almost of the weight of the modern copper half anna coin. The table given by Nār. (pariśista 58-60) is: 4 kākiniś = māsa, 20 māśas = kārsāpana (which is the same as Andikā), 4 kārsāpanas = dhāoaka, 12 dhāoakas = suvarṇa (also called dināra). The table given by Br. (as quoted in Sm. C. II p. 99 and V. R. p. 667) is the same. Br. as quoted by Aparārka p 832 and V. R. p. 111 employs the word 'nānaka' for coin, which word also occurs in the Mrcchakatika and in Yāj. II. 240-241. The Amarakośa states that oṣka and dināra are synonyms and also gives other meanings of oṣka Śābara on Jai. IV. 3 39 gives the striking example 'no one would speed a kārsāpana for finding out a kākini that he had lost'. The Arthaśāstra II 12 p 84 states that the superintendent of the mint should manufacture copper panas, half panas, kākiniś and half kākiniś. The Visnu Dh S V. 96 refers to a golden māsaka. Under the Guptas golden coins are mentioned as dināras, vide 'Gupta Inscriptions' p. 29 at p. 31 where there is a gift of 25 dināras in the Gupta year 93 and pp 38, 41, 261 (where it is stated that one bhikṣu was to be fed every day throughout the year from the permanent endowment of 12 dināras). From the Baigram plate dated Gupta samvat 128 it appears that one dināra was equal to 16 rūpakas (silver coins) in E I vol XXI, p 80. A Mathurā Ins of the 28th year of Huvishka speaks of the deposit of 550 purāṇas (E. I. vol XXI p. 55 at 61). Bhāskarācārya (who was born in śake 1036 and wrote his Siddhāntasīromani in 1072 śake : c 1150 A.D.) gives the following table (in Lilāvati I 2-4) : 20 varāṇakas = kākinī, 4 kākinīs = pana, 16 panas = dramma, 16 drammas = niska, 2 yavas = guṇjā, 3 guṇjās = valla (modern Marathi vāl), 8 vallas = dharana, 2 dharanas = gadyāṇaka, 5 guṇjās = māsa, 16 māsas = karsa, 4 karsas = pala and a karsa of gold is called Snvarna. It will be seen that Nār. and Lilāvati differ as to कल्पिणी Gadyāṇakas of gold are referred to in the Pattadakal pillar Ins of Kirtivarman I (754 A.D.) where it is stated that a field of 30 nivartanas was purchased for thirty gadyāṇakas of gold (E I vol III, pp 6-7) From a verse of the Caṭurviṃśatīmatā quoted by the Mit on Yāj III 258 it appears that gadyāṇaka was also a silver coin. From an inscription of Vikramāditya V near Gadag dated śake 934 it appears that fines for offences were levied in gadyāṇakas (E I vol. XX p 64) The following works may be consulted for further information on Indian coins viz Cunniogham's 'Coins of Ancient India' (1894), Rapson's 'Indian coins' (1897) in the Grundriss, C. J. Brown's 'Coins of India' (in 'the Heritage of India' series, 1922) The Dharmadvaitanirmaya (pp 137-139) and the Vaijayanti on Viṣṇu Dh S IV, 9 may be consulted for efforts to reconcile the various statements about Snvarna, Niska &c For an informing paper on the most ancient Denari, vide Proceedings of the British Academy vol XVIII pp 211-266 where it is established that the earliest denarius period begins about 187 B C Therefore Jolly's assumption (in Recht und Sitte p 23 followed by Winternitz in 'History of Indian Literature' vol II, p. 216 n. 4 that all Indian works in which the word dināra occurs cannot have been composed before 2nd century A D is unwarranted. Prof. Keith (JRAS for 1915 p 504) does not accept Jolly's assumption The dināra was variously defined According to Viṣnugupta quoted in Hemādri's Vṛatakhanda, a rūpaka is 1/16th of suvarna and a dināra was equal to 28 rūpakas, while acc to Nār and Kāt सुवर्ण and दीनार were synonyms The Dharmadvaitanirmaya says that a lāṣāṇa (of silver it seems) was equal to eight or ten dhābbukas. One of the verses of the Jñāneśvari (composed in 1290 A D) that speaks of gold as पंचरं (15 times in price of the same weight of silver) may be cited here 'तै भगवत जरी पंचरं । तरी राजवडीची अकरं । लाहे (v l साहे) तैचि सरे । जियापरो ।' chap 17 verse 322 (Bhide's and Madgavkar's editions) śabhāgo dharaṇam). Nārada (pariśista 57) expressly states that a silver kārsāpana is in vogue in the south i. e. a silver pana or kārsāpana was not universal.<sup>163</sup> A golden suvarṇa also comprised 80 guṇījas, while the standard silver pana was of 32. Rhys Davids (in 'Buddhist India' p. 100) states that about the time of Buddha's birth transactions were carried on in terms of the kahāpana, a square copper coin weighing about 144 grains and guaranteed as to weight and fineness by punch marks made by private individuals, that there were half and quarter kahāpanas also, that a kahāpana would be now worth about  $\frac{1}{4}$ th of a penny, though its purchasing power was then equal to about one shilling of the present day. Therefore it is proper to understand that a pana or kārsāpana, when the word is used without any qualification, was meant to be one of copper and that prima facie the salaries in Kautilya were meant to be in copper panas. This conclusion can be supported by various considerations. Manu VII. 126 prescribes that the wages for the lowest menial servant (such as one who sweeps the house or brings water) is one pana a day and of a superior menial servant 6 panas a day and that the former was to get in addition one pair of garments every six months and every month a drona of corn (which would be equal to 1024 muṣṭis according to the Mīt. on Yaj III. 274). Whatever ages may be assigned to the Arthaśāstra and the present Manusmṛti the two works cannot be separated from each other, if at all, by more than a century or two. Therefore the economic conditions of the one may be held to have not differed much from those to which the other refers. It is impossible to hold that the lowest menial servant got one gold pana a day besides over 30 muṣṭis of corn every day (1024 in a month). If that were so, the lowest menial servants of Kautilya's days would have to be supposed to be a hundred times better off than their confreres in big cities like Bombay towards the end of the 19th century (when menial servants got from five to ten rupees a month without any allowance of grain). Therefore the pana in Kautilya V. 3 is not of gold. Kautilya (in V. 3) says that a king who has a depleted treasury may make payment of salary by giving forest produce, cattle or fields along with small quantities of cash, that if he has undertaken to colonize a waste tract he may make payment of salary in cash only and not by bestowing a village. In connection with this he says that 60 panas are to be the equivalent of one ādhaka of corn (sastivetanasyādhakam kṛtvā hiraṇyānurūpam bhaktam kuryāt) <sup>164</sup> An ādhaka <sup>165</sup> came to only 256 muṣṭis (handfuls) of corn and even in famine times one ādhaka could not have cost 60 silver panas, much less golden ones. In V. 3 Kautilya declares that an ordinary dūta should get ten panas for a journey of one yojana and twice the wages for each yojana up to one hundred. A yojana acc to Kaut. himself (II. 20) is equal to 8000 dhanus (acc to another reading 4000 dhanus), a dhanus being equal to four aratnis (each aratni being 24 angulas). So taking the highest figure a yojana was at the 164 The word hiraṇya has two senses 'gold' and 'money or 'cash' whether it is gold, silver or copper (as said by Amara who gives 'dravina' as a synonym). When Kautilya says that the king may pay 'hiraṇya' and not 'grāma' he means only cash payment and not necessarily only gold. Vide the copperplate grant of Śilāditya VII in Gupta Inscriptions p. 179 at p. 189 where the grant of a village is said to be 'sadbhānyahiraṇyādeyaḥ'. Here dhānya (payment of tax in kind) is contradistinguished from payment in hiraṇya, i. e. in cash (either gold, silver or copper). When Patañjali states that the Mauryas being greedy of 'hiraṇya' founded or manufactured images (Mahābhāṣya vol II p. 429 on Pāṇ V 3 99 quoted in H Dh vol II p. 710 n. 1696) what is meant is that they wanted cash and not merely gold.

165 The measures of capacity such as आढक, मूष occur in the Mathura Ins of Huviska (E I XXI p. 55 at p. 61). According to Parāśara (VI 70) two prasthas are equal to 40 ādhakas and 32 prasthas are equal to a drona. The Mit on Yāj III 275 quotes a verse to this effect 8 muṣṭis = one kāṣṭhi or kuṭi (acc to some), 8 kuṭis = puskala, 4 puskalas = ādhaka; 4 ādhakas = drona and 16 dronas = khārī. Aparārka (pp. 305 and 846) quotes two verses (which the Par. M II 1 p. 141 ascribes to the Bhavishya-purāṇa) which say 2 palas = prasthi, 2 prasthis = kudava, 4 kudavas = prastha, 4 prasthas = ādhaka, 4 ādhakas = drona, 2 dronas = kumbha. The Danda viveka p. 135 refers to this, adds that some held the kumbha to be equal to 20 dronas (Kaut II 20 holds kumbha to be equal to 20 dronas) and quotes the following verse from अष्टाध्याय 'कुडवाया वेद्युगाः स्यादष्टौगमानकाः सार्वः । कुम्भो विंशतिवार्या दृष्टो लोके यथाक्रमशः ।' The word drona occurs even in the Rgveda in the sense of a wooden trough used for holding water or soma juice. Vide Rg. VI 2 8, VI 37 2, VI 44 20, IX 28 4 etc. In Rg IV 32 17 the sage prays Indra to grant a hundred khāris of soma. The words ādhaka and drona occur in the ardhareādi group (Pāṇ II. 4 31), Khārī in Pāṇ, V 1. 33 and V. 4 101. The Par. M II 1 141 says on this difference about kumbha 'देशभेदेन ज्ञातव्यस्य व्यवधानीयत्वात्'. Kaut. (II. 19 p. 104) himself tells us that the measure drona was of four varieties, 162½ palas, 175, 187½ or 200 palas according as it was used for measurement in the harem, or for servants or for ordinary dealings or for royal income.

most about 9 or 10 miles (or only  $4\frac{1}{2}$  or five miles according to the other reading). To hold that 10 silver panas were allowed to an ordinary dūta for going even ten miles (which he could cover in half a day or less) would be too much. Hence also the panas in Kaut. V. 3 are only copper ones. When once it is settled that the panas are of copper, it easily follows that the salaries in panas were monthly. Artisans and craftsmen were, acc. to Kaut., to get 120 panas. If this were yearly, they would get only 10 panas a month, while, according to Manu quoted above, even the lowest menial was to get a pana a day. Therefore 120 panas (of copper) were the monthly salary of an artisan. A monthly salary is more natural and practical than a yearly one. Other ancient writers like Śāṅkha-Likhita (in Rājanītiprakāśa p. 252) contemplate a monthly salary for soldiers (viz. two suvarnas a month).<sup>166</sup> From the Nasik Inscription No. 12 (E. I. A few words may be said about words like suvarna, śatamāna, niska &c. The word kṛṣṇala occurs in the Tai S II 3. 2 1. Hiranyakāra (goldsmith) is found in Vāj S 30 17. In Rg I. 126 2 gifts of a hundred niskas and horses are mentioned and in Rg IV 37 4 the Rbhus are addressed as wearing 'good niskas'. In Atharva V. 14 3 'niska' occurs and in the Ait. Br (39 8) damsels who are niskakānthyah (whose necks are adorned with necklaces of niskas) are among the gifts. So 'niska' was probably a gold piece used as a coin or an ornament or a thin plate of gold like a modern phulk, several of which are even now worn by women in the form of a necklace. In Rg II 33 10 Rudra is said to wear 'viśvarūpa-niska' which is probably an allusion to golden pieces stamped with various figures. In Rg VI 47 23 the sage says that he received ten 'hiranyapindas' (golden pieces) from Divodāsa. In Rg VIII. 78 2 a prayer is offered to Indra for the bestowal of golden 'mana', which may be the precursor of 'Śatamāna'. This last occurs in the Tai, S VI. 6 10 2 Pān (V. 1. 27, 29, 30) respectively mentions śatamāna (what is bought for a śatamāna is called śatamāna), kārśāpana, niska and V. I 34 refers to pana, pāda and māsa. Patañjali (Mabābhāṣya vol. III. p. 369 on Pān. VIII 1. 12) gives the instance 'from this kārśāpana give one māsa to each of these two persons who are here'. The sūtra of Pāṇini V. 2. 120 (rūpād-āhataprasāstayor-yap) conveys that

p. 82) we learn that in the early centuries of the Christian era 35 kārsāpanas were equal to one suvarṇa.

Hopkins in 'Position of the ruling caste' J. A. O. S. vol. XIII. pp. 151-162 traces how the influence of the purohita grew. One cannot accept his views about there being three layers in the Mahābhārata and the conclusions from such dealing with the text that he draws, which are rather subjective. Gradually the importance of the purohita waned. As the Śukranītisāra cited above (n 150.) shows, long before that work he came to be omitted by several writers from the council of ministers and was supplanted by the Pandita. The same functions came to be exercised by an officer called dharmādhyaksa or dharmādhikaranika in Bengal and other countries. The Matsyapurāṇa (215.24) states the qualifications of a dharmādhyaksa.<sup>167</sup> Vide E I vol. 14 p. 156 at p. 160 of the Nāihati grant of Ballālasena, where we have both purohita and mahādharmaadhyaksa mentioned among the great functionaries of State and the Benares copper-plate of the Cedi king Karnaḍeḍa in 1042 A. D. in E I vol II p 309 where we have mahādharmaadhi-karanika but no purohita. Besides another officer called sāmvaṭsara (astrologer) gradually took over some of the functions of the purohita. The Visnudharmasūtra III. 75 (rūpā ca sarvaḥ kṛtveṣu sāmvaṭsarūddhinah syāt) requires the king to depend on the sāmvaṭsara in all matters. The Brhat-samhitā (2.9) states that a king without a sāmvaṭsara mistakes his path like a blind man. Kām. 4.33 and Visnudharmottara II. 4. 5-16 recommend reliance on him. Kautilya<sup>167a</sup> IX. 4 was himself against too much reliance on astrology, while Yāj. I 307 holds that the rise and fall of kings depend on the (aspects or influence of) planets.

Pāṇini knew metal pieces that were well beaten and trimmed into good-looking coins. The Vārtika 'Kāṇīyāścopasankhyānam' (on Pāṇini V. 1 33) establishes that lākṣi was used in those days as a medium of purchasing goods. The Kāśikā gives 'rūpyo dīnārah' as an example निषातिकातादनादिना दीनारादिष्ट रूपं यदुत्पद्यते तदाहतमित्युच्यते। आहतं रूपमस्य रूपो दीनारः। रूपं कार्षापणम्। काशिका.

Senāpati: The qualities of a commander-in-chief are stated in several places such as Kauṭilya (II. 33), Ayodhyā 100.30 (= Sabha 5. 46), Śānti 85. 31-32, Matsya 215. 8-10, Agnipurāna 220. 1 ff, Kam. XVIII 27-44, Visnudharmottara II. 24. 4-6, Mānasollāsa II. 2, verses 90-92 p. 37. Acc. to the Agnipurāna 220. 1, Matsya 215. 10 the commander-in-chief must be either a brāhmana or a ksatriya. Śukra (II. 429-430) requires that a ksatriya should be preferred as senāpati, but if a valiant ksatriya be not available a brāhmana may be chosen, but a śūdra should not be chosen. Acc. to the Mānasollāsa he should possess the following qualities: good family, character, courage, proficiency in (several) languages, cleverness in riding horses and elephants and in the science of arms, knowledge of omens and medicine, knowledge of the breeds of horses and of the difference between what is essential and non-essential, liberality, sweet speech, self-control, intelligence, resoluteness. In the Mahābhārata senāpatīs are elected and consecrated (vide Udyoga 151, Drona 5, Karna 10), but this was not so in later times. He is appointed by the king on his own initiative.

Dūta: (Ambassador or messenger). The word and the office of dūta as messenger was known in the most ancient times. In Rg. I. 12.1, 1.161.3, VIII. 44.3 Agni is said to be the dūta and is requested to bring the gods to the sacrifice. There is also attached to the word the meaning of espionage, since Saramā, the bitch of the gods, is represented in Rg. X. 108. 2-4 as sent by Indra to find out the treasures of the Pāpis. The Udyogaparva (37.27, cr. ed. 37.25) specifies the eight qualities of a dūta viz. he must not be stiff-necked, nor timid, nor dilatory, he must be kind and amiable, not liable to be won over by others, free from diseases, endowed with a fine mode of speech.<sup>168</sup> Śānti 85.28 refers to seven qualities. Vide Ayodhyā 100.35, Manu VII. 63-64, Matsyapurāna 215. 12-13 for the qualities of a dūta. The dūta should speak only what he has been ordered (by his king) to speak, otherwise he would be liable to be killed (Udyogaparva 72.7, cr. ed. 70.7). Śānti 85. 26-27 say that the person of the dūta is sacred. Kauṭilya devotes one chapter (I. 16) to the treatment of the subject of dūta. He states that the dūta is to be sent by the king after the line of policy has been settled at a council of ministers to the king who is to be attacked (vide Kām. XII. 1 also). A dūta is of three kinds: (1) nirastārtha<sup>169</sup> (one to whom is entrusted full discretion as to what is to be said) is one who is possessed of the qualifications required in a minister (amātya), such as Kṛṣṇa from the Pāṇḍavas or the ambassadors in modern times; (2) parmitārtha (entrusted with a definite mission, an envoy) who possesses the same qualifications as the first less by one quarter; (3) śāsanahara (a mere carrier of royal writings or missives) who possesses only half the qualifications of the first. The Mit. on Yāj. I 328 lucidly explains the three varieties. Kauṭ. dilates at great length on the qualifications of the dūta, what he has to note while in the enemy country, how he is to behave (such as avoiding women and wine), how he is to gather information through spies; but all this has to be passed over for want of space. Vide Kām XII 2-24 for the same. Kām. (XII. 22-23) briefly sets out the following duties of the dūta; determining those who are inimical to the king to whom he is sent, winning over to his side the friends and relatives of the enemy king, finding out the (number and equipment of) forts, the economic resources and military strength of the enemy king, collection of news as to what the enemy intends to do, bringing over to his side the officers in charge of the districts of enemy country, collecting knowledge about the places of the enemy where battles can be waged by his king or whence he can pass away swiftly. Manu VII. 65 says that it is the dūta who brings about alliance or war. Kauṭ. says that when the ruler to whom the dūta is accredited becomes displeased at the message he brings, the dūta should reply<sup>170</sup> 'All kings, you and others, speak through their dūta. Therefore dūtas have to deliver the message entrusted to them even if weapons are raised (to threaten them); even the lowest caste dūtas (cāṇḍālas) are not to be killed, what need be said about a dūta who is a brāhmana? This (that I utter) is the message of another. It is my duty to say it'. The Rāmāyana (V. 52. 14-15) says that good men do not allow the killing of a dūta, but certain modes of dealing with him (viz lashing him, shaving his head) are allowed in certain cases.

A dūta is to be distinguished from a cara or cāra (spy), as done by Kaut, Kām. XII. 32, Yāj. I. 328. Kām. XII. 32 says that a dūta is an open (prakūṣa) spy, while a cara is a spy who works in secret. In modern times also 'an ambassador is often nothing more than an honourable spy acting under the protection of the law of nations' (Encyclopædia Britannica on 'espionage'). Kaut. devotes four chapters to spies (I. 11-14) and Kām. (XII. 25-49) also deals at great length with them. The Śukranītisāra (I. 334-336) states that the king should learn every day at night from his secret spies the intentions and actions of his subjects and officers, and the opinions of ministers, enemies, soldiers, the members of the assembly, relations and the women in the harem. The cara must, according to Kām. XII. 25, possess ability to infer the inner thoughts (of men), must have a good memory, must be soft in speech, have quick gait, be capable of enduring privations and heavy labour, swift in action, ready-witted. Kaut. (I. 11) says<sup>171</sup> that spies are those who work in the guise of a kūpaṭhika (a hold pupil capable of knowing the minds of others), udāsthita (a sham ascetic, who has fallen from the real duties of asceticism and is endowed with intelligence and pure character), grhapatika (a householder who is a cultivator that has not the means to maintain himself, has intelligence and is of pure character), a vanadehaka (a trader who cannot maintain himself by trade and is possessed of intelligence and pure character), a tāpasa (a spy practising austerities, who has either shaved his head or has matted hair and is desirous to maintain himself), a class-mate or colleague (sātrin), a desperate character (tikṣna), a poisoner and a female mendicant. The first five of these are called by Kautilya five saṁsthās (groups or institutions), which should be honoured by the king with awards of money and marks of respect and through which the king is to test the purity of the character of his servants. Kautilya says that the spy called udāsthita should carry on agriculture, cattle-rearing and trade on land set apart for the purpose, should be supplied with plenty of gold and disciples and should afford to all (sham) ascetics food, clothing and lodging, direct them to detect particular crimes and report. The spy called tāpisa was to stay near the capital, to have many pupils, to pretend to eat once in a month or two only a handful of vegetables or grass and eat secretly his favourite dishes. His disciples were to proclaim that he possessed supernatural powers, he should pretend to make predictions about gain or fires or fear from robbers after ascertaining from his pupils by nods and signs such events. In I 12 Kaut. deals with wandering spies (called sañcara) viz. sattrins (who are orphans that are to be maintained by the State and that are taught palmistry, sorcery, tricks of legerdemain &c), tikṣṇa (desperadoes who, regardless of their lives, may fight elephants for money), rasada (who have no affection even for their relatives, are indolent and cruel), bhikṣukī or parivrāṇikā (a poor brāhmana widow, clever and desirous to earn her livelihood, honoured in the king's harem and visiting the families of mahāmātras or high ministers). These are to spy on the 13 tīrthas (mentioned on p 112 above) in public. For spying on their private character persons pretending to be hump-backed, dwarfs, kirātas (pigmyes), the deaf and dumb, idiots, the blind, and others that are actors, dancers, singers and the like and women are to be employed. This information is to be tested by the persons belonging to the five saṁsthās (mentioned above on p 129), but these are to act without their being known by the wandering spies and vice versa. Then further testing by other spies follows. When the information received from these three sources tallies then it will be held reliable; if the information frequently disagrees, the spies should be secretly punished or discharged. A similar rule about sending several spies on the same mission without their knowing each other is laid down by Viśnudharmotara II. 24. 66-67. Kaut in I 13 deals with espionage on subjects in general (i.e. those in the capital and other parts of the country). Spies are to pretend to take sides, some praising the king as possessed of all good qualities, others qualifying that praise. They were also to report the rumours spreading among the people, to report whether there was discontent and the king was to honour those who were reported to be contented and to bring round the discontented by conciliation, gifts, sowing dissensions among them or by punishing them. In I 14 Kautilya deals with the employment of spies for taking advantage of parties in a foreign State i. e. groups of persons angry with the foreign king or afraid of him or of persons who are ambitious or proud, who are to be won over by appropriate words and stimuli. It will be seen how there was a network of spies of all kinds, so much so that Kām. XII. 28 declares that spies are the king's eyes (cāracaksur mahipatih). The Visnudharmottara II. 24. 63 says the same ('ājānaś-cāracaksusuh ') and also Udyoga 34. 34 'cāraṇaḥ paśyanti rājānaḥ'. In IV. 4-6 Kautilya dilates<sup>172</sup> upon the employment by the samāhartr (Collector) of a host of spies for suppressing those who are thorns (or disturbers of peace), these being employed for detecting judges (dharmastha) and superintendents of various departments that take bribes, counterfeiters of coin, adulterers, thieves and robbers and other criminals. Kautilya relies in extreme cases on spies even in the decision of judicial matters. He says (III. 1 last verse) 'when owing to the depositions of witnesses the plaintiff's case and the defendant's case are both destroyed, when the cause of either of the parties is found through the spies to be false, then the decree shall be passed against that party'.<sup>173</sup> In Dronaparva 75. 4 it is said that Kṛṣṇa had his spies in the army of Duryodhana and vice versa (74. 1). Śānti 69. 8-12 and 140. 39-42 mention the places where spies are to be set<sup>174</sup> up and emphasizes that they should not know each other. One need not feel surprised at the machinery of espionage that Kautilya so elaborately describes. All governments in modern times employ spies, informers and secret agents to keep themselves informed of the activities, views and resources of their opponents. We know also how the Indian Police, in order to catch offenders against the Prevention of Gambling Act or other similar Acts, employ agents with marked coins or notes and draw in their net unsuspecting people.

CHAPTER V

RĀŚTRA (THE TERRITORY OF A STATE)

The word 'rāstra' occurs even in the Rgveda (IV. 42.1, 'mama dvitā rāstram ksatriyasya')—'mine is the kingdom on both sides (or in both spheres)' says king Trasadasyu. In Rg VII 34.11 Varuna is praised as the Lord of rāstras (rājā rāstrānām &c.) In Rg. VII 84.2 and X 109.3 the word rāstra occurs. In a very famous benedictory <sup>175</sup> passage of the Tai. S VII 5.18.1 (= Vāj. S. 22.22) one of the blessings invoked is 'may the king in this kingdom become brave, a skilled archer, and a great warrior'. Vide Tai. Br III 8.13 for explanation of the Tai. S. passage. In the Atharvaveda XII. 1.8 and 10 the earth is called mother and invoked to impart to the rāstra strength and brilliance (or energy). Kām VI 3 says <sup>175a</sup> that since all the elements of the State spring from the territory of the State, the king should raise up his territory with all his efforts. The Agnipurāṇa 239.2 holds that rāstra is the most important of all elements of the State. Manu VII. 69 prescribes that a king should make his home in a country that is not water-logged (i.e. is dry and not moist), <sup>176</sup> is rich in crops, inhabited mostly by Āryas (or well-conducted people), not disturbed (by epidemics &c.), that is charming (owing to trees, flowers and fruits), the chiefs in which have submitted to him and in which livelihood can be had easily. Yāj. I. 321 and Visnudharmasūtra III 4-5 are to the same effect. Kām (IV 50-56) remarks 'the territory of the king depends for its prosperity on the qualities of the soil, the prosperity of the territory tends to the prosperity of the king; therefore a king should choose for the sake of his prosperity land possessing good qualities. That land is preferred for the sake of prosperity that is endowed with various crops and minerals, is full of merchandise, mines and various substances, that is favourable to cattle-rearing, that abounds in water, is inhabited by well-conducted people, is charming, has forests and elephants, has facilities of water and road transport and does not depend upon rain-water only.<sup>177</sup> Land that is full of gravel and stones, full of forests always infested with thieves, that is waterless, full of thorny bushes and snakes is not fit for choosing as a rāṣṭra. A country is to be preferred that yields livelihood easily, is possessed of the qualities of good land (cited above), is full of water, that has hills in it, that consists mostly of sūdras, artisans and merchants, the husbandmen in which undertake great projects, that is loyal (to the king) and averse to the king's enemy, that can put up with troubles and taxes, that is large in extent, full of people from various countries, that follows the right path, that possesses plenty of cattle and wealth, the principal men in which are not foolish nor vicious. These requirements show that the country must be prosperous, well-stocked with the necessities of life and well suited to defence. There is also some difference of opinion among the smṛti writers about the composition of the population. Manu VII. 69 requires that the kingdom should consist mostly of āryas (āryaprāya), while Viṣṇu Dh.S. III. 5 holds that a country should be peopled mostly by vaiśyas and sūdras. In another place (VIII. 22) Manu says that that country in which sūdras abound, which is full of atheists and void of dvijas is overwhelmed by disease and famine and perishes. Similar provisions are found in the Matsyapurāṇa 217. 1-5, Viṣṇudharmottara II. 26. 1-5, Mānasollāsa (II. 3 verses 151-153), Nītivākyaṃṛta (Janapadasamuddeśa p. 191 which defines rāṣṭra, visaya, desa, janapada &c.) The Matsyapurāṇa 217. 5 and Viṣṇudharmottara II. 26.5, (evamrūdham yathālābham rājā usayamārasat) point out that every rāstra cannot be expected to possess all the qualities mentioned by them and that the king must do the best with such qualities as his country possesses Kautilya II 1 advises<sup>178</sup> the king to found a district of villages either on old sites or on new ones by inducing people from other countries to immigrate or by causing thickly populated parts of his own country to send its overflowing population and to see that each village consists of not less than one hundred families nor more than five hundred, is peopled mostly by śūdra cultivators, has an extent of one loka or two and is capable of offering help to its neighbours.

According to Paurāṇic geography there are seven dvīpas, viz Jambū, Plakṣa, Śālmala, Kuśa, Krauñca, Śaka and Puskara (Visnupurāṇa II. 1. 11 ff) and each dvīpa is divided into varsas Jambudvīpa has 9 varsas of which Bharatavarṣa is the first (Visnupurāṇa II. 2. 12 ff) The Mahābhārata speaks of 13 dvīpas (Ādi 75 19, Vanaparva 3 52 and 134 20) and 18 dvīpas also (Droṇa 70. 15). For Bharatavarṣa vide H Dh vol. II. pp 17-18. Manu II 20 looks upon the holy land of Kurukṣetra, of the Matsyas, Pāṇcālas and Śūrasenas as 'the chosen country' the learned brāhmanas in which were to be the leaders and guides of the whole world in appropriate thoughts and actions The Visnu (II 3 2), Brāhma, Mārkaṇḍeya 55 21-22 and other purāṇas proudly assert that Bharatavarṣa is the land of action (karmabhūmi). This is patriotism of a sort but not of the kind we see in western countries Bharatavarṣa itself has comprised numerous countries from the most ancient times The names of countries and the tribes or people inhabiting them were the same (vide Pāṇini IV 1 168,

Dr Prān Nath's interpretation of janapada that it was only 'a part of the kingdom' (p. 47, 'Study in the economic condition of ancient India') cannot be accepted in view of the express words सूतपूर्वमसूतपूर्वं The usage of classical writers and the Purāṇas shows that janapada means simply 'country' and Amara gives it as a synonym of देश and विषय and हरिवंशी explains that जनपदं is called राष्ट्र The Kāvya-mīmāṃsā on which Dr. Prān Nath relies for the number of countries employs the word janapada for the names of the countries in the four quarters of India (not for parts of any kingdom)

IV. 2. 81) In the R̥gveda we come across the tribes of Yadus, Turvaśas, Druhyus, Anus and Pūrus (R̥g. 1. 108. 8, VIII. 10. 5 &c) and the countries of Cedi (VIII 5 39), Kikata (III 53. 4), R̥jika (VIII. 7. 29), Ruśama (V. 30 12), Vetasu (X. 49. 4). In the Atharvaveda V. 22 several peoples or countries are mentioned of which Bahlikas (in vv 5 and 9), Mūjavat (vv 5 and 8), Gandhāri, Aṅga, Magadha (in v. 14) deserve notice. The Ait Br. (38. 3) divides India into five divisions in the east south, west and north (the Uttara Kurus and Uttara Madras) and in the centre (Kuru-Pañcāla and Vasa-Uśinara) India was divided into two parts, Dakṣināpatha (from the Narmadā southwards) and Uttarāpatha at least some centuries before Christ, since the Hāthigumphā Ins. (E. I. vol 20 at p 79) mentions a great many kings of Uttarāpatha and the Mahābhāṣya refers to lakes in Dakṣināpatha.<sup>179</sup> In the Brāhmanas frequent mention is made of the Kuru-Pañcālas (Tai Br. I. 8. 4), Uttarakuru, Uttara-madra, Kuru-Pañcālas, Vasa-Uśinaras (in Ait Br. 38 3), Kuru-Pañcālas, Aṅga-Magadhas, Kāśi-Kosalas, Śāilya-Matsyas, Vasa-Uśinaras in Gopatha II. 10 (ed by Gastra). The Gandhāras occur in Chāndogya Up. (VI 14 1), Videha in Br. Up. III 1. 1, Madras in Br. Up. III 3 1. In the Mahābhārata there are long lists of countries in various connections, which are more than 200 (e g. Sabhā 4 21-32, 20 26-30, Sabhā 25 ff, Sabhā 52. 13-19, 53. 5-9, Virāta 1 12-13, Bhīṣma. 9. 39-69, 50. 47-53, Drona 11. 15-18, 70. 11-13. Āśvamedhika 73-78, 83. 10 ff) The Baudhāyana-gṛhyasūtra I 17 prescribes a maṇḍala for the worship of the Sun and names nine countries in the eight directions and in the centre as representatives. The Pūāna also contain long lists of countries e. g. Matsya 114 34-56, Mārkaṇḍeya 57 32-67 and chap 58, Brāhma 17. 10-15 and 25 25-39. The same country sometimes has two names (e g. Vidarbha and Krathakaisika denote the same country in Raghuvamśa VII 1 and 32). 'Buddhist India' (by Rhys Davids p 23) mentions the sixteen peoples (or countries), lists of which occur in the Aṅguttaranikāya I p. 213, IV. p 252 and in the Dīghanikāya

179. The महाभारत names at least the following countries अजमीर, अङ्ग, अम्बठ, अवन्ति, इक्ष्वाकु, उशीनर, कपिक, कठेर, कलिङ्ग, कश्मीर, काशि, कुन्ति, कुच, कोरल, कोसल, क्षत्रक, गान्धार, चोड, जिह्व, जिगर्ष, दशार्ण, नीचक, नीप, नङ्ग, पञ्चाल, पारस्तार, पुण्ड्र, नगध, नङ्ग, नहिप, मालव, युगन्धर, वङ्ग, विदर्भ, विदेह, वृजि, शिशि, सुह, सौवीर. Some countries like अवन्ति, अदमक, कलिङ्ग, कम्बोज, कुच, कोसल, नगध, नङ्ग, सालव, सौवीर are mentioned even by पाणिनि (in IV 1. 170-176, IV. 2. 108).

II. p. 200 viz. Angas, Magadhas, Kāśis, Kosalas, Vajjis, Mallas, Cetis (Cedis), Vamsas (Vatsa?), Kurus, Pāñcālas, Matsyas, Śūrasenas, Āśmakas, Avantis, Gandhāras, Kambojas Varāhamihira's Brhatsamhitā, Baudhāyana-grhyaśeṣasūtra I 17, Kāmasūtra V 6 33-41, Bārhaspatya Arthasāstra (III 83-117), the Kāvya-mīmāṃsā of Rājasekhara (17th chapter) name numerous countries. This last divides India into five regions and gives the names of about 70 countries in the four directions but none from Central India. The Bhāvaprakāśana (pp. 309-310) gives a list of 64 countries and states, that Dakṣiṇāpāṭha (Deccan) is a fourth of Bharatavarṣa and that in the Tretā and Dvāpara ages people afraid of being overwhelmed by ice came down to the south.<sup>179a</sup> 56 countries are named in some Tantra works (vide 'Indian Culture' vol VIII p. 33). In the lexicon called Vaijayanti of Yādavaprakāśa (11th century A.D.) edited by Dr G. Oppert, over a hundred countries and capitals of some of the countries are named (in the Bhūmikāṇḍa and chapter on deśa thereof).

To constitute a rāṣṭra a territory of some size and a large population are required. There can hardly be a rāṣṭra of a few villages or a few hundred inhabitants. The boundaries of the numerous countries mentioned in the works cited above must have been fluid and must have changed from country to country owing to conquests.

In ancient India the modern sentiment of nationalism had hardly taken root. Writers speak of rājya (State) and of rāṣṭra (territory) as an element of rājya. They had no sense of nationality nor did they seriously work for national unity. The modern idea of a nation is more a question of feeling and sentiment than of objective fact. The State has been at all times a great co-ordinating agency, but as its boundaries were extremely variable in ancient India, the modern sentiment of nationality, of 'my country, right or wrong' hardly ever arose in India (except perhaps for over a century in Mahārāṣṭra in the 17th and 18th centuries and among the Sikhs). In the whole of Hindu India, there was no doubt a certain unity of religion, philosophy, literary forms and conventions of arts and forms of worship, and in reverence for holy places, but this did not make for a deep-seated and effective sentiment of nationhood or national unity.

Most of the ancient sūtrakāras and smrtis try to lay down the limits of the holy land of Āryāvarta and differentiate it from the lands of mlecchas. Vide H. of Dh. vol. II. pp. 11-18. The Visnu (II. 3. 1-2), Mārkaṇḍeya (55. 21) and other purāṇas wax eloquent over the importance of Bharatavarṣa and describe it as the land of action for those who want to secure heaven or final release or as the land where alone sin and religious merit were to be found (karmabhūmī-īyam svargam-apavargam ca gacchātām or tal-karmabhūmī-nānyatra sampñāptih puṇyapūpayoh in Mārkaṇḍeya) Manu (II. 20) manifests great pride in and love for the holy countries of Brahmāvarta, Kuruksetra, Matsya, Pañcāla and Śūrasena by glorifying the brāhmanas of these countries as those 'from whom all men on this broad earth should learn the actions and usages appropriate to them'. Vas. I. 10 also says the same. Śāṅkhya-Likhita (q. by Viśvarūpa on Yāj. I. 2) hold that the country of Āryāvarta is endowed with high qualities, is ancient and holy (deśa Āryo guṇavān ..... sanātanaḥ puṇyāḥ). As however the smrtis were composed at different times, embodied the usages of different provinces in India and as they provided for the observances of all those who followed the Veda, they do not generally lay emphasis on localities but rather on what they thought was common to all Āryas in India (yat tu samūnam tad vaksyāmaḥ, as Āśv. gr. says). There was no doubt a great emotional regard for Bharatavarṣa or Āryāvarta as a unity for many centuries among all writers from a religious point of view, though not from a political standpoint. Therefore one element of modern nationhood viz. being under the same government was wanting. But it must be noted that from very ancient times there was always the aspiration among great kings and the people to bring the whole of Bharatavarṣa "under one umbrella". Even in the West the sentiment of nationality practically arose after the partition of Poland, and as a consequence of the French Revolution and of the Industrial revolution, which led manufacturing countries to search for markets and to exploit backward and less developed peoples. Vide Laski's 'Grammar of Politics' chap VI. Modern nationalism undoubtedly leads to great self-sacrifice and produces certain virtues of high value in the individuals that are fired by that sentiment. But the ideals of the modern nation States are not high, particularly in their treatment of other peoples and in their attitude towards less favoured States. The one aim of the leading politicians of modern nation States and most of the inhabitants of these States seems to be to raise the standard of living of their citizens to a high level and to maintain it at that level even by exploiting and robbing weaker races and lands. This is not the place to discuss these matters further. Whatever the value of nationalism to the individuals fired by it may be, from the point of the welfare of the whole of mankind, modern nation States do not deserve to survive, unless the so-called progressive nation States are prepared to give up their racial pride, their spirit of grabbing and exploitation and to extend a brotherly hand to all struggling States to improve themselves in their own way and attain to higher standards of living without let or hindrance. It cannot be gainsaid that for several centuries in the past and also at the present moment all modern nation States have two moralities, one for their own nation and the other for their dealings with foreign States and races.

Some remarks must now be made about provincial and local administration. Each kingdom comprised deśas (countries) and subdivisions of deśas. The governor of a rāstra was called rāstrapati or rāstriya. Vide p 117 above about Puryagupta having been the rāstriya of Surāstra (Kathiawad) under Candragupta Maurya and Śānti 85. 12 (which describes what the rāstriya is to do).

According to the Amarakosa the words deśa, rāstra, visaya and janapada are synonyms. Epigraphic usage is not uniform about the dimensions of these. Sometimes visaya appears to be a sub-division of deśa (vide the words 'rāstrapati-visayapati-grāmakūta' in I. A. vol. VIII. at p. 20 in the grant of Calukya Tribhuvanamalla in śake 999 and I. A. vol. XII pp 247, 251 in the grant of Rāstrakūta Govinda in śake 855). But in the Hirahadagalli plates (E. I. vol. I p. 5) 'visaya' occurs first and then 'rāstra', so it appears that there 'visaya' is deemed to be larger than rāstra. According to the Sahyādrikhanda (uttarārdha, chap 4) deśa is made up of 100 villages, mandala is made up of 4 deśas, a khandā of 100 mandalas and the earth has nine khandas<sup>180</sup>. From the Cambay plate of śake 852 (930 A. D.), we see that mandala was a sub-division of deśa (E. I. vol. 7 p 26, at p 40). From the Bangarh grant of Mahipāla I (E. I. vol. 14 p. 324) and the Amgachhi plate of Vigrahapāla III we see that mandala was smaller than visaya which again was a subdivision of 'bhukti'. The word 'bhoga' (which is similar in origin to 'bhukti') appears to be applied to a sub-division of visaya (which in its turn is a sub-division of rāstra) in the Bhamdak<sup>181</sup> plate of Kṛṣṇarāja I dated śake 694 (E. I. 14 p. 121, 126) and also in the Jejuri plates of Vinayāditya in 609 śake (E. I. vol. 19 p. 62 at p. 64 where the word 'rāstrapati' does not occur). The Mitākṣarā on Yāj. I. 319 explains that only a king (mahipati) can make a grant of land and not a bhogapati (i. e. the officer over a bhoga). Another ancient word for a division of a country is āhāra which occurs in the Rupnath Rock inscription and Sarnath pillar Edict of Aśoka (Corpus I. I. vol. I pp. 162 and 166), in the Nasik Inscriptions No. 3 and 12 (Govardhanāhāra and Kāpurāhāra, E. I. vol. VIII pp. 65 and 82) and in the Karle Ins. No. 19 (E. I. VII. p. 64) where we have Māmalāhāra, modern Māval (in Poona District). For want of space it is not possible to pursue this subject here. For further information vide Dr. Fleet in J. R. A. S. for 1912 p. 707 and my paper on 'the Ancient Geography of Mahārāstra' (JBBRAS. vol. XXIV for 1914-1917 pp. 648-653). In the epigraphic records particularly of the Deccan and South India we come across names of territorial divisions to which small as well as very large figures (indicating the number of villages they comprised) are affixed: e. g. a group of twelve villages in Aparānta on the sea near Kalvivana (modern Kelyem) is mentioned in the Sanjan plates of Budhavarasa (E. I. 14 p. 144 at p. 150), Nyāyapadra saptadaśa in Bhoja's grant in sanval 1076 (E. I. 18 at p. 322), Kisukād 70 (E. I. 15 p. 73), Belvola 300 (in E. I. 13 at p. 40), Konkana 900 ruled over by the Kadamba king Jayakesi II (E. I. 13 pp. 298, 317), Tardavādi 1000 (E. I. 15 p. 25), Kundi 3000 (E. I. 13 at p. 18), Pratyandaka 4000 (E. I. III p. 306), Karahāta 10000 (E. I. 13 p. 275), Banavāsi 12000 (E. I. 13 p. 179), Nolambavādi 32000 (E. I. 19 p. 187), Kavādīvīpa sapādalakṣa (one and a quarter lakh) in E. I. 13 at p. 299, the country of 7½ lakhs (in the Lakṣmīneshwar Ins. of Vikramāditya VI in E. I. 16 p. 31). Vide Dr. Fleet in J. R. A. S. 1912 pp. 707-710 as to the meaning of these figures.

Kautilya II. 1 says that in the kingdom groups of villages should be set up with a chief town or fort in each, a group of ten villages being called Sangrahana, of two hundred villages being called Khārvatika, of 400 villages being called Drona-mukha, and in the midst of 800 villages<sup>182</sup> there is the Sthāniya-

His great authority, the Jain commentator, says 'ग्रामनिवेसेत्तु इत्यादि । यस्यति श्रद्धयादीन्युत्थानमिति ग्रामः यदि वा ग्रम्यः शास्त्रप्रसिद्धाग्रामादश-कराणामिति ग्रामः'. Dr Prān Nāth's Jain authority is no better than lexicographers and their commentators. क्षीरस्वामी on Amara derives grāma as 'ग्रस्यते भूमिभिर्ग्रामः' i e the word ग्राम is derived from the root ग्रस्. The Jain commentator first derives the word ग्राम from ग्रस् and then from ग्र Dr. Prān Nāth forgets that a fanciful or scholastic derivation is not a definition. The rest of the reasoning on the new meaning of grāma is on a par with this and cannot be examined in detail A commentator expressly states (ibid p 27) that he gives only the vyutpatti (etymology) of grāma, but Dr Prān Nāth pays no heed to this He has not correctly grasped the scholastic discussion in the commentary quoted on p 27. He misunderstands the word 'samagrāmāḥ' in Yāj II 152. The Amarakośa expressly says that 'sama' and 'samāna' are synonyms He is often very dogmatic without looking into all ancient and medieval authorities e g on p 51 he charges Dr. Fleet with misinterpretation of a Jātaka text (addha-tiāni satāni) which Dr Fleet translated as 250, while Dr Prān Nāth is sure that the meaning is '150' He probably never noticed that so far back as the 2nd century B C the Mahābhāṣya had explained the word 'ardhatīya' as Dr Fleet does (अर्धं तृतीयमेवं or अर्धं तृतीयमनयो, vide Kielhorn, vol I p 426 on vārtika 22 on Pān II 2, 24) There is hardly any warrant for Dr Prān Nāth's assertion that each grāma (as interpreted by him) contained only about five families and had only about 15 or 20 acres of cropped area (pp: 39-40). Kaut (note 178) states that a grāma contains from 100 to 500 families If the inscriptions so far published are carefully searched it will be found that grāma ordinarily meant a village in the modern sense and included several hundred acres of land For example, in a grant of Pallava Yuvamahārāja Viṣṇugopavarman (I. A vol V p 50)

Manu VII. 114 similarly observes that in the midst of two, three or five villages the king should place a central post of guards called 'gulma' and another called 'saṅgraha' in the midst of a hundred villages. Manu VII. 115-117, Visnudharmasūtra III. 7-14, Śānti 87 3ff, Agnipurāṇa 223. 1-4, Visnudharmot-tara II. 61. 1-6, Mānasollāsa II. 2. 159-162 (p. 43) require the king to appoint a hierarchy of officers for one village, for groups of ten, twenty, hundred and thousand villages, who are to report what is wrong within their jurisdictions that they cannot themselves remedy to the officer next in grade above themselves and Manu VII. 120 prescribes that a minister of the king should supervise the doings and conflicts of all these officers. The Edicts of Aśoka show that he had to employ a hierarchy of officers such as the mahāmātras, the yuktas and rājukas for the administration of his vast empire. A similar administrative system seems to have been continued under the Gupta Emperors. From the Damodarpur, Baigram and other plates (E I XV. p 113, E I XVII. pp 345ff, E I XXI. p 78) it appears that the Provincial Governors were appointed by the Gupta Emperor himself and were called uparika mahārāja, that either the Governors or Emperors appointed District officers (visayapati) who were often called Kumārāmātya, that the District officers were aided in their administrative work by a board of four advisers called nagara-śreṣṭhin (banker), sārthavāha (chief merchant), prathamakulika (chief of craft guilds) and prathamakāyastha (chief secretary), that the District officer had his very detailed and accurate boundaries of a village of 200 nivartanas are given. A nivartana was equal to a square of twenty vamsas on each side, each vamsa being equal to ten cubits, so that a nivartana covered an area of 40000 cubits (200×200) i. e. about 90000 square feet, while an acre is equal to 43560 square feet. Therefore the village referred to in the above grant was over 400 acres in extent. The Mahābhāṣya (on vārtika 8 on Pāṇ I 1 7) has an interesting discussion on the several meanings of the word grāma in popular language viz a number of houses (as in 'the grāma was burnt'), the village wall or ditch (as in 'he entered the grāma'), 'men' (as in 'the grāma had gone'), a village with its forests and bushes, with its boundaries (such as rivers and hills) and with embanked fields (as in 'a grāma was acquired'). 'ग्रामशब्दोपे बह्वर्थः । अस्त्येव शालासखुदाये वर्तते ... अस्ति सारण्यके ससीमके सस्थण्डिलके वर्तते । तस्यथा ग्रामो लब्ध इति । As in modern times villages are found named after trees the same was the case in the days of Pāṇ. and Patañjali क्षिरीषाणामदूरमयो ग्रामः क्षिरीषाः तस्य ग्रामस्य वनं क्षिरीषवनम् । महाभाष्ये on पा. headquarters in a place called adhithāna and had his several offices or courts (adhikaranas), and that in sales of lands revenue officers called puslapūlas (keepers of records of rights) were consulted and had to report. In E. I. vol. XVII pp 345, 348 a copperplate of Kumāragupta I has 'grāmāsta-kulādhikaranam' which means an office having jurisdiction over 8 villages. Manu VII. 119 says that the officer over 10 villages was to have as his salary a kula of land and kula is here said to mean (by Kullūka) as much land as is ploughed by two ploughs having six oxen yoked to each. The Varjayanti on Visnu Dh. S. III. 15 says 'kulam haladvaya-karsaniyā bhūh'. Śukra (I. 191-192) states that the lord of one hundred grāmas is called sāmanta, an officer appointed by a king over one hundred villages is called anusāmanta, one over ten villages is called nāyaka (compare modern 'naik') Manu VII. 61 and 81, Yāj. I. 322, Kām. V. 75, Visnudharmasūtra III 16-21, Visnudharmottara II 24 48-49 say that the king should appoint as many adhyakṣas (superintendents) as are required for the several departments of the state, who are clever, honest and of good family. Kautilya<sup>183</sup> II-9 prescribes 'those who are possessed of the qualifications for amātyas (cited on p. 107 above) should be appointed, according to their abilities, as superintendents of the various departments and the king should constantly examine their work, since men are naturally fickle-minded and when appointed to do work exhibit like horses change of temper'. It is pointed out in works like the Visnudharmasūtra III 16-21 and the Visnudharmottara II 24. 48-49, Śānti 69. 29, that those who are highly devoted to dharma should be appointed to the ecclesiastical or judicial department, the brave ones to military work, those who are skilled to revenue work and those who are very trustworthy should be placed in charge of mines, salts, toll-gates, ferries, elephant forests.

Kautilya in his 2nd adhikarana exhaustively deals with the work done in 28 departments and the duties of their superintendents. He enters into very minute details about each and his work is encyclopaedic in character on this subject

183. अमात्यसम्पदोपेतः सर्वाङ्गक्षः शक्तिः कर्मसु निषोभ्य । कर्मसु चेत् नित्यं परीक्षां कारयेच्चित्तानिदयत्नान्मुखाणां । अश्वसधर्माणो हि मनुष्या नियुक्ताः कर्मसु विकृतिः । कौटिल्य II. 9, धर्मिष्ठान् धर्मकार्येषु दूरान् संयासकर्मणि । निष्णानार्थकृत्येषु सर्वत्र च तथा शुचीन् ॥ विष्णुधर्मोत्तर II. 24, 48 Vide a similar verse quoted by the mita on ya I. 322

Kautilya's work became the authority on Government and several inscriptions mention officers appointed according to the section on 'adhyaksapracāra', which is undoubtedly a reference to Kautilya's 2nd adhikarana. For example, in the Belava plate of Bhojavarmadeva (E. I. vol. XII. at p. 40) and in the Barrackpur grant of Vijayasena (E. I. vol. XV. p. 283) we have the words 'anyāṁśca sakalā-rājapādopajīvinodhyaksapracāroktān ihākirtitān cattabhata-jātiyānjanapadān ksetrakarāṁśca'. It is not possible to do anything more than indicate very briefly the sphere of each adhyaksa. The duty of the sannidhātṛ (II 5) is to look after the construction of the treasury house, the store-houses for merchandise, for grain, for forest produce, for arms and of the jail. The samāhartṛ (the Collector-General) is to exercise superintendence over the collection of revenue from forts, the rural parts, mines, embankments, forests, herds of cattle and roads for traffic (II. 6). The samāhartṛ<sup>184</sup> has to divide (II 35) the kingdom into four districts and to arrange the villages into three grades, viz. those that are exempted from taxes, those that supply soldiers and those that pay taxes in the form of grain, cattle, money, forest produce, free labour and other equivalents for taxes. It is the duty of the gopa to look after a group of five or ten villages under the orders of the samāhartṛ. The gopa has not only to register the total number of the inhabitants of all varṇas in the houses that pay taxes and that are exempt in the villages, but also to keep a register of the number of cultivators, cowherds, merchants, artisans, labourers, slaves, biped and quadruped animals, of the amount of money, free labour, tolls and fines that are recovered, and the number of women, men, young and old persons, and the extent of their actions, occupations, usages, expenditures. The sthānika (in charge of each of the four districts) should look after his charge in the same way. The superintendent of records and accounts (aksapatalādhyaksa) should have the account office constructed with its door facing the north or the east, with rooms

184. Both the samāhartṛ and the sannidhātṛ are mentioned as officers in the copperplate of Mahābhavagupta of Trikalīnga (E. I. vol. VIII. p. 138 at p. 141 and E. I. vol. XI. at p. 94). Sabara in his bhāṣya on Jaimini XII. 1. 28 refers to the samāhartṛ coming with his own phalanx of subordinates 'यथा सेनापतिर्दृष्ट्यन्तेन सहायतः सनाहर्ता निजेन बलेन राजा ह सर्वे बलैस्तेश्चाप्यैश्वर्य'. From Hsien Tsang's account of his travels (Beal's 'Buddhist Records' vol. I. p. 78) we learn that each province kept a record of good and bad events.

(for the clerks) set apart and with shelves of account books well-arranged (II 7) This officer had to enter numerous matters in the accounts, recover the king's dues from the sureties of servants, to check embezzlement and to recover fines for loss due to neglect or fraud. The account year ended with the full moon of Āṣāḍha, the year being of 354 days and the salary for an intercalary month being separately paid. Among the duties of the Superintendent of records and accounts was the important one of noting in his register the dharma, method of judicial procedure and the usages of countries, villages, castes, families and corporations (deśagrāmajāti-kulasanghātānām dharmavyavahāra-caritra-samsthānam .. nibandha-pustakasthām kārayet) In II 8 Kautilya specifies forty modes of embezzlement by Government servants (to which a reference is made in the Daśakumāracarita VIII) In II 9 he employs the picturesque figure that it is not possible to know exactly how officers appointed to the several businesses of the State extract wealth, just as fish always dwelling in water cannot be observed when they drink water The superintendent of treasury (II 11) shall in the presence of qualified persons receive into the treasury gems, pearls, articles of great or small value and forest produce (like sandal wood, agaru etc) The superintendent of mines and of government manufactories (II 12) must be proficient in the science of metals, mercury, liquids that ooze from the holes, caves and sides of mountains and hills Under him are officers called lohādhyakṣa (who carries on the manufacture of vessels of copper and other metals), a lakṣanādhyakṣa (a superintendent of mint, who manufactures silver and copper coins for the State), a rupadanṣaka<sup>184a</sup> (examiner of coins, who regulates the dealings with panas as a medium of exchange among the people and for stocking in the treasury), klāṇyādhyakṣa (who attends to conches, diamonds, pearls, coral and trade in them), a lavanādhyakṣa (superintendent of salt) The suvarṇādhyakṣa (the superintendent of gold) has to construct a goldsmith's office for the manufacture of gold and silver articles with a single door and four halls, to appoint a skilful and trustworthy goldsmith to have a shop in the centre of the road (II. 13) and not to allow any one who is not an employee to enter the goldsmith's shop. If any one so entered he was to be beheaded. The State goldsmith (II. 14) has to manufacture gold and silver coins for the citizens and rural inhabitants through artisans employed by him. The superintendent of the storehouse (II. 15) has to keep together the produce of crown lands, taxes from the country districts, accidental revenue, manufacture of rice, oil &c. The superintendent of commerce (panyādhyaksa, II. 16) should keep himself acquainted with the demand or absence of demand for and the rise and fall in the prices of various kinds of merchandise produced on land or from water and brought by land or water routes. The superintendent of forest produce (kūpyādhyaksa, II. 17) was to collect forest produce through guards of forest and Kautilya gives a long list of trees, varieties of bamboos, creepers, fibrous plants and rope-making material, drugs and poisons, skins of various animals, that came under this officer's care. The superintendent of armoury (āyudhāgārādhyaksa, II. 18) was to employ experienced artisans to manufacture arms, wheels, machines, armour &c. required in battle or for the defence of forts, or for battering the cities of the enemy. The superintendent of weights and measures<sup>185</sup> was to get manufactured weights from half māṣaka

185. The weights specified are 10 seeds of māsa or 5 guñjās = 1 suvarṇa-māsaka, 16 suvarṇa-māsakas = one suvarṇa or karsa, 4 karsas = one pala, 88 white mustard seeds = one rūpyamāsaka, 16 rūpyamāsakas or 20 śaṭbya seeds = one dharana. The Kāśikā on Pāṇ II 4 21 furnishes the interesting item of information that weights and measures (probably in vogue in its day) were first introduced by the Nandas (nandopakramāni mānāni). The chief measures of distance given in II 20 are 8 atoms = one particle of dust thrown up by a chariot wheel, 8 particles = līksā, 8 līksās = a medium-sized yūkā (louse), 8 yūkās = yava (barley corn) of medium size, 8 yavas = one angula, 12 angulas = vitasti, 2 vitastis = aratni or one prājāpatya hand, 2 vitastis plus 4 angulas (called dhanurgraha) = one hasta used in measuring pastures and cubic measures, 4 aratnis = danda or dhanus or nālikā-paurusa, 10 dandas = rajju, 3 rajjus = nivartana, 1000 dhanus (or 2000 acc. to another reading) = goruta, 4 gorutas = one yojana. A nivartana was probably so called because it represented a day's ploughing by a team of eight or six oxen (from the root vrt with m), meaning the area from which they stopped after a day's work. Vide H. of Dh. vol. II p. 859 note 2021 for nivartana and gocarma. The extent of the nivartana differed acc. to different authorities. The Matsya said it was 30 dandas square, each danda being of the length of seven hastas, while Śālitāpa held the danda to be of 10 hastas. The Līlāvati (I 7) held that a nivartana was 20 vamaś square, each vamaś being of 10 hastas. According to the lexicon Vajayanti, in Kosala the yojana was of four gavyūtis, while onwards up to one hundred suvarnas, weights being made of iron or stones found in the Magadha country and the Mekala mountain. The superintendent of tolls (śulkaādhyakṣa, II 21) was to erect near the principal gate of the capital a toll-house and its flag and when traders arrived with merchandise make four or five toll-collectors take down their names, whence they came, what merchandise they brought and whether it bore seal-mark. In II. 22 Kautilya specifies various rates of tolls for imports and exports. The superintendent of weaving (II. 23) was to employ qualified persons to make threads, coats (of armour), cloths and ropes and he was to employ for cutting wool, fibres, cotton, hemp and flax, widows, cripple women, girls, ascetic women paying off fines by doing work, mothers of prostitutes, old women servants of the palace, devadāsīs (temple girls) who have ceased to do temple services. This superintendent was charged with the task of providing work for women who do not leave their homes, the wives of persons who have gone abroad, women who are cripple or unmarried and who have to work for their own maintenance. He was to give to them spinning work through the maid-servants in his department. If he stared at their faces when they came to exchange their work for wages or spoke to them on any other matter he was fined in the first amercement. Thus the State helped home or cottage industry. It is to be noted that he had large powers of levying fines and in Magadha it was only equal to two gavyūtis (last verse of deśādhyāya in bhūmikhaṇḍa). Kaut gives bastas of various lengths for various purposes. Compare Manu VIII 132-134, Viṣṇudharmasūtra IV 1-7, Yāj I 362-363, Nārada parīṣista 57-60, Brhatsambitā, 57 1 ff, Vāyupurāṇa 101 118 for some of these, which differ in some details from Kautilya's statements. Kaut (II 20) states the duration of a nādikā to be the time required for the passage of one ādhaka of water from a pot through an aperture of the same diameter as a wire of 4 angulas in length and made out of four suvarnamāśakas. 2 nādikās are equal to a muhūrta and 15 muhūrtas are equal to a day or a night. In II 19 he gives measures of corn as follows — 4 kudumbas = prastha, 4 prasthas = ādhaka, 4 ādhakas = drona, 16 dronas = khārī, 20 dronas = kumbha. The drona differed for various purposes. Vide above (p 124 note 165) for a quotation from Mit. on Yāj III 274. Hemādri, vratakhanda pp 51-57, gives quotations from various sources for measures of time, corn &c. These measures were different in different countries and at different times. The Līlāvati (of 12th century A.D.) I 7 speaks of the khārī in Magadha being equal to 16 dronas. Vide n 165 above and H. of Dh. vol. II p. 881 n. 2053 and L. D. Barnett's 'Antiquities of India' (pp. 206-210) for tables of weights and measures.

awarding bodily punishments e. g. if a woman refused to work after receiving the wages he could cut off her thumb (? or bind up her thumb with the index finger so as to form a pair of tongs). The superintendent of agriculture (sītādhyakṣa, <sup>186</sup> II. 24) himself knowing or assisted by those who know the science of agriculture and the Āyurveda (the ancient lore) of trees was to collect at the proper times all kinds of corn, flowers, fruits, vegetables, bulbs, hemp and cotton seeds and to employ slaves, labourers and prisoners who worked to pay off fines they could not pay, to sow seeds on crown lands. In this chapter he makes interesting remarks about the extent of rainfall viz. the rainfall in a jāṅgala country (defined above at p. 132) is 16 dronas, in anūpa (very moist) countries 24 dronas, 13½ dronas in the Āśmaka country (modern Khandesh and part of Berar), 23 dronas in the Avanti country (round about modern Ujjain), an immense quantity in the Aparāntas (west coast of India) and the Himālayan regions.

The superintendent of liquor was to carry on the traffic in liquor and ferments in the capital, the other parts of the country and in army camps by employing men familiar with them, he was to impose a fine of 600 panas if any one other than the manufacturers, licensed vendors and vendees sold or purchased liquor, he was not to allow liquor-shops to be opened close to each other, he was to see that liquor was sold in small quantities such as ¼ or ½ of a kuḍumba or a half prastha to persons of known character in order that (lit. for fear) workmen employed should not cause loss through carelessness, that viṣyas might not violate the rules of good conduct and that desperadoes should not commit indiscreet acts. Śukra was even more strict as regards

186 Sītā, according to the Amarakośa, means the 'lines or furrow made by the ploughshare'. Therefore Kautilya appears to employ the word 'sītā' in the sense of 'land that has been cultivated'. Prof V. K. Ramchandra Dikshitar (in 'Hindu Administrative Institutions' p. 369) is not right when he explains सीता लाङ्गलपद्धतिः (of Amara) as 'methods and means connected with the plough'. Paddhati only means the line or furrow made in the field by the ploughshare. Kṣīraswāmī explains as रपति भुवे सीता हललेखा. In II 15 Kautilya himself explains 'sītā' as the collection of grain brought in by the superintendent of agriculture 'सीताध्यक्षोपनीतः सस्यवर्णकः सीता'. The sītādhyakṣa appears to have been concerned with crown lands, while the share of crops leviable on lands of private ownership was called 'bahī'. Both these were the concern of the samāhartṛ as stated in V. 1 (where rāstrā is said to include sītā, bhāga, bahī, kara &c.) When in II 15 sītā and rāstrā are separately mentioned that is on the analogy of the maxim of brāhman-āśramana or of gobalivārda.

wine, as he did not allow any one to drink wine in the day-time (IV. 4. 43). The superintendent of slaughter houses (sūnādhyaksa, II. 26) was entrusted with the power to regulate the killing of animals for meat and was to impose the highest amercement on those who trapped or beat or killed deer, cattle, birds or fish which were declared to be under State protection or that dwelt in protected forests. The superintendent of nautch-girls (ganikādhyaaksa<sup>187</sup>) is dealt with in II. 27. The topic of veśyās has already been treated of in H Dh. vol. II pp 637-639. Kaut. says that a ganikā was to be employed for a salary of one thousand panas, whether she was born in a prostitute's family or not and she was to possess beauty, youth and accomplishments (i.e. the 64 kalās enumerated in Kāmasūtra I. 3. 16). Kaut. prescribes that, if she left the country or died, her daughter or sister took her place and estate or her mother could substitute some other ganikā in her place; when none of these existed the king took her wealth and her son did not inherit her wealth. A ganikā could purchase her freedom by paying to the king 24000 panas as ransom. She was to hold the umbrella, the golden pitcher and the fan for the king when he was seated on the throne or in a chariot or in his palanquin. There were grades among the ganikās as best, middling and inferior and salaries differed by a thousand. The sons of prostitutes were to be the chief actors on the royal stage. It appears from these provisions that the veśyās were more or less slaves. The superintendent of ships (nāvādhyaksa, II. 28) was to look after the passage of ships not only over the seas and at the mouths of rivers, but also over lakes and rivers in the sthāniya (vide above p 140) and other sub-divisions of the kingdom. Kaut. prescribes that villages on the sea-shore and river banks were to pay a fixed tax, fishermen were to render a sixth part of the haul of fish as fees for fishing licenses and merchants were to pay the customary tolls levied in port towns. This superintendent was to request the ships that touched at a harbour on their voyage to a distant port to pay the toll, he was to destroy pirate vessels bound for the country of an enemy as well as those that violated the usages of the port. The superintendent of cattle (II. 29) was entrusted with the rearing, but only one that was honoured for her accomplishments (in 64 kalās) and

preservation and care of cows, bulls, buffaloes and the dairy produce. The superintendent of horses (II. 30) was to record the breed, age, colour, marks, groups and places of origin of horses, which were to be classified as those kept in salehouses for sale, those that were recently purchased, those captured in battles, those that were pledged and those temporarily kept in stables &c. Kaut notes that the breed of horses from Kāmbhoja, Sindhu (modern Sindh), Aratta (western Punjab) and Vanāyu (North-west of India) countries are the best of horses, Bāblika (modern Balkh), Pāpeya, Sauvira (eastern Sindh and western Rajputana) and Taitila breeds are of middle quality and the rest are inferior. The superintendent of elephants (II. 31) had to take steps to guard elephant forests and supervise elephants that were in stables, the catching, training and feeding of them, their accoutrements &c. Kaut devotes one chapter (II. 32) to the training and classification of elephants and medical treatment when they fell ill. The superintendent of chariots and that of infantry (II. 33) have the charge of the chariot department and of the six classes of infantry respectively. The superintendent of passports (mudrādhyaksa) issued passes to inhabitants of the country or foreigners for entering into or going out and the superintendent of pastures (II. 34) was to see the passes and devote himself to the care of pastures. Kautilya provides that a pass (mudrā) was to be given on payment of a māsaka, that one could enter into or go out of a country only when one had a pass, that a person who entered without a pass was to be fined twelve panas and that the superintendent of pastures and his men were to examine whether persons not going by the royal road but through pastures had a pass or not and that the superintendent of pastures and his men were to convey the approach of thieves and enemies by beating drums and blowing conches and were to send messages about the entrance of enemies into pastures by means of domesticated pigeons carrying letters bearing the official stamp or by means of smoke and fire. The nāgaraka (the mayor of the capital or cities or the chief of the police in the capital) was to look to the affairs of the capital (or the big cities). A gopa (under the nāgaraka) was to superintend a group of twenty or forty families in the capital and an officer designated sthānika was to be in charge of each of four wards into which the capital was to be divided. Yāj II. 173 mentions an officer called sthānapāla in connection with the finding of lost goods who appears to be the same as sthānika. The gopa and sthānika had to keep a register of the caste, gotra, name and occupation of the men and women in their districts and also of their income and expenditure. Managers of charitable institutions had to send information to them about the heretics and travellers arriving to reside therein. Numerous rules about reporting and punishments for various defaults and wrongs are laid down, which are passed over. Manu VII 121 and Śānti 87. 10 also provide for the appointment in each city (in the kingdom) of a high officer, who was to superintend all matters affecting the city and who had ample powers of restraint and coercion. Many of the superintendents mentioned by Kautilya occur under the same names in the Kāmasūtra e.g. gavādhyaksa, sūtrādhyaksa, nāgaraka (explained by the com as dandapāsika), panyādhyaksa (in V. 5. 7-10). Vide E I vol. 15 pp. 127-128 for a statement on the provincial administration under the Guptas.

As regards the emoluments of the officers in charge of a village, ten villages &c. Manu (VII 118-119) has some interesting rules: 'The headman of a village should obtain (as his emoluments) those articles which the villagers have to furnish every day to the king viz. food, drink, fuel and the like. The officer over ten villages should enjoy one kula<sup>188</sup>, that over twenty villages should enjoy five kulas, the superintendent of a hundred villages should receive the revenue of one village and the high officer over a thousand villages should enjoy (the revenue of) a town. All this, as Medhātithi says, is only approximate and recommendatory and was not literally followed, but only means that a salary commensurate with the position and responsibilities of each officer should be received by him. Vide Śānti 87. 6-8 for rules similar to Manu's (where the officer over a thousand villages gets as his salary the revenues of a śākhānagara). Kautilya (in V. 3) sets out the salaries of many officers and servants as follows: the salary paid to the chief mantrin, purohita and a few others has been already stated above (p. 120); the dauvārika, the superintendent of the harem (antarvaṁśika), the praśāstr, the samāhartr and the sannidhātṛ were to receive 24000 panas; the princes (other than the crown prince), the nurse (mātr, mother?) of the princes, nāyaka, the superintendent in charge of justice (or commercial transactions?) in the capital (the pauraavyāvahārika), the superintendent of royal manufactories (karmāntika), the members of the council of ministers, the rāstrapāla (governor of a province), antapāla (the guardian of the borders) were to receive 12000 panas; the salary of the heads of śrenis (the military corporations?), the heads of the elephant army, cavalry, and chariot army, and the pradestrs was 8000 panas; the superintendents (below the commanders) of infantry, cavalry, chariots and elephants, of the forest produce and elephant forests will each receive 4000; the chariot driver (anika), the army physician, the trainer of horses, carpenters, yompoṣaka (?) will receive 2000; the foreteller (the reader of omens), astrologer (who finds auspicious times for undertakings), the reader of purānas, the sūta, māgadha (bard), the assistants (puruṣa) of the purohita and adhyaksas will receive 1000; trained foot-soldiers, the accountants and scribes will receive 500; musicians 250, but trumpet-blowers will receive 500; artisans (kāru) and craftsmen (śilpin) 120; servants in charge of bipeds and quadrupeds, workers doing miscellaneous things, attendants near the king, bodyguard and the officer procuring free labour (visti) will receive 60; those appointed to do piece work (kāryayukta, v. 1 āryayukta), the elephant driver, boys (mānavaka, a page?), mountain-diggers, all attendants, teachers and learned men shall receive honorarium (pūjāvetana) according to their merit from 500 to 1000; charioteer of the king 1000; spies of the five sorts (vide above p. 129) will receive 1000; the village servants (like washer-man), the spies of the type of sattrin, desperado, poisoner and ascetic women will receive 500; the wandering spies (vide above p. 130) three hundred or more according to the labour involved. The superintendents in charge of a group of hundred or a thousand (servants) were to regulate the subsistence (bhakta), cash salary, the perquisites, the appointment and transfer of those under them. But there shall be no transfer of those who are the king's personal servants and of those who are appointed to guard forts and the country parts. The Sukranītisāra (I. 211) emphasizes that salaries should be in panas, that a king should not make a gift even of a finger-breadth of land as emolument to any servant, but that if he does give land, it should be held only for the life-time of the officer<sup>189</sup>. Kautilya (in II. 1) prescribes that lands may be granted as emoluments to superintendents (of the various departments), the accountants, to officers called gopa and sthānika, to officers in the army, physicians, horse-trainers, but without power to sell or mortgage Śukra II. 117-204 mentions numerous officers of the army, the treasury &c. Śukra IV. 7. 24-27 sets out the salaries of officers, when the king's income is one lakh of mudrās a year. Kaut provides for pensions and gratuities. He says 'the sons and wives of those that die while on duty shall get subsistence and wages. Young children, aged persons and ailing persons related to the (dying) officers shall be shown favour On occasions of funerals, sickness or childbirth the king shall bestow money and honours on them' The Mahābhārata (Sabhā 5. 54) prescribes<sup>190</sup> that it is the duty of the king to support the wives of those that meet death or calamities in the king's service Śukra II 406-411 contains very modern-looking rules about sick-leave, casual leave, pension after 40 years of service &c

188. The word 'pratyaham' (every day) excludes taxes on fields that are levied once a year or taxes levied on particular occasions only; while the words 'food, drink and fuel' exclude cattle, money &c. The word 'kula' appears to be used as a technical term. It may mean as much land as would be required for the maintenance of a family. But there is another sense given by the commentators of Manu. Sarvajña-Nārāyaṇa quotes a text that kula means 'two halas'. He and Kullūka quote Hārīta to the effect that a plough (yoked acc to dharma) is one of eight bullocks, one of six bullocks is employed by those who want only bare maintenance, householders employ one of four bullocks, while those who in their greed want to incur heavy sin employ a plough with two bulls only. So by kula is meant as much land as can be ploughed with two ploughs to which either 8, 6 or 4 bullocks are yoked. That 6 or 8 or 12 oxen were yoked to the plough is stated in Atharva VI. 91.1 and Tai. S.V. 2. 5 2. हलं तु द्विगुणं कुलमिति वचनाद् द्वाग्रां हलान् वा कृष्यते भूतानां युक्तिरित्यर्थः। हलमानं च-अद्यावत् धर्महलं यद्गवं जीवितार्थिनाम्। चतुर्गवं शुद्धेयानां द्विगवं ब्रह्मपातिनामिति हारीतेकम्। धर्महलं प्राणं शुद्धहलं वा। सर्वज्ञनारायण on मनु VII 119.

The above provisions from Kautilya's work show how States in ancient India engaged in almost all the activities of modern States, had an equally complicated machinery of administration and an army of high and low officers. It will also be noticed how, as in India at present, comparatively very high salaries were paid to ministers and heads of departments as compared with the salaries of clerks (e g the ordinary clerks received five hundred, while the chief minister and samāhartr, the

If all the different officers mentioned in the works on dharmaśāstra, arthaśāstra and in inscriptions be collected together, they will make a formidably long list. A list from one inscription is set out below as a sample.<sup>191</sup> Vide Vogel's 'Inscriptions from Chamba' pp 120-136 for explanations of about 30 titles of officers occurring in the inscriptions.

A few words must be said about local administration. The word grāma occurs even in the Rgveda. In Rg I. 114. 1 the poet offers his praise and prayer to Rudra so that he hopes that 'all bipeds and quadrupeds may fare well and all beings in this village may be free from disease and may enjoy prosperity'.<sup>192</sup> In Rg. V. 54.8 'heroes (or men) conquering grāmas' are mentioned (grāmajito yathā narah). In Rg. X. 62. 11 Manu is styled 'grāmanī' and the bestower of a thousand (cows?) and in Rg. X. 107. 5 it is said that the 'grāmanī who is endowed with (or dispenses) dakṣiṇā (cows or wealth) walks in front (of the village people)'. In the Tai. S. II. 5.4.4 it is said 'the prosperous are three indeed, viz the learned brāhmaṇa, the village headman (grāmanī) and the rājanya (warrior)'.<sup>192a</sup> In the Tai. Br. I. 1.4.8, the consecration of fire for a vaiśya sacrificer is made with the mantra 'manostvā grāmanyō vratapate vratenādadhāmi' (where Manu is styled grāmanī). In the Śat. Br. V. 4. 4. 19 the grāmanī is said to be stronger than his co-sharer (sajāta). Vide S. B. E. vol. 41 p. 111. We saw above

I.* vol. 14 p. 156 at p. 160 we have one of the longest lists of high and low officers, 'परमेश्वर-परममहारक-महाराजाधिराज-श्रीमद्वृहत्पालसेनदेवः कुशली सख्य-गतसेनराज-राजस्यक-राज्ञी-राणक-राजपुत्र-राजामात्य-पुरोहित-महाधर्मोध्यक्ष-महासाम्बि-विग्रहिक-महासेनापति-महासुद्राधिकृत-अन्तरङ्ग-बृहदुपरिक-महाक्षपटलिक-महाप्रतीहार-महामौलिक-महाप्रीतिपति-महागणस्थ-दौःसाधिक-चारीन्द्रराणिक-नौ-चल-हस्त्यश्व-गौ-महि-बाजाविकारिद्यायुवक-गौलिमक-दण्डपाशिक-दण्डनायक-विषयपर्यादीनन्याथ सकलराज-पादोपजीविनोऽध्यक्षप्रचारीवृत्तानिहाकोर्तिवान् चहमहज्जातीयान् जनपदान् श्रेयकराश्च ब्राह्मणान् ब्राह्मणोत्तरान् यथार्थ मानयति बोधयति समादिशति च । The word 'adhyaksapracārōktiān' apparently refers as said above (p. 143) to the section II on the activities of adhyaksas in Kautilya. (p 111) that among the ratnins, grāmanī (the village headman) was one Grāma did not necessarily mean a village but may have been applied to a town (though not a capital). The headman of a village was called grāmanī, grāmika or grāmādhīpati (in Manu VII. 115-116, Kaut III. 10), grāmakūta (in inscriptions e. g. E I vol VII p 39 of śaka 852, E I vol VII p 183, 188) and Pattākila, modern Patil (in Ujjain plates of 975 and 1023 A. D. in I. A. vol. 6 p. 51, 53, vol 18 p 322 grant of Bhoja in samāt 1076, I. A. 16 p 254, E I. vol. XI p 304, 310 of samāt 1176) In an inscription of the 13th century from the Poona District we have the form 'pattela' (E I vol VII at p 183) The word 'gāvunda' for a village headman in the Canarese Districts is derived from grāmakūta (E. I. vol. VII p 183) Paithīnasi<sup>193</sup> quoted by Aparārka p. 239 states that the food of a grāmakūta could not be partaken by a brāhmana. The Gāthāsaptasatī frequently refers to the great influence of the grāmanī and the love adventures of his son in the village (I. 30-31, VII. 24). The Kāmasūtra states (V. 5.5) that the young son of a grāmādhīpati had certain women of the village at his beck and call<sup>194</sup> According to the Śukranītiśāra I. 193 a grāma (village) is one krośa in extent and yields a revenue of one thousand silver karsas, while half a village is called pallī and half of pallī was kumbha. Hemādri in Dānakhaṇḍa (p 288) quotes from the Mārkaṇḍeya-purāṇa definitions of pura, kheta, kharvata and grāma Yāj II. 167 makes a distinction between grāma, kharvata and nagara (town) as regards the extent of the pasture lands to be preserved round them. Baudhāyana Dh S II 3. 58 and 60 condemns residence in a city for a religious brāhmana where the body is covered with dust which enters one's mouth and eyes and recommends for residence a grāma abounding in water, fuel, fodder, fuel-sticks, kuśa grass, flowers, which is full of well-to-do people, endowed with industrious people, where the majority are āryas and which cannot be entered by robbers In the Sābhāparva 5.84 five officers of a village are referred to It appears that from being a very high officer (a ratnīn) in Vedic times the grāmanī was reduced in his influence, came to be appointed by the king alone and the office became hereditary and could be given permanently Vide

E.I. vol. VII p. 177, 188, 189<sup>195</sup>. The Śukranītisāra (II 120-21) states that there were to be six officers in a village and (II. 428-29) prescribes their caste, viz. sāhasādhipatī (i.e. a magistrate to deal with wrongs involving force) was to be a ksatriya, grāmanetr (the headman) a brāhmana, bhāgahāra (the person collecting the state land revenue) a ksatriya, lekhaka (a scribe, corresponding to the modern kulharnī in the Deccan) should be a kāyastha, śulka-grāha (the toll-gate keeper) a vaiśya, pratihāra (the guard at the gate of the village wall) a śūdra. Śukra (in II. 170-175) sets out their duties. The headman was to be alert in protecting the villagers like their parents from thieves, robbers and from the State officers, the bhāgahāra was to devote special care to the tending of trees; the lekhaka was to be skilled in accounting and proficient in several spoken languages; the pratihāra was to be of strong body, proficient in arms, humble and to call the villagers with the respect due to each; and the toll-gate keeper was to levy tolls in such a way that sellers did not incur loss of capital spent by them. From Kaut III 10 it appears that the village headman had the authority to inflict fines in certain cases e.g. when the headman (grāmika) had to travel on some business of the whole village the villagers were to accompany him by turns, but if they failed to do so they had to pay a fine of one pana or a half pana. Similarly, if a villager does not co-operate in the getting up of a show (preksā) in the village, he or his people would not be allowed to see the show and he was to be fined if he clandestinely saw it. In villages, particularly in Karnāṭaka and South India and in brahmadeya grants (to learned brāhmanas) the village assemblies (sabhā) carried on local administration. From the Kotavumachgi Inscription of Cālukya Vikramāditya V dated śaka 934 (1012 A. D.) it appears that Ummachige was a great educational centre in the 11th century and 104 Mahājanas of the village were entrusted with the proper conduct of worship in the temple, the imparting of education, the feeding of ascetics, the supply of water to the village and the punishment of criminals (E. I. vol. 20 p. 59). Vide Gopalan's 'History of the Pallavas of Kāñci' pp. 93, 153-157 for the working of the village assemblies (sabhās) from the 9th century onwards, but as he observes (p 154), 'we do not know the nature of the rules that regulated their working, their exact sphere of action and their relation to the central government.' An inscription of king Parāntaka I (907-947 A. D.) at Uttaramerur deals with several classes of village committees that were appointed by vote (Annual Report of Archaeological Survey of India, 1904-5 pp 131 ff) Five committees, viz annual committee, garden committee, tank committee, gold committee (for currency or for collecting taxes in cash), pañcavāra committee, are described and reference is made to a sixth called 'justice committee' and the mode of election and the qualifications and disqualifications of members are described in detail (pp. 142-145). Prof Nilkanth Sastri in 'Studies in Cola History' (pp. 131-175) publishes the text of two Parāntaka Inscriptions with English translation and exhaustive notes. Vide also E. I. vol 22 p 5 for resolutions of the sabhā at Manur to be followed in future meetings, the qualifications in property, education and character of the members &c, E. I. vol. 24 p 28 about the regulations of sabhā from two Uttaramallūr Inscriptions and E. I. vol 23 p 22 for a note on the pañcavāra committee. For village communities as described in Buddhist works in the 7th century B C., vide Rhys Davids in 'Buddhist India' pp. 45-51. It appears from Pāṇini and the commentary Kāśikā thereon that certain craftsmen were attached hereditarily to the village, were probably paid a certain part of the crop produce yearly for their services and corresponded to the modern village servants (called the twelve balutedārs) in the Deccan For an account of these balutedārs, vide Grant Duff's 'History of the Marathas' (Bombay ed of 1863, vol I. pp 23-27) For example, Pāṇini (VI. 2 62) teaches the accent of a compound word formed from 'grāma' with another word denoting 'silpīn' (craftsman), such as grāmanāpita (village barber) or grāmakulāla (village potter), which are two examples given by the Kāśikā on this sūtra. From Pāṇini V 4 95 ('grāmakautābhyām ca takṣaḥ') it may be inferred that a carpenter also was a village servant as in modern times in the Deccan Brhaspati<sup>196</sup> contains very important information about local administration in villages. A compact formed among villages, guilds and corporations (gana) is called a samaya (agreement); such an agreement must be observed in times of distress and for acts of dharma. Two, three or five persons shall be appointed as advisers of groups; their advice shall be followed by the villagers, the guilds, the corporations and others. Examples of agreement as to times of distress are: When there is drought, there may be a compact that for the performance of a sacrifice to the planets or the like each field or house should contribute so much money or when there is trouble from robbers, each house should send one able-bodied and armed man. Then examples are given by Brhaspati himself about acts of dharma. The village people should put down in writing what work they are going to do, such as the repair of a house for their assembly, a shed for distributing water to travellers, a temple, a tank or a garden, the performance of the necessary samskāras (upanayana or funeral rites) of the poor and helpless, gifts for the performance of sacrifices, prevention of famine-stricken groups of families from coming. Such conventions would be proper and should be respected by all the villagers. Whoever being able to carry out such agreements violates them should be punished with loss of all wealth and banishment. Brhaspati further says<sup>197</sup> that the heads of families, guilds and ganas and the inhabitants of towns and forts may pronounce the two punishments of reprimand and condemnation against wrong-doers and may also excommunicate them and the punishments and favours declared by them according to rules should be approved of by the king, since such power is regarded by the sages as delegated to them. For ejecting out of the village one who is not guilty of theft or adultery with another's wife the village headman or the village was liable to pay, according to Kautilya III. 10, a fine of 24 panas. It will be seen from what has preceded that village administration was self-contained and would function whatever Government might happen to be at the centre. The central Government did not very much interfere with local administration, except in the matter of land revenue, protection against invasion and exercised only general control and supervision. The village communities were miniature states.

There are some slight variations.

There was a great deal of decentralization or devolution of authority from the central government to the village committees and authorities. They were also entrusted with civil and criminal justice, as we shall see later on. For further details on the organization of a village as a political unit, Dr R C Majumdar's 'Corporate life in Ancient India' chap II pp 135 ff. and Fick (p. 161) may be consulted. Just as there was some organization in villages in general, so also guilds (śrenis) and groups (ganas) had their own regulations and conventions. In XI 1 Kautilya refers to ksatriya guilds in the countries of Kāmbhoja and Surāstra that maintained themselves on husbandry and followed the profession of arms (vide above p. 88 n. 120). In III. 14 he refers to guilds of workmen or labourers (sangha-bhrtāḥ) Manu (I 118) declares that his work deals not only with the enduring dharmas of countries, castes and families, but also with the dharmas of heretical sects (pāsanda) and of groups (gana). Manu (VIII. 41) requires the righteous king to consider carefully the dharmas of castes, countries, guilds and families (to find out whether they are opposed to the Vedas) and uphold those dharmas (that are not opposed) as binding (on those respective persons) Yāj. II 192 prescribes that the king should respect the usages and conventions of occupational guilds, merchants, heretical sects, and groups (corporations &c) and allow them to pursue the course of action they had followed from ancient times. Nārada (śamayasyānapā-karma, verses 2-6) and Brhaspati quoted in the Vīramitrodaya (vyavahāra) contain very important directions as to what conventions of guilds the king should respect and what he is not bound to respect. Nārada says that the king should enforce the conventions agreed upon by heretic sects, naigamas (merchants), śrenis and other groups residing in the country or the capital. The king may allow them to follow their special rules (e.g. speaking the truth), their special actions (begging in the morning without having taken a bath), their mode of meeting (on hearing a drum being beaten), the means of livelihood they have been used to (e.g. dressing as an ascetic). But the king should prohibit (out of their usages and conventions) such as are opposed to the king's interest, or are disapproved of by the people in general, would be ruinous to the purposes of the king. The king should not tolerate their creating factious groups among themselves, taking up arms for a purpose detrimental to the State, and causing injury to each other. The king should specially curb those who cause dissensions among the several groups; if they are connived at in these activities they might cause terrible danger.<sup>198</sup> A good deal has already been said about guilds and corporations in H. Dh. vol. II. pp. 66-69. Among inscriptions, the following may be studied: the Nasik Ins. No. 15 of the time of Ābhira Īśvarasena (E. I. vol. VIII p. 88, where the śrenis of potters, oil-pressers and water-drawers receive deposits), Junnar Buddhist cave Inscription (A. S. W. I. vol. 4 p. 97, where a deposit of money with śrenis of bamboo-workers and braziers is made), Gupta Inscription No. 16 p. 70 (an endowment was entrusted to the guild of oil-men, whose head was Jivanta), Gupta Inscriptions, No. 18 p. 79 (silk weavers from Lāta coming to Daśapura and building a Sun temple), E. I. vol. 15 p. 263, E. I. vol. 18 p. 326 and p. 30, E. I. 16 p. 332, E. I. vol. I 155 (of 933 śāhvat, inscription at Gopagiri, modern Gwalior, where the guilds of oil-millers and of gardeners are mentioned), I 184 (Pehoa inscription, where a guild of 34 horse-dealers from different countries, some being brāhmanas, agreed to impose upon themselves and their customers tithes to be distributed to certain temples). Rhys Davids in 'Buddhist India' (pp. 90-96) gives a list of the 18 guilds that probably existed in the times of the early Buddhist works (though two or three of them are of doubtful existence) and the number of which (18) is sometimes mentioned in the Jātakas (as in Mūgapakkhajātaka No. 538, vol. VI p. 14 in Cowell's tr.). For further details about the working and organization of guilds, vide chap. I of Dr. R. C. Majumdar's 'Corporate life in ancient India', and 'Indian Culture' vol 6 (for 1940) pp. 421-28 (on the economic guilds of blacksmiths, barbers &c. in the Kusāna period).

In numerous places rules are laid down about the qualifications of the ordinary servants (parivāra, bhṛtya or anujīvin) of kings, how they should conduct themselves, how servants should

'faults arise from those who surround the king and such faults are enough to ruin (the king) Therefore the (king) should first (before engaging his servants) put down in writing whether servants are endowed with learning, character and good family.' Śukra inculcates loyalty on servants in the following remarkable<sup>200</sup> words 'one should not forsake a good master when he is in adversity. Should not one always and quickly desire the welfare of one's protector whose salt (lit food) one has eaten with honour even once' (II 246-247)? This senti-ment pervaded most Hindu servants in ancient and medieval times, even under foreign rulers professing a different religion. The Rājanītiprakāśa p. 176 quotes a fine verse from the Garuda-purāṇa as to matters to be principally considered in selecting servants, which are four, viz. education, character, family and actions, just as gold is tested in four ways, viz. by weighing it or by rubbing it (on a touchstone), by cutting it and by heating it<sup>201</sup>

Some responsibilities of the Government or king in ancient India towards the people will now be dealt with. From Kautilya (II. 29 and II. 34) we find that the State made great efforts for the rearing of cattle, made stringent rules for their protection and for the provision of pastures. Manu VIII. 237, Yāj II. 167, Matsya 227. 24 also make provision for pastures round villages, towns and cities. Kautilya requires the superintendent of cattle to classify cattle as calves, steers, tameables, draught oxen, bulls to be yoked, stud-bulls, bulls meant for carts, cattle meant for meat and buffaloes meant for carrying loads or for being yoked, pregnant cows, milch cattle &c. and to mark them and note in a register of beasts the branded marks, natural marks, colour, the distance between the horns. He prescribes corporal punishments and fine for those who unauthorizedly kill or steal cattle or incite others to do so. He prescribes even the amount of fodder, oil-cakes, bran and salt on which different kinds of animals put to different kinds of work are to be fed. From the Mahābhārata also we learn that even princes<sup>201a</sup> went to supervise and enumerate the herds of cattle belonging to the State. Vide Vanaparva 239. 4 and 240. 4-6. Even such a grammatical work as the Mahābhāṣya incidentally gives expression to the view that a country's wealth consists in its food-crops and in abundance of cattle.

We saw above (pp. 130-131) that spies were to be employed (acc to Kāut.) to test whether State officers took bribes. Yāj. (I 336, 338, 339) prescribes that the king should protect his subjects from the harassment caused by kāyasthas (the accountants and scribes), that he should ascertain the doings of the State officers through spies, honour those that are well-conducted and severely punish those who are badly behaved and should deprive those who take bribes of their wealth and banish them from the country. Vide also Manu VII 122-124 and Visnudharmottara for similar rules. The Pāṇcatantra (I. 343) has the same verse as

Yāj. I. 336 (except the last pāda). Medhātithi on Manu IX, 294 remarks that the kingdom has no fear of ruin if kantakas (wicked people who are like thorns) are removed and justice is properly administered and that kantakas are generally under the protection of the queen, the prince, the king's favourites or the commander-in-chief

Great attention was paid to agriculture In the Sabhāparva 5. 77 the king<sup>202</sup> is advised to have large tanks in different parts of the country full of water and to see that agriculture did not depend on the rains alone Megasthenes (Fragment I p 30 of McCrindle's work) notes that the greater part of the soil of India was in his day under irrigation and consequently bore two crops in the year. Even from the Tai S V 1 7 3 it appears that two crops were grown in the year (tasmād dvih samvatsarasya sasyam pacyate). The Vāj S. 18 12 contains a list of twelve different kinds of crops such as rice, yava, wheat, mūsa, sesame, mudga, masūa &c and the Br Up VI 3 13 enumerates ten kinds of grain (grāmyāni dhānyāni) In the Hathigumphā Inscription of Khāravela king of Kalinga (E I vol 20 p 71) it is stated that (p. 79) a canal which had already been opened in the 103rd year of the Nanda kings (i.e. in the 4th century B. C.) was extended by him in the 5th year of his reign. Rudradāman at great expense from his own treasury without any additional taxation or demand for free labour restored the famous Sudarśana lake near Junāgadh (E. I vol VIII. p. 36) that had been built by the Governors of Candragupta and Aśoka and been breached by floods Irrigation had been made use of from Vedic times Rg VII. 49 2 refers to rivers and springs naturally flowing and to channels that were dug up. South Indian Inscriptions show how the Pallavas and kings of other dynasties built tanks which were named after the kings themselves or after some distinguished chief of the locality and that are in existence even now. Vide S I I vol. II part III, p 351, E. I. vol. IV p 152 (mention of tank called 'parama-svaratātaka'), S I I. vol I p 150, E I vol. VIII p. 145 (for mention of rājatatāka near which four nivartanas were granted by Cārudevi) The great engineer Suyya under Avantivarman of Kashmir (833-858) successfully dammed the river Vitastā with the result that a khārī of rice which could formerly be purchased for 200 dināras could be had after the great irrigation work for 36 dinūras ( vide Rājatarāṅginī V. 84-117 ). Kautilya ( II. 24 ) refers to the various ways in which crops could be raised with water and the revenue to be demanded in each case, e. g. those who watered crops with manual labour had to pay 1/5th of the produce, those who carried water on their shoulders paid 1/4th, those who watered their crops by means of water-lifts or water-wheels from natural springs paid one-third and those who raised water from rivers, lakes, tanks and wells paid 1/4th. He notes that sugarcane crops are a heavy responsibility, as they are liable to many evils and entail great expense. Sugarcane had been grown even in the times of the Atharvaveda ( I. 34. 5 ). The Sūkrantīśāra ( IV. 4. 60 ) remarks that the king should see to it that there is plenty of water in his kingdom by digging wells, wells with steps, tanks, lakes &c. Megasthenes ( fragment XXXIV p. 86 of McCrindle's ' Ancient India ' ) says that some superintend the rivers, measure the land as is done in Egypt and inspect the sluices by which water is let out from the main canals into their branches so that every one may have an equal share of it. Kaut ( IV. 3 ) devotes a special chapter to the king's duty to save the kingdom from national calamities, viz. fires, floods, diseases, famines, rats, wild elephants ( or beasts ), snakes and evil spirits. He gives practical hints for human and religious remedies and rites against these calamities. The measures against famine suggested by him are: the king may provide the people with seeds and food, start works for those who are distressed, distribute either his own collection of provisions or that of the rich or call for help from his allies, tax the rich and make them disgorge their wealth, migrate to other countries that have abundant harvests. National calamities are called it, which are six: excessive rainfall, drought, rats, locusts, parrots and too close presence of foreign kings<sup>203</sup>. The work of Kāmandaka states that calamities are either divine or human and that the first are of five kinds. In another place he gives a longer list of calamities. There are several references in ancient and medieval works to severe famines. In the Chāndogya Upanisad I. 10. 1-3 we have the story of Usasti Cākṛāyana who took from another's plate kulmāsas that the other had been eating (i.e. he took uccḥṛṣṭa food), when the country of Kurus was overwhelmed with a shower of hail (or by locusts). The Bālakāṇḍa (chap. 9) refers to a famine in the country of Anga under Romapāda. The Nirukta II 10 refers to a drought in the dim past for twelve years in the kingdom of Śāntanu. A Mauryan inscription from Mahāsthāna (ancient Pundranagara) shows that Gandaka coins were distributed and also corn to famine-stricken people (J. A. S. B. for 1932 p. 123). The Sohagpur Copperplate Inscription (of Mauryan times) contains an order of the mahāmātras of Śrāvastī that the dravya storehouses were to be spent only in case of drought. Vide Annals of B. O. R. Institute, vol. XI p. 32ff., E. I. vol. 22 p. 1 and J. A. S. B. vol. VII (for 1941) part 2 p. 203. The Rājataranginī records several times the occurrence of famines in Kashmir at different periods (e.g. vide II 17-54, V. 270-278, VII 1219 ff.). The Manimekhalai (chap. 28) speaks of a famine for twelve years at Kāñol in South India. There was a terrible famine (called the famine of Durgādevī) for twelve years in the Deccan about 1396 A. D. (vide Grant Duff's 'History of the Marāṭhas' vol. I. p. 43). Vide E. I. vol. 15 p. 12 for a reference to a severe famine in śaka 1313 when paddy could not be had even at the rate of ten nālis a panam.

It has been shown (in H. Dh. vol. II. pp. 113, 369, 856-858) how it was the king's duty to support learned brāhmanas, to hold assemblies of poets and learned men, to make gifts of land to educational institutions and to promote learning in all ways. Vṛddha-Hārita VII. 229-230 says that only learned brāhmanas who are endowed with tapas are proper objects of the king's bounty. Some emperors like Harsa went far beyond what was reasonable. The Chinese pilgrim tells us (Beal's 'Buddhist Records &c' vol. I pp. 214, 233) that at the end of every five years Harsa held an assembly (pariṣad) at Prayāga and gave away all in charity. The Śukranītisāra (I. 368-369) holds that a king should be on the look-out for educated men, should appoint them to offices suited to their education, should honour every year those who have attained eminence in learning and the arts and take measures for the advancement of learning and arts. It has already been shown how this had been followed by ancient and medieval Indian kings to the letter. A comparison with the British Indian Government in the 18th century and the first decades of the 19th will be highly interesting. After the battle of Plassey in 1757 the British East India Company got three such rich provinces as Bengal, Bihar and Orissa. During over 50 years the only thing that was done by the ruling power for the encouragement of learning among Indians was that in 1780 Warren Hastings started a Madhassa of Muslim religious learning at Calcutta with a moulvi and 40 stipendiaries and Lord Cornwallis founded a Sanskrit college at Benares in 1792. When the East India Company's Charter was renewed in 1813 the only provision that was made for education and encouragement of learning (by George III, 1813 chap 155, clause 43) was 'that it shall and may be lawful for the Governor-General-in-Council to direct that out of any surplus which may remain of the rents, revenues and profits arising from the said territorial acquisitions, after defraying the expenses of the military, civil and commercial establishments and paying the interest of the debt, a sum of not less than one lakh of rupees in each year shall be set apart and applied to the revival and improvement of literature and the encouragement of the learned natives of India and for the introduction and promotion of a knowledge of the sciences among the inhabitants of the British territories in India'. Detailed comment is not called for. More than 50 years after British rule began, when at least half of what is British India now had come into the hands of the British, and when the yearly income must have been many crores of rupees, the sum of a lakh of rupees was to be set apart for education of two kinds (Eastern and Western) in the whole of the then British India. Further this provision was not compulsory but only permissive, and was to be availed of only if some surplus was left after everything else had been provided for.

As in western Jurisprudence, so in India the king was looked upon as parens patriæ, the protector or guardian of all minors. Gaut.<sup>204</sup> X. 48-49 and Manu VIII. 27 prescribe that the king shall protect the property of a minor until he attains majority or until he returns from his teacher's house. Medhātithi on Manu VIII. 27 says that the minor's relatives like the uncles may contend that one of them is the guardian of the minor's property but it is the king who is to see that the minor's property is kept safe. Baud. Dh. S. II. 2 43, Vas. 16. 8-9, Visnu Dh. S. III. 65, Śāṅkha-Likhita contain a similar rule. Nār (rṇādāna 35) declared that a person was a minor till the 16th year. Manu VIII. 28-29, Visnudharmasūtra III. 65 extend the same rule and say that the king must take care of barren women, women who have no sons, women whose families are extinct, wives and widows who are faithful to their husbands and of those who are afflicted with disease. Nār.<sup>205</sup> as quoted by Medhātithi says that if a woman has nobody in her husband's or father's family to protect her, then it is the king who is to protect her. Kaut.<sup>206</sup> (II 1) makes it a duty of the elders of the village to take care of and increase the properties of minors and of temples.

It was the special concern of the king to see that proper weights and measures were used. Kaut (II 19) as stated above (pp 145-146) provides for a special superintendent of weights and measures. Vas.<sup>207</sup> (19 13) and Manu VIII. 403 provide that all weights and measures must be duly marked (or stamped), that once in six months they must be re-examined and that the weights and measures for objects required by the class of householders must be guarded against falsifications. Yāj. II. 240 and Visnudharmasūtra V. 122 prescribe as punishment the highest amercement for those who fabricate false balances, edicts, measures and coins and also for those who use them in their transactions. The Nītivākyaṃrta (p. 98) requires the king to be vigilant as regards merchandise, balances and measures, since there is none who excels traders in stealing people's money before their very eyes.<sup>208</sup> Vide Alberuni (tr. by Sachau) vol I chap XV about weights and measures current in India in the 11th century.

Another important responsibility of the king concerned thefts. Asvapati, king of Kekaya, boasted that in his kingdom there was no thief, no close-fisted person, no drinker of wine, (Chān. Up. V, 11, 5). Āp. Dh. S.<sup>209</sup> (II. 10. 26. 6-8) lays down that the officers should protect a city against theft for one yojana round it and in the case of villages for one krośa round them and that whatever is stolen within those limits must be returned to the owners by the officers. Gautama X. 46-47, Manu VIII. 40, Yāj. II. 36, Visnudharmasūtra III. 66-67, Śānti 75. 10 prescribe that the king should recover from the thief stolen property and restore it to the owner (without distinction of caste), that if he cannot restore it he should compensate the sufferer from his own treasury, and that, if he retained the property recovered from a thief or did not make efforts to catch the thief and compensate the owner, the king incurred sin. Kaut. III. 16 contains a similar rule.<sup>210</sup> Viśvarūpa on Yāj. II. 38 quotes a prose passage<sup>211</sup> of Br. with a similar import. The Visnudharmottara<sup>212</sup> (II. 61. 52) remarks that if a person is robbed by his own servants then he (the king) may endeavour to recover it from the servants (by threatening or beating them), but need not restore it from his own treasury. Yāj. II. 270-272, Nār. (pariśista 16-21) and Kāt.<sup>213</sup> give further directions, viz. the thief should be made to restore the property stolen or its price; if the thief cannot be found the officers and wardens of the country pay the price of the stolen articles; the property stolen in the village should be made good by the headman of the village, if the thief's foot-steps are not traced as going out of the village; if the theft takes place in a pasture land or forest (and the thief is not found), the owner of it should be made to pay; if however the theft is not committed in a forest but on the road then the officers appointed to arrest thieves should be made to pay; the whole village may be made to pay the compensation when the theft is within the boundaries of a village but outside the limit of the residential quarters, if the footsteps of the thief are not traced as going out of the village; if the theft takes place beyond one krosa from a village then the surrounding five or ten villages may be made to pay the compensation Yāj II 271 and Kāt mention an officer called 'cauroddhartā' ('or coroddhartā') The 'cauroddharanika' (thief-catcher) is an officer mentioned in numerous inscriptions e g in the Palitana plates of Dharasena II of Valabhi in Gupta year 252 (E. I. vol. XI at p 83), in the inscription of Nārāyanapāla where we have both cauroddharanika and kottapāla, modern Kotwal (I A. vol XV p 304) and in the grant of Ballālasena quoted above (p. 153, n 191) Kautilya IV 13 also gives similar rules and mentions an officer called 'corarajuka' who has to make good the loss of merchandise by theft between two villages or lands that are not pasture lands.

The first quality required in a king according to Yāj I 309 quoted above (p. 44) is great energy and Kaut also (in VI 1) mentions 'great energy' (mahotsāha) among the qualities called 'ābhigāmika'. Works on dharmaśāstra and arthaśāstra emphasize the fact that a king must always be full of activity and must not be lethargic or fatalistic. In the Mahābhārata the topic of human effort and daiva (fate or destiny) comes up for treatment in numerous places and is put in the mouth of several characters with different emphasis according to circumstances. In Ādi 1 246-247, 89. 7-10, Sabhā 46. 16, 47. 36, 58 14, Vanaparva 179. 27-28, Udyoga 8 52, 40 32, 159 4, 186 18, Āśramavāsika 10. 29 the emphasis is on daiva as all powerful, it being said that human effort is useless as against daiva. A golden mean is advocated in Ādi 123. 21, Sabhā 16 12, Udyoga 79 5-6, Śānti 56. 14-15, Sautika 2. 3, in all of which it is said that worldly affairs require both puruṣakūra (effort) and daiva. In certain other passages it is recommended that effort is superior to daiva and that one's business is to make efforts and not to care for fate; e g. in Drona 152. 27, Śānti 27 32, 58 13-16, 153. 50, Anuśāsana 6 1 ff, Sautika 2 12-13 and 23-24. A few of the striking passages indicative of the three lines of thought are set out in the note below.<sup>214</sup> Energetic action, according to Śānti. 58 13-15, is declared by Brhaspati to be the root of rājadharmā. Nectar was obtained and asuras were killed by the gods by means of energetic action and Indra secured his high position in heaven and here by energetic action. Br. makes the characteristic remark 'A man who is a hero of action leads those who are heroes in speech and the latter are seen to cater for the pleasures of the former and wait humbly on him'. The Bhagavadgītā in its final summing up of the philosophy of Activism without an eye to the fruit of it but from a sense of duty declares (XVIII 13-16) 'that in the Sāṅkhya philosophy five categories are mentioned as conducive to the accomplishment of all actions viz the place, the agent, various kinds of instruments, diverse and separate activities and lastly danā; that whatever action a man commences either with his body, words or mind these five are its causes, whether the action be righteous (nyāya) or the opposite of it, and that this being the true state of things (i. e the fruit depending on the co-operation of five elements and not on one alone) that man who regards himself alone as bringing about a result is a fool and has no correct perception' Kāṭilya also (I. 19 last two verses) says 'activity (utthāna) is the root of wealth and the opposite of it is the root of evil. In the absence of activity the loss of present and future acquisitions is sure; by activity a king can obtain his desired object and plenty of wealth'. Yāj (I. 349 and 351) states that success in undertakings depends upon both fate and human effort, yet fate is nothing but the human effort of past lives manifesting its effect (in this life) and that as on a single wheel a chariot cannot progress, so fate cannot accomplish anything without human effort. Yāj. I. 350 refers to other views viz fate alone leads to success, human effort alone does so, that success results of itself (without any cause), while others say that it is Time that brings about all results. Manu VII 205, Matsya 221. 1-12 (all of which are quoted in the Rājanītiprakāśa pp. 313-314) and Visnudharmottara II. 66 (which has the same verses as in Matsya 221) inculcate the same doctrine as that of Yāj. I 349 and 351 and emphasize that one must always make efforts (tasmāt sadotthānavatā hi bhāvyaṃ-Matsya 221. 12) The Matsyapurāṇa 221. 2 emphatically<sup>215</sup> states that effort is superior. Medhātithi on Manu IV. 137 quotes a subhāsita 'those devoid of effort are engaged in calculating the aspects of planets; there is nothing impossible or accomplishment for those who are determined and who are able to put forth spirited efforts' Kaut. (IX. 4 last two verses), Kām V 11, XIII 3-11 emphasize the importance of strenuous efforts. Śukranītiśāra (I 46-58) holds a long disquisition on effort<sup>216</sup> and daiva. It contains the following fine sentiments (I 48-49) 'Men of intellect whose career is honourable regard human effort as the highest (and not fate), while impotent men not being able to make efforts have recourse to fate; but all is centred in both daiva and effort' Vide Rājanītiprakāśa pp 312-315 and Nītimayūkha pp. 52-53 for further remarks on daiva and effort. In one place the Mahābhārata (Udyoga 127. 19) contains the bravest and loftiest advice 'man should always press forward (make efforts), should never bend; striving is manliness; one may even break at a point which is not the joint, but should- never bend'<sup>216</sup>. The Brhat-Parāśara-smṛti X pp. 282-283 contains a long discourse on daiva and purusa-kāra. Vide Vāyu 9. 60-61 and Mārkaṇḍeya-purāṇa 2. 61-62 and 23. 25-26 for similar passages on daiva and effort.

An important doctrine of the writers on Arthasāstra is more or less based on the necessity of utsāha, viz the doctrine of three śaktis, i.e. of utsāha, prabhu (or prabhāva) and mantra. These three occur in the Mahābhārata (Āśramavāsika 7. 6). The S. V. p. 46 quotes a sūtra of Gautama (not found in the printed Dh. S.) 'the three śaktis, viz. prabhu, mantra and utsāha are based on that (kośa)'.<sup>216</sup> In VI. 2 Kautilya defines mantra-śakti as the power of the knowledge (of statecraft), prabhuśakti as the power of treasury and army and utsāhaśakti as the force of the king's bravery.<sup>217</sup> Kautilya (IX. 1) holds a discussion about the relative superiority of these three and gives it as his opinion (as against that of the ācāryas) that prabhuśakti is superior to utsāhaśakti and that mantraśakti is superior to prabhuśakti. Kām. XV. 32 defines<sup>218</sup> the three thus: 'the employment of the proper line of policy out of the six upāyās (sandhi, vighraha &c) is called mantraśakti; a full treasury and army constitute prabhuśakti and activity of the strong is called utsāhaśakti; the king possessed of all these three becomes the conqueror.' The Nītivākyaṃrta (sādgūnyasamuddesa) p. 322 defines them in the same way.<sup>219</sup> According to the Daśakumāracarita<sup>220</sup> VIII the goal (or purpose) of a king is determined by mantra (consultation with ministers about policy), commencement of actions (for securing the goal) is due to prabhāva and the successful termination of undertakings is brought about by energy. The Parasurāmapratāpa (folio 15a) quotes a verse which defines 'prabhuśakti' differently viz as the power to command. Vide also Agnipurāṇa 241. 1, Mānasollāsa II. 8-10 pp 91-94. Kām. (XIII. 41-58) brings together the numerous activities of the king.

A king endowed with valour has to employ several means (upāyas) to extend his dominions and to keep his hold on his own people. According to the Rāmāyana V. 41. 2-3, Manu VII. 109, Yāj. I. 346, Sukra IV. 1. 27 and others the upāyas are four viz. sāma (conciliation), dāna (giving gifts or presents), bheda (causing dissensions) and danda (punishment or depriving of property or causing bodily harm).<sup>221</sup> In the Hathigumpha Inscription, the king Khāravela (latter half of 2nd century B. C.) states that in the 10th year of his reign he sent, following the policy of danda, sandhi and sāma, an expedition against Bharatvarsha, conquered that land and obtained jewels and precious things (E. I. vol. XX pp. 79, 88). This shows that the theory of the upāyas must have been evolved several centuries before the Christian era. Some others such as Kām XVII 3, Matsya 222. 2, Agnipurāṇa 226 5-6, Bārhaspatyasūtra V 1-3, Viṣṇudharmottara II 146-149 add three more to the above four. Sabhā 5 21 mentions the number seven and Vanaparva 150. 42 mentions sāma, dāna, bheda, danda and upeksā. About the additional three there is some difference of opinion, most holding that the three are māyā, upeksā and indrajāla (Kām., Agnipurāṇa), while the Bārhaspatyasūtra (V 263) says they are māyā, upeksā and vaḍha and others say they are māyā, aksa (dice) and indrajāla (Saravativilāsa p 42). Māyā means 'deceitful trick'. The Viṣṇudharmottara II 148 gives illustrations, such as tying a firebrand to the tail of a bird that often perches on the enemy's camp to produce the delusion that a meteor (an evil omen) fell down from the sky. Kām XVII 54 cites the example of Bhīma's meeting Kicaka dressed as Draupadī. Kām (XVII 51-53) gives other examples of māyā. Upeksā consists in not preventing a person from doing what is unjust or being addicted to some vice or engaging in a fight and is illustrated by king Virāta's connivance at the death of Kicaka (Kām XVII 55-57). Indrajāla means 'creating an illusion by means of incantations and other tricks' e. g. creating the illusion before the eyes of the enemy that a vast army is coming to attack them or showing that angels are descending to fight against them or making a shower of blood fall in the enemy's camp etc (Kām XVII 58-59, Viṣṇudharmottara II. 149). About the four well-known upāyas, Manu (VII 108-109) says that for the prosperity of one's kingdom sāma and danda (punishment) are preferred, but if the king's antagonists do not yield to him by the employment of the first three then he may bring them round by danda (i. e. fighting and harassing them) and that (VII 198, 200) danda is to be employed as the last resort, since victory is not certain. In the Śāntiparva 69. 23 the view of Bṛhaspati is quoted<sup>222</sup> that fighting should always be avoided (as far as possible) and that for securing one's purpose three upāyas (other than fighting) are to be resorted to Brhat-Parāśara X p. 280 also says that a wise man should not resort to fighting and that danda is to be resorted to only when there is no other course left In Udyoga 132. 29-30 (cr. ed. chap. 130) Kuntī sends a message through Kṛṣṇa to her son: 'begging is forbidden to you nor is agriculture appropriate for you; you are a ksatriya living by the power of his arms and a protector against injury (ksatāt trātā). Recover your ancestral share by sāma, dāna, bheda, danda and naya'. In Udyoga 150 (cr. ed 148) Kṛṣṇa informs Yudhiṣṭhira how he first employed sāma, then bheda, then dāna (viz. giving up the whole kingdom for five villages) and how only danda is the proper recourse in the case of the wicked Kauravas Hopkins, as very often, being obsessed with his ideas of three strata in the Mahābhārata says that three means appear to be the oldest form and four means a later idea. There is hardly any warrant for this opinion as for many others in the same strain (J. A. O. S. vol. XIII pp. 182-183 n). The Visnudharmottara II. 146 speaks of the four upāyas and states that danda as regards a foreign state is open (prakāśa) i. e. burning and not-open (aprakāśa i. e. by poison or secret death) The Mit on Yāj. I. 346 and Kām XVIII 1 say the same thing. The Visnudharmasūtra III. 38 prescribes that the four upāyas are to be employed at the proper time and according to the attitudes of the hostile king, friendly king, the madhyamu and udāsina kings<sup>223</sup>. The Mit on Yāj. I. 346 expressly states that the four upāyas are to be employed not only in the affairs between kings but also in the lives of all ordinary people and cites a verse wherein a father or teacher addresses a son or pupil making use of all four means<sup>224</sup> Kām. 17-20 verses 972 ft (pp 117-122). Nītivākyaṃrta pp. 332-336 treat at length of these four upāyas. A few points only are noted here. Sāma is of five kinds viz. recounting the good turns done by each to the other; praising the qualities and actions of the persons to be won over; declaring the relationship of each other; representing the good that will result in future; declaring 'I am yours and I am at your service' (Kām XVII. 4-5) Dāna consists in returning, what is deposited with one by another, consenting to the taking away by another of one's things, making a gift of something new, giving what the other chooses to ask for, lending at fixed times what has to be given. Bheda (sowing dissensions) consists in giving heavy bribes or presents to ministers or feudatories, the crown prince and high officers of the enemy that are dissatisfied for various reasons, creating distrust between the king and his ministers, the rich men and the handsome men in the kingdom by the threat of the loss of life, honour, position, and wealth, by the fear of imprisonment, by the fear that the king may carry away the beautiful wife of a subject or by suggesting that a handsome young man has his eye on the king's harem, and suggesting to a king that a kinsman desires to secure the kingdom to himself and thereby inducing the king to put out his eyes or cut off his limbs. This is effected by secret spies or persons who are in the pay of both kings (ubhayavetana, acc to Mānasollāsa p 119 v. 995)<sup>225</sup>. Vide Kaut XI 1, Matsya chap. 225 and Śukra IV 1 25-54 for bheda, Kaut XI. 1 explains at length how an aspiring conqueror is to sow dissensions between corporations and the leaders of corporations, between chiefs and other people. One or two passages may be quoted by way of sample "Spies gaining access to these corporations (of warriors and others) and finding out jealousy, hatred and other causes of quarrel among them should sow seeds of a well-planned dissension among them, and tell one of them 'this man decries you'. Spies may give publicity to the consideration of priority shown to inferior persons in social intercourse in the face of the established custom of recognising the status of other persons by birth, bravery, and social position. In all these disputes the conqueror should help the inferior party with men and money and set them against the superior party. A woman who has disappointed her lover and has been forgiven may approach and say to a chief 'this chief is troubling me when my mind is set on you; when he is alive I cannot stay here' and thus induce the former to slay the latter." The Matsyapurāṇa 223. 4 states that united people are more than a match even for Indra unless bheda is employed, that dissensions are of two kinds, internal and external, of which the former is more serious. External dissension means the quarrel with a chief, but internal dissension means dissension between a king and his queen or heir apparent or ministers. One should try to prevent dissension with one's own relatives Śānti 69. 23 also advises the conquest of territory by fomenting dissensions. Therefore the expedient of 'divide et impera' has a respectable antiquity. Danda in the case of a king's country consists in sentencing to death or corporal punishment or fine and in the case of the enemy in fighting, destroying or devastating his country by seizing his crops and grain, cattle, wealth, forts and in imprisoning and injuring his people, burning his villages and forests.

There were certain privileges that the king enjoyed. His rights to treasure trove have already been referred to (H. Dh. vol II, p 146) Kaut. (IV. 1) gives the following rules. The person giving information about the discovery of a mine, jewels or treasure trove gets one-sixth, but if the informer be a servant of the king he gets  $\frac{1}{2}$ ; treasure trove beyond 100000 panas went to the king wholly (the finder being entitled to a  $\frac{1}{4}$ th share only up to 100000 panas of the whole): a subject who can prove that the treasure trove belonged to his ancestors would get the whole of it; if he takes it without establishing his ancestral ownership he is to be fined 500 panas and 1000 panas if he appropriated it secretly. The king also took by escheat the property of a person dying without leaving any heir except in the case of brāhmanas (vide H. Dh. II, p. 146 where some authorities are cited). This subject will be dealt with at greater length under the next section on 'law and justice' The king was also entitled to all property that was lost or given up by the true owner. Vide Gaut.<sup>226</sup> X. 36-38, Vas 16. 19, Manu VIII 30-33, Yāj. II. 33, 173-174, Śāṅkha-Likhita Gaut. and Baud. Dh. S. (I. 10. 17) say that the king should preserve for one year articles found after proclaiming the finding by beat of drum, while Manu says that digests like the Vivādaratnākara and the Dandaviveka (p 55) interpret these texts as meaning that the word 'rājan' applies here only to subordinate chiefs and not to a king who is independent

The flourishing state of a kingdom well governed by a good, well-equipped and active king is very graphically described in the Rāmāyana (II. 100. 43-46) 'I hope your country is full of hundreds of raṇīyas (platforms for sacred trees) and of people who are well-placed; is rendered charming by temples, mapūs (sheds where water is distributed to travellers gṛāhīs) and tanks, in which men and women are joyful; which is set off to advantage by merry gatherings and festivals; the whole extent of which is well cultivated; which is full of cattle and free from injury (to beings); which does not depend upon rains alone (for its crops); which is beautiful, free from beasts of prey and all kinds of dangers; which is endowed with mines; which is free from wicked men and enjoys prosperity and happiness' The Ādiparva chap 109 (cr. ed chap 102) also contains a fine description of a well-governed and prosperous country. The country was to be full of public wells, gardens and meeting-halls (sabhā) The Viṣṇu-dharmottara I 13. 2-12 contains an ideal description of ancient Ayodhyā. 'It was endowed with hundreds of parks; it celebrated festivals and held gatherings of people, its population was free from disease and had valiant men, it always resounded with the music of lutes, flutes and tabors, it had fair complexioned, charming ketanai clever in brilliant conversation; its population was always gay; it resounded with the recitation of the Veda and was endowed with companies of brāhmanas, its market rows were full of men that had applied scents to their bodies; there was not a man there who was wretched, dirty or emaciated; it stretched for three yojanas on the bank of the Śarayū and was ten yojanas in the middle'

CHAPTER VI

DURGA ( FORT OR CAPITAL )

Manu IX. 294 places the capital (pura) even before rāstra Medhātithi (on IX. 295) and Kullūka explain that the loss of the capital is a more serious danger than even the loss of some territory, because if the capital, which possesses all the stocks of food, in which are centred the principal elements and the army, is saved, then it is possible to retrieve even lost territory and to protect the country. It is as it were the pivot of the whole machinery of government. Other writers (and even Manu in VII 69-70) place the capital or fort after the rāstra. It is probably due to the geographical situation in North India and the nature of the fighting in ancient times that made the capital and forts of great importance in the several elements of the State. The capital mirrored the prosperity of the country and if properly walled also provided security. Yāj I. 321 says that forts are meant for the safety of the king, the people and the treasury (janakośūtmaguptaye). The reason for the construction of forts is well put by Manu VII. 74 viz that a single archer under the shelter of the fort-wall can fight a hundred of the enemy and a hundred can fight ten thousand. The Pāñcatantra (I 229 and II. 14) has a similar verse. Brhaspati quoted by the Rājānitiprakāśa<sup>228</sup> p 202 states that the king should construct a fort with walls and a gate for the protection of himself, his wives, the people and the (wealth) collected by him. Kautilya (II 3 and 4) deals at length with the construction of durgas and the laying out of the capital in one of them. He says that in the four quarters of the boundaries of the kingdom forts should be built for offering resistance (to the enemy) on ground naturally fitted for the purpose. He speaks of four kinds of forts viz 'audaka' (water-protected, which is on an island surrounded by water or on a plain surrounded by low ground), pārvata (mountain one, such as a rocky hill or a cave), dhūmwana (desert fort, on a waterless tract full of thickets or waste land), a forest fort full of wagtails and water and thickets of reed. He says that the first two are suited for the protection of populous places and the last two for the protection of foresters. Vāyu 8. 108 refers to four kinds of durgas. Manu VII. 70, Śānti 56. 35 and 86. 4-5, Visnudharmasūtra III. 6, Matsya 217. 6-7, Agnipurāṇa 222. 4-5, Visnudharmottara II. 26. 6-9, III. 323. 16-21, Śukra IV. 6 speak of six kinds of forts viz dhanvadurga (which is waterless five yojanas round a raised plain), mahādurga (a land fort, which is surrounded by a wall built of stones or burnt bricks, that is at least twelve feet high and twice as high as it is broad), jaladurga (water fort, surrounded on all sides by deep water), vārksa durga (fort that is surrounded for one yojana on all sides with thorny and tall trees and thorny creepers and bushes), nr̥durga (fort that is guarded by a numerous army of four sections on all sides), giridurga (mountain fortress, difficult to climb and with only one narrow access). Manu VII. 71 says that the mountain fortress is the best of all, while Śānti 56. 35 states that nr̥durga is the most difficult to conquer. The Mānasollāsa (II. 5 p. 78) speaks of nine kinds of durgas (adding those built with stones, bricks and mud). The Parāśurāma-pratāpa enumerates eight kinds of durgas (Rājavalabhakāṇḍa, folio 1) and states that the wall of a fort may be of stones or of baked bricks or of mud. Manu VII. 75-Sabhā 5. 36 (= Ayodhyā 100, 53), Matsya 217. 8, Kām. IV. 60, Mānasollāsa III. 5 (verses 550-555), Śukra IV. 6 12-13, Vienuḍharmottara II. 26. 20-88 prescribe that forts should possess plenty of arms, grain, drugs and other materials, wealth, horses, elephants, beasts of burden, brāhmanas, artisans, machines (called śataghñis acc to Matsya, that kill a hundred), water and fodder. The Nītivākyaṃṛta (durga-samuddesa p. 199) says that there must be means of leaving it secretly, otherwise it will be a prison and that no one should be allowed to enter it or leave it without a pass or without being searched. Kaut. (II. 3) gives detailed instructions for the construction of fort walls, towers, ditches, pillars, lotus ponds and buildings inside the fort, which are all passed over for want of space. Vide the Rājadharmakāṇḍa pp. 28-36 and the Rājadharmakāustubha pp. 115-117 for numerous quotations from the Dhanurveda of Uśanas, the Mahābhārata, the Matsya, the Visnudharmottara and other works on durga.

In the R̥gveda we have frequent mention of cities. In I. 63. 7 Indra is said to have shattered seven cities for Purukutsa and in II 20 8 it is narrated that Indra killed the dasyus and destroyed their cities of ayus (copper, halai dasyūn pura āyusir m tāi). This shows that walled cities were known even at that distant date. There is difference of opinion as to whether the walls were of mud and wood or of stones and bricks. Vide Hopkins in J. A. O. S. XIII pp 174-176. The Tai S VI 2 3 1 speaks of the three cities of asuras constructed with ayus, silver and gold (humi). In the agrayana as described in the Sat Br 'thousands of baked bricks were required. The excavations at Mohenjo-daro show that walls were built of burnt bricks (Maishall, vol I. pp 15-26). There is no reason to assume that houses, palaces and city walls could not have been built of bricks, simply because no purely Hindu ruins anterior to Alexander have yet been discovered or because Megasthenes describes that Pataliputra had a wall of wooden palisades. One must demur to the remarks of Hopkins on pp. 174-175 of J. A. O. S. vol XIII. Walls (prākāra), toranas (arched gates) and upper stories (uttalakas), moats are very often spoken of in connection with capitals in both epics. The gates were sometimes called after cities e.g. in Vanaparva I 9-10 the Pāndavas are said to have gone out of Hastināpura from the gate called Vardhamānapura<sup>229</sup>. Vide also Āśramavāsi-parva 16 3. The Mahābhārata states that palaces had dancing halls (nartanāgāra) attached to them (Virāta-parva 22 16 and 25-26). Śānti 69 60 states that the capital was rendered gay by natas (players) and dancers and Śānti 86 (4-15) describes how cities were to be founded in durgas, how they were to be full of music, festivals and merry gatherings (samājasa) and what stores they should contain. In the Rāmāyana (V. 2. 50-53) Lankā is described as having palaces of seven or eight stories and mosaic pavements. The Brhatsamhitā (chap 53) contains in 125 verses very accurate directions and measurements about palaces, houses &c (i. e. on vāstusāstra). It states that the best kind of royal palace was to be 108 cubits broad, that palaces of 100, 92, 84, 76 cubits may be built, that the length in each case was to be one-fourth as much more as the breadth. It speaks of the dimensions of mansions for the commander-in-chief, ministers, the queen, crown prince, purohita, physician &c. In v 23 it states that the walls may be of baked bricks or of wood.

The king was to have his capital inside a fort or independent of it. Manu VII. 70, 76, Āsramavāsi 5. 16-17, Śānti 86. 6-10, Kām. IV. 57, Matsya 217. 9ff, Śukra I 213-217 describe where and how a capital was to be built. Kautilya (in II. 4) describes at great length how the capital was to be laid out viz the extent should be demarcated by three royal roads from west to east and three from south to north, the capital should have twelve gates, provided with concealed land and water exits: the chariot roads, the royal roads and roads leading to drona-mukha, sthāniya, the rāstra and pastures should be four dandas (16 cubits) in width. He then prescribes the width of roads for various other purposes. Occupying one-ninth of the whole area of the capital, but to the north from the centre of the capital and in the midst of people of all castes the king's own palace should be built facing the east or north. To the north-east of the palace should be the residences of the king's teacher (ācārya), purohita, ministers and the sacrificial place and water reservoir. He then assigns appropriate places round about the palace for the offices of the several superintendents, to merchants, principal artisans, brāhmanas, ksatriyas, vaiśyas, prostitutes, wool workers, sūdras &c. In the centre of the capital were to be constructed apartments for the images of Aparājita, Apratihata, Jayantu and Vaijayanta and the temples of Śiva, Kubera, the Āsvin, Lakṣmī and Madirā (Durgā?) The principal gates named after Brahmā, Yama, Indra and Kārtikeya were to be constructed. At a distance of 100 bows (400 cubits) beyond the ditch, platforms for holy trees, groves and embankments should be built. The cemetery should be to the east or north but to the south for the higher varnas. Heretics and cāndālas should have a place of residence beyond the cemetery. For each group of ten families there must be a well; oil, grain, sugar, salt, medicines, dried vegetables, fire-wood, arms, and other essential commodities should be stored in such large quantities that they might last for several years in case of a siege or invasion. The Matsyapurāṇa (217. 9-87) differs from the above description in many ways. It prescribes four wide roads, at the ends of which a temple, the royal palace, the court of justice and the principal gate are to be respectively constructed. Almost the whole of the description in the Matsya is quoted by the Rājanītiprakāśa (pp. 208-213) and also in the Rājadharmakāṇḍa pp. 28-36. The former also quotes (pp 214-219) a long passage from the Devīpurāṇa with regard to the construction of a ṇayava.

a pura, a hatṭa (market), a purī, a pattana<sup>230</sup> and the temples of several deities that are to be built in each, the rites to be observed in measuring out the ground for each and accurately finding out of the east and other directions. Pāṇinī (VII 3. 14 prācām grāmanagarānām) distinguishes between grāma and nagara, while Patañjali thereon (vol III. p. 321) explains that grāma, ghosa, nagara, and saṃvāha are the appellations of different groups or settlements of people. The Vāyupurāṇa (94. 40) separately mentions cities (purāṇi) ghosas (hamlets of cowherds), villages and pattanas. Vide Sūkranitisāra I. 213-258 for provisions about the laying out of the capital, the palace, the court of justice, other state offices and public buildings, ditches &c and Yuktikalpataru pp 22 ff, Vāyu 8. 108 ff, Matsya 130. Sūkra (I. 260-267) describes how four royal roads should start from the palace in four directions, how the best, middling and inferior royal roads should be 30, 20 and 15 cubits in breadth; he defines padīyā (a foot-path), vīthi (a lane) and mārga as respectively equal to 3, 5 and 10 cubits in breadth, that in the capital there should be no narrow street like a padīyā or vīthi, that even in villages the public road should be at least 10 cubits in width, that all roads should slope down from their middle and that all houses should face the royal road. For a description of Ayodhyā vide Rāmāyana II 100. 40-42, which says that it was full of valiant men, had strong gates, was full of elephants, horses, and chariots, was inhabited by energetic people of all castes that were devoted to their duties, that had mansions of various sizes, that it was prosperous and had many physicians. From the Rāmāyana (VI 112. 42 sikharathyan-tarūpanā) and the Mahābhārata (Ādi. 221. 36) it appears that the roads of the capital were watered. In the Harsacarita (III) Bāṇa gives a graphic description of Sthānvisvara (modern Thanesar). For the local administration of the capital, vide the duties of the nāgaraka described above (p 149) from Kautilya (II 36). From the Paharpur plates (dated Gupta. saṃvat 159 i e 478-9 A. D.) it appears that a nagara-śresthin (the chief of the bankers and traders of the capital) was nominated (probably by the king). Vide E I vol 20 p. 59 at p. 61. There was probably a board of the elders of the city (pauramukhyas or pauravṛddhas as in Kautilya) appointed to help the Governor of the capital (nāgaraka) in administration. In the Damodarpur copper plates also a nagarasresthin is mentioned along with others who were approached for consenting to a purchase of land (E. I. vol. XV at pp. 130, 133, dated Gupta samvat 120). Megasthenes (in McCrindle's 'Ancient India', Fragment XXXIV p. 187) describes the city of Palibothra (Pataliputra) and its administration. He says that six committees of five each looked to the affairs of the city and were respectively in charge of (1) industrial arts, (2) entertainment and care of foreigners, (3) inquiries about births and deaths, (4) trade and commerce, weights and measures, (5) manufactured articles, (6) collection of the 10th of the prices of articles sold. Fragments XXV-XXVI (pp. 65-67) inform us that Palibothra was 80 stadia in length and 15 in width, that in shape it was a parallelogram, that it was surrounded by a wooden wall with holes for discharging arrows and a ditch in front. Arrian states (pp. 209-210 of McCrindle's 'Ancient India') that Palibothra had 570 towers and 64 gates. Patañjali in his Mahābhāṣya frequently brings in Pataliputra (e. g. in vol. I p. 380 he states that Pataliputra is alongside of the river Śona, on Pān. II. 1. 16), in vol. II p. 311 (vārtika 4 on Pān. IV. 3. 66) he refers to its walls and to its palaces, in vol. II p. 321 (on Pān. IV. 3. 134). In Fa-Hien's time (399-414 A. D.) the royal palace and halls in the midst of the city built of stone still existed and were so grand that they were then believed to have been the work of spirits (vide Legge p. 77). Vide Rhys Davids' 'Buddhist India' pp. 34-41 for the ancient Indian capitals in the 7th century B. C.

In the Bhāgavatapurāṇa (IV. 18. 30-32) it is narrated that Prthu, son of Vena, first levelled the earth, established human habitations in villages, towns, capitals, forts &c., and that before Prthu people resided where they liked and there were no such groups as villages or towns. Bhṛgu quoted by Śrīdhara according to Rājanīti-kaustubha defines grāma as the habitation of brāhmanas, their hired labourers and sūdras, that kharvaṭa is on the bank of a river and of a mixed character, one side being a village and the other a town. Śaunaka quoted by the Rājanīti-kaustubha (pp. 103-4) defines kheta as a place where brāhmanas, ksatriyas and vaiśyas reside, that a place where all castes reside is called a town, that brāhmana householders should be established on soil that is whitish and has sweet odour, ksatriyas should be established in towns where the soil is reddish and wafts a sweet odour and vaiśyas on yellowish soil.

CHAPTER VII

KOSA (TREASURY OR FINANCE)

Kaut (II 1) states that a king whose treasury is depleted preys upon the citizens and the rural population and (II 8) very<sup>231</sup> rightly remarks that all undertakings depend upon kośa (financial position of the king), therefore the king must pay the first attention to kośa Gautama (as cited by S V p 46) holds that kośa is the basis or support of the other six elements of the State. The Śāntiparva 119, 16 calls upon the king to guard his finances with great effort, since kings depend upon kośa, which tends to the prosperity (of the kingdom). Kām XIII. 33 states that it is on the lips of all that the king is dependent on kośa. Śānti 133 contains a eulogy of kosa. The Visnudharmottara II. 61. 17 says that kosa is the root of the tree of State. The two great pillars of the Indian States in ancient India were the revenue and the army. Manu VII. 65 says that kosa and the government of the realm depend on the king if e they should be the personal concern of the king. Yāj. (I. 327-328) recommends that the king should personally look into the income and expenditure every day and keep in his treasury buildings whatever is brought by those who are appointed to bring gold and wealth. Kām V. 77 and Sukra I. 276-278 say the same. The Rājataranginī (VII 507-508) tells us that king Kalāśa of Kashmir (1063-1089 A. D.) kept accounts like a merchant, closely watched income and expenditure and had a clerk by his side with chalk and bhūrja (birch leaf) to write upon. The principal means of filling the treasury is taxation. It is therefore necessary to consider first the principles of taxation as evolved by our writers. The first principle was that the king could not levy, according to the smṛtis, taxes at his pleasure or sweet will, that the rates of taxes which the king was entitled to levy were fixed by the smṛtis and varied only according to the commodity and also according as the times were normal or there was danger of invasion or some other calamity impending. For example, Gaut. X. 24, Manu VII 130, Visnu Dh. S. III. 22-23 declare that the king may ordinarily take a sixth part of the grain-crops or produce of the soil, but Kauṭ (V. 2), Manu (X. 118), Śānti 87, Śukra IV. 2. 9-10 permit the king to take even one-third or one-fourth part of the crops in times of distress (āpad) It has however to be noted that Kautilya requires the king to beg (yāceta) of the people for this heavy taxation, he employs the word pranaya (request) for such demands, such taxation was not to be levied from inferior lands, and he expressly says that such a demand for excessive taxation is to be made only once and not twice in the same distress.<sup>222</sup> Śānti (87. 26-33) contains a specimen of a long address to be given to the people when a king demands higher taxation in danger (such as 'if the enemy invades you, you will lose all including even your wives, the enemy will not restore to you what he robs you of' &c.) The word 'pranaya' occurs in this sense in the Junāgadh Inscription of Rudradāman (E. I. vol VIII. p. 36 ll 15-16). Another principle laid down in somewhat poetical and picturesque language is that taxation should be felt by those taxed as light and not heavy or excessive. The Udyogaparva<sup>223</sup> (34. 17-18) states 'just as a bee draws honey but at the same time leaves the flowers uninjured, so the king should take wealth from men without harming them. One (a bee) may search each flower (for honey) but should not cut the very root just like a garland-maker, but not like a coal-maker'. Manu (VII 129 and 140) laconically puts the matter thus 'just as the leech, the calf and the bee take their sustenance little by little, so must the king draw from his kingdom annual taxes little by little Let the king not cut up his own root (by levying no taxes) nor the root of others by<sup>224</sup> excessive greed'. Śānti (88

4-6) states that the king should draw (taxes) from the realm lightly in the way the bee draws honey from the trees, he should do so in the way of the calf and should not bruise the udders (as the calf does not) Those verses also refer to the action of the leech, of the tigress carrying her cubs between her jaws and the rat gnawing at the feet of sleeping men These ideas pervaded society so much that the same figure of the bee is instanced as regards the Buddhist bhikkhu's importunity for alms in the Dhammapada (verse 49) The king should act like a gardener who prepares garlands without harming the trees and their leaves and should not act like one who prepares coals from trees (Śānti 71 20)<sup>235</sup>. Manu VII 139 requires that the king should not through greed tax the subjects heavily, as he would thereby cut off the roots (i e. prosperity and contentment) of the people, nor should he cut off his own roots (i e. reduce himself to bankruptcy) by levying no taxes A third principle of taxation was that when increasing taxes the rise should be gradual and a little at a time (Śānti 88 7-8) Taxes were to be recovered at a proper time and proper place (Śānti 88 12 and Kām. V 83-84)<sup>236</sup> When taxing traders the king should make allowance for the price they had to pay, for the chances of selling the commodity (in his kingdom), the distance over which the merchandise was brought, what they must have spent for their food and condiments and the cost of guard-

One may note the Moscow decree that all male and female peasants between 18 and 45 years were to work six days yearly without pay on roadwork With the above principles of taxation one may compare Adam Smith's famous canons (1) the subjects of every state ought to contribute towards the support of the Government as nearly as possible in proportion to their respective abilities i e. in proportion to the revenue which they respectively enjoy under the protection of the State (2) The tax which each individual is bound to pay ought to be certain and not arbitrary. The time of payment, the manner of payment, the quantity to be paid ought to be clear and plain to the contributor and to every other person (3) Every tax ought to be levied at the time or in the manner in which it is most likely to be convenient for the contributor to pay it (4) Every tax ought to be so contrived as both to take out and keep out of the pockets of the people as little as possible over and above what it brings into the public treasury (vide 'Wealth of nations' ed by Rogers, 1866, vol. II, pp 414-416 )

ing the merchandise (Manu VII. 127=Śānti 87. 13-14)<sup>237</sup>. In the case of artisans, before taxing them, the king has to pay regard to the labour and skill involved and to the necessities of life required by them (Śānti 87. 15). Every one, however poor, must contribute something to the finances of the realm. Manu (VII. 137-138) says that even a very poor man who maintains himself by following some occupation should be asked to contribute every year something in the nature of kara (a tax), while workers (like cooks), artisans (like blacksmiths), sūdras who subsist by manual labour (like porters) should be asked to contribute one day's work to the king in a month. Vide Gaut. X. 31-34, Visnu Dh. Ś. III. 32 for the same. But Śūkra IV. 2. 121 says that workers and artisans should do one day's work for the king gratis in a fortnight. Gaut. X. 34 adds that the king must supply them with food on the day they work gratis. The importance of a gold and silver reserve was well understood. Kām. (IV. 62-64) says<sup>238</sup> that the king's kośa should have many sources for filling it, but few outlets of expenditure, it should be full of all desired kinds of wealth, guarded by trusty officers, rich in pearls, gold and jewels, it should have been acquired according to śāstric rules, be capable of bearing great strain of expenditure and that kośa is to be preserved only for the purpose of securing the two goals viz. dharma and artha, for affording maintenance to the servants engaged by the king and as a safeguard against calamities. Śūkra IV. 2. 3 remarks that kośa is accumulated for the upkeep of the army and for the benefit of the people and for performing sacrifices. Gaut. X. 28-29, Manu VII. 128, VIII. 306-308, Nār. (prakīrnaka 48) and others say, as has been already stated, that taxation is meant for the protection of the subjects and that it is the king's wages (vetana) for the protection he affords. Manu IX. 305 compares the king taking taxes to the sun that produces vapour from the seas (in order to return it in the form of rain, as the Raghuvamśa I. 18 very happily puts it). Kām. (V. 78-79) enumerates eight principal sources (called astavarga) of filling the treasury through the action of the heads of the departments viz. agriculture, trade-routes (both on land and water), the capital, water embankments, catching of elephants, working mines and collecting gold &c., levying wealth (from the rich), founding towns and villages in uninhabited spots. The Mānasollāsa (II. 4 verses 539-540 p 77) advises the king to spend ordinarily three-fourths of the yearly revenues and save one-fourth. Śūkra (I. 315-317) prescribes that the king should save 1/6 of his total annual income and should spend 1/2 of the whole on the army and one-twelfth each on charity (to the learned, the poor and helpless &c.), ministers, inferior officials, and his private purse or expenses. Śūkra IV. 2 26 requires the king to have as much stock of grain as would be required for three years' consumption in his country. In IV 2 13 he sets before the king the impossible ideal that his treasury should be so full that he can support his army for 20 years if no taxes from agriculture or tolls were raised or no fines were recovered. The Mānasollāsa (II. 4 394, 397 p 64) says that the king's treasury should be always full of gold, silver, jewels, ornaments and costly clothes, that pure gold in the form of niskas (coins) or bars or ornaments should be held in the treasury. Kaut (IV 3) as stated above permitted the king in famines to make the rich disgorge their wealth. In V 2 he remarks that if after making special requests for additional taxation, when the treasury is empty and some danger is impending, to the cultivators, merchants, wine-sellers, prostitutes and those who rear pigs, poultry, cattle &c., the king may request the rich to give as much of their gold as they can and the king may honour them by bestowing on them a post at his court, or the dignity of an umbrella, a turban or some decoration in return for their wealth<sup>239</sup>. He permits the king in calamities to take away the wealth of the corporations (sanghas) of heretics and of temples also, to set up all of a sudden on one night a god or a platform (caitya) for a holy tree or a sacred place for a man of miraculous powers and provide for fairs and merry gatherings there and secure the necessary money<sup>240</sup>. He recommends many other tricks and dodges for securing money, which are passed over. Perhaps the only redeeming feature of these devices is that Kautilya is careful to point out that they were to be employed only against the seditious and the irreligious and not against others (V. 2 'eram dūṣyeṣādhūṃ mokesu narteta netareṣu'). Vide Nītiyākyaṃṛta (kosa-samuddeśa) p. 205 for similar provisions to replenish a depleted treasury. The Parasurāmapratāpa (Rajavallabhakāṇḍa, folio 27b) quotes a verse which recommends resort to alchemy for replenishing the treasury<sup>240</sup>. Śukra IV. 2 11 advises the king when in financial difficulties to promise interest to the rich and take their wealth and to return it with interest when the difficulties are got over<sup>241</sup>. Śānti (88. 29-30) asks<sup>242</sup> the king to honour the wealthy men in his kingdom, since they constitute an important element of the realm and are the most eminent among all beings and to request them 'confer along with me favours on the people'.

Several reasons are assigned for people's payment of taxes to the king Gaut X. 28 says that they should do so because he protects them. In some places the idea put forward is that taxes are the wages (vetana) of the king and that the subjects made a contract with the king Manu to that effect Vide Śānti 67 and 70. 10, Baud Dh. S. I. 10. 1, Nār. 18. 48, Kaut. I 13 (quoted on p 21 above) Kāt<sup>243</sup> (verses 16-17) states that as the king is the owner of the earth but not of other kinds of wealth, he is entitled to get the sixth part of the produce of land and that since human beings reside on land they are declared to be owners (in ordinary parlance, but they have only a qualified ownership) Several kinds of taxes are mentioned in the dharmasāstras, arthasāstras and the inscriptions The oldest word for a tax paid to the king is 'bali' Rg VII 6 5<sup>244</sup> and X 173 6 speak of the common people as 'balihrt' (bringers of bali, tribute or tax for the king) In the Tai Br (II 7 18 3) it is said 'the people bring bali to him' In the Ait Br (35 3) the ratya is characterized as 'balikrt' (payer of taxes to another), since brāhmanas and ksatriyas were mostly exempt from taxation. Vide Prof. Hopkins' 'Social condition of the ruling class' J. A. O S vol XIII p 89 and Fick p 119 (as to the evidence of the Jātakas on taxation) Manu VII 80, Matsya 215 57, Rāmāyana III 6 11, Visnu Dh S III 22 employ the word 'bali' in the sense of the 6th part of the produce of land that the king levied as tax. In the Rummindei Pillar Inscription of Aśoka (Corpus I I vol. I p 164) it is said that the village of Lummini was made free from the payment of 'bali', but had to pay one-eighth share<sup>245</sup> Here 'bali' is contrasted with 'bhāga' which is a general term The word 'kara' appears to mean a tax in general Vide Āp Dh S II 10 26 10, Manu VII 128, 129, 133, Vas 19. 23, Visnu Dh. S III 26-27 The word 'bhāga' (share) is also general and means the king's dues on land, trees, drugs, cattle, wealth &c Vide Manu VII 130-131, VIII 305, Visnu Dh S III 25 This meaning of 'bhāga' is ancient We saw above (p 112) that bhāgadugha is one of the ratnins of the king The Amarakośa treats bali, kara, and bhāga as synonymous

The word 'sulka' generally means the tolls or customs duties levied from vendors and purchasers on merchandise carried into or out of the kingdom (Śukranitisāra IV 2. 108) The Mahābhāṣya on the vārtika āyasthānebhyaṣṭhak' on Pān IV 2. 104 gives saulkika and gaulmika as examples, indicating thereby that sulka or toll was levied as a source of income (āya) at the toll-gate

The principal and perennial sources of income to the state were three viz the king's share of the produce of land, tolls and customs duties, fines levied from wrongdoers or defeated litigants (vide Śānti 71 10 and Śukra IV 2 13) From this and from Manu X. 119-120 it appears that the principal tax-payers were agriculturists, traders, manual workors and artisans. In Manu VIII. 307 quoted in the Dandaviveka of Vardhamāna (p. 5) it is said that the king who, without affording protection, levies bah, kara, śulka, pratibhoga (pratibhāga in the printed smṛti) and danda (fines) goes at once to hell and Vardhamāna explains kara as the dues recovered every month from villagers and city-dwellers (every month or twice a year in Bhādrapada or Pausa according to Kullūka), śulka as the twelfth share recovered from traders, pratibhoga as the dues in the form of fruits, flowers and vegetables presented every day. A few remarks on these and other taxes must be made here. Manu VII. 130, Gaut. X. 24, Visnu Dh. S. III. 22, Mānasollāsa (II. 3. 163 p. 44) and several others prescribe that the king is entitled to the 6th, 8th or 12th part (only sixth in Visnu, also 10th in Gaut.) of the yield of grain from land. Brhaspati and the Visnudharmot-tara<sup>246</sup> (II. 61. 60-61) quoted in the Rājanītiprakāśa (pp. 262-263) make it clear under what circumstances these different shares are to be taken: viz the king takes 1/6 of śūladhānya (awned or bearded grain like wheat and barley), 1/8 from śimbidhānya (grain in pods), 10th part from crops grown on land that was fallow for many years, 1/8th from lands sown in the rainy season and one-sixth from lands that have spring crops. The tax was to be paid once every year or once in six months according to the custom of the country. The varying rates prescribed by Kautilya have been indicated in describing the duties of the sītādhyakṣa. Śukra (IV. 2 121-122) gives a salutary rule that if a cultivator constructs a tank, a well or an artificial water-course or brings under cultivation land previously fallow, the king should not levy a tax thereon till the person making the expenditure has recovered twice the amount spent by him. Kaut. (II. 1) provides that the king may show favour (anugraha) to the cultivators by supplying them with seed, cattle and money and that they should return the advances by easy instalments and that the king shall bestow favours and remissions (parihāna) in such a way that they might tend to swell the treasury and not tend to its depletion.<sup>247</sup> It has already been stated that according to the smṛtis the ordinary share of the king was one-sixth, but that in case of the danger of invasion or similar calamity he was allowed to raise it to one-fourth. Megasthenes (Fragment I, p 42) says that no person is permitted to own land and that besides the land tribute people pay into the royal treasury a fourth part of the produce. This shows that the tax on land was very heavy in the times of Candragupta probably owing to his wars to drive away the Greeks, and the huge armies that he had to employ. Manu VII 130, Gaut X. 25, Visnu Dh. S III 24, Mānasollāsa (II 3 163 p 44) hold that the king is entitled to the 50th part of the cattle reared by herdsmen and of the interest earned by those who lend money at interest. This last appears to be analogous to modern income-tax. The Śukranitiśāra IV 2 128 makes the tax to be  $\frac{1}{2}$  on the interest earned by money-lending.<sup>248</sup> Visnu adds cloth to these two. Manu VII 131-132, Gaut X 27, Visnu Dh S III 25, Visnudharmottara II 61 61-63 and Mānasollāsa lay down that the king is entitled to a sixth part of trees, meat, honey, clarified butter, perfumes (like sandal-wood), medicinal plants (like qudūci), rasa (salt &c), flowers, roots (like turmeric), fruits, leaves (like palm leaves), vegetables, grass, hides, articles manufactured from bamboo slips, earthenware, articles prepared from stones. Visnu adds deer hides to these.

Sulka is of two kinds, what is levied on goods carried by land and what is levied on goods carried by water (Mit on Yā, II 263). Gaut X 26 and Visnu Dh S. III 29 state that the sulka is 1/20th part on merchandise for sale (bought and sold in the country itself) which is interpreted by some (like Haradatta and Nandapandita) as meaning that 5 per cent of the price of articles sold should be taken by the king as tax, while the Rājānitiśāra (p 264) explains that the king is entitled only to five per cent of the difference between the cost price and the sale price of merchandise. Manu VIII 398 also is susceptible of these two interpretations, as the commentaries of Medhātithi and Kullūka show. The Visnu Dh S (III 29-30) prescribes that the king takes one-tenth on merchandise produced in his own country and one-twentieth on goods imported from a foreign country Yāj. II. 261 says that the śulka on goods is twentieth part of the prices of the goods Kaut (II 21) in his chapter on the superintendent of tolls (śulkādhyakṣa) sets out several rules, of which a few interesting ones are given here. Commodities intended for marriage or taken by a bride from her parents to her husband or meant as presents or for the purpose of sacrifices or the acconchement of women or for the worship of gods, or for the ceremonies of caula, upanayana, godāna, or for the observance of a vata or for the consecration of a person for a sacrifice and for other special ceremonies shall be allowed to go free of tolls. Whatever commodities would cause harm to the realm or are useless should be destroyed; whatever is of great benefit and seeds not easily available should be allowed to be imported without charge<sup>249</sup> He further says (II. 22) that śulka is levied on exports and imports of merchandise and that on imports the tax will be one-fifth of the price of the commodities (as a general rule) and prescribes varying rates (1/6, 1/10, 1/15, 1/20, 1/25) on different kinds of articles In II 28 (on the superintendent of shipping) Kautilya gives further rules some of which have been already noted. He prescribes rules for ferries also, viz. that brāhmanas, ascetics, children, very old people, sick men, messengers, pregnant women are to be provided with free passes by the superintendent enabling them to use the ferries. A man with a load and small animals were to pay one māsa at a ferry, a cow or a horse two māsaḥ and so on. The Mānasollāsa (II. 4. vv. 374-376 p 62) prescribes that the king should well guard all harbours (telū-pura) that are near the sea, that when the boats of sailors residing in his own country return to the harbour the king should charge one-tenth (of the price of goods brought) as the duty and that when foreign boats are driven to his harbour by an unfavourable wind, the king should confiscate all their merchandise or may give a little to the owners of those boats. In this connection a very interesting inscription may be referred to The Motupalli pillar inscription<sup>250</sup> of the Kākatiya king Ganapatideva (of XII p. 195) a charter of security (abhaya-śāsana) to the sailors who ply between towns in different countries, islands and continents: 'when ships that made voyages from one country to another were driven or were shattered or touched at a place that was not meant as a place of call, owing to unfavourable winds, former kings forcibly took away all commodities therein such as gold, elephants, horses &c.; but we, considering that wealth is dearer than life itself, have with kindness decided to give everything except the fixed śulka to those sailors who undertake the great venture of crossing the sea, so that thereby we shall secure fame and righteousness; the śulka fixed is as follows'. About śulka to be levied on goods brought by the sea the Baud. Dh. S. (I. 10. 15-16) prescribes that it is 10 per cent of the cargo except one best article (which is totally exempted). In the Kharepatan grant of the Śilāra king Rattarāja dated sake 930 it is provided that one golden gadiyāna was levied as duty on each vessel that came from another country (dvīpāntarāyāta-vahitrāt) and one golden dharana had to be paid on each vessel coming from the district of Kandalamūliya excepting Cemulya (modern Cheul) and Candrapura. Vide E. I. vol. III p. 292 at p. 301 Śukra (IV. 2 109-111) lays down some very reasonable rules viz on the same commodity śulka is to be taken in the same country by the king only once and never more than once; the king may take either 1/16, 1/20 or 1/32 from the vendee or vendor; no śulka is to be taken from the vendor when he has to sell his goods at the same price at which he bought them or for less than the cost price; the king should always take from the buyer the proper śulka after seeing what profit he is going to make Nār (sambhūya-samutthāna verses 14-15) lays down that whatever is to be used by śrōtrīyas (brāhmanas learned in the Vedas) for domestic purposes is exempt, but not what they may employ in trade; the gifts received by brāhmanas, the property of stage-players, whatever is carried on a man's shoulders—on all these no śulka must be levied. The exemption of brāhmanas and others from taxation has already been dealt with in H. Dh. vol. II pp 143-145. Gaut. X. 9-12, Āp Dh. S II. 10. 26 10-16, Vas I 42-46 and 19 23-24, Manu. VIII. 394 exempt a learned brāhmana, the women of all varnas, all boys before the signs of puberty appear, all those who stay with a teacher for study, ascetics who are intent on dharma, śūdras that do menial work such as washing the feet of higher varnas, the blind, the deaf and dumb, the diseased, the cripple, an old man of 70 years or more. Though these really required more protection than most people, humanity and higher feelings made them exempt from taxes from very ancient times. The claims to exemption were probably exaggerated and not respected in practice. For example, Nārada (VI. 14) states that the king is not to levy tolls or customs duties on articles required by śrotriyaś for domestic use but if they engaged in trade they had to pay taxes on merchandise.<sup>251</sup> The Mit. on Yāj. II. 4 states that the six exemptions mentioned in Gaut. (VIII. 12-13) apply only to a very learned brāhmana and not to all brāhmanas. Manu. VII. 133 provides that a king even when he has lost everything should not levy a tax on śrotriyaś and relying on this the Vaijayanti explains Viṣṇu Dh S III. 26 as referring only to learned brāhmanas. The Rāmāyana (III. 6. 14)<sup>251a</sup> states, differing from other authorities, that the king shares one-fourth of the merit of mums (ascetics) dwelling in his kingdom. There was a corresponding liability on the king; viz. he shared half and half in the demerit due to the sins committed by the subjects that are not properly restrained by him (Yāj. I. 337). Manu and Viṣṇu. Dh S. III. 28 and Viṣṇudharmottara II. 61. 25 say that he reaps the sixth part of the sin of his subjects.

Kautilya in II. 15 mentions numerous kinds of taxes or dues that were levied by the king. It is not possible to explain many of the terms used by him. In the ancient inscriptions, when making grants of a village and the like, it is usual for the kings to specify the exemptions from taxes and dues that went with the grant. Such exemptions were called parihāra, which word occurs in Kautilya and also in the Hāthigumpha Inscription of Khāravela (in the 2nd century B.C., E. I. vol. xx at p. 9) where we read 'bamhanānam jātam parihāram dadāti'. In certain early records even, these exemptions are said to be eighteen, e.g. in the Hirahadagalli plate of Śivaskandavarman (E. I. vol. I p. 6) and<sup>252</sup> the Omgudu plate of Vijayaskandavarman

Fines as a source of revenue will be discussed in the next section about 'law and justice' The king had numerous other sources of income Kaut (II 12) describes the duties of the superintendent of mines Every thing dug up from mines belonged to the king (Visnudharmasūtra III 55) According to Manu VIII 39 and Medhātithi thereon the king is entitled to a half (or some share  $\frac{1}{2}$ ,  $\frac{1}{3}$  &c) of the ore dug out of mines, as he is the lord of the earth and gives protection In modern times under sec 69 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code, Government have a right to all mines and minerals The 'Paraśurāmapratāpa'<sup>252a</sup> quotes a verse 'Brahmā arranged that the king was (to be) the owner of all wealth and specially (wealth) that is inside the earth,' while Kāt (16-17) says (vide note 243) 'the king is declared to be the lord of the land, but never of other kinds of wealth; therefore he should secure the sixth part of the fruits of land, but not otherwise at all Since human beings reside on it (land) their (qualified) ownership thereof has been declared' For further discussion of the theory of the king's ownership of all land, vide H of Dh. vol II, pp 865-869 The State itself manufactured salt, took its share in salt manufactured by private persons and levied  $\frac{1}{2}$  as State dues on imported salt. Vide Vilavathi grant of Pallava king Simhavarman for a long enumeration of taxes collected from villages in South India in E I vol 24 p 296 and a copperplate grant of the Śilāhara king Aparājita dated Śaka 915, where in granting a garden to a brāhmana occur the following words, 'सादृक् सद्गुणदशापराध प्रधाननिधानैकद्वेषबाह्य इतरसमस्तपुत्रालीयक-कुमारीसाहसमभ्युतिवृण्णद्वेषसमन्वितः पूर्वद्वेषद्वेषावब्रह्मद्वेषवर्जितः समस्तपरिधानसहितः ..... दत्तः in 'Important Inscriptions from Baroda' vol. Mānasollāsa (II. 3 verses 332 and 361) asks the king to guard mines of gems, gold and silver and declares that the Creator made the king the ruler over all wealth and especially over what is inside the earth. Rudradāman (150 A. D.) boasts that he filled his treasury by means of bali, śulka and bhūga levied according to the śāstras and that his treasury overflowed with heaps of gold, silver, diamonds, tupis lazuli and other gems (E I vol VIII p. 36 at p 44) Kaut (IV 1) says that those who sweep the dust (near mines &c) should get one-third of the valuable things found and the king should get two-thirds and all jewels. The king had also monopolies in certain matters. He alone could catch elephants. Kaut (II 31-32) and Mānasollāsa (II 3, pp 44-58) deal with this matter, the latter describing several methods of catching elephants. Medhātithi<sup>253</sup> on Manu VIII 400 says that kings have a monopoly as to elephants because it is well-known that they are most useful to them and he specifies certain monopolies such as those in saffron, silken cloth and wool, horses, pearls and jewels. Megasthenes (Fragment XXXVI p. 90) states that a private person was not allowed to keep an elephant or a horse and that those animals were held to be the special property of the king.

The king recovered a sort of road cess through officers called antapāla (guardians of borders or boundaries) viz 1½ pana on each cart loaded with merchandise, half a pana on each head of cattle, ¼th pana on minor quadrupeds, and one māsa on a load carried on a man's shoulders (Kaut. II. 21 p 111). Śukra IV. 2. 129 permits for the repairs to the roads a tax on those who use roads. Revenues were raised in numerous other ways such as by charging for stamping weights and measures, by fees levied from keepers of gambling halls, from players, singers and musicians, from prostitutes, from forests and pastures &c. Bṛhat-Parāśara X p 282 allows the king in a financial crisis to use even temple funds and make them good when freed from his difficult position. Similarly it allows the king (in difficulty) to take the wealth of usurers, of low people, of heretics and prostitutes, as the continuance and prosperity of temples and the others depend upon the king <sup>254</sup>

The Rājataranginī (VII 1008) notices that a tax was levied on Kashmirians performing śrāddha at Gayā. An inscription of Vikramāditya V found near Gadag dated śaka 934 (1012-13 A. D.) refers to taxes levied on upanayana, marriages, vedic sacrifices &c. (E I vol 20 p. 64). It appears that the king of Anahilavād, Siddharāja (1094-1143 A. D.), levied a tax on pilgrims going to Somanātha at the frontier town Bahuloda and it is said that the tax yielded 72 lakhs of rupees a year, which Siddharāja remitted for the sake of and at the intervention of his mother; vide Bom G. vol I part 1 p. 172 and Prabandha-cintāmani (p. 84, Tawney). The amount is probably very highly exaggerated in order to glorify Siddharāja, but this shows that the yield of the pilgrim tax must have been substantial. The Manasollāsa in its great desire to help the king with the accumulation of wealth advises the king even to resort to alchemy <sup>255</sup>

A question may be asked. what were the means of preventing a king from being over-exacting and tyrannical in his taxes? Kaut. (VII 5 pp 276-277) cites at great length the causes that lead to the impoverishment of the subjects, to their being greedy and disaffected. Among these he mentions <sup>256</sup> 'not paying what ought to be paid and exacting what ought not to be exacted, not punishing the guilty and severely punishing the guilty, not protecting the people against thieves and robbing them of their wealth'. He then states that when the subjects become impoverished they become greedy and when greedy they become disaffected and voluntarily go over to the side of the king's enemy or destroy their own king. place Kautilya (XIII. 1) suggests<sup>257</sup> that a conqueror may employ spies who should encourage the subjects of his enemy suffering from famine, depredations of thieves and wild tribes to tell their king, 'we shall beg the king for favours (remission of taxes or help in the way of seeds &c.) but if he does not agree to bestow favours we shall go to another country'. So the threat of disaffection and migrating to another country were the deterrents against the tyranny of heavy taxation according to Kautilya. Śānti 87. 36 says<sup>257a</sup> that if the vaiśyas (gominah, who bore the brunt of taxation) were neglected, they may disappear from the country and dwell in forests. Manu (VII. 111-112) warns kings who through folly rashly oppress their kingdoms that they may ere long lose their own lives and those of their relatives and also their kingdoms. Yaj. (I. 340-341) is even more emphatic and says that the king who seeks to increase his treasury with wealth extracted by unjust means from his realm loses his wealth in no time and meets destruction along with his relatives. 'The fire springing from the wrath caused by the harassment of the subjects does not cease without burning the family, the wealth and the life of the king.' Kātyāyana (v. 19) harps on the spiritual consequences: 'the king who unjustly takes from his kingdom taxes, fines, share of crops and tolls, incurs<sup>258</sup> sin.' Śukra<sup>259</sup> (II. 319-321 and 370) emphasizes the keeping of daily, monthly and yearly accounts and the entering of the several items of income on the left side of the account and of those of expenditure on the right. The Nītivākyaṃrta<sup>259a</sup> refers to the appointment of auditors when there is discrepancy in the items of income and expenditure.

CHAPTER VIII

BALA (THE ARMY).

Bala is also called danda in Kaut and elsewhere. According to Sumantu danda means 'punishment, corporal or monetary,' and the army with its four arms is included by Sumantu under kośa (acc to S V p 46) <sup>260</sup> In the Rgveda we have frequent references to armies, weapons, battles &c. The word senāni occurs in Rg X 84 2 where Mamri (martial Fury) is invoked to be the Commander <sup>261</sup> Rg VI 75 is full of references to bows, arrows, armour, bow-strings, quiver, charioteer, horses, chariots &c. Kām (XIII 34-37) states that the king possessed of a sound financial position increases his depleted army, supports his own subjects and is depended upon even by his enemies. All the following result from the possession of a (powerful) army viz increase of the wealth of one's friends and enemies and of the (king's) territories, prompt attainment of objects that seemed distant, protection of what is already secured, destruction of the armies of the enemy, the keeping together of one's army. Most authorities agree in saying that troops are of six kinds viz maula (hereditary), bhṛta or bhṛtaka or bhṛtṛi (hired troops), sreni (guild troops), mītra (troops of an ally or friendly power or feudatories), amitra (troops that once belonged to the enemy), atai or ātaiika (wild tribes as troops). Vide Kaut <sup>262</sup> IX. 2 (first sentence), Kām. XVIII 4, Agnipurāṇa 242 1-2, Mānasollāsa (II 6, verse 556 p 76). The first three works say that each earlier variety of troops is superior to each later one. Maula troops corresponded to the modern standing army, since Kaut (IX 2) prefers them on the ground that they depend on the king for maintenance and are being constantly drilled. They most probably consisted of persons who and whose ancestors got tax-free lands in lieu of military service. The Sabhā-parva 5. 63 appears to refer to four kinds (omitting sreni and amitra) and Yuddhakāṇḍa 17 24 refers to five (omitting sreni).

The Āsramavāsikaparva<sup>263</sup> (7 7-8) names five kinds (except amitra) and states that maula and mitra armies are superior to the rest and hired troops and sreni troops are each other's equals. This division of armies into various kinds is mentioned in the grant of Dhruvasena I of Valabhi in Gupta-Valabhi year 206 (E. I. vol. XI p 106, where the king is said to have acquired the kingdom with the help of maula, bhrta, mitra and sreni armies). Mānasollāsa defines the ātavika<sup>264</sup> army as consisting of niṣādas, mlecchas and similar castes dwelling in the vicinity of mountains and amitra troops as soldiers who once belonged to an enemy king but being defeated were taken captive and made slaves. According to the Rājanītiratnākara (p 38) 'aribala' means 'troops that come to a king after leaving the king's enemy'. Kām. XVIII 7 says that the ātavika troops are, by nature, irreligious, greedy, anāryas and non-observers of truth. They correspond to the pendhars and freebooters of later times. The reasons why hereditary and other troops are superior to amitra and ātavika varieties are explained at great length by Kaut. IX. 2 and Kām. XVIII. 5-9. Kaut. (IX. 2) states that an amitra army led by an ārya is superior to wild tribe troops. Both of them are out for plunder and in case no plunder can be had or when there is a disaster they may prove as dangerous as snakes. By sreni-bala he has in mind the organized bands of soldiers to whom he refers elsewhere as 'vārtāśāstropajīvinah' (vide p. 89 above). As it is not unlikely that members of trade-guilds either themselves learnt the profession of arms or engaged soldiers for the protection of their merchandise and property, these could be pressed into his service by a king in case of need and were distinguished from the hereditary army and hired troops as 'sreni-bala'. Differing from the ācūryas that troops composed of brāhmaṇas, ksatriyas, vaiśyas and śūdras are superior for enlistment in the order of the castes, Kaut holds that an army of ksatriyas well-trained in the wielding of arms or an army of vaisyas and sūdras having greater numerical strength is better than an army composed of brāhmana soldiers, since an enemy may win over the latter army by prostrating himself before them<sup>265</sup> Vide H Dh vol II pp 122-123 for discussion on the question whether brāhmanas could become soldiers In Udyogaparva 96 7 (cr ed chap 94) it is said that king Dambhodbhava every day asked in the morning whether there was any sūdra, vaiśya, ksatriya or brāhmana equal or superior to him in armed conflict That shows that soldiers of castes other than ksatriyas were not unheard of in the Epic age Kām IV. (63, 65, 67) says that the hereditary army (pitr-partāmaha) should consist mostly of ksatriyas In the Maliya copperplate of Mahārāja Dharasena II (252 Valabhi samvat i. e. 571-72 A. D.) Bhatārka, the founder of the Valabhi dynasty, is said to have secured the kingdom with the help of maula, bhṛta, mitra and śreni troops (Gupta Inscriptions p. 165). Śukra (II 137-139) says that the soldiers may be sūdras, ksatriyas, vaiśyas, mlecchas or of mixed castes, provided they are brave, restrained, well-built, devoted to their master and their dharma, and hate the enemy. Śānti (101 3-5) describes in what respects soldiers from Gāndhāra, Sindhu and other countries and Yavana and Deccan soldiers excel, remarks that brave and strong men are to be found everywhere (verse 6) and that men from the border (i. e. bhullas and kavartas according to Nilakanṭha) are desperate fighters, would never run away from battle and so should be preferred for enlistment in the army (verse 19). The Yasastilaka III (pp 461-467) describes the characteristics of Northern Indian (auttarāpātha), Deccan (dāksinātya), Dramila (South Indian), Tīrhuṭ (Tairabhukta) and Gurjara soldiers. An army was said to be composed of four parts, viz. elephants, horses, chariots and foot-soldiers (caturanga bala). Kām. XVIII 24 says that bala is sixfold, viz the four sections of infantry, cavalry, chariots and elephants together with mantra (line of policy) and kośa (treasury) In Śānti. 103. 38 the army is said to have six angas (the well-known four plus kośa and roads for traffic) According to Kāntilya (II 2, VII 11) and Kām. XIX. 62 the destruction of the enemy's forces and victory depended on elephants <sup>266</sup> Śānti-parva (100 24) says that an army in which the infantry predominates remains firm and that cavalry and chariots are all right when there is no rain. Śānti (59. 41-42) enumerates eight elements of the army viz. the well-known four (elephants etc.), vīsti (labourers or porters who gave free labour and were only fed but were paid no wages), boats, spies, and guides (deśika) <sup>267</sup> Vide Śānti 121. 44 also In the Mahābhārata elephants do not, except in rare cases, play any role in the fighting that went on, while chariots and the other arms of an army are described everywhere. In the Virāṭaparva (65. 6) Vikarna was seated on an elephant when he attacked Arjuna; Bhīmaparva 20. 7 refers to Duryodhana as riding an elephant and (95. 32-33) Bhagadatta is described as seated on an elephant when he attacked Bhīma In this respect the Epic carries on the vedic tradition Megasthenes (Fragment 1 p. 30) notes that in ancient India elephants were trained for war and turned the scale of victory. Vast armies were kept by ancient kings and emperors. When Śātrughna started against the demon Lavana he had an army of 4000 horses, 2000 chariots and 100 elephants with him (Rāmāyana VII. 64 2-4). In the Daśakumāracarita VIII the cynical jester Vihārabhadra reminds his master that the latter had 10000 elephants, three lakhs of horse and numberless foot-soldiers (B S S p. 133, of ed. of 1919)

Megasthenes (in Fragment XXVII p 68) speaks of the camp of Sandrakottos (Candragupta Maurya) that had 400000 men, notes (in Fragment LVI) that the king of Palibothra had in his pay a standing army of six lakhs of foot-soldiers, 30000 cavalry and 9000 elephants (p 141, McCrindle), that the king of Horatae (Surāstra) had 150000 foot-soldiers, 5000 cavalry and 1600 elephants (ibid p. 150) and that even the Pāṇḍyan kingdom ruled by women had 150000 foot and 500 elephants (ibid p. 147). Vide Beal's 'Buddhist Records &c.' vol. I p 213 for the armies collected by Harsa in his march against the murderer of his elder brother (viz 5000 elephants, 2000 horse and 50000 foot-soldiers) and the vast armies that he had after six years of conquest viz. 60000 elephants and 100000 cavalry In the Āsvamedhikaparva (60. 14-20) it is narrated that when Drona assumed the post of commander-in-chief the Kaurava army had been reduced to 9 *akṣauhini*s from eleven, that only five were left when Karna became Senūpati and the Pāṇḍavas had then only three left and under Śalya's command there were only three *akṣauhini*s and the Pāṇḍavas could oppose to him only one. In reply to a question from Dhṛtarāstra Yudhisṭhira states that in the great war the total number of warriors killed in battle came to the colossal figure of 1660020006 (Śtriparva 26. 9).<sup>268</sup> The Udyogaparva gives (155. 24-26) the following table for an akṣauhini: 500 elephants, 500 chariots, 1500 cavalry and 2500 foot-soldiers constituted an army called senā, 10 senās=prānā, 10 prānās=vāhni, 10 vāhnis=dhvajini, 10 dhvajinis=camū and 10 camūs=akṣauhini. The Kauravas had eleven *akṣauhini*s and the Pāṇḍavas had 7. If we take the table in Ādi 2. 19-22 one akṣauhini contained 21870 elephants, the same number of chariots, 65610 horses and 109350 foot-soldiers<sup>269</sup> But 'if the other tables be followed then the numbers may be much larger still. Another table furnished by Udyogaparva 155. 28-29 is: 55 men constituted patti, 3 pattis=senāmukha or gulma, 3 gulmas=gaṇa and there were ayutas (10 thousands) of gaṇas in the army of the Kauravas The Ādiparva (2 19-22)

differs from both tables in some respects. The Udyogaparva 155 22 further notes that each horseman was surrounded by ten men as attendants (nara daśa hayaścāsan pādaraksāḥ samantataḥ). Though throughout the centuries the infantry was theoretically and in practice more numerous than cavalry, not much importance seems to have been attached to them as compared with chariots or horsemen. The lexicon called Vaijayanti says that patti consists of three horses, five foot-soldiers, one chariot and one elephant, that three pattis are equal to senāmukha and that senāmukha, gulma, gana, vāhini, prtanā, camū, anikini represent each three times as many as the preceding one and that 10 anikinis are equal to an aksauhini. The Nītiprakāśikā<sup>270</sup> gives a table of groups from pathi to aksauhini and remarks that each of these groups had in turn numerous supporting men e.g. each elephant was followed by a hundred horsemen and a thousand foot-soldiers and each horseman was supported by a thousand foot-soldiers (VII. 3-10). Manu VII. 192 refers to battles on water also. From references in the Mahābhārata it appears that chariots had only two wheels. Vide Bhīṣma 98 47, Dronaparva 154 3, Salya 16 24 (Śāineyo daksinaṁ cakram Dhṛtadyumnaś-tathottaram). Two noted warriors were told off to guard the two wheels of the chariot of the principal commanders and are called 'cakra-raksau' (vide Bhīṣma 54. 76, 108 5, Drona 91, 36, Karna 11. 31, 34. 44). Chariots of great warriors were drawn by four horses e.g. Ādi. 198 15, Udyoga 48. 50, Drona 145 81. Udyoga 83. 15-21 describe the chariot of Kṛṣṇa and Udyoga 140. 21 states that chariots had small tinkling bells attached to them and also screens of tiger-skin. The Rg contains very graphic descriptions of chariots. Chariots were generally drawn by two horses in the vedic age (Rg V 30 1, V 36 5, VI 23 1) and had two wheels, but the chariot of the Āśvins is described as having three wheels (Rg. I. 118. 2, I 157. 3, X. 41 1). Ghatotkaca, however, had eight wheels to his chariot (Drona 156. 61, 175 13). The Sukranitiśāra (II. 140-148) mentions another method of grouping the army. Five or six foot-soldiers made a pathi over which there

Ayodhyā 100. 32 (= Sabhā 5. 48) asks 'I hope you give at the proper time pay and rations to your soldiers according to their deserts and do not delay payment'. Both Nār (sambhūya-22) and Br state that among persons who work for hire the best is the soldier. The Mānasollāsa (II 6. 566-569 p. 80) describes that the chiefs of the hereditary army should always be honoured by the king with presents of jewels, ornaments, costly clothes and sweet words and sumptuous provision for their maintenance should be made by bestowing on them a village, or two or more villages and heaps of gold, while hired soldiers should be paid every day or every month or once in three, four or six months or once in a year according to the needs of the king. Megasthenes (Fragment XXXIV p. 88) describes the organization of the Indian army: 'A third governing body directs military affairs, of which there were six divisions with five members to each. One co-operates with the admiral of the fleet, another, with the superintendent of bullock trains, the third division has charge of foot-soldiers, the fourth of horses, the fifth of war chariots and the sixth of elephants'. In medieval times chariots appear to have become obsolete. In the graphic descriptions of armies contained in the Harsacarita (particularly in the 7th ucchvāsa) war chariots are conspicuous by their absence. The Mahābhārata often speaks of horses from the countries to the north-west of India as the best; vide Sabhā 53. 5 (for Kāmbōja and Gāndhāra horses), Udyoga 86. 6 (horses from Bālhi), Drona 125. 25 and Sauptika 13. 2 (Kāmbōja horses). The Harsacarita II speaks of the best horses as coming from Vanāyu, Āratta, Kāmbōja, Sindhudeśa and Pārasika. Śukra lays down certain practical rules about the army (IV 7. 379-390). He says that the soldiers should be encamped outside the town or village but not far from it, that no money-lending should be allowed between the soldiers and the village people, that the king should open separate shops for goods required by soldiers, that no army should be encamped at one place for more than a year, that soldiers should not enter the village without the king's permission, that receipts should be taken from soldiers for payments made to them and they should be furnished with a writing about their pay. Some of these rules are very old. The Udyogaparva<sup>271</sup> 37. 30 mentions among persons with whom no contractual transactions should be entered into, the king, the king's servants and soldiers

The Arthasāstra contains an elaborate discussion (in IX. 1-7 and X. 1-6) about the organization of the king's army, the proper time and place for starting on an invasion, internal and external troubles and calamities and measures against them, means of dealing with traitors and enemies, religious remedies (worshipping gods and falling at the feet of brāhmanas, magical rites based upon the Atharvaveda) against misfortunes like fire and flood, epidemics, famine &c., encampment (skandhāvāra) of armies, treacherous and strategic fighting, proper battle grounds, encouragement to one's own army, free labourers and their work, different arrangements or formations (vyūhas) of armies. Considerations of space prevent any treatment of these matters. But a few notable points will be set out here. A king may invade his enemy's country either in Mārgaśīrṣa (when the crops sown in the rains are ready) or in Caitra or when the enemy is suffering from some calamity. Śānti (100. 10-11) says the same thing. Internal trouble arises when any minister, purohita, senapati or the crown prince is angry or dissatisfied with the king, who should get rid of such trouble by giving up his own fault or by pointing out the danger arising from an enemy. If the crown prince causes trouble he should be kept in confinement or killed, if there is another son of good character. The trouble caused by a provincial Governor or the officer in charge of boundaries (antapāla), the chief of wild tribes or a conquered king is termed external. The king should meet it by setting up one against the other. The encampment of an army is to be made on a site declared to be the best according to the science of buildings and measured by the nāyaka (the chief of the army), carpenter and astrologer, the encampment being circular, square or rectangular and having four gates, six roads and nine divisions. Disputes, drinking, holding merry gatherings (samāja) and gambling should be prohibited in the camp and the system of passes should be enforced (X. 1). Vanaparva (15. 14, 19) also refers to the system of passes and the fact that dancers and musicians were driven away, when Dvārakā was besieged by Śālva. From Udyoga 151-58 (cr ed. 149-53), 195-12-19 (cr ed 196 12-19) it appears that markets, prostitutes, conveyances, oxen, machines, arms and physicians accompanied an army and that the camp (senāniveśa or skandhāvāra) of Duryodhana looked like the capital itself and was five yojanas in extent. Physicians with surgical instruments, blunt instruments (like tweezers), medicines, curative oils and bandages in their hands and women (nurses) looking after the food and drink of the army should stand behind the soldiers uttering encouraging words<sup>272</sup> (Kaut. X. 3). The Bhīsmaparva 120-55 also states that doctors well-versed in extracting splinters or arrow-heads (from the body) approached with their surgical instruments to extract the darts from Bhīsmā's body. The duties of the labourers (vaśī) were to examine the camp, roads, bridges, wells, and river ghats, to carry machines, weapons, armour, utensils, fodder, to remove from the battle-field wounded<sup>x</sup> men along with their weapons and armour<sup>273</sup>. Each commander had some distinguishing device as his banner e. g. Bhīsmā had a golden tāla tree as his standard (Bhīsmaparva VI 17-18, tālena mahatā Bhīsmah pañcatārena ketunā). In X 6 Kautilya speaks of several formations (vyūhas) called danda, bhoga, mandala, asanīhata and the subdivisions such as gomūtrīkā, makara &c. In Kām. XVIII. 48-49, XIX. 40 ff., Manu VII. 187-191, Nitiprakāśikā, chap 6 and in the Mahābhārata many vyūhas are described. Vanaparva (285 6-7) refers to Rāvana's arrangement of his army according to the rules of Uśanas and of Rāma's army according to Bārhaspatya rules. The Āsramavāsikaparva 7-15 refers to the formations called Śakata, Padma and Vajra described in the work of Uśanas. Kautilya X. 6 also refers to Ausanasa and Bārhaspatya arrangements of armies. Drona 75-27, 87-22-24, Karnaparva 11-14 and 28 mention certain vyūhas like Makara, Śakata &c. Vide also Mānasollāsa II. 20 verses 1170-1181 pp 134-135, Agnipurāṇa 242 7-8 and 42-73 for vyūhas. Though Kautilya recommends all sorts of tricks and treachery for securing a victory, the Mahābhārata holds up a high ideal. The Bhīsmaparva<sup>274</sup> 21. 10 remarks that conquerors do not secure victory so much by their armies and prowess as by truthfulness, freedom from cruelty, the observance of dharma and energetic actions. The Śānti-parva (95. 17-18) states that it is better to die while fighting according to the rules of dharma rather than obtain a victory by wicked actions.

In the Bhīsmaparva (I. 27-32) certain rules of war agreed upon between the Kauravas and the Pāṇdavas are set out, such as one should fight only with one similarly equipped (i e. a foot-soldier with a foot-soldier and so on), one should not kill a soldier who is already in combat with another, or who has turned back from fight or is without armour. Vṛddha-Hārīta VII. 216 exempts spectators. Manu (VII 90-93) declares "one should not fight with treacherous

( or concealed ) weapons, or with barbed or poisoned weapons or with weapons the points of which are blazing with fire. Let a fighter not strike one who has climbed on an eminence, nor a eunuch, nor one who joins the palms of his hand ( in supplication ), nor one with flying hair ( in flight ), nor one who sits down or says ' I am thine ', nor one who is asleep, nor one who has lost armour, nor one who is naked or disarmed, nor one who is merely looking on without taking part in the fight, nor one who is fighting with another foe, nor one whose weapons are broken, nor one who is afflicted with sorrow, nor one seriously wounded, nor one who is in fear, nor one who has turned to flee.' Śāṅkha adds that a soldier should not kill another while the latter is drinking water or taking his meals or is taking off his shoes, nor should one kill a woman, a female elephant, nor a charioteer, nor a bard nor a brāhmana nor should one who is not a king ( or noble ) kill one who is a king Baud. Dh S I. 10 10 forbids the use of poisoned or barbed arrows ( karnan ) Śānti 95. 11 also does the same. Śānti ( 95 13-14 ) enjoins that even an enemy soldier, when wounded, should be treated with medicine and allowed to go when his wounds are healed<sup>276</sup> Śānti adds that a soldier should not kill boys or old men nor from behind nor one who holds a blade of grass in his mouth ( as a mark of submission ) These rules, though probably ideal and not strictly followed in every case, are far more humane as compared with the practice in modern warfare when non-combatants are killed from the air even at night without warning. In ancient times non-combatants went generally unmolested, to which Megasthenes bears testimony when he says ( Frag I. p 32 ) ' Tillers of the soil even when battle is raging in the neighbourhood are undisturbed by any sense of danger, for the combatants allow those engaged in husbandry to remain quite unmolested.' Manu VII. 32 allows a king to harass his enemy's country, but Medhātithi on VII. 32 asks the invader to save his enemy's people if possible ( particularly brāhmanas ) The rule in gadāyuddha ( fight with maces or clubs ) was that no blow was to be struck below the navel ( Salyaparva 60 6 ) But this rule was violated by Bhīma when he struck Duryodhana on the thigh with his mace., Duryodhana recounts ( in Salya 61 ) all the bad deeds of Kṛṣṇa and the Pāṇḍavas and the only reply that Kṛṣṇa makes is that he too was guilty of numerous breaches of morality and the chivalrous rules of war (such as the slaying of Abhimanyu by many engaging him at one time). The general rule was that fighting ceased when the sun went down (Bhisma 49. 52-53). But in Dronaparva 154 and 163. 16 ff we have a description of night battles and it is provided that chariots, elephants and horses should carry lamps.

It has already been shown how it was the duty of a ksatriya and of every soldier to fight and die in battle rather than run away. A fighting spirit was inculcated by holding out several rewards. One was the acquisition of booty and territory (Gaut. X. 41, Manu VII. 206, Bhagavadgītā II. 37); others were the satisfaction of having done one's duty as a ksatriya (Gītā II. 31-33), honour and fame (Gītā II. 34-35), heaven and other-worldly rewards (Yāj. I. 324, Manu VII. 88-89), protection of brāhmanas (Āp. Dh. S. II. 10. 26, 2-3). Visnu Dh. S. III. 44-46 have already been quoted above (p. 58). The Śānti (98. 40-41) states that a soldier who runs away from the field falls into Hell. Yāj. (I. 324-325) declares that those who, while fighting with weapons that are not treacherous (poisoned &c.) for the sake of the land (of their master or of the enemy) die in battle without turning back from it go to heaven like yogins, that each step of those who do not flee even when their comrades have been killed is equal to a solemn sacrifice (like the Asvamedha), the king (the master) takes away all the merit of those who run away from the battlefield and are then killed. Manu VII. 95 contains the same idea. These remarks were applicable not only to ksatriya soldiers, but to soldiers of all castes who maintained themselves by following the profession of arms. Vide Rājānitiprakāśa p. 407. Parāśara (III. 31) and Brhat-Parāśara X. p. 281 remark that a valiant soldier who does not seek mercy though surrounded by many enemies and falls fighting attains imperishable worlds and that when he reaches heaven divine damsels run after him to choose him as their Lord (III. 34-35). Parāśara III. 36 is a <sup>277</sup> verse which is one of the two quoted by Kaut (X 3) when soldiers are to be urged on to fight Kautilya (in X 3) advises that the king himself and his mantrin and purohita should urge on his soldiers by quoting Vedic and classical Sanskrit passages about the rewards waiting for those who fall fighting for their master and the religious punishments for those who run away Astrologers should infuse spirit into their side by asserting that the heavenly aspects favour their side The day before the battle the king should observe a fast, offer oblations into fire to the accompaniment of Atharvaveda mantras and cause benedictory texts to be repeated that refer to victory Bards should recite lays describing heaven as the reward for the brave and hell for the timid and extol the caste, guild, family, deeds and character of the soldiers The assistants of the purohita should declare that they have practised witchcraft against the enemy. The commander-in-chief and the officers under him should address the army as follows — 'a hundred thousand (panas) will be the reward for him who kills the enemy king, fifty thousand for him who kills the commander-in-chief or the crown prince, . . . a hundred for slaying the officer of the patti (a battalion), twenty for bringing the head (of a common soldier) and twice the pay and the booty seized by each to all soldiers' Kām (XIX 18-21) says that the king should give the rewards (promised as in Kaut) to the soldiers after they succeed in the exploits mentioned Vide also Mānasollāsa II 20 verses 1163-1167 (pp 133-134) for similar promises Gaut (X 20-23) prescribes that whatever wealth is acquired by a soldier by his individual effort should be given to him by the king, but the horse or elephant caught by a soldier goes to the king, that if many soldiers by a joint effort obtain some valuable plunder the king should choose and retain the best for himself and the rest should be divided among the soldiers according to their services in the battle Vide Manu VII. 96-97 (which allow even a chariot, horse or elephant to be retained as booty by the soldier and everything else including female slaves, except jewels, gold and silver), Kām XIX <sup>278</sup> 21-22, Śukra IV. 7. 372

A treatise will be required to deal with the weapons of war from ancient times. Even in the Rgveda several weapons are mentioned e g rsti (Rg V 52 6, V 57 2 and 6 on the shoulders written in the 13th or 14th century when cannon came to be used in Europe for the first time Both in the Rāmāyana and the Mahābhārata the word śataghnī (killing a hundred people) occurs frequently. In the Yuddhakāṇḍa<sup>281</sup> 3 13 it is stated that at the gates of Lankā hundreds of iron śataghnīs, looking burnished, sharp and terrible, had been arranged by the demons. In a poetic description of Lankā in the Sundarakāṇḍa chap 2, it is said that śataghnīs and śūlas were like the hair on the head of Lankā (verse 21). In the Vanaparva 15 there is a fine description of Dvāravati (Dvārakā) besieged by Śālva, in which it is said that the capital had numerous towers and turrets, machines, tomaras, ankuṣas, śataghnīs &c In Ādi. 207. 34, Vanaparva 169. 16, 284. 5, 290. 24, Drona 156. 70, Karna 11. 8, Śālya 45. 110 the śataghnī is mentioned, but it is impossible to find from these what exactly it was like From Vanaparva 284. 31 it appears that the śataghnīs were discharged with force by the hands and had wheels and round balls or stones in it. In Drona 179. 46 it is said that the śataghnī employed by Ghatotkaca had wheels and killed four horses at once In Drona 199. 19 śataghnīs are said to have two or four wheels. In Vanaparva<sup>282</sup> 284. 4 it is said that the powder of sarjarasa (resin from Sal tree) had been collected In the Harivaṃśa (Bhaviṣyaparva 44. 20), among the weapons hurled at Narasimha by Hiranyakaśipu were blazing śataghnīs (śataghnībhiḥ śā dīptābhir-dandairāpi sudārunaiḥ) In Rāmāyana VII. 32. 44 we are told that at the tip of the weapon called musala (club) blazed forth fire like a bunch of Āśoka flowers. The Sundarakāṇḍa couples together śataghnī and musala (4. 18). It looks probable that resinous powder was used in some cylindrical contrivance (or rockets) mounted on wheels and capable of throwing stones. But gunpowder appears not to have been used There is no description of smoke due to śataghnīs. Hopkins (J. A. O. S. XIII pp 299-303) holds that gunpowder and fire-arms were unknown to the great Epic and in the present state of our knowledge this view seems to be correct.

The Nitiprakāśikā (chapters 2-5) names and describes numerous weapons divided into four classes viz mukta (thrown or discharged such as arrows), amukta (not thrown such as swords), muktāmukta (thrown and not thrown, such as astras which after discharge can be taken back) and mantramukta (astras which cannot be taken back). The Agnipurāṇa (249-252) and the Viṣṇudharmottara (II 178-182) give a summary of the Dhanurveda (both agreeing almost word for word, but the latter containing more verses than the former) and speak of five kinds of weapons viz yantramukta (discharged from a machine, a sling, bow &c.), pāṇimukta (thrown with the hand such as a stone or tomara), muktāmukta (like a prāsa), amukta (sword) and niyuddha or bāhuyuddha (wrestling). The science of astras was of a supernatural kind. In the epics and purāṇas, the great heroes are said to have learnt astravidyā either from a teacher or from their father or by practising austerities and sometimes (as in the case of Kuśa and Lava) certain astras pass to the son by the mere fact of his birth and the wish of his father. Whether the Dhanurveda often referred to in the epics had consigned this science of astras to writing and could have enabled a reader to possess the miraculous powers attributed to astras is more than a modern can say. The Agnipurāṇa (chap. 134-135) contains magical incantations for victory in war and conquest of the worlds. The Parāśurāmapratāpa (Rājavallabhakāṇḍa folios 9-12) contains numerous mantras and yantras and incantations derived from Tantra works like the Brahmayāmala.

The Mahābhārata is careful to point out that an army constitutes the most inferior kind of bala (power). Udyogaparva (37 52-55) states that bala is of five kinds viz. brute force (bāhubala), that due to the acquisition of ministers (amātyalābha), that derived from wealth (dhanalābha), that from noble descent (abhyātābala) and the power of wisdom (prajñābala), which last is the best of all. These are quoted by the Budhabhūṣana p. 79. In Śānti 134 8 it is said<sup>283</sup> that there is nothing that the strong cannot accomplish and that whatever the strong do is pure. In another place it is said 'everything is wholesome to the powerful' (Āśramavāsi 30. 24). In Ādi 175. 45 a warrior's power is scorned and the power of the spiritual merit of brāhmanas is extolled as the real power.

CHAPTER IX

SUHRT OR MITRA (ALLY OR FRIEND).

Manu inculcates the necessity of making friends in VII 208 and cites the qualities of a good friend (for a king) 'a king does not prosper by the acquisition of gold and land so much as by securing a firm friend who would be powerful in future, though he may be of depleted resources at the time, That friend, though a weak one, is commended, who is righteous, grateful, whose subjects (or ministers) are contented, who is attached and who pursues (to the end) work undertaken' According to Manu VII. 206 land, gold and ally are the three fruits of royal endeavour or policy. Yāj I 352 is similar to Manu VII. 208. In VII 9 Kautilya in opposition to the above holds that the acquisition of land is better than that of gold and friend and the acquisition of gold is superior to that of a friend<sup>284</sup>. The Mahābhārata (Śānti 138.110) states 'no one is the friend or enemy of any one else; friends or enemies are made by wealth (or objects pursued by a person)'.<sup>285</sup> Kām. VIII 52 says the same. Śūkra. (IV. 1.8-10) opines 'in the case of a brave, energetic, strong and politic king all others, though outwardly friendly, secretly cherish enmity to him and only wait for (the proper) time (to strike) There is no wonder in this. Are they not themselves greedy of conquering territories? A king has no friend and he is the friend of none'. Śānti (80. 3) says<sup>286</sup> that a friend is of four kinds, one who has the same goal, one who comes for protection or security, one who is naturally so and one who is acquired. Karnaparva 88. 28 gives the four kinds somewhat differently viz. natural (sahaja), acquired by conciliatory words, won by wealth and one drawn by one's prowess. Kām. (IV. 74) says that a mitra is of four kinds viz. by birth (such as one's father's father, mother &c.), made by relationship (i. e. marriage), hereditary (one's father's friend), one who is saved from calamities.<sup>287</sup> According to Kām. (IV. 75-76) the qualities of a friendly king are purity (of heart), liberality, bravery, sharing happiness and sorrow, affection, vigilance (to carry out one's friend's object), truth; and briefly the characteristic of a true friend is devotion to the objects desired by his friend. The purpose for which a friend is made is to secure one of the three purusārthas, dharma, artha and kāma (Kām. IV. 73).

This subject of making friends leads on to the well-known theory of mandala i. e. of inter-state relationship. Kaut. VI. 2 and VII, Manu VII. 154-211, Āśramvāsiparva 6-7, Yāj. I 345-348, Kām. VIII-XI, Agnipurāṇa 233 and 240, Viṣṇudharmottara II. 145-150, Nītivākyaṃrta pp. 317-343, Rājantiprakāśa pp. 316-330, Nītimayūkha pp. 44-46 deal with this theory of mandala and the six guṇas at great length. As the Kautiliya is probably the earliest of these and contains the most elaborate treatment of the subject, a brief outline from it is presented here. The Nītivākyaṃrta (pp. 311-313) copies the very words of Kautiliya.

The yogakṣema (welfare) of a State springs from peace (sama) and exertion (vyāyāma). The latter achieves the completion of works undertaken, while śama brings about the undisturbed enjoyment of the fruits of undertakings. The (proper) employment of the six guṇas (sandhi &c.) is the source of śama and vyāyāma. What results (udaya) from these six guṇas is either deterioration, stagnation or progress. Udaya depends upon human and divine causes which together govern the world. The human ones are naya and apanaya. Human causes are seen (anticipated) and can be operated (by men). Naya (good policy) is that out of the human causes from which results yogakṣema (welfare); apanaya (impolitic way) is that which produces loss (or an unfavourable state). In VI. 1 (last verse) Kautiliya says that a king who understands naya and is endowed with the ātma-guṇas and all the elements of the State will conquer the whole world, though originally he may have a small kingdom. The mandala theory is set out in relation to a king who is called vijigīṣu (the ambitious ruler or conqueror). Kām. VIII 6 defines<sup>288</sup> vijigīṣu as a king who aspires to extend his territories, who is possessed of all the seven elements of sovereignty, who has great energy and who makes great efforts. In verses 7-11 he mentions at length his qualities. All our works place before kings this ideal of conquest, domination or self-aggrandizement at the expense of one's weak neighbours. A vijigīṣu is a king who is endowed with good qualities (called ātmasampat on p 45 above) and with the several elements of the State and who is the fountain of policy (naya), i.e. who has a definite good policy to pursue. An ari (actual or potential enemy) is a king or kings who are the immediate neighbours on the circumference of the kingdom of the vijigīṣu. From this it follows that ari may comprehend one king, two kings or more who are the immediate neighbours of the vijigīṣu. But it should be remembered as insisted upon by the Nitivākyaśmṛta<sup>289</sup> (p. 321) that there is no inflexible rule that the immediate neighbour is an enemy and that the king whose dominion is beyond the immediate neighbour will be a friend. Contiguity or distance is not necessarily the cause of friendship or enmity, but rather it is the purpose (or object) that makes friends or enemies. All that is meant is that the immediate neighbour is most likely to be an ari (a real or potential enemy). A mitra (friend of the vijigīṣu) is he who is separated (from the vijigīṣu) by the intervention of the kingdom of the ari. A śatru is a neighbouring ruler possessed of the characteristics of an enemy<sup>290</sup> (detailed in Kaut. VI 1). The yātavya (to be attacked or invaded by the vijigīṣu) is an ari who is involved in difficulties. From this it is clear that in the terminology of Kautilya ari is a generic expression including actual and potential enemies who will generally be on the borders of the kingdom of the vijigīṣu. A śatru is an ari who invites attack or destruction or harassment or reduction. That enemy who is plunged in vices or calamities may be attacked and is then called yātavya<sup>291</sup>; one who has no support or has only a weak support is to be extirpated; an enemy who is the opposite of this last (i.e. who has a support or strong support) is to be either harassed or to be reduced. Support (āśraya) means a strong fort or a good friend (Kām. VIII. 60). So that a śatru is of four sorts (yātavya, ucchedya, pīdanīya, karsanīya). Harassment is caused to him who is without mantra and a strong army, while one who is strong in mantra and army is to be rendered weak in these respects. Both a śatru or a mitra are of three kinds, sahaja, kṛtrima and prākṛta. A sahaja (natural) friend is one who is related through one's parents (such as maternal or paternal aunt's son); one who is resorted to for wealth or safety is kṛtrima (acquired) i. e. one who has obliged the vijigīṣu or has been under his obligations; and the king who is next to the neighbour (i. e. who is separated from the vijigīṣu by the intervention of the neighbour king) is prākṛta (i. e. because he is a prakṛti, an element in the maṇḍala theory). A sahaja enemy is one who is born of the same family (such as a step-brother), a kṛtrima is one who is antagonistic or incites antagonists (i. e. one who has caused harm to or who has been harmed by the vijigīṣu), while the immediate neighbour is a prākṛta enemy. The Mit. on Yāj. I. 345 very concisely but lucidly explains all these and the four kinds of śatru. The Visnudharmottara (II. 145. 15-16) and the Agnipurāṇa (233. 21-22) say that in their opinion the prākṛta is really kṛtrima. Kām. VIII. 56 also speaks of only two, sahaja and kṛtrima. Although it is possible that the vijigīṣu's realm is surrounded by many kings, the one who is taken for discussion is the enemy and is to be regarded as in front (purastāt) of the vijigīṣu. Therefore in front of the vijigīṣu come in order the ari (immediate neighbour), then the mitra (whose domain is next after that of the ari), then the arimitra (the friend of the enemy who will be immediately after the mitra of the vijigīṣu and so will be the enemy of the mitra), then comes the mitra-mitra (friend of the friend of the vijigīṣu) and then arimitra-mitra (ally of the enemy's friend). When the ari is said to be in front of the vijigīsu, the ruler of the territory in the opposite direction is said to be in the rear of the vijigīsu (paścāt) and is called pārsnigrāha<sup>292</sup> (lit one who may seize or attack the heels) He is really an enemy but this special term is applied to him and he causes trouble in the realm of the vijigīsu when the latter has started on an invasion or is about to start on one. The king who is the ruler of the country beyond the pārsnigrāha is called ākṛanda (lit one for whose help a cry is or may be raised by the vijigīsu). He would ordinarily be a friend being separated from the vijigīsu by the realm of the pārsnigrāha. The friend of the pārsnigrāha (who would be immediately next after the ākṛanda) is called pārsnigrāhāsāra and the friend of the ākṛanda who would be beyond the pārsnigrāhāsāra is called ākṛandāsāra. A madhyama<sup>293</sup> king is one whose realm is close to (is on the border of) that of the vijigīsu and that of the ari (the immediate enemy in front) and who is capable of helping (or favouring) both of them whether both are combined in alliance or not and who is capable of resisting either of them individually when the two are not in combination. An udāsina king is generally defined as one whose territory is beyond or outside of the sphere of the realms of the vijigīsu, his enemy in front and the madhyama, who is very strong on account of his elements of sovereignty, is capable of helping the above three kings whether they be in combination or not and who is capable of resisting any of the three when they are not in combination. Kullūka on Manu, VII 153 differs from this explanation i.e the udāsina is a powerful king whose realm may be situated in front or in the rear or even at a distance from that of the vijigīsu, but he is indifferent for some reason or other to the activities of the vijigīsu. The Mit on Yāj I. 345 observes that the udāsina also is of three kinds and the prākṛta udāsina is the overlord of the State that is separated from the central state (vijigīsu) by two intervening States; the madhyama (or madhyastha acc. to Nītivākyaṃrta p. 318) is the immediate neighbour of both the vijigīsu and his enemy, but wants to remain neutral in the conflict of the two for some reason. It will have been noticed that the vijigīsu, the enemy, the madhyama and the udāsīna are independent catagories, while four out of the remaining eight others viz. mitra, mitramitra, ākranda, ākrandāsāra can be grouped under vijigīsu, while the other four viz. arimitra, arimitramitra, pārśnigrāha and pārśnigrāhāsāra may be grouped under ari. It is therefore that Manu (VII. 155-156) speaks of the four prakṛtis (vijigīsu, śatru, madhyama and udāsīna) as the mūla (basis) of the maṇḍala theory and Kām. VIII. 20 informs us that Maya declared that a maṇḍala was constituted by these four. Kām. VIII. 86 gives it as his own opinion that maṇḍala is constituted by mitra, udāsīna and ipu (enemy) only.<sup>294</sup> Kautilya says that the maṇḍala is constituted as explained above by twelve prakṛtis. Uśanas was of the same opinion (Kām. VIII. 22) and Kām. (VIII. 41) states that there were numerous views about the number of the elements of the maṇḍala, but a maṇḍala of twelve kings is quite clear and well-known among all people.<sup>295</sup> Kām. (VIII. 20-41) explains how by various combinations of the elements of the maṇḍala with some elements of sovereignty (viz. ministers, rāstra, durga, kośa, bala) different writers held that the maṇḍala comprised 18, 26, 54, 72, 108 and other numbers of prakṛtis. The Sarasvativilāsa (pp. 37-41) shows how from different standpoints Uśanas himself argued that the maṇḍala was constituted by one prakṛti, two, three, 10, 21, 108 and that other writers speak also of 4, 5, 6, 14, 18, 30, 36, 44, 60, 72 prakṛtis. All these figures are due to the inveterate habit of scholastic minds to run an idea to the earth and to indulge in divisions and sub-divisions. Even Manu (VII. 157) states that combining each of the twelve members of maṇḍala with the five elements of sovereignty from amātya onwards we get 60 which with the twelve<sup>296</sup> come to 72. It is to this that the Daśakumāracarita (VIII p 144) refers when speaking of the tree of naya that it has 72 prakrtis as its leaves (dvisaptatiprakrtipatraḥ nayavanaspatih). The central idea of the mandala was to keep a balance of power among a circle of States, some being friendly among themselves owing to their position and surroundings, while others would form an antagonistic group. Kaut (VI 2) also refers to this number 72, out of which twelve are constituted by kings (rājaparakrtis) and 60 (five sovereignty elements of each of the twelve) are styled (daiyaparakrtis). The Śāntiparva (59 70-71) also refers to a mandala of 12 kings and to the number 72. Vide N. N. Law's 'Studies in Ancient Hindu Polity' pp 195-208 for elucidation of the theory of mandala. The theory of mandala has this element of truth in it that on a calculation of probabilities the kings who are the immediate neighbours of a ruler are likely to be his enemies (at least potential) and the kings that are beyond the immediate neighbours may make common cause with the central State taken for discourse in order to crush between them a hostile intermediate State. It suggests that diplomacy may take the lines indicated by position and probabilities. The diagram below will<sup>297</sup> illustrate the idea. Manu (VII 177 and 180) declares that (state) policy consists briefly in this that a king must so arrange all things or means that the ally, the udāsina and the satru cannot harm him or become superior to him. Medhātithi (on Manu VII 177) remarks that even an ally may become an enemy if his interest so requires (sānīthagahvatsācca matamapyarabharat).

Kautilya<sup>298</sup> relates the theory of mandala to the theory of takṣa (already referred to on p 171) and the six-fold policy (sadgunya)

298 विजिगीषुः शक्यपेक्षः बाह्यगुण्यसुपयुज्यते । कौ VII 3. बाह्यगुण्यस्य प्रकृतिः मण्डलं योनिः । सन्धिविग्रहासन्धानसंश्रयद्वैधीमावाः बाह्यगुण्यमित्याचार्याः । कौ. VII 1: मण्डलानि समाचक्ष्व विजिगीषोर्यथाविधि । यान्थाभिरप्य द्वयैः कार्यं सन्धिविग्रहचिन्तनम् ॥ विष्णुधर्मोत्तरे II. 145. 6.

Everything secures success (i.e. his and his kingdom's happiness) according as the king is able to put forth each of the śaktis to their utmost. The aspiring king taking into account his three śaktis may employ the six gunas (methods of policy). The circle of the twelve States gives rise to the employment of the six methods. Differing from Vāṭavyādhi (who said that there were only two methods, sandhi and vighraha) and for once agreeing with the ācāryas, Kautilya accepts the position that there are six gunas and briefly defines them. The Sarasvativilāsa (p. 42) quotes a sūtra of Gautama about the six gunas, which is not found in the printed text.<sup>299</sup> Kautilya defines the six as follows: Sandhi<sup>300</sup> means making an arrangement or agreement; vighraha means taking up a hostile attitude; āśana means an attitude of indifference; gāna means preparing (for attacking one's enemy); saṁśraya means taking shelter (with another powerful king); dvaiddhibhāva means making peace with one king and adopting a hostile attitude to another. He then states that a king who is less strong than his neighbour may make an agreement with him, one who is rising in power may take up a hostile attitude, whoever thinks 'the hostile king cannot hurt me nor can I hurt him' may remain indifferent (or neutral) in his own State, one who is endowed with all advantages may march against the enemy, whoever is devoid of strength should seek the protection (of a powerful ruler), and one should resort to a two-fold attitude when one's object can be accomplished by a friend. Some other works give more exact definitions and also define dvaiddhibhāva somewhat differently, viz. dvaiddhibhāva is dividing one's army into two parts. Vide Visṇudharmottara<sup>301</sup> II. 150. 3-5 and Mit. on Yāj. I. 346. Some say that saṁśraya means seeking the protection of the udāsina or madhyama king. Kautilya (book VII) gives the most elaborate treatment of these six gunas and so do

Manu VII 160 ff, Kām. IX-XVI, Visnudharmottara II 145-150, Agnipurāṇa 240, Mānasollāsa pp 94-116, Rājantiprakāśa pp. 324-413. Only a few remarks are all that considerations of space allow. Manu (VII 162-168) states that each of the gunas is of two sorts. Kām. IX. 2-18 and Agni 240 enumerate sixteen kinds of sandhis and Kām defines them. His treatment is based on Kaut. VII 3 Kaut (VII. 3) says that when a weak king is attacked by a powerful king who is the leader in a circle of States, the former should at once submit and sue for peace on condition of offering his army, treasury, himself and his territory. Then he says that sandhis made on condition of offering the army are of three kinds viz ātmaṃśa (lit. offering himself as the prey, which involves the condition that the king himself with a fixed number of troops or with the flower of his army would present himself when called), ātmaraksana (saving himself, where the condition is that the commander-in-chief or the crown prince would present himself with an army), adrsta-purusa (lit. in which no person is definitely prescribed, where the agreement is that some one on the king's behalf or the king himself should march with the army to some place as required by the invader) These sandhis are called dandopanata (lit. in which submission is made with the army) Sandhis made on condition of offering the treasury (kośopanata) are parikraya (lit. price, where by offering the treasury the other elements of rajya are kept free), upagraha (where as much money is offered as can be carried on a man's shoulder), kapāla (lit. broken half of a pot, where an immense amount of money has to be paid) Sandhis called desopanata (submission with offer of territory) are ādiṣṭa (where a part of the realm is ceded and the rest saved from the invader), ucchunna (where all the realm except the capital which has been deprived of all its wealth is offered), apakāśya where by offering the produce of the land the kingdom is freed, paribhūšana where the agreement is to pay more than the produce of the land Kām adds some varieties and remarks (IX. 21-22) that upahāra (offering a present) is the only sandhi (of which all the rest are varieties) in his opinion, that only the matra sandhi (alliance of friendship without the offer of land, money or anything else) does not come under upahāra<sup>302</sup> Kām IX. 20 and Mānasollāsa (II 11

pp. 94-95) speak of four sandhis, mantra, parasparopahūra (agreement to help each other), sambandhaja (by offer of a princess in marriage) and upahāra. An interesting example of a sandhi is furnished by the Lekhapāṭicāśikā which gives a form of treaty dated Monday, Full Moon of Vaiśākha in śamāt 1288 (1232 A. D.) between Yādava king Singhana of Devagiri who is styled mahārājādhirāja and Lāvanyaprasāda (Lavanaprasāda) a Vāghela king who is styled ṛāṇaka and mahūmaṇḍaleśvara, whereby the high contracting parties agreed not to invade each other's possessions, to combine and oppose anyone else who invaded one of them. Vide Bom. G. Vol I part 1 p. 200 based on Bhandarkar's Report on the search for Mss. 1882-83 pp 38-40. Kām IX. 23-26 and Agnipurāṇa 240. 10-13 mention twenty kinds of persons with whom sandhi should not be made, Kām. (IX. 27-41) states the reasons why it should be so and in IX. 42-52 seven persons are enumerated with whom he recommends sandhi and gives reasons. A king should make sandhi even with one equal in strength (not only with one who is more powerful), since victory in battle is doubtful (Kām. IX. 59) <sup>303</sup> Kaut uses a striking simile when he says that if one king comes in conflict with an equal they both will be destroyed in the same way as two unbaked earthen pots striking against one another. If a more powerful king rejects the proposal of a weaker king for sandhi, the latter should take up the attitude of offering his army or follow the course prescribed in book XII (ū baliyasaṃ) In VII. 12 when dealing with agreements between kings, about undertakings to build forts or irrigational works or forests &c. Kaut makes very interesting remarks about land routes being superior to water routes and about the route to the Deccan and the south being more profitable than the one leading to the Himālayas. <sup>304</sup> Kām X. 15 (= Agni 240. 19) says that vara (hostile attitude) is of five kinds viz that of step-brothers, that due to land (seizure of or encroachment on lands or houses), due to woman (carrying away one's wife or loving the same woman), due to words (cutting speech) and due to wrongs. Kām. X. 2-5

( = Agni. 240. 20-24 ) enlarges upon the 16 ways in which vigraha ( hostility ) springs, such as seizing the kingdom, wife, districts, vehicles ( horses, elephants ) and wealth of another, pride, harassment of subjects &c. When a king feels that his own army is well-nourished and pleased, that his subjects are prosperous and contented and that the army and subjects of another are the opposite of this, then he may adopt a hostile attitude and when he feels sure that he will secure one of the three fruits of hostility ( viz. land, ally and wealth—Kām. X. 26-28 ). Kaut. VII 15 deals with the attitude and conduct of a conquered king who has offered to the conqueror his army ( dandopanata-vrita ), while VII 16 speaks of the conduct of the dandopanāyī ( an aspiring king who wants to make by means of his army another king submit to him ) Yāna means marching for invasion on the part of a vijigīsu whose army and prowess are of the highest and whose subjects are contented on account of his good qualities ( Kām. XI 1 ) The Matsya 240 2 and the Agnipurāṇa ( 228. 1-2 ) add that when the enemy in the rear is overwhelmed by an ākṛanda, then the vijigīsu should start on an invasion or when the enemy is plunged in calamities But before actually invading the enemy who is yātavya ( chosen for attack ) an ambassador ( dūta ) should be sent ( Kām. XII 1 ) to see whether the enemy will submit without fighting That is, there was to be no war without negotiations and an ultimatum In the Mahābhārata ( Udyoga 83 5-7 ) it is said that Kṛṣṇa started as an envoy from the Pāṇavas to the Kauravas at the end of sarad ( autumn ) on the Revatī nakṣatra in the month of Kārtika ( verse 7, Kaumude māsṛ revatīyām saradante himṛgame ) In the Purāṇas and the medieval digests elaborate rules are laid down about the religious and propitiatory ceremonies before starting on an invasion. The Visnudharmottara II 176 and Agnipurāṇa 236. 1-18 require that for seven days before starting on an invasion the king is to engage in the worship of and make offerings to various gods, first to Gaṇapati, then to all the guardians of the quarters, the planets, Aśvins, Viṣṇu and Śiva and the images in the temples of his capital Then he is to note what good and bad dreams he sees on those days in his sleep and judge accordingly Vide Matsya 242, Agnipurāṇa 229 for dreams portending good and evil This prognostication of good fortune from dreams is very ancient The Chāndogya Up ( V 2 8-9 ) quotes a verse to the effect that when a man is engaged in the performance of solemn sacrifices for securing some object and sees a woman in a dream he should feel that his rite will be crowned with reward. Similarly the Ait.<sup>305</sup> Ār. III 2. 4 mentions the signs of approaching death, one of which is to see in a dream a dark person with black teeth. Both these passages are quoted by Śaṅkarā in his bhāṣya on Vedāntasūtra II 1. 14. The Visnudharmottara II 132-144 (based on Garga), II 164, Matsya 228-241, Agni 230-232 are concerned with the portents and omens in the heavens, in the sky and on the earth and rites (śāntis) meant to avert the evil prognostications from them. The Mānasollāsa II 13 pp. 97-112 and Rājānitiprakāśa pp 331-351 also deal with these and other astrological matters, which are passed over here, though some of them are very interesting e. g. Visnudharmottara II 135. 1 refers to the weeping and dancing of images. On the 6th day from the time the rites begin which is the day previous to the starting of the invasion the king undergoes a ceremonial bath for victory called jayābhuseka. This is described at great length in the Rājānitiprakāśa pp. 351-395 quoting extensive passages from the Lingapurāna. The ceremony of Jayasnāna resembles the coronation ceremony in many respects. The Matsyapurāna 243 15-16 and the Visnudharmottara II 163. 18-31 contain the same long list (with very slight variations) of articles, persons and animals the sight of which is auspicious when the king starts on an invasion and Matsya (243. 2-14) contains another long list of inauspicious sights. A few of the auspicious ones are white flowers, jars full of water, cows, horses, elephants, fire in flames, a courtesan, dūrvā grass, gold, silver, copper, all gems, sword, umbrella, banner, corpse not accompanied by crying persons, fruits, the svastika sign. Among the inauspicious things and sights are dark grains, cotton, dried cowdung, fuel, jaggery, tonsured or naked man or man with dishevelled hair or wearing reddish robes, a lunatic, a cāṇḍāla, a pregnant woman, broken pot, chaff, ashes, bones. The Mānasollāsa II 13 verses 811-823 (pp. 102-103), Nītimayūkha pp 58-59 also give long lists of inauspicious and auspicious sights or events. Matsya 243. 27 and Visnudharmottara II 163. 32 are both careful to add that all evil signs are counterbalanced by the confident (or joyous) frame of the mind, which is the highest sign of victory.<sup>306</sup> Gaut.

(XI. 15-17) prescribes that the king should heed the advice of astrologers and of those who are adepts in averting the effects of portents and perform the rites indicated by them such as grahasānti, rites on auspicious days and of svastyayana, rites of black magic against his enemy &c. Kaut. IX. 7 (at the end) says that the removal of divine calamities is brought about by the worship of deities and by honour to brāhmanas and by performing rites prescribed in the Atharvaveda. Manu VII. 82 and Yāj. I. 315 state that gifts made to learned brāhmanas are an inexhaustible treasure for the king. The Rājadharmakāṇḍa (p. 109) quotes the Brahmapurāṇa requiring the king to perform two Lakṣahomas every year and also a Kotihoma. The Rājadharmakāṇḍa (p. 113) and Rājanttiprakāśa (p. 144) quote Udyogaparva 33. 93-95 which set out eight indications of a man's approaching fall, viz. hating brāhmanas, opposing brāhmanas, depriving them of their wealth, desire to kill or harm them, taking pleasure in calumniating them, not liking their praise, not remembering them in religious acts and getting angry when they make requests.

It may be useful and interesting to see how in very ancient times the king was made ready for battle. The Āsv. Gr. S. (III. 12) says: when a battle is impending (the purohita) should make the king put on his armour (in the following way). The purohita should stand to the west of the chariot (of the king) muttering the hymn (Rg. X. 173) 'I have brought thee &c.'. He should hand over to the king his armour with Rg. VI. 75. 1 'when the man with armour advances it is like the appearance of the cloud &c.'. He hands over the bow with the next verse (Rg. VI. 75. 2 'dhanvanā gā'). The purohita should make the king recite the next verse (Rg. VI. 75. 3) and should himself mutter the 4th verse (Rg. VI. 75. 4). He should hand over the quiver to the king with the 5th verse (Rg. VI. 75. 5). When the chariot turns in the direction intended the purohita should mutter the sixth verse (Rg. VI. 75. 6). He should recite over the horses the 7th (Rg. VI. 75. 7). He makes the king recite the 8th (Rg. VI. 75. 8) when the latter looks at the arrows and makes the king recite Rg. VI. 75. 14 ('he envelopes his arm' &c.) when the latter fastens to his arm the leather (that protects his arm against the bow-string). When the king is being taken forward in the chariot by the charioteer the purohita ascends the chariot near the king and makes him recite the hymn called Abhivarta (Rg. X. 174) and the two verses (Rg. VIII. 101. 3-4). Then the priest looks at the king with the Apratiratha hymn (Rg. X. 103 'āsuh śiśāno'), the Śāsa hymn (Rg. X. 152 'śāsa itthā') and the Sauparna hymn 'pra dhārayantu madhuno ghrtasya'.<sup>307</sup> Then the king should traverse in order all directions in his chariot. He should stand in that direction in which the Sun (by day) or Venus (by night) shines and give fight from that direction. The king should pass his hand over the drum with the three verses (Rg. VI. 47. 29-31 'fill with breath (or roar) the heaven and the earth'). The king should discharge arrows with Rg. VI. 75. 16 and the purohita should mutter Rg. VI. 75. 17 ('where the arrows fall together &c.) when soldiers are fighting, or the purohita may direct or teach (the king to recite from the above such verses as are appropriate to his actions).<sup>308</sup> In the Harsa-carita (7th Uchvāsa first paragraph) Bāna favours us with a realistic and graphic description of the preparations made when Harsa marched out from his palace on his dagvijaya. Sāyana in his comment on Ait Br. 29. 9 (where the sauparna hymn is mentioned) gives an alternative explanation saying that the sauparna hymn referred to is the one declared in the grhyasūtra viz 'pra dhārā yanti &c.', i.e. he does not read 'pradhārayantu' as in the printed Aśv Gr., on Ait Br. 37. 7 (where the Abhivarta, Śāsa, Apratiratha and Sauparna hymns are mentioned) the comment of Sāyana as printed reads 'pradhārayantu'.

When starting on an invasion the king was required to perform a rite called nirājanāvidhi which consisted in waving lights before horses, elephants, banners, armies &c.<sup>309</sup> In II 30 Kautilya<sup>310</sup> prescribes that on the 9th day of Āsvina lights should be waved before horses and at the beginning and close of invasions and in times of diseases. In II 32 Kautilya speaks of the waving of lights before elephants thrice in the cāturmāsya (from about July to October) and at the time when two seasons meet. Kālidāsa in the Raghuvamśa 4.25 refers<sup>311</sup> to the performance of this ceremony when Raghu started on his digvijaya and states (in 17.13) that dūrvā grass, barley sprouts and the bark of the palāśa tree were required in the Nirājanāvidhi. Kām IV. 66 speaks of waving lights before horses and elephants (nirājita-hayadvipah). The Brhatsamhitā, chap. 44 (verses 16-28) deals with the ceremony of waving lamps before horses, elephants and men. This ceremony had to be performed every year in the month of Āsvina from the first to the 9th day of the bright half or on the 8th, 12th, or 15th of the bright half of Kārtika (acc. to the Brhatsamhitā 44.2) by those who owned horses and also elephants. It is also described in the Śaunakīya II 8, Āgripurāṇa 268, Viśnudevāsmottara II 159 (quoted at length in the Rājāniti-prakāśa pp 434-438), Kālikāpurāṇa 88.15 ff, Nirṇayasindhu II p 169, Yuktikālpataru p 178. The Brhatsamhitā describes it as follows:—In the north-east of the capital an ornamental arch of some holy tree was to be erected 10 cubits wide and 16 high. Round the necks of horses threads smeared with saffron paste and marking nut, with rice grains and white mustard and kustha plants tied on them were to be suspended. For seven days mantras addressed to the Sun, Varuna, Viśve-Devas, Prajāpati, Indra and Visnu were to be recited over the horses, during those days the horses were not to be harshly addressed nor struck with a whip and auspicious words were to be addressed to them, conches were to be blown, drums beaten and singing indulged in before them. On the 8th day, to the south of the arch a shed with its face to the north and covered with kuśa grass and barks was to be erected and in front of it on a vedi fire was to be lighted and various materials and plants such as sandal-wood were to be collected and thrown into jars full of water, various foods were to be offered as bali, fuel sticks of khadera and other holy trees were to be brought. The king seated on a tiger-skin and facing the east should sit near the fire together with an astrologer and horse doctor and should follow at the direction of the purohita the procedure laid down for Grahayajña (sacrifice to planets) and the raising of Indra's banner. A horse and an elephant possessing the most auspicious signs should be bathed and honoured with new white cloth, sandal-wood paste, garlands and incense and should be brought to the foot of the arch near the shed with sweet words to the accompaniment of music and conch-blowing. The movements of the horse and elephant should be watched and prognostications made therefrom about victory &c. A ball of food over which mantras have been recited should be offered to the horse and if the latter smells it or eats it that is a sign of coming victory. Dipping an udumbara twig in the jars filled with water and plants the purohita should touch therewith the horse, the elephant, the king and his soldiers to the accompaniment of mantras. Then making an effigy of the enemy the purohita should pierce it with a sharp and pointed stave in the region of the heart with incantations from the Atharvaveda and break it. The purohita should pronounce over the bridle vedic mantras and insert it in the mouth of the horse, which the king should ride and proceed in the north-east together with his army, with drums beaten, conches blown and banners displayed. This is a propitiatory rite (śānti) as said by Varāhamihira (Brhat-samhita 44.2) and the Agnipurāṇa 26.8 and 31 and must have been in vogue centuries before Kautilya flourished.

The duty of the conqueror, after vanquishing his opponent, to place on the throne of the late king his son or a kinsman and to respect the customs and usages of the territory conquered has already been set forth above (p. 71) Conquests resulted in either loss of territory or more generally in the offering of tribute of various kinds to the conqueror viz. wealth (gold and silver), horses, elephants, pearls and gems, fine cloth &c Particularly horses from Kāmbōja, Bālīhika, Gāndhāra and other countries in the north and west were highly prized Vide Sabhā 51.10, 53 5, Udyoga 86. 6, Drona 156. 47, Sautika 13. 2; and Sabhā 27 27, 28 6 for horses as tribute. In Sabhā 30, 28-30 all the above kinds of tribute are said to have been levied from the Mleccha kings by Bhīma<sup>312</sup>

Kautilya devotes one book (VIII) to the discussion of vyasana. Vyasana<sup>313</sup> means 'what deprives a man of great good' (from the root 'as' to throw with 'vi') According to Kaut vyasana may be either the absence of qualities (such as noble birth) or the opposite of such qualities, faults (such as hot temper), excessive attachment (to women &c), harassment (by invasion or calamities like famines) So vyasanas may broadly be divided into two classes viz calamities and faults due to kāma (passion) and krodha (hot temper) The view of many ācāryas is that of the vyasanas of the king, ministers, the people of the realm, fort, treasury, army and ally, the vyasanas of each preceding one are more serious than those of each succeeding one From the discussion in VIII 1 it appears that Kautilya in this case agrees with the ācāryas Differing from Bhārdvāja Kaut holds that the calamities befalling a king or his vices are more serious in their consequences than those of the ministers, since it is the king who appoints the ministers, the purohita, other servants and superintendents of departments and he can employ others in their places and since the rise or fall of the people depends upon him Disagreeing with Viśālākṣa Kautilya holds that the vyasanas of ministers have more serious consequences than those of the people, as all (national) undertakings proceed from the ministers, as the security of person and property from internal and external enemies, adoption of remedies to resist calamities, recruiting of army, collection of taxes are all in their hands. Differing from the school of

Parāśara, Kautilya is of opinion that the vyasana of the people has graver consequences than that of the fort (or capital), for forts, treasury and army, all irrigation and agricultural work, stability, bravery and abundance (of things) spring from the people. Against Piśuna, Kautilya states that the calamities befalling the fort (or capital) give rise to graver consequences than those of the army for the reason that it is in the fort that the treasury and army are kept safe. Kaut. (VIII. 2) holds that internal troubles are more serious than external ones and troubles due to ministers are the most serious of all internal troubles. Kaut. prefers an ignorant ruler (who has not studied śāstras) to a king who is bent on swerving from the dictates of śāstras which he knows; he prefers a king suffering from illness to a new king (a conqueror), a weak but a high-born king to a strong but low-born one. In VIII 3 he enumerates the several faults and vices which have already been stated above (p. 54). After remarking that ignorance and lack of training are the causes of vices or faults, Kaut. discourses on the relative seriousness of the several faults or vices and holds that gambling is worse than hunting, that sexual passion is worse than gambling, that drinking is worse than sexual vice and that gambling is the special cause of dissension among sanghas (corporate assemblies) and among families of nobles that have the characteristics of sanghas. In VIII. 4 he states that among divine visitations like fire, flood, epidemics and famine, floods are more devastating than fire, diseases and epidemics are less destructive than famine, that the loss of outstanding<sup>314</sup> men is more serious than that of common men even in large numbers, since there can hardly be one eminent man among a thousand ordinary or inferior men. He holds that the trouble caused by the Crown Prince is a lesser evil than that caused by a favourite queen. In VIII. 5 Kautilya holds a discussion on the troubles arising from the army and allies. He first enumerates thirty-three matters that may cause trouble with the army, such as not giving due respect to it, or showing contempt to it, not dispensing the pay at the proper time, not preventing diseases from attacking it, having soldiers who are very fond of their wives. He then takes pairs of troubles out of these and states which is the lesser evil of the two. Then he deals with causes that lead to the loss or defection of allies

In the Rājadharmakāṇḍa, the Rājanītiprakāśa and other works the king is advised to celebrate several rites and festivals, which may be briefly referred to here. They were meant as propitiatory rites to avert national calamities and also to keep the populace in good humour and to afford enjoyment to people. The Rājadharmakāṇḍa (pp 115-117) and the Rājanītiprakāśa (pp 416-419) quote about 35 verses from the Brahmapurāṇa to the effect that the king is to celebrate in one or more of the six months from Vaiśākha festivals (devayātrā) in honour of various deities such as Brahmā, the gods, the Ganges, Vināyaka, Nāgas, Skanda, the Ādityas, Indra and Rudra, the Mātṛs (Durgā and others), the Earth, Viśvakarman, Viṣṇu, Kāmadeva, Śiva, the Moon respectively on the tithis from the 1st to the 15th. The same two works quote a passage of 18 verses from the Skandapurāṇa about the festival of moonlight and also the rite of raising the banner of Indra and the latter quotes (pp 425-433) a long passage from the Viṣṇudharmottarapurāṇa also. Vide H of Dh. vol. II pp 825-26 for description of the festival of Indra's banner. They describe the worship of Devī on the 8th and 9th days of Āśvina (from the Devīpurāṇa) when animals were sacrificed, the gifts of cows on the Amāvāsya of Kārtika, the rite called Vasordhārā (stream of wealth). The details of all these are passed over here for want of space.

CHAPTER X

PURPOSE OF THE STUDY OF RĀJADHARMA AND THE ENDS OF THE STATE

In the preceding pages an attempt has been made to present a picture of the theory and practice of Government and statecraft as delineated by ancient and medieval Indian writers on dharmaśāstra and arthaśāstra. One feature that would strike any reader is the religious colouring with which all theories and ideals are suffused. Another is that the ideal set before rulers and their officers is a highly moral one. Several faults have been found in the theory and practice inculcated by the writers. Except for some centuries before and after the Christian era, monarchy has been the only form of government known in India and monarchy alone is generally envisaged by Indian writers. The result has been that the king came in practice to be almost synonymous with government and the State, though a very lofty sense of his duties and responsibilities was impressed on the king. Another defect lies in the almost total absence of discussion on the form and working of oligarchical or republican States. Besides, once the main outlines of the theory of the State were established by the first writers on polity, for about two thousand years succeeding generations of authors were content to follow in the old grooves and hardly ever made any fresh approach to the problems of government or started any rival conceptions or theories. Ancient authors were content to induce the kings and the people to support as far as possible the status quo. They thus provided for a more or less static society and did not encourage any dynamic thoughts or movements. There was no strong or assertive middle class nor was there any organized Church. Though the brāhmanas were a sacred class, they were not organized as a body and had to depend only on exhortations and texts to exert influence on the monarchs. It may no doubt be pointed out that similar conditions prevailed almost all the world over. Small States, constant wars and invasions were the commonest phenomena in Europe till the 15th or 16th century and no reproach should be levelled at the Indian writers alone. It cannot, however, be gainsaid that even after experiencing the constant plundering expeditions and religious persecutions of Scythian, Hun and Moslem invaders from the 1st to the 11th and the following centuries the able thinkers, warriors and statesmen of India did not enlarge their limited horizon and find means to consolidate and weld together into a united block the numerous small States that were scattered all over India. They could have put forward a common idea and ideal before all the provinces and peoples of India viz. meeting the onslaught of plundering and fanatical invaders, which, if properly handled, would have acted as a unifying force. It was to some extent only in Vijayānagara and Mahārāstra that in medieval times means were adopted to weaken the power of the invader, to present a solid front and establish powerful Hindu kingdoms. The old writers spun the same old webs of theories that had been there for centuries, they did not formulate new theories nor did they take steps to infuse into the common people a sense of solidarity and unity as Indians and did not inculcate deep and abiding sentiments of patriotism similar to those we find in Western countries for the last two or three hundred years. In spite of such drawbacks it will have to be conceded that ancient Indian writers made substantial and independent contributions to the theory and practice of Government and that their handiwork can stand comparison with the ancient and medieval thought of most countries of the world.

It may be asked: What in these days is the use of the study of the theory and practice of Government in ancient India? It may be argued that the world is now hoping, as promised by the great leaders of the United Nations, 'to enjoy several freedoms, that great expectations are created in the minds of millions of down-trodden peoples, and that all peoples including Indians will be faced in the near future with democracy and great problems of reconstruction and that knowledge of the past cannot throw much light on the pressing needs of the present or the serious questions that will confront all in the latter half of the 20th century. It may be conceded that the situation in which we find ourselves now and in which we shall be placed in the near future is unique and much light cannot be thrown by a study of the past on the solution of the problems that will have to be tackled by us. But that study has certain useful purposes to serve. Millions of people in India as well as in the world are hardly better than hewers of wood and drawers of water in their own countries. They intensely desire to be masters in their own countries and of their own destinies. The iron has entered deep in their souls that for countries as well as individuals freedom of action spells happiness and dependence on the will of others is misery (as Manu laconically puts in IV. 160), that men who have no independence are hardly human beings (as the Mārkaṇḍeya 125-29 says).<sup>315</sup> The study of the past will give us hope and convey the assurance that we have in the past conducted governments and administrations of vast empires, that we evolved theories and practices which were not inferior to those of some of the most advanced nations of the world, that, allowed opportunities and scope, we may rise equal to what the circumstances may demand of us. On the other hand, such a study will stimulate thought, focus our attention on our mistakes and shortcomings, make us be careful to avoid pitfalls and give us indications of the directions in which we must make a new orientation in our ideals and practices.

At the end of this section on Rājadharmā, a question may be asked: what were the ends or purposes that the State in ancient India placed before itself or the dharmasāstra and arthasāstra writers said the State should place before itself? The end of the State has been differently stated by different philosophers and theorists of the West from ancient times to the present day. To take only a few examples To Plato and Aristotle<sup>316</sup> the end of the State was good life for the citizens. But it is not very easy to say what is meant by the good life. Bluntschli in 'Theory of the State' (Oxford, 1885) Book V Chap. IV p. 300 formulates the proper and direct end of the State to be 'the development of the national capacities, the perfection of the national life and finally its completion', provided, of course, that the process of moral and political development shall not be opposed to the destiny of humanity. This definition is not easy to grasp. There is no agreement as to what is the destiny of humanity and the concepts of nation and national life are hardly older than a few centuries even in Europe. For 'nation' one may substitute the word 'country'

315. सर्वे परेषां दुःखं सर्वमात्मनः सुखम् । एतद्विद्यात्ममासेन लक्षणं सुखदुःखयोः ॥ मनु. IV. 160; स्वतन्त्रता मनुष्याणां परतन्त्रा सदायला । नरोपि परतन्त्रो यस्तस्य कीदृ-

316. Aristotle in 'Politics' says 'A state exists for the sake of a good life and not for the sake of life only .. Political society exists for the sake of noble actions and not of mere companionship' (Book III Chap. 9).

or 'kingdom'. Then it may be of some application to India. It is impossible to define the end of the State in a single word or in a few words. This question about the end of the State has been partly answered already when speaking of the ideals of kingship. At the risk of some repetition a reply to the above question may be given in the following words. The authors on Dharmaśāstra had a very low estimate of human nature, they believed that ordinarily men were depraved, that it was difficult to find a man pure by nature and that men were kept in the straight path by the fear of punishment (Manu VII 22 = Śānti<sup>316a</sup> 15. 34). Yāj I 361 requires the king to punish and bring to the proper path castes and guilds when they swerve from their dharma. Kām. (II. 40 and 42-43) says the same thing and adds that in the absence of danda the world will revert to the state of mātṣya-nyāya (the strong devouring the weak). Śūkra I. 23 says the same thing. The ancient writers did not rely on the natural moral impulses of man and on his will to do the right thing. The same ideas are expressed by some Western writers on law and politics. 'A herd of wolves is quieter and more at one than so many men, unless they all had one reason in them or have one power over them' says Jeremy Taylor. Salmond (Jurisprudence p 65) states 'man is by nature a fighting animal and force is the ultima ratio not of kings alone but of all mankind'. We must distinguish between immediate or proximate ends and the ultimate end. The ultimate end or goal of most of our philosophy was mokṣa (release or liberation from the ever-recurring cycle of births and deaths and from the miseries and suffering of life). The same was the ultimate goal of rājadharmā. But the proximate goal of the State in India was to create such conditions and environments as would enable all men to live in peace and happiness, to pursue their avocations, to follow their own customs and usages and their 'svadharma', to enjoy without interference the fruits of their labour and the property acquired by them. The king was the divinely provided instrument to create the conditions of peace, order and happiness. If the king impartially exercises the power of danda over all, whether his own son or enemy, in proportion to their guilt, he secures this world and the next for himself and the people; the king's scrupulous performance of his own duties leads him and his people to heaven. The task of the State (or the king who represented the State) was to repress by the threat and use of force any violation of the rights of personal freedom and property, to enforce the practice of people's own traditional customs and usages and to take serious care of virtues and dharma. These were the sentiments of Kāṭilya himself (III 1.).<sup>316</sup> At the very threshold of his work he remarks 'therefore the king should not allow people to swerve from or fail in their duties (dharma); for whoever holds fast by his dharma, observes the rules laid down for āryas and those of castes and āśramas (the stages of life) will be happy in this world and the next. The members of society consisting of four castes and having four āśramas when guarded by the king with danda will abide by their respective paths, being devoted adherents of their respective duties and avocations'.

Both Kām. I. 13 and Śukra I. 67 state<sup>317</sup> that a king following the path of righteousness confers upon himself and his subjects the group of three viz. the three puruṣārthas of dharma, artha and kāma; if he acts otherwise he certainly ruins (himself and the people). The same doctrine is inculcated by other works, such as Śānti 85. 2, Mārkaṇḍeya 27. 29-30.<sup>318</sup>

316 b. राज्ञः स्वधर्मः स्वर्गाय प्रजा धर्मेण रक्षितः । ... दृष्टो हि केवलो लोकः परं चेन च रक्षति ॥ राज्ञा पुत्रे च शत्रौ च यथादोषं समं धृतः ॥ कौटिल्य III 1; तस्मात्स्वधर्मं शूलानां राजानां न व्यभिचारयेत् । स्वधर्मं सन्दधानो हि प्रेत्य चेह च नन्दन्ति ॥ स्ववर्तिनार्यमर्षाद कृतवर्णाश्रमस्थितिः । त्रय्या हि रक्षितो लोकः प्रसीदति न सीदति ॥ कौटिल्य I. 3, last two verses; चतुर्वर्णाश्रमो लोको राज्ञा दृष्टेण पालितः । स्वधर्मकर्माभिरतो वर्तते स्वेष्टं वर्त्मसु ॥ कौटिल्य I 4, last verse.

Therefore what the king was to do was to see that the dharma of varna and āśrama were observed by the people and if they swerved from them to bring them back by punishments Śukra IV 4 39 says that each caste was to observe the rules of the caste handed down from generation to generation and that if its members behaved otherwise they were liable to be punished by the king. The principal works emphasize that each individual in the State should fulfil his own duties (svadharma) as belonging to a particular class (varna) or a particular stage of life (āśrama) or his own duties due to the position he occupies and those known as sāmānya dharma such as ahimsā, truthfulness &c (for which see H of Dh vol II pp 10-11) and that the purpose of the State was to enable him to do so and to prevent others from interfering with him. All this laid undue emphasis on the preservation of the status quo, on current beliefs and practices as the ideal. The writers do not emphasize that each individual must actively pursue the good of the society as a whole. As the final goal was moksa, undue emphasis was laid on other-worldiness, on individual attainment and on detachment and running away from ordinary worldly affairs. The goal of the State was deemed to be to enable men to attain the four puruṣārthas, particularly the first three (as the last viz moksa depended only upon individual philosophical insight and mystical experience and was attainable only by a microscopic number). Even the Bārhaspatya-sūtra<sup>319</sup> (II 43) says that the fruit of polity was the attainment of dharma, artha and kāma. Soma-deva begins his Nītivākyaṃṛta in a characteristic way when he performs obeisance to rājya (the State) that yields the three fruits of dharma, artha and kāma<sup>320</sup>. Kām.<sup>321</sup> IV. 77 winds up his discussion of the seven elements of rājya with the declaration that the entire State depends for its highest stability on wealth and the army and that the State when handled by a sagacious minister results in securing the three goals. Kautilya<sup>322</sup> (in I 7) first advises people not to eschew pleasures altogether, but to enjoy pleasures in such a way as not to conflict with the requirements of dharma and artha, and adds that a man may enjoy in an equal degree the three goals of life that are dependent on each other, since any one of the three if pursued to excess harms not only the other two but also itself. The Dharmaśāstra authors held that Dharma was the supreme power in the State and was above the king, who was only the instrument to realize the goal of dharma. To these authors the State was not an end in itself but only a means to an end. Kautilya, true to his position as a writer on arthaśāstra, finally states his opinion that artha is the chief among the three goals, as the other two depend upon wealth for their realization. With this statement of Kautilya, one of the most renowned figures of Indian antiquity, this section on rājadharma may be appropriately brought to a close.

(LAW AND ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE)

CHAPTER XI

That to administer justice impartially and to punish the guilty were among the prime functions of the sovereign has been stated above (p. 57) The king was deemed to be the fountain (i.e. the distributor) of justice Kautilya<sup>323</sup> (I. 19) prescribes that the king was to look into the disputes of citizens and country people in the 2nd part of the day (divided into eight parts). Manu (VIII. 1-3) states that the king desirous of looking into the disputes of people should enter the sabhā (the hall of justice) accompanied by brāhmanas, ministers and should there decide every day the causes of litigants. Śukra IV. 5.45 is the same as Manu VIII. 1, Vas. 16.2, Śankha-Likhita, Yāj. I. 327 and II. 1, Visnu Dh. S. III. 72, Nār. (I. 2), Śukra IV. 5.5, Manasollāsa II. 20, verse 1243 state that the administration of justice was the personal concern of the king. The Mit on Yāj. II. 1 says that protecting the subjects is the highest duty of a king and that that duty cannot be discharged without eradicating and punishing the wicked, which latter requires that the king should administer justice (vyavahāradarsana). Medhātithi on Manu VIII. 1 also says that protection consists in the removal of troubles, secular and spiritual (adrsta). Manu VIII. 12 and 14 (= Nār. III. 8-9 p. 42) personifies the administration of justice as Dharma incarnate by representing that when justice is administered the dart of adharma or falsehood by which dharma is pierced is taken out from the body of Dharma. Yāj. (I. 359-360) declares that the impartial administration of justice yields the same rewards as solemn vedic sacrifices do. In this way administration of justice was held to be a very sacred duty. Manu V. II. 128 (= Vṛddha-Hārta VII. 194) declares that a king who punishes those that do not deserve to be punished and who does not punish those that deserve punishment incurs great obloquy and goes to hell. Vas. (19.40-43) prescribes one day's fast for the king and three days' fast for the purohita when the king lets off those that deserve punishment and three days' fast for the king and the kṛcchra penance for the purohita when the king punishes the innocent. The Mahābhārata<sup>324</sup> (Anuśāsana 6-38 and chap. 70) and Rāmāyana say that if a king intent on pleasures does not show himself to litigants who approach him for decision, he would suffer like king Nrga. The Śukranitisāra (IV. 5-8) also says the same thing. In the Rāmāyana (VII. 53-54) king Nrga is said to have been cursed to become a chameleon for a long period by two brāhmanas who had a dispute about the ownership of a cow and could not see the king for many days. Megasthenes (Frag. XXVII pp. 70-71) says 'the king remains the whole day in court without allowing the business to be interrupted.' Kaut<sup>325</sup> (I. 19) gives the advice that, when in court, the king should not cause petitioners or litigants to wait long at the door, for when a king makes himself inaccessible, those who are near him create confusion about what should or should not be done, whereby the king engenders disaffection among his subjects and makes himself a prey to his foes. The king's court<sup>326</sup> of justice was called dharmasthāna (Śankha-Likhita), dharmāsana (Nārada I. 34, Manu VIII. 23, Śukra IV. 5-46) or dharmādhikarana (Kātyāyana and Śukra IV. 5-44). 'The place where the decision of the truth of the plaint (lit. the cause or root of dispute) is carried on by a consideration of the rules of the sacred law is called the dharmādhikarana (the Hall of Justice)'—says Kātyāyana Kālidāsa (Śakuntala V) and Bhavabhūti (Uttararāmacarita I.) employ the word dharmāsana.

The authors of smrtis believed that there was a golden age or era of perfect virtue in the dim past, when men were bent only on right conduct, that later ages saw the advent of sinful promptings, that therefore regulation of life by the learned and the king came into vogue (compare Gaut VIII. 1). Manu I. 81-82 (= Śāntiparva 231. 23-24) state that in the Kṛta age dharma prevailed in its perfection, there was no advent of adharma among men then and that in each of the three succeeding yugas dharma declined progressively by the introduction of theft, falsehood and deceit. The Śāntiparva (59. 13 ff) narrates that in the Kṛta age there was no king and no punishment, that gradually kāma (lust) and rāga (passion) began to wield sway and dharma dwindled away. This belief in an ideal or perfect past was universal and was probably depicted in order to induce men to rise higher and higher in goodness and virtue and to make them submit easily to the discipline of government and the priestly requirements. This ideal description of the past, is often found associated with the picture of anarchy that reigned in the dim past which was retrieved from horrors by the creation of the kingly office (vide pp 30-34 above). These diametrically opposite views of the past contained in the same works (such as Manu and the Mahābhārata) probably owe their origin to the desire of the writers to make the common people submit to the absolute rule of kings. Almost all works even from the Rgveda (X. 10. 10) downwards believe in the progressive deterioration of religion and morals. A state of anarchy is visualised in a few works only for the purpose of glorifying the great usefulness of the institution of kingship. Nār. I. 1 states<sup>327</sup> 'when people were solely bent on dharma and were truthful, there existed neither administration of law and justice nor hatred nor jealousy. When dharma declined (or disappeared) among men, administration of law and justice came to be introduced and the king was declared to be the decider of disputes and the chastiser (of the guilty)'. Br. also (S. B E. 33 p. 277) says 'In bygone ages men were pre-eminently virtuous and free from cruel tendencies; now that men are overwhelmed by greed and hatred, judicial procedure has to be declared'.

The idea of Dharma took the place of the very ancient conception of ṛta. In the Rgveda ṛta denotes the supreme transcendental law or the cosmic order by which the universe and even the gods are governed and which is intimately connected with sacrifice. Vide Rg. I. 68. 2, I. 105. 12, I. 136. 2, I. 142. 7, I. 164. 11, II. 28. 4, IV. 23. 8-10 (in which the word rta occurs ten times), X. 190. 1. On the relation of rta and law Berolzheimer in his 'The world's legal philosophies' (translated by Jastrow, New York, 1929) says: "closely connected with the religious and philosophical views of the Aryans are certain fundamental positions in regard to the philosophy of law which in turn became the antecedents of later legal and ethical developments among the Greeks and Romans. Foremost among these philosophical conceptions is 'rita', which is at once the organized principle of the universe and the divine ordering of earthly life; as the former it regulates the appearance of the sun and the moon, of day and night and embodies the unchangeable principle that pervades the succession of phenomena; as the latter it is affiliated with purpose and human benefit and is exemplified in the flow of the rivers which fertilize the fields; in the cattle useful to men; in the institutions of marriage, of the monarchical state, of the patriarchal home; and in man's sense of responsibility for his sins. The derivative conceptions of 'vrata', 'dharma', 'dhāma', 'svadhā' represent special aspects of 'rita'; thus 'vrata' refers to any specialized embodied 'rita'; while 'dharma' refers specifically to the moral function of rewarding good and punishing evil" (pp. 37-38). Vide Prof. V. M. Apte's paper on 'Rta' in the Rgveda (pp. 55-60 of the Silver Jubilee Volume of the Annals of the B. O. R. Institute) in which he tries to prove that rta means primarily 'the belt of the Zodiac'.

The word vyavahāra is used in several senses in the sūtras and smṛtis. One meaning of vyavahāra is 'transaction or dealing' as in Udyogaparva 37. 30 quoted above (on p. 207) or in Āp. Dh. S. II. 7-16-17, I. 6-20. 11 and 16. It also means 'a dispute, a lawsuit' in Śānti 69-28, Manu VIII. 1., Vas. 16-1, Yaj. II. 1., Visnu Dh. S. III. 72, Nār. I. 1 and 2, Śukra IV. 5-5. A third sense is 'legal capacity to enter into transactions' (as in Gaut. X. 48, Vas. 16.8, Śankha-Likhita (raksed rājā bālānām dhanānyapi āpā-vyavahārāṇām &c. quoted in V. R. p. 599) A fourth but a rare sense is 'the means of deciding a matter' (as in Gaut. XI. 19 'tasya vyavahāro vedo dharmaśāstrānyangāni &c.). In this chapter the word vyavahāra is taken to mean 'law-suit or dispute in a court' and 'legal procedure'. This sense is very ancient. In the Delhi-Topra Pillar Edict No. 1 of Aśoka (Corpus I. I. vol. I p. 123) we have the word 'viyohālasamatā' (vyavahārasamatā) and the word 'vyavahāravidhi' occurs in Kharavela's Hathigumpha Inscription (E. I. vol. XX. p. 79). A 'vohārika-mahāmatta' (vyāvahārika-mahāmātra, minister of justice) occurs in the Mahāvagga, I. 40. 3 and Chullavagga VI. 49). In the medieval digests, both law and procedure are sometimes dealt with in one book as in the Vyavahāra-nirnaya of Varadarāja and the Vyavahāra-mayūkha, sometimes the titles of law are treated of in one work and judicial procedure in another. For example, Candēśvara composed the Vivādaratnākara (on titles of law) and Vyavahāraratnākara (on judicial procedure). The word vyavahāra is restricted in some works to judicial procedure alone (as in the Vyavahāramātrkā of Jīmūtavāhana and the Vyavahāratattva of Raghunandana). The word vivāda which means 'dispute' is often used as a synonym for vyavahāra in the sense of law-suit or legal procedure or both. In Āp. Dh. S. II. 11.29.5 and in Nār. I. 5 vivāda means 'law-suit'. In the Vivādacandra of Misarumīśra and the Vivādatāndava of Kamalākara both law and judicial procedure are treated of. Yāj. (II. 8 and 305) appears to distinguish between vivāda (law-suit) and vyavahāra (judicial procedure).

The word 'vyavahāra.' is defined by several smrtis and commentators. Kātyāyana gives two definitions, one based on etymology and referring principally to procedure and the other giving the conventional sense having in view a dispute. "The (upasarga) vi is employed in the sense of 'various', 'āva' in the sense of 'doubt', 'hāra' means 'removing'; vyavahāra is so called because of its removing various doubts" (quoted by Y. M.

p. 283, Par. M. III. p. 7 and Kullūka on Manu VIII. 1 ).<sup>32a</sup> This definition places the administration of justice on a high plane. The purpose of all branches of Indian philosophy is the quest of Truth or Reality. The purpose of legal procedure is, according to Kāt, the same viz. to find out the truth when there is a dispute. But there are some points of difference. The philosopher may take his own time in his search for truth; but justice has to be done as quickly as possible. Further, legal procedure has its own method and limitations in finding out the truth, that is, it depends on oral and documentary evidence, while a philosopher's quest of truth may be purely intellectual and subjective. Another definition is: 'When the ramifications of right conduct, that are together called dharma and that can be established with efforts (of various kinds such as truthful speech &c.), have been violated, the dispute (in a court between parties) which springs from what is sought to be proved (such as a debt), is said to be vyavahāra'. Hārta gives an easier definition: 'that is declared to be vyavahāra where the attainment of one's wealth (taken away by another) and the avoidance of the dharmas of others (such as those of heretics) are secured with (the help of) the means of proof' (quoted by the Śm. C. II. p. 1). The Mit. (on Yāj II. 1) defines vyavahāra as 'avermment (about a matter) as related to oneself in opposition to another'. Śūkra IV. 5. 4 gives another definition. The Vyavahāramayūkha gives a much more elaborate definition (vide text p 1 and notes pp. 3-4 of my ed.).

A vyavahārapada<sup>328</sup> means 'the topic or subject matter of litigation or dispute'. It is the same thing as 'vivādapada' which word occurs also in Kaut. (III.16 p 191 and IV. 7 p. 218) and in Nār. (dattāpradānika 1, abhyupetyāśusrūṣā 1). Manu VIII. 8 shows that 'pada' means 'sthāna'. Yāj. II. 5 defines it as 'If a person, who is set at naught by others in a manner that is opposed to the rules of smṛti and to good usage or conventions, informs the king (or his judge), that is a vyavahārapada'. From very ancient times eighteen vyavahārapadas have been enumerated. The underlying idea is that most of the disputes between men can be classified under 18 heads. Even Manu (VIII. 8) was conscious of the fact that the enumeration of 18 vyavahārapadas was a matter of a convenient arrangement and that the number 18 did not embrace all disputes whatever but only the largest number of disputes and the most important among them. Medhātithi and Kullūka make this position quite clear.<sup>329</sup>

There is some difference about the number and nomenclature of the vyavahārapadas among Manu and other writers of smṛtis. The following table will give some idea of the divergence as to nomenclature and the sequence in which they are treated of. All do not mention them in the same order as in Manu VIII. 4-7. For example, the order in Yāj. is rnādāna, upanidhi, dāyavibhāga, śimā-vivāda, svāmīpalavivāda, asvāmī-vikraya &c. Yāj. does not enumerate all of them in one place as Manu and Nārada do.

It will be noticed that Yājñ. omits the duties of husband and wife from the 18 topics of vyavahāra as he had already dealt with them in his section on ācāra, adds abhyupetyāśuśrūṣā and prakīrnaka (miscellaneous wrongs) and splits krayavikrayānuśaya into two and thus gives 20 topics. Nārada (I. 16-19) has the same 15 topics as those of Manu (in some cases under slightly different names), omits svāmipālavivāda, steya and strisangrahana, adds abhyupetyāśuśrūṣā and another topic viz prakīrnaka and splits krayavikrayānuśaya into two, viz kṛtānuśaya and akṛtānuśaya. He includes steya under sāhasa (sāhasa verse 21) and also in what is an appendix. Brhaspati as quoted in the Smṛti-candrikā (vyavahāra p. 9) names the 18 vyavahārapadas and adds prakīrnaka. Kautīlya also adds prakīrnaka and omits 'steya' under his dharmaśāstra section, though he deals with theft elsewhere (as in IV. 8 and 11). It is not to be supposed that the 18 topics were first started by the Manusmṛti. Gaut. XII. 1 mentions vākpārusya and dandapārusya, treats of some of the topics without specifying the technical names e.g. he refers to the subjects of sangrahana (in XII 2-3), of theft (XII 12-13), of svāmipālavivāda (in XII 16 ff), of mnādāna (in XII 26-33), of nidhi (in XII 39), of dāyavibhāga (in XXVIII). Similarly the Āp Dh. S. speaks in scattered places of some of the topics of vyavahāra such as murder (i.e. sāhasa) in I. 9. 24, of adultery in I. 9. 25. 1-2 and I. 10. 28 15-20, II. 10. 26 18 ff, theft in I. 9. 25 4-11, dāyavibhāga in II. 6 14, vākpārusya in II. 10. 27 14. Vas. also mentions the word dāyavibhāga (in XVII 40) and sets out rules about it and about means of proof (XVI 13-15), about mnādāna (XVI 31), about the twelve kinds of sons (XVII. 12-39). The Baud Dh. S. (II. 2 8) employs the word dāyavibhāga and gives several rules on that subject. Thus some at least out of the eighteen vyavahārapadas (such as vākpārusya, dandapārusya, dāyabhāga, steya) were distinctly recognized centuries before the present Manusmṛti was composed. Someśvara in Mānasollāsa (II. 20 verses 1265-1273) enumerates 22 vyavahārapadas, by splitting dattasyānapākarma into two as datta and dattāpahāraka, adds svāmibhrtyavivāda after svāmipālavivāda, counts krayavikrayānuśaya as two and dyūta-samāhvaya as two distinct topics.

The definition of vyavahārapada in Yājñ. II 5 (= Śukra IV. 5. 68) viz 'if a person informs or complains to the king' (āvedayati ced rūjñe) conveys that vyavahārapada means and includes only those disputes that are started or brought before the Court at the instance of the parties. Manu VIII. 43 prescribes that neither the king nor his officers should start a dispute (i. e. a legal proceeding), nor should he sit silent upon (hush up) a matter which has been brought before him by another (i. e. by a party). Gaut. XIII. 27 lays down that a party should humbly approach a judge with his complaint. Kātyāyana (27) states: 'The king<sup>330</sup> should not, through influence or through greed of money, take upon himself the disputes of men, when they do not themselves want to contend (in a court)'. Mānasollāsa II. 20 verse 1274 and Śukra IV. 5. 69 say the same. There must have always been several matters, of which nobody might complain and which the king might have to look into quo motu. Manu after dealing with the 18 vyavahārapadas (in VIII. 1 to IX. 251) requires the king (in IX. 252-253) to make efforts to destroy kantakas (thorns, harmful persons) and dilates upon many aspects of his activities in this respect. Nārada relegates all matters in which the king took action quo motu to a separate topic, prakīrnaka, about which he says 'under prakīrnaka are comprised lawsuits depending on the king (i. e. on the king's own action) such as transgressions of the king's commandments and obedience to his injunctions, grants of towns, dissensions among the constituent elements (such as ministers) of the State, the duties and breaches there of among heretics, followers of the veda, corporations (of merchants) and groups, dispute between father and son, neglect of prescribed penances, abstraction of gifts made to worthy persons, the wrath of hermits, sinful confusion of castes and the rules regarding their maintenance and (in short) whatever (matter) has been omitted in the preceding (vyavahārapadas)—these are treated under prakīrnaka'.<sup>331</sup> Bṛhaspati defines prakīrnaka in the same way as Nārada Kautilya deals with the vyavahārapadas in his Dharmasūthiya (III) section and in the Kantakaśodhana section (IV) speaks of matters that are similarly dealt with by officers called madestrs (who correspond to coroners and police magistrates of modern times), while matters falling under the dharmasūthiya section (viz. the vyavahārapadas) were disposed off by judges (called dharmasūthas). Kantaka means in Kautilya as in Manu IX. 252 'harmful persons'. The chief matters that fell within the purview of the kantakaśodhana (removal or punishment of harmful persons) officers or courts were: Artisans like blacksmiths and carpenters were generally to work in guilds and receive from people materials for working them up; if they caused unreasonable delay in handing back finished articles, they were to receive one-fourth less than the proper wages and were to be fined twice the amount of wages, similar provisions are made for loss of wages and fines for weavers who do not increase the weight of cloth (cotton, linen, silk or woollen) woven up to the usual standard: washermen were to wash clothes on wooden planks or smooth stones, but if they washed them elsewhere, they were to pay compensation for loss caused and a fine of 6 panas; they were to be fined twelve panas for the sale, pledge or hiring out of other's clothes; they were also to be fined for keeping clothes with them beyond the time ordinarily required, for washing the best garments, garments of middling quality and inferior garments the wages were respectively one paua,  $\frac{1}{2}$  and  $\frac{1}{4}$ ; trustworthy persons and experts were to decide disputes about colour and wages; similar rules apply to tailors; goldsmiths, who

In an interesting paper contributed to the Sir Denison Ross volume of papers pp 234-240 Dr. V. Raghavan describes a work called 'Vaiśyavamśa-sudhākara' composed by Kolācala Mallinātha, the renowned commentator of the five classical Sanskrit Kāvya. This work is the report or decision given by a commission presided over by Mallinātha appointed to settle a dispute (which in these days might be called a caste question not cognisable by civil courts) that arose in the times of Devarāja II of Viḍyānagara (1422-1466 A D). Vaiśyas were given a license to trade in the 24 cities and 108 shrines of the realm, certain subcastes like the Komatis claimed to be vaiśyas and this privilege also. Mallinātha decides after a searching examination of authorities that the words vaiśya, vāṁk, nāgara, ūruja, trītiya-jātiya are synonyms, that Komatis, who were styled vijāts by their rivals, were vaiśyas and entitled to all the privileges of vaiśyas. This decision would come under either दास्यः ... विपरीतः or सङ्घातिनियमः.

without informing (government officers) purchased from unclean hands (i e from menial servants or slaves) without changing the form of the article or after changing the form, or purchased from a thief were to be fined respectively 12, 24 or 48 panas; for stealing one (gold) māsaka (one-sixteenth of a suvarna) from off a suvarna, the gold-smith was to be fined two hundred panas and for stealing one māsaka out of a silver dhanana there was a fine of twelve panas; fines are provided for loss of weight (beyond the recognised standard) in the case of working up copper, lead, brass, bell-metal, tin into vessels and articles; for manufacturing a counterfeit coin, for accepting it or passing it off to another the fine was a thousand panas and for entering a counterfeit coin in the royal treasury the punishment was death; a physician, who undertook the medical treatment of a patient without informing (government officers) of the dangerous nature of the disease, was to be punished with the first amercement if the patient died and with the middling fine if the patient died through the carelessness of the physician and if the patient suffered some vital injury, the matter was to be dealt with as assault (dandapārusya); musicians and actors shall stay in one place during the rainy season and shall avoid taking excessive gifts or indulging in excessive praise of one patron; for violating this rule the fine was twelve panas. The same rules apply to those who show dumb plays and to other mendicants, the latter receiving as many lashes as the fine imposed in similar cases on others. In IV. 2 Kautilya prescribes fines against merchants that use false measures, weights and balances; that sell timber, iron, jewels, ropes, clothes misrepresenting them as superior when they are inferior; that conspire to prevent the sale of merchandise; that cause adulteration of grains, oils, salt, medicines &c.; that raise the prices beyond those fixed by the superintendent of commerce for local commodities and for foreign produce. In IV. 3 Kaut. provides for measures against such calamities as fire, floods, pestilential diseases, famine, rats, tigers, serpents and prescribes a fine of twelve panas for catching or injuring cats and mongooses employed to destroy rats. In IV. 4 Kaut. prescribes the measures that the officer called saṃahartṛ has to take to protect the subjects against those who prey upon the people secretly by employing foul means. He has to employ spies under various disguises to find out the honesty or corruption of officers in the villages, of superintendents, of judges, of magistrates and witnesses and the punishment in these cases is generally banishment Kautilya IV. 5 deals with the detection of young men inclined to robbery and adultery by the employment of spies and agents provocateurs in the guise of ascetics and persons reputed to possess miraculous powers. The Kautilya IV 6 and 7 respectively describe the seizure of criminals on suspicion or in the very act itself and examination in cases of sudden death. Kaut IV. 8 speaks of questioning in the presence of the wronged party of the witnesses of the accused, whether they are his relatives or total strangers, as regards the country, the caste, the family, the name, occupation, property, friends and residence of the accused and of the application of torture to the accused to elicit an admission of guilt. It is said that torture is to be applied only in the case of those whose guilt is believed to be established prima facie (āptadosam karma kūrayet), that torture is not to be employed when the accused is guilty of a minor offence, is under age, old or diseased, is under the influence of intoxicants, or is a lunatic, or is overwhelmed by hunger or thirst or fatigue due to a journey, or has eaten to excess or is suffering from indigestion or is weak, nor is it to be employed in the case of a pregnant woman or a woman who was delivered of a child within a month; and in the case of other women only half the torture prescribed for males or only the asking of questions is to be employed. Learned brāhmanas and ascetics (when accused) are to be subjected to espionage only. Those who violate these rules or incite others to do so and those who are guilty of causing the death of an accused by torture are to be punished with the highest amercement. Four kinds of torture were employed in the case of complaints about wrongs viz. six dandas, seven whippings, two kinds of suspension, and (fourthly) water-tube (i.e. injecting salt water in the nose from a tube)<sup>332</sup> In this chapter Kaut states that one who 332 The exact meaning of the four kinds of torture is not clear. Prof. V. R. Dikshitar in 'Hindu Administrative Institutions' pp 237-247 tries very hard to establish that Kaut recommends no torture in any case, that 'vākyānu-yoga' means 'pronouncing of guilt by the jury' and karmānu-yoga means 'judgment of the Chief Justice'. Though the learned Professor's attempt to exculpate Kautilya may be due to laudable motives, the words of Kautilya are too clear to admit of any other interpretation than the one given above. If one dispassionately considers the fact that no karma was allowed to be employed in the case of the weak, the diseased, old men &c., that in the case of women 'ardhakarma' alone was allowed, that a heavy fine was imposed for causing death by karma (karmānā vyāpādanena), charges an innocent man with being a thief or who conceals a thief is to be punished like a thief and that even one who is not a thief may for fear of torture admit that he is a thief, as Māṇḍavya did. Kaut in IV. 9 prescribes that the saṁāharta and pradestrs should exercise control over all superintendents of the various State departments and their subordinates, that those who steal or seize valuable articles or jewels from State mines or manufactories should be simply sentenced to death, prescribes various fines and punishments for stealing or removing by force articles of different prices from the State granaries and store-houses, provides punishment for judges that threaten, browbeat, send out or unjustly silence or abuse litigants or that do not ask proper questions or ask improper questions, that cause unnecessary delay, unjustly rehear causes that have been heard or disposed of, and provides heavy punish-that Māṇḍavya, though really not a thief, declared that he was so through the fear of the torments of karma (karmakleśabhayāt), that in the four karman we find suspension and water-tube and that immediately after the words 'karina kīrayet' we get the rule that in all crimes the brāhmana was not to be subjected to bodily pain, it will have to be admitted that 'karma' in this chapter of the Arthashastra means 'torture'. One fails to see what 'ardhakarma' in the case of women will mean if 'karma' signifies only the judgment of the chief justice or why Māṇḍavya should have confessed theft through fear of 'karmakleśa'. And one need not feel apologetic if Kautilya recommends torture in certain well-defined cases. Torture was an essential part in the Roman Criminal Procedure and Augustus had issued an edict about it. Vide Stephens' 'History of English Criminal Law' vol. I, pp. 47-49. Torture by the police and third-degree methods are not unknown in the 20th century in the West (even apart from the latest German methods) or in India, though they are not expressly mentioned in any text-book or Act as allowable. Vide Harry E Barnes' 'Story of Punishment' pp. 10-15 for various kinds of tortures employed in the West for several centuries and third-degree methods (pp. 15-24), which he asserts are even now in almost universal use by the Police Department in the U. S. A. The story of Māṇḍavya who though not a thief was held to be a thief, because he, owing to his vow of silence, did not reply when questioned and near whom was found the booty stolen and who was impaled, is found in Ādi. 63. 92-93 (cr. ed chap. 57), Ādi. 107-108 (cr. ed chap 101), Anuśāsana 18. 46-50 and in Nār. (I 42) and Br. quoted by Aparārka (p 599). श्ले श्रोतः पुराणविरचोरश्चोरसङ्कया । अण्मिमाह्वय इत्येवं विख्यातः ॥ आदि 63. 92-93 Kaut IV 8 appears to have had a different version of the story before him. The Mārkaṇḍeyapurāṇa chap 16 has the story of Animāṇḍavya. The story of Māṇḍavya was a leading case, it appears, in criminal law. The Mṛcchakaṭika (Act IX. 36) appears to refer to torture.

ments for releasing persons jailed or for rape on a woman in a lock-up Kaut. IV. 10 prescribes alternative punishments of fines in lieu of the cutting off of fingers or mutilation of limbs for several offences such as theft or assault, abuse and defamation or showing contempt to the king by riding his horse or other conveyance or fabricating royal orders, prescribes death for selling human flesh, simple death or highest amercement for stealing images of gods or animals, for abducting human beings or for wrongfully seizing fields, houses, gold, gold coins, jewels and crops. Death with or without torture is provided for in Kaut. IV. 11 for murdering a man in a quarrel (but when the wounded man dies a fortnight or a month after the quarrel, highest fine or fine of five hundred panas and the expenses of medical treatment); different kinds of punishments are provided for wounding with a weapon, impalement for causing violent death of men and women, burning alive for those who aim at securing the kingdom or force entrance into the royal harem or incite wild tribes or enemies or instigate disaffection in the capital or country or army, drowning (or solitary confinement in a dark room, acc. to another reading) for a brāhmana offender of this sort, cutting of tongue for insulting or abuse of parents or a teacher or an ascetic, drowning for one destroying the dam of a tank or for a poisoner or for a woman murdering a man, tearing to death by bulls for a woman who murders her husband or child or her elders or administers poison or sets fire Kaut adds that the punishment of death with torture has been prescribed by ancient smṛti-writers, but that it is proper to order simple death in cases of offences in which no cruelty enters. Kaut. IV 12 starts by declaring that no man shall have sexual intercourse with a woman (not his wife) against her will, prescribes different punishments for forcible sexual intercourse with an immature girl or a girl that has attained maturity, of the same caste, or of a different caste, provides that for intercourse with a willing maiden the fine will be 54 panas for the man and 27 for the maiden, further provides that it is no offence for a man of the same caste to have intercourse with a maiden who has not been got married for three years after the appearance of menses, provides fines for deceitfulness in substituting one girl at marriage while showing another before, provides that if a woman whose husband is gone abroad commits adultery a relative or servant of the husband may keep her under restraint and that if the husband on his return forgives the woman her paramour may not be proceeded against, but if he does not condone, the nose and ears of the woman may be cut off and the paramour should be sentenced to death. Kaut. IV. 13 provides punishment for brāhmanas eating or drinking what is forbidden to them and varying fines for administering forbidden food or drink to members of the four varnas, provides fines for house-trespass and lurking house-trespass by night, provides punishments for witchcraft, provides burning alive in a vessel for adultery with the queen and other punishments for adultery with women of the several castes, whether guarded or unguarded, prescribes a fine of 24 panas for adultery with a nun

The above is a meagre summary of Kautilya's section on kanṭakaśodhana. Kautilya is encyclopaedic on this subject as on several others. The number of offences dealt with by him is very large and his treatment in some respects compares favourably with such modern criminal codes as the Indian Penal Code. Many of the provisions contained in Kaut. IV are found in Yāj. (II. 273-304), in Nārada (in prakīrnaka and elsewhere) and also in Manu (e g. VIII. 365-368 about rape or adultery, VIII. 396-97 about washermen and weavers, IX. 225-226 about musicians and dancers, IX. 231-232, IX. 261-267). Why Kaut. treats of several offences under kanṭakaśodhana and not under the dharmasthiya section, it is somewhat difficult to say. It is probable that he included under dharmasthiya only those complaints or actions that were fought out between the parties, even though many of the wrongs complained of under vākpārusya, danḍapārusya, sangrahana and steya were criminal and the same as those treated of in the section on kanṭakaśodhana. In wrongs dealt with in the kanṭakaśodhana section it was the king or king's officers who themselves brought up the offenders for punishment and the offences were viewed not as mere private matters, but as matters in which the State was concerned for the eradication of crime in general. Kautilya in III. 20 speaks of prakīrnaka but therein he seems to include some miscellaneous matters like non-return of borrowed articles or deposits (at the proper time and place), evading payment of ferry tax under the pretence of being a brāhmana, connection with a public woman kept by another, misappropriating revenue collected as agent for a householder, a cāṇḍāla's touching an Ārya woman, inviting for dinner in honour of Gods and Manes Buddhist or Ājīvaka or Śūdra mendicants, abandonment of parents, child, wife or husband, brother or sister, teacher or pupil (when not guilty of a grave sin), wrongful confinement of a person &c. Kautilya does not apparently include under prakīrnaka all matters in which the king acts suo motu as Nār, Br. and Kāt do but includes these latter under kantakaśodhana. He, however, states here and there (IV. 1 and 13) that the matters dealt with under kantakaśodhana are quite analogous to those under such titles as dandapārusya treated of under the dharmasthīya section. For example, in IV. 1. he says that if a physician through negligence causes loss of a vital part to a patient then the matter may be treated as dandapārusya.<sup>333</sup> So Kautilya probably represents a much earlier stage of judicial administration than Nār. or Br, who included under prakīrnaka all matters in which the king acted of his own motion (i. e. all that falls under kantakaśodhana in Kaut.)

The enumeration of vyavahārapadas is very ancient and authoritative, but there is hardly any scientific principle of classification underlying them. A writer called Nibandhanakāra quoted in the Sarasvativilāsa<sup>334</sup> (p. 51) holds that in all the vyavahārapadas from mādāna to dāyavibhāga the relief claimed is something to be given or rendered (deya) by one party to the other, while in vākpārusya, dandapārusya, sāhasa, gambling and betting the principal relief is in the form of danda (punishment). Here there is a glimmering of the distinction between civil and criminal litigation. Two deep-seated principles in the administration of law and justice everywhere are 'fulfil your promises' and 'cause injury (himsā) to no one'. It is therefore that we find Brhaspati stating that lawsuits are of two kinds according as they originate in (demands about) wealth or in injuries Yāj II 23 speaks of arthavivāda (civil dispute) and so made a distinction between civil and criminal disputes. Lawsuits<sup>335</sup> originating in wealth are divided into fourteen sorts and those originating in injuries are of four sorts. These last are vākpārusya (defamation and abuse), dandapārusya (assault and battery), sāhasa (murder and other forms of violence) and strisangraha (adultery). Here there is a clear distinction made between civil disputes (arthamūla or dhanamūla) and criminal ones (himsā-mūla). Kāt. also says that disputes have their source in two viz. not rendering what should be given and injury (himsā). Though in this way a distinction was made between civil and criminal disputes among the 18 titles of law, it appears that the set of rules and the procedure in both were the same (except as to the time allowed for reply, as to the qualifications of witnesses and as to proxies), the same courts tried both kinds of disputes and not as in modern times (when civil disputes are tried in one class of courts and criminal complaints in another and when the procedure also in both differs a great deal). There were not two sets of courts in ancient India as there were in England before the fusion of Law and Equity, but all courts in ancient and medieval India were required to administer the law of the texts tempered by common sense and reason as laid down by Br.: 'a decision should not be given by merely relying on the text of the sāstra; when consideration of a matter is divorced from reason and common sense loss of dharma results' (q by Aparārka p. 599).

Nār. (I. 8-29), Br., Kāt, the Agnipurāṇa (253. 1-12 which reproduce almost verbatim the verses of Nār.) and others predicate several things about vyavahāra, such as that it is dviphala (has two results) and so on. All these are brought together here below for convenience. Vyavahāra is:—

336. Among the verses at the end of IV. 1 of the Arthaśāstra the following two verses occur. चरित्रं व्यवहारश्च चरित्रं राजशासनम् विवादार्थश्चतुष्पादः पश्चिमः पूर्वशेषकः। तत्र सत्ये स्थितौ धर्मो व्यवहारस्तु साक्षिणः। चरित्रं संग्रहे पुंसां राज्ञामाज्ञा तु शासनम् ॥ These two occur in Nār (I. 10-II) and Hārīta (q. in S V. p. 58) with variations, viz. both read चतुष्पादं व्यवहारोपहृत्तरः पूर्वो and चरित्रं पुस्तकरणे. Par M. III. p. 10 reads चरित्रं तु स्वीकरणे. Lengthy explanations of these verses are offered in Aparārka (p. 597), Smṛticandrikā (II. pp 10-11), Vyavahāra-prakāśa (pp. 7, 88-89) and other digests. It has to be noted that the four (dharma &c) mentioned in these verses are the means of arriving at a decision in a law-suit, as Br. says धर्मेण व्यवहारेण चरित्रेण दृष्टाज्ञया। चतुष्पकारो-भिहितः सन्दिग्धेयं विनिर्णयः ॥ (in स्तुतिच० II p. 10, परा. मा. III. p. 16, वृ. प्र. 6); व्यवहारोपि चरित्रेण बाध्यते यथा। साक्षिभिः साधितेऽप्याभीरक्षियाः पुत्रान्तरोपभोगे वदुद्वे च व्यवहारतः भ्रातेषु राजकुलाधिगतलिखितास्तिवते। एवं हि तत्र लिखितम्-आभीरक्षिणां ग्यभिचारोपि सति दण्डो न भ्राह्म इति। अपराकी p. 597 (on या. and Br. they are the plaint, the reply, the proof (kaṣṭhā) and decision (nirṇaya) or acc. to Kāt. 31 (q. by Aparārka p 616) plaint, reply, pratyākālita<sup>337</sup> and kaṣṭhā

Dharma and the other three are really the four feet of nirṇaya (final decision), which is one of the four stages of a law-suit (vyavahāra) and so only in a secondary or far-fetched sense they are the four pādas of vyavahāra. Each of these four is said to be of two kinds. Vide Sm C. II. pp 10-11, Par. M III. pp. 198-199, V. P. pp. 87-88 where the verses of Br are set out and fully explained. A decision is said to be arrived at according to dharma when the wrong-doer admits his guilt or wrong-doing and the real owner secures his wealth or the relief due to him without having to undergo the trouble of a protracted trial by means of witnesses, documents &c. Similarly a decision to be arrived at by ordeals is said to be one by dharma. Dharma and satya are often identified (vide note 125 above) and here the wrong-doer tells the truth and the decision is therefore said to be by dharma. When a litigation is fought out in Court by citing witnesses, the decision is said to be by vyavahāra. 'Witnesses' are mentioned only by way of illustration (and imply documents, possession and other means of proof). When a defendant is guilty of not giving a straight reply or when his reply is tainted with faults and so is unacceptable and a decision is given against him on that ground alone it is still a decision by vyavahāra. Caritra means 'the usages of a country, village or family' (deśasthith pūrvakṛtā caritram sanudāhṛtam—Vyāsa q. in Sm C II. p 11 and Vy Nir p 138). This seems to be the sense of 'caritra' in 'phalakavāre charitratoti' occurring in Nasik Inscription No 12 in E. I. vol VIII p 82. In prakīrnaka 24 Nār seems to give the same sense 'sthityartham prthivīpālais. caritravisayāḥ kṛtāḥ'. Caritra also means 'anumāna' (possession and presumptions). 'Anumānena nirṇitam caritramiti kathyate'—says Br. quoted in Vy Nirṇaya p. 139 and Par. M. III. p. 198. Usages are the means of decision in certain cases apart from the question whether they are supported by the smṛtis or

337. Pratyākālita means, acc. to Aparārka p 616, the deliberation of the judge and sabhyas as to where the burden of proof (onus probandi) lies and as to the method of proof. Acc. to the Mit on Yāj I 3, pratyākālita in this sense is not a vyavahārapāda, since it is not directly related to the litigants. Acc. to Nār. II. 21 pratyākālita seems to mean an addition to the plaint or to the reply (i.e. a supplementary written statement), वादिना लिखिताद्यर्थं यद्युपवादिना स्तुतम् । तत्प्रत्यकालितं नाम स्वपादे तस्य लिख्यते ॥

not. 'Caritram pustakarane' means that such usages are valid means of decision if they have been written down or recorded by the king, while 'caritram tu svikarane' (the reading in Par. M ) means 'usages become the rule of decision when they are accepted as valid by the people and by the courts'. When a king issues in a matter of dispute an order which is not opposed to smrtis or local usages and which is thought out as the most appropriate one by the king's intellect or which is issued to decide a matter when the authorities on each of two sides are equally strong, it is a decision by royal command Br (in Par. M III p. 148) and Kāt (verses 35-38 q in Sm C II p. 10, Par. M. III pp. 16-17, V P p 7) explain the above four. Brhaspati gives two meanings of caritra: (1) what is decided by inference; (2) the usages of a country. When it is said that each later one of the four stultifies each preceding one, the idea is not that in all cases it is so, but that it is so only in some cases. Vide Kāt. (43 q by V. P. p 90) which makes this clear. Some examples may be given. If one litigant says that he would prove his case by an ordeal, while the other says that he will prove his contention by human means (documents or witnesses &c.), then the trial by ordeal is not to be resorted to but the hearing of the case is to proceed in the ordinary way. Vide Kāt 218 (q. by Mit. on Yāj. II. 22) for this rule. Here dharma is set aside in favour of vyavahāra. Another example is given in the Par M. III p. 18. A person belonging to one of the four varnas commits a seditious act (rājadrola) and through timidity admits his guilt (this is satya), but the witnesses (relying on Manu X. 130 that where the punishment would be death, a witness may tell a lie) deny that he was guilty of the act and he is let off. Here dharma is set aside in favour of vyavahāra (trial based on the depositions of witnesses). Vide Sm. C. (II p. 11) for another similar example. In the country of Kerala visiting a prostitute was not condemned by custom. So even though it is established by witnesses that a person in Kerala did so, the local king may not punish him with a fine. Or suppose a person is charged with the offence of adultery with the wife of an abhīra and this fact is established by witnesses. Yet the man charged may show that among the abhīras there is a usage (written down in the census records of the king) that adultery with an abhīra woman is not punishable. In such cases caritra (usage) annuls the (ordinary) vyavahāra. But suppose that in such cases the king, in order to improve the morals of a section of his subjects, issues a proclamation that from the date of the proclamation one who is guilty of adultery with an ābhīra woman will be punished, then in that case usage will be set aside by royal command, which will then be the rule of decision. Similarly where there are no witnesses nor documents nor possession and no room for ordeal and there are no texts and local usages it is the king who has to decide as best as he can. Vide Pitāmaha q in Sm C (II p 28) Kāt (verses 39-43 q in V. P p 89) describes how and when each later one sets aside each prior one.

Utusthūna—having four means viz sūma, dāna, bheda and danda

Calukūta—benefitting the four (the four varnas and four āśramas).

Calurvyūpan—that envelopes or reaches four viz the disputants, witnesses, the sabhyas and the king

Caluskāra—that brings about four results viz dharma (justice), gain, renown, love or regard of the people

Astānga—it has eight limbs or members viz, the king, his good officer (chief judge), sabhyas (pious judges), sāstra (law books), accountant, scribe, gold, fire and water

Astūdaśapada—has eighteen titles (viz rnādāna and others enumerated above)

Śatśākha—having a hundred branches. This is approximate. Nār. (I. 20-25) states that the 18 titles have 132 sub-heads (rnādāna 25, upanidhi 6, sambhūyasamutthāna 3, dattā-pradānika 4, asūśrūṣā 9, vetana 4, asvāmrvikraya 2, vikriyā-dāna 1, kritānusaya 4, samayasānapākarma 1, ksetravāda 12, śrīpumsayoga 20, dāyabhāga 19, sāhasa 12, yākpārusya and dandapārusya 3, dyūtasamāhvaya 1, prakīrnaka 6)

Tryom—having three springs or motives viz kāma (sexual desire), krodha (hot temper), lobha (greed).

Dvayabhyoga—founded on two kinds of complaint viz on suspicion or on fact. Nār I 27 says that a complaint on suspicion may be made against those who associate with men of evil repute (such as thieves, gamblers and dissolute persons) or it may be made on the ground that a certain person is really the thief because the thing stolen is found with him (this is tattvābhilyoga). This latter may take two forms i. e. the grievance of the plaintiff may be negative (e. g. the defendant took or borrowed a debt or article and does not return it) or positive (e. g. the defendant has dispossessed the plaintiff of land).<sup>338</sup> Vide Mit on Yāj II. 5.

Dvandvāra—having two openings i. e. it is based on the statements in the plaint and those in the reply.

Dvighāta—having two issues, that is, the decision may be founded on truth or on error.

Dvaypada—having two aspects, viz. relating to wealth and so civil (dhanamūla), and relating to injury and so criminal (himsāmūla) This is acc to Kāt. 29.

Dvayruthāna—having two springs or sources. It is the same as above. Hārīta and Kāt. 30 mention this

Dvaykandha—having two trunks viz. dharmaśāstra and arthaśāstra (acc to Kāt. 32).

Dvayphala—having two results, victory or failure (Kāt 32).

Ekamūla—Hārīta and Kāt mention this. It means 'having only one (viz. what is to be established) as its root'.

Sapana and apana—where both parties to the litigation or one of the parties stakes (either through pride or anger or belief in the truth of his case) a certain sum of money to be paid by him in case of his defeat, that is called sapana law-suit (Yāj. II. 18); in this case the defeated party will pay to the king the usual fine for a defeated party and also the sum staked by him and will deliver to the successful party what is due to him. Vide also Visnudharmottara III. 324 44. A lawsuit may also be apana (without a stake being declared). Nār. (I. 4) employs the words sottana and anutara for these two

The Sm. C. (II. pp 27-28), Par. M. (III. pp 42-45), Sarasvatī-vilāsa pp. 73-74, V P. pp 36-38, state that, according to Pīṭamāha, the king may take cognizance of his own motion without the complaints of private persons of certain matters called aparādhas, padas and chalas and these works set out the lists of ten aparādhas, 22 padas and 50 chalas<sup>339</sup>. The king may himself come to know about these or these matters may be brought to his notice by an officer called sūcaka or a private man called stobhaka, defined acc to Kāt. (33-34) as follows —<sup>340</sup> that man is declared to be sūcaka who is appointed by the king himself for finding out the wrong-doings of people and who on coming to know of them conveys them to the king; that man is a stobhaka who with a sole eye to money and without being urged by the king informs the king first of actions (among the people) that are condemned by the sāstras. Therefore a stobhaka is a private informant for money. The ten aparādhas, acc. to Nār., are disobedience of the king's order, murder of a woman, confusion of varnas, adultery, theft, pregnancy from one not the husband, abuse and defamation, obscenity, assault (danda-pārusya), abortion<sup>341</sup>. They were called aparādhas because they were met with fine. It will be noticed that some of these come under several vyavahārapadas and some like 'varnasankara' are included in prakṛnaka by Nārada (v 4). The king could by his own action investigate these even if no private complaint be lodged. Samvarta (quoted by the Sm C II p 28, Par M III. pp 44-45) gives another list which differs in some respects from the above. In the Nālandā copperplate of Devapāladeva (E I vol XVII p 310, p 321) an officer called 'dasāparādhika' is mentioned. In many grants from the 7th century onwards among the taxes remitted to the donees we often meet the expression 'together with the ten aparādhas' (sadaśāparādhah), in Valabhi grant of Dhruvasena III dated samvat 334 i.e. 653-4 A.D., E I vol. I p. 85, at p 88, E.I. XVII p 310 at p 321, in Gupta Ins. No 39 p 179 of 766-767 A. D.), or 'dasāparādhādisamastot-pattisahito dattah' (in E I vol VII p. 26, p 40 of śake 852), or

It is not correct to hold that the words refer to the right of the donee to be exempt from guilt arising from the commission of some traditional offences or that authority was conferred by the grant on the donee to deal with offenders committing the ten aparādhas and to recover the fines imposed by themselves (as suggested in J B O R S for 1916 p. 53n). No king would ever think of exempting donees in pious gifts or the villages in those grants from the results of such grave aparādhas as the murder of a woman, adultery, theft and abortion, nor is it possible to hold that a king authorised a private individual or individuals to exercise judicial power in such crimes as murder when (as we shall see later on) the power of dealing with sāhasa was not conferred on śreni or gana tribunals. The real meaning appears to be that the fines levied by him for the commission of the aparādhas in the villages granted would be made over to the donees as part of the gift, when recovered by the king. The 22 padas were called padas of the king to distinguish them from the vyavahārapadas. According to Pītāmaha<sup>342</sup> they are: ripping open an animal's body (with a sharp weapon), destruction of growing crops, incendiarism, rape of a maiden, concealment of treasure trove, making a breach in an embankment or thorny hedge, grazing cattle over the field of another, destruction of a public garden, poisoning, high treason, unauthorised breaking of the royal seal, divulging the secret line of policy of the king, releasing from jail a prisoner, appropriation of the taxes or fines to be levied by the king (these are two), appropriating gifts (made by the king) or the utseka (? utsarga, dedication to the public), preventing the proclamation (of royal orders) by beat of drum from being heard, receiving property from a person who is not the owner, receiving articles that are enjoyed by the king (without his permission), causing destruction (or loss) of any one of the (seven) elements (of the State). The fifty chalas were mostly breaches of etiquette before the eyes or in the presence of the king. According to Pitāmaha they are: obstructing the road, raising the hand threateningly, leaping over a fort-wall (without permission or reason), destroying a cistern, destroying a temple, filling up a ditch (dug round a fort), divulging the weak points of the king (to the enemy), unauthorized entrance into the harem or royal chamber or the treasury or the royal kitchen (these are four), prying when the king is taking his meals, voiding ordure or urinating or blowing the nose or passing wind in the presence of the king (these are four), to sit before the king on haunches (paryāṅkāśana), to occupy the foremost seat in the king's presence, to enter royal presence in a dress more resplendent than the king's or supported by another or by the wrong-doer or at an improper time (these are four), to lie down on the bed or seat of the king or to put on his shoes (these are three), to go near the king (uncalled) when the latter is lying down on his bed, to serve the king's enemies, to occupy a seat that is not offered, to use gold in the dress or ornaments (these are two), to take tāmbūla (from the king's betel box) and chewing it (this is one), to speak loudly without being asked (by the king), to run down the king, to wear only one garment, to appear before the king with oil on the hair, to untie the hair (before him), to cover one's face, to have a body painted with figures, to wear a garland, to shake one's garment, to cover the head, to be bent on finding the weak points of the king, to be thick with evil men (or to touch the king), to have dishevelled hair, pointing out the nose, the ears and the eyes (these are three), to pick the teeth, to cleanse the ear or the nose (these are two). As the list of chalas is a very long one the verses are not quoted below, but are given in the Appendix (note 342 a). Śūkra (IV. 5. 73-88) quotes all the verses from Nārada and Pitāmaha on the aparādhas, padas and chalas and in III. 6 also gives a list of ten sins, which is different from that of the aparādhas.

elaborate classification which is set out in the note below.<sup>343</sup> Ancient systems cannot be expected to present such a classification. Ancient Hindu smritis were content, as shown above, to divide the vyavahārapadas into civil and criminal. They more or less deal with most of the subjects brought out in modern classifications but not in an orderly manner. They also divide laws into substantive and adjective or procedural. The vyavahārapadas correspond to the former and the rules about procedure, the appointment of Judges and the constitution of courts, evidence and limitation are adjective law. Some of these are dealt with in the commentaries and digests under a section called vyavahāramātrkā (the elements of judicial procedure) and the rules of evidence are stated in Yāj, Nār. and others under the vyavahārapada rnādāna once alone. It would be more convenient to deal with adjective law first. That law is now of antiquarian or academic interest only and will therefore be treated somewhat briefly. The smrtis lay down a high level of judicial procedure, but the procedure must have been modified to suit the requirements of different times and the resources and inclinations of different kings. Some of the vyavahārapadas viz rnādāna (recovery of debt), striputrasayoga and dāyabhāga (partition of heritage) are of great practical importance even now, as all Hindus are governed in matters of partition, inheritance, debts, marriage and sonship by the rules of Hindu Law gathered from the Smrtis and digests as modified by legislative enactments and judicial decisions. For description of Judicial administration in the Buddhist texts and times, vide Fick pp 107, 111-112 (which show that the administration of justice in Vesālī, the capital of the Licchavis, was a complicated affair, one of the courts being that of the atthakulakas i. e. of eight heads of families), Jayaswal's 'Hindu Polity', part II pp. 156-157, Hiouen T'sang's account in Beal's B.R. W. W. Vol. I pp 84-85; and Bombay Gazetteer, Vol. 24 pp 266-267 (for the administration of Justice under the Marathas)

Justice was to be primarily dispensed by the king. He was an original court as well as an appellate tribunal. Smrtis and digests insist that the king cannot dispense justice by himself alone, but must do so with the help and guidance of others. Manu VIII 1-2 and Yāj II 1 provide that the king wearing no gaudy dress or ornaments is to enter the sabhā (the Hall of Justice) for looking into the causes of litigants, accompanied by learned brāhmanas and ministers proficient in statecraft, is to be free from hot temper and greed and decide according to the law laid down in dharmasāstras. Kāt. (55-56 quoted in V. M. p. 278, Mit. on Yāj. II 2) says the same thing and adds that a king who examines disputes in the presence of the Judge, the ministers, learned brāhmanas, the purohita and the sabhyas attains heaven. Vide Śukra IV. 5. 5 to the same effect (taking half verses from Yāj. and Kāt.). The king was not to decide by himself but was to follow the advice of his judge, though the responsibility even when he took advice was the king's. Vide Śukra IV. 5. 6 (naikah patyicca kāryān). Nār. I. 35 says that the king has to abide by the view of the judge (prāḍuvvā-kamate sthuta). This sentiment that it is not safe for a single man, however clever he may be, to undertake to decide a dispute was so ingrained among all people that Kalidāsa gives expression to it in the Mālavikāgnimitra (Act I) when he pens the sentence 'sarvajñasyāpyekākino nirnayābhyupagamo dosāya'. In Raghuvamśa 17.39, Kalidāsa states that king Atithi always looked into the causes of people himself with the help of judges (dharmastha)<sup>344</sup>. Pitāmaha<sup>345</sup> states that a person even if he knows the rules (of dharma) should not give a decision single-handed. Justice was to be dispensed openly in the court and not secretly. Śukra (IV. 5. 6-7) states<sup>346</sup> that neither the king nor the judge nor the sabhyas were to hear a cause in secret and that there were five reasons that led to the charge of partiality in judges viz. hot temper, greed, threats, enmity and hearing disputes in private. Judicial action is divisible into two provinces, viz. that of law and that of fact. The latter is a field in which it is impossible to lay down rules for determination. On points of facts there was a vast scope for the king's or judge's discretion. And therefore the texts contented themselves by saying that the king or judge should keep an open or impartial mind, should be free from hot temper or greed, should hear causes under the glare of public view and should not decide at his own will alone but with the help of learned brāhmanas and sabhyas. As regards points of law the king or judge is required to decide according to the rules of dharmaśāstra (Manu VIII. 3, Yāj II. 1, Nār. I. 37, Sukra IV. 5. 11) and where there are no texts the king should decide in accordance with the recognized custom of the country. Kāt solemnly warns<sup>347</sup> the king against legislating or deciding according to his own will in the face of the texts: 'If a king decides (a case) by his own fiat where there is a text (of the śāstra applicable to it) it leads him away from heaven, it causes ruin to the people, it brings danger (to the king) from the armies of his foes and it strikes down the roots of (long) life; therefore a king should decide the causes of people according to the rules of śāstra; but in the absence of smṛti texts he should carry out (judicial administration) according to the usages (lit the views) of the country'. These are the same as Śukra (V. 5. 10-11). Kāt further prescribes that the usages established in a country by the approval of its people and that are not in direct conflict with Veda and Smṛtis should be recorded in writing under the seal of the king Pitāmaha<sup>348</sup> quoted by the Sm. C. (II. p. 26) states that in certain cases it is the king's own mind that is the deciding factor.

How the king directly dispensed justice is illustrated by the rules of Gaut. XII 40-42 and Manu VIII. 314-316 that a thief who has stolen a brāhmana's gold may run with dishevelled hair to the king carrying an iron club or a heavy bludgeon of khadira wood, may declare the sin committed by him and request the king to award punishment, that the king may then strike him with the club and that whether the thief dies or lives after the king so strikes him he becomes free from the guilt. The king was also the highest court of appeal. The Rājatarāṅgi (VI. 14-41) states how king Yaśaskara heard the appeal of a person who had sold his house without the well, who on returning from a long absence abroad found the well usurped by the vendee and was defeated in the lower courts because the vendee had bribed the scribe to write 'kūpasahita' instead of 'kūpanahita' and how the king decided in the man's favour by exposing the vendee with a trick; while in VI. 42-69 the same king is said to have reversed another decision about a contract by a man whose 100 coins had fallen into a well. The same work in another place (IV. 82-108) states how a brāhmana wife appealed to the king of Kashmir to find out the culprit who had murdered her husband in his sleep and how the king by superhuman means held a sorcerer to be the murderer.

When owing to pressure of other weighty business the king cannot attend to the work of administering justice, the king should appoint a learned brāhmana together with three sabhyas to decide the disputes of people. Vide Manu VIII. 9-10, Yāj. II. 3, Kāt. 63<sup>349</sup> (same as Śukra IV. 5. 12). The qualifications of a judge are set out in many places. Āp.<sup>350</sup> Dh. S. II. 11. 29. 5 prescribes that in law-suits judges shall be endowed with learning, good family, and should be old, clever, and careful about dharma. Nār. requires: 'The Judge should be proficient in the texts on the eighteen titles of law, their 8000 sub-heads, in logic (ānvikṣiki) and should be master of the Veda and Smṛtis. Just as a physician takes out from the body an iron dart by the employment of surgical instruments, so a judge should extricate from a law-suit the deceit (underlying it)'.<sup>351</sup> Kāt. says that a judge should be restrained, born of a good family, impartial, not repellent (or harsh in his manners), steady, afraid of the next world, highly religious, assiduous and free from hot temper. A fine enumeration of the qualities required in a judge is given in the ancient drama Mṛcchakatika (IX. 4). Vide Mānasollāsa

II 2 verses 93-94. A Judge was generally styled prāḍvivāka or sometimes dharmādhyakṣa (as in Rāj R p. 18),<sup>352</sup> or dharmapraṇavāktṛ (Manu VIII 20) or dharmādhyakṣa (as in Mānasaśāstra II 2, verse 93). Prāḍvivāka is an ancient word. It occurs in Gaut XIII 26, 27 and 31, Nār.<sup>353</sup> (I 35), Brhaspati (q. by Aparārka p. 602). The word is a combination of 'prāḍ' (one who puts questions to the suitors, from the root 'pracch') and 'vivāka' (who speaks out or analyses the truth, from the root 'vac' with 'vi'). The derivation is given by Nār, Brhaspati, Kāt, 68 and others. The word 'prāṇnavivāka' (which is quite close to prāḍvivāka in sense and etymology) goes very far into antiquity and occurs in Vāj. S. XXX. 10 and Tai. Br III 5 6. The existence of the word prāḍvivāka as early as Gautama (about 500 B.C.) and of prāṇnavivāka in the Vāj. S and Tai Br. clearly establishes that in ancient India judicial functions became separated very early from executive or political functions.

The chief Judge was preferably to be a learned brāhmana (Manu VIII 9, Yāj. II. 3). Kāt. (67)<sup>354</sup> and Śukra IV. 5. 14 prescribe that, if a learned brāhmana cannot be had for the post of the chief judge, then a ksatriya or a vaiśya who knows the dharmasāstras may be appointed, but the king should carefully avoid appointing a śūdra as a judge. Manu VIII. 20 says that the king may prefer a brāhmana who is not learned and maintains himself by the mere fact of his caste, but should never have a śūdra as the expounder of dharma and that the country whose king has a śūdra as judge to expound dharma comes to ruin as a cow sinks in mud. Vyāsa (q. in S. V. p. 65) is to the same effect. Manu (VIII 10-11), Yāj. (II. 3), Nār. (III. 4) and Śukra IV. 5. 17 state that the king should appoint at least three sabhyas (pursne judges or members of the court of justice) to associate with the Chief Judge in the disposal of suits (the idea being that three are the least number of sabhyas to be appointed). Kaut. (III. 1) prescribes that the courts called 'dharmaśthīya' should be manned by three judges called dharmaśthas who should possess the qualifications and status of amātyas and that such courts should be established on the borders of the provinces, for a group of ten villages (saṅgrahana), for a district (dronamukha, 400 villages) and provinces (sthāniya, 800 villages). Brhaspati says<sup>355</sup> that the sabhyas may be seven, five or three. As in the case of the chief judge, the sabhyas should be preferably brāhmanas, but they may be ksatriyas or vaiśyas. Manu (VIII. 11) and Br. say that when in a sabhā three brāhmanas learned in the Vedas sit along with the chief judge appointed by the king that is like the sabhā of Brahman or it is like a sacrifice. Yāj II. 2, Visnudharmasūtra III. 74, Kāt. 57, Nār. III. 4-5, Śukra IV. 5. 16-17 and others require the following qualifications in the sabhyas: they should be endowed with the study of the Vedas, should know dharmaśāstra, should speak the truth, should be impartial to friend or foe, should be steady, devoted to their work, intelligent, hereditary, proficient<sup>356</sup> in arthaśāstra. Impartiality in the king and the judges is insisted on in the texts. Vide Vas. 16 3-5, Nār. (I. 34, III. 5) The king was not to appoint as sabhyas those who were ignorant of the usages of the country, who were atheists and devoid of the study of śāstras, who were either puffed up, hot-tempered, greedy or distressed (Br. q. in Sm. II. p. 15). The chief justice (prādvivāka) with the sabhyas constituted the Court, being appointed (anyukta) by the king. It was stated above that the king was to enter the Hall of Justice with the chief justice, sabhyas and brāhmanas. The distinction is that sabhyas were appointed by the king as judges, while brāhmanas were persons who were well-versed in dharmaśāstra, who could attend the Court, though not appointed (anyukta) and whose opinions on difficult points of law were respectfully received by the judges. They (the learned brāhmanas) were in the position of amici curiae. All and sundry were not to intermeddle in trials before the court, but only those who were learned in dharmaśāstra were allowed to express their opinions on knotty points. Vide<sup>357</sup> Mit on Yāj. II. 2. Manu VIII. 12-14 (same as Nār. III. 8-10 in a different order) say that either a person should not enter a sabhā or if he enters should say what is proper, that a man remaining silent or declaring what is false becomes a sinner and that, where in spite of the opinion of some or all sabhyas, justice is not done by the king, they become participators in the king's guilt. Kāt. (74-78) makes it the duty of the sabhyas to bring round a king gradually to the right path when the king is about to start on the path of injustice and to state the true decision.<sup>358</sup> In the case of the brāhmanas their duty ends with stating the rule according to the śāstras; they have not, like the sabhyas, to prevent the king from doing the wrong thing or to bring him round to the path of right and justice. Nār. (III. 1) states elsewhere that one who is not appointed by the king should not interfere by his speech in the decision of a case and that if he does so he would be fined. This applies to the people that are present in the court to see the trial or that accompany the litigants. It has no application to learned brāhmanas, who though not appointed by the king, can state their view of the law.<sup>359</sup> Vide Vyavahārasāra pp. 16-17. Nār. III. 17 requires that all the judges of the Court should give a unanimous decision, and that then only the decision leaves no grievance (in the mind of the litigants).<sup>360</sup> The V. P. (p. 27) states, following Jaimini XII 2. 22, that the opinion of the majority of sabhyas is to prevail.<sup>361</sup> According to Gaut.<sup>362</sup> XI. 25 as interpreted by Aparārka p. 599, if there is a difference of opinion among the judges, the king is to seek the advice of those who are learned in the three Vedas (along with the other vidyās) and decide the matter finally. Kāt. (58-59) states that the court of justice should have associated with the task of deciding disputes some merchants who belong to a guild, who are men of good family and character, of mature age, endowed with wealth and decent conduct and free from malice. The Mit. and Sm. C. say that this is done to placate the common people in the country.<sup>363</sup> This also shows the growing importance of the moneyed classes and of traders. In the Mrcchakatika a śreṣṭhin and a kāyastha are associated with the Judge

The chief judge and the sabhyas<sup>364</sup> were not to hold conversation in private with any one of the litigants while the suit was pending and if they did so they were liable to be fined (Kāt. 70). Kaut IV. 9 prescribes fines and even corporal punishments for judges (dhamasthas) and pradeśṭṛs who corruptly give wrong decisions, cause loss or sentence to corporal punishment. If the sabhyas<sup>365</sup> give a decision, which is opposed to smṛti and usage, through friendship, greed or fear, each was liable to be fined twice as much as the fine to be paid by the defeated party (Yāj. II. 4, Nār. I. 67, Kāt. 79-80). The Viṣṇu Dh. S. V. 180 and Br prescribe banishment and forfeiture of all property for sabhyas that give an unjust decision or take bribes. Kāt 81 prescribes that the loss caused by the fault of sabhyas must be made good by them to the losing party, but the decision given by them will stand<sup>366</sup>. Śūkra (IV. 5 63-64) prescribes the punishment of a thief for a lekhaḥ (a scribe) taking down a different deposition from the one actually given or for a sabhya making use of such a deposition knowingly, IV 5 93 prescribes fine and removal from office if a sabhya gives a wrong decision through greed &c. and IV. 5. 282 prescribes a fine of 1000 panas against a judge giving a corrupt decision. There must have been a few cases of judges taking bribes in ancient India as in modern times (even Lord Bacon in the 17th century was found guilty of taking bribes as Lord Chancellor and confessed his guilt). In the Daśakumāracarita<sup>367</sup> (VIII p 131) the cynical jester Vihārābhadrā says to his king that judges decide matters just as they please after taking bribes and the king thereby incurs infamy and the sin of doing injustice. It was believed that when a just decision was given, the king and the sabhyas became free from sin, the sin reaches him only who is guilty (whether plaintiff or defendant); but where an unjust decision is rendered a quarter of the sin falls on the litigant (plaintiff or defendant) who is guilty of adharmā, one quarter each on the witnesses, the sabhyas and the king. The Baud Dh S I.10 30-31, Manu VIII 18-19, Nār (III 12-13) have the same two verses. The Vyavahāratattva (p 200) says that Hārta also had the same verses. In the Mattavilāsa-pihasana (pp. 23-24) reference is made to the giving of bribes to the presiding officers of courts (we should read 'adhikaraṇa-kāraṇikānām' instead of '—kāraṇikānām'). Kāt IV 4 makes it a duty of the samāhātṛ to employ spies in various disguises to test the honesty of judges (dharmaśāsthas) and magistrates (pradeśtrās) and, if they were found to be ready to succumb to bribes, to order their banishment.

As to sabhā, vide pp. 92-93 above. The Nirukta (III 5) in explaining Rg. I. 124. 7 (gātārug-va sanaye dhanānām) states that gātā means a wooden board or stump in a sabhā on which a sonless widow claiming her husband's wealth had to stand when claiming it.

A court of justice was (acc. to Br.<sup>368</sup>) of four kinds, viz. one established (pratishtā) in a fixed place such as a town, apratisthā (not fixed in one place, but moving from place to place as on a circuit), mudrītā (the court of a judge appointed by the king, who is authorised to use the royal seal), śāstrī (or śāstrī, acc. to S. V. p. 68 and Par. M. III. p. 34) i. e. the court in which the king himself presides. The Court of justice (in the capital) was to be to the east of the palace as stated by Śankha and Br. (in Sm. C. II. p. 19) and was to face the east. The court-house should be decorated<sup>369</sup> with flowers, statues, paintings, idols of gods and should be furnished with incense, throne or seat (for the king or judge), seeds, fire and water (Br. in Sm. C. II. p. 19). The sabhā was also called, as stated above, dharmādhikarāna or simply adhikarāna (in Mṛcchakatika IX and the Kādambarī, para 85) or dharmasthāna or dharmāsana or sadas (Vas. 16. 2). The Kādambarī (para 85) speaks of the royal palace as having a court of justice where the judges (dharmādhikārins) sat on high cane seats. The time for holding the court is the morning, acc. to Manu VII. 145, Yāj. I. 327. Kaut. states that the king<sup>370</sup> should look into the disputes of people in the 2nd part of the day divided into eight parts. The Dasakumāracarita (note 367 above) shows the same thing. Kāt. (61-62) prescribes that the time for holding the court as laid down in the śāstras is three parts of the day after the first part (when the day is divided into eight parts) i. e. from 7-30 A. M. to noon. There were holidays on which courts were closed i. e. on 8th and 14th tithis, Full Moon day and the amāvāsya of every month (Samvarta acc. to Par. M. III. p. 23, Hārīta, acc. to S. V. p. 72). The sabhā is said to have ten aṅgas

by Br.<sup>371</sup> viz the king, the chief judge appointed by him, the sabhyas, smṛti, ganaka (accountant), lekha (the scribe), gold, fire, water and svapurusa (a bailiff, otherwise called sādhypāla). The chief judge declares (the law), the king awards punishment, the sabhyas examine the dispute, smṛti (dharmaśāstra) lays down the rule of decision, the success (of one party or the other) and the punishment; gold and fire are required for taking oaths, the water is for men when they feel thirsty, the ganaka counts the wealth or subject matter of dispute, the scribe writes down the pleadings, depositions and the decision, the purusa summons the sabhyas, the defendant, the witnesses and he guards the complainant and the defendant when they have furnished no surety (for appearance). It is further said that of these ten angas (limbs) the king is the head, the judge the mouth &c. Acc to Br. (q. in Par. M III p 30) and Śukra IV 5 43 the accountant and the scribe were to be proficient in grammar, lexicography and counting, were to be pure (in character) and conversant with several alphabets. Purusa was called sādhypāla, who was to be hereditary, strongly built, a śūdra and obedient to the sabhyas (Vyāsa in Par. M. III p 30, V P p 31). The ten angas enumerated above (viz. king &c) are respectively identified with the head, the mouth, the arms, the hands, the thighs (ganaka and lekha), the two eyes (gold and water), the heart, feet (Br. in V. P p 31, Hārta in Rāj R p 20). In the Hall of Justice the king faces the east, the sabhyas, the accountant and the scribe respectively face the north, the west and the south (Br. in Par. M III p. 35, Vyavahārasāra p 25). Omitting the king and the chief judge the sabhā is said to have eight angas in certain works (e. g. S V p 72). The chief justice, the sabhyas and the learned brāhmanas were probably elderly people, as great emphasis is laid on this by Nār. (III. 18) and Udyogaparva 35.58 'that is not a real sabhā where there are no elderly men &c'<sup>372</sup>.

In the drama Mrechakatika (Act IX) we have a graphic, though brief, description of judicial procedure in ancient India. That drama is at least as old as the 4th or 5th century A. D. It is very instructive to compare the procedure described in it with that gathered from Nār., Br. and Kāt, who constitute the leading triumvirate on law and procedure in the smṛtis and who probably flourished a little before and a little after the drama. It will be found on comparison that the procedure in the drama is in essentials the same as that of the three smṛtis mentioned above, though there is some difference in minor details. The principal points in the drama bearing on judicial administration may be brought together here at one place. The court house was called 'adhikarana'; the chief judge was called adhikarānīka; he was assisted by the śreṣṭhin (a prominent merchant or banker) and a kāyastha; all three are referred to as 'adhikaranabhojaka,' and are addressed as adhukṛta or nyukta (appointed by the king); when a despot was on the throne, the judge's position was precarious and he could be deprived of the post at the king's sweet will (the Śākara, king's brother-in-law, threatens the chief justice with summary dismissal). There was a servant who arranged the seats in the court, inquired whether there was any litigant, summoned Vasantasenā's mother and Cārudatta (this man corresponds to the purusa or 'sādhyapāla'); inquiry was made by the judges as to whether any one wanted to file a suit or complaint; the śreṣṭhin and kāyastha are asked by the presiding judge to write down the important parts of the complainant's statement; a private person (who was not a relative) could complain to the court about an alleged murder; the judge allowed an old person like the mother of Vasantasenā and a respectable and well-known citizen like Cārudatta to occupy a seat when replying to questions from the court, but Cārudatta was deprived of this concession when a prima facie case was made out against him; the court-house (being probably situated near the palace) had near it mantrins, dūtas, spies, an elephant and a horse (and the chief of the city police is asked to ride the horse and find out whether the corpse of a woman lay in the public garden), and kāyasthas; Cārudatta was called upon to state the truth and the judge tells him that in the court no trick (chala) will be allowed to pass;<sup>373</sup> when a strong case was made out against Cārudatta by circumstantial evidence he was asked to confess his guilt, otherwise he was told that he would be whipped (i. e. this refers to whipping to extort a confession, vide above note 332); the judge was only to pronounce the judgment and recommend the legal punishment, while the king had the last word about the exact punishment, Manu's work was an authority; a brāhmana offender was not to be sentenced to death, but was to be banished with all his wealth, though some kings did not act up to this rule; impalement was carried out by cāndālas, ordeals of fire, water, poison and balance were known and Śūdraka conveys (śasahatātulāgniprāṇānte me ucāre) that Cārudatta had prayed for trial by ordeal, but that the chief justice, because there were witnesses and circumstantial evidence, refused that request.

The court so far described (i. e. where the king or the chief justice appointed by him presided) was the highest court. But other tribunals were recognized in the smṛtis and digests Yāj. I 30 and Nār. (I. 7) state<sup>374</sup> that law-suits may be decided by village councils (kulāni), corporations (śreṇi), assemblies (pūga in Yāj, gaṇa in Nār.), the judges appointed by the king and the king himself, each later one being superior to each preceding one. The first three were practically arbitration tribunals like the modern panchayats. The several words here require explanation and they have been differently interpreted by different digests. Medhātithi on Manu VIII 2 explains these words at great length. Acc. to him 'kulāni' means 'group of relatives' and also (acc. to some) 'impartial persons' (madhyasthapurusāḥ) and 'gaṇa' means 'builders of houses and mansions or brāhmanas dwelling in mathas'. Acc. to the Mī. and V. P. p. 29 'kulāni' means 'an assembly of the relations, agnatic and cognatic, of the litigants', acc. to the Sm. C. it means 'the agnates of the parties'; acc. to Aparārka it means 'husbandmen'. It appears likely that 'kulāni' means officers who presided over a group of eight or ten villages and who were granted the produce of one kula of land as their salary. Vide Manu VII. 119 and Kullūka thereon and Dāmodar-pur plate of Gupta year 124 in which the head of the district (visayapati) is said to have been assisted by the nagaraśresthin, prathama-kulika and prathama-kāyastha (E. I. 15 p. 130) and

'grāmāsta-kulādhikaranam' in E. I. vol. 17 p. 345 at p. 348 in the reign of Ku māragupta I. From the Sanchi stone Inscription of Chandragupta II (of the Gupta year 93 i. e. 412-13 A. D.) it appears that panchayats were called 'pañcamandalī' (Gupta Inscriptions pp. 29, 31). 'Śrenī' means, acc. to most commentators, 'the corporation of persons following the same craft or avocation, though they may belong to different castes' such as horse-dealers, betel-leaf sellers, weavers and dealers in hide. Acc. to the V. M. p. 280, 'śrenī' is an association of artisans or traders'. 'Pūgas' are assemblies of men of one place (a village or a town) belonging to different castes and following different avocations. Kāt (225 and 682) distinguishes between gana and pūga which he respectively defines as 'assembly of families' (kulas) (Sm. C. II p. 18, Par. M. III. p. 352) and 'assemblies of traders and the like' (V. R. p. 668) V. P. p. 30 says gana and pūga are synonyms. The king was thus the highest court of appeal and next to him was the court of the judges appointed by him, Brhaspati (S. B. E. vol. 33 p. 281 verse 28) ordains<sup>375</sup> that the kulas, śrenīs and ganās that are well-known to the king may decide the disputes of litigants except those that fall under sāhasa and that it was only the king who could carry out the order for fines or corporal punishments, i. e. the arbitration courts could only decide disputes not involving sāhasa and they had no power to execute their decrees about fines and corporal punishments, but that their decisions had to be filed with the king, who, if he did not disapprove of them, put them into execution. Pitāmaha<sup>376</sup> appears to mention three classes of State courts, while Yāj and Nār. refer only to two (viz. that of the chief justice and that of the king himself): 'a dispute decided in a village may be taken to the city and one examined in the city (court) to the king; a dispute decided by the king whether correctly or incorrectly cannot be reviewed.' It is distinctly provided by Br.<sup>377</sup> (S. B. E. vol 33 p. 282 verse 31) that the sabhyas are superior to the kulas and the rest, the chief justice is superior to sabhyas and the king is superior to all Pitāmaha<sup>378</sup> provides that when a litigant is not satisfied with the decision given by a kula tribunal or the others, he can carry the matter by way of appeal to the king. Besides these courts it appears from Kautilya that the village headman (grāmika or grāmakūta) exercised certain summary powers such as driving out of the village a thief or an adulterer (III 10) and that he could try some offences (IV. 4, grāmakūtamadhyaksam vā satrī brūyāt &c.). Even in the 20th century in the Bombay Presidency under the Village Police Act (Bombay Act VIII of 1867) the village headman (called Police Patil) has the authority to try and on conviction to punish with confinement for a period not exceeding twenty-four hours any person charged with the commission of petty assault or abuse within the limits of a village and the person convicted has no right of appeal to any court or magistrate against such conviction and only the High Court has the power to entertain a petition for revision (which it hardly ever does). Bhrgu<sup>379</sup> quoted in Sm. C II p 18 and other digests says that there are ten tribunals common to all men viz. the village people, the assembly of the citizens of the capital, gana, sreni, men learned in the four vedas (or vidyās viz. śāviksiki and the rest), the virgins, kulas, kulikas, judges (appointed by the king) and the king himself. The vargins<sup>379</sup> are the groups of various kinds such as ganas, pūgas, vrātas, srenis and others. Kulikas may be the elders of the families of the plaintiff and the defendant. In the Dāmodarpur plates (E. I. 15 p 130) we come across one Dhrtimitra who is described as 'prathamakulika'. The word 'pañcakula' was applied to certain high officers in Gujarat and Kathiawad; vide I. A. vol. 11 p. 220 (Abu Ins. of Bhīmadeva dated Vikrama year 1265) and Tawney's translation of the Prabandha-cintāmani pp. 18, 84, 129, 149, 190 for 'pañcakula'. The provisions about the conflict between customs and usages on the one hand and śruti and smṛti on the other will be dealt with in detail later on in another section. A few words may be said here about conflicts between smṛtis. In disputes between residents of the same country, the same city or the same hamlet of cowherds or of the same capital or village, the decision should be according to their own conventional usages, but in disputes between these and others (who are not residents of those respective places) the decision must be in accordance with the sacred texts<sup>380</sup> (Kāt. 47 q in S. V p 72, Par. M. III. p. 41). Another rule is that when there is an apparent conflict between two smṛtis, reasoning is to decide in ordinary life which should be followed or reasoning based on the actions of the aged and the experienced is to decide what text to follow (Yāj. II 21) and the business of the interpreter consists in holding that one of the smṛtis contains a general rule and the other an exception or that the two apply to different sets of circumstances (visaya-vyavasthā) or that an option may be intended. Voluminous glosses have been written on this one text of Yāj II. 21 right from Viśvarūpa in the 9th century downwards. Another rule is that in the administration of justice dharmaśāstra rules have superior force to those of arthaśāstra. This has been already referred to above (p 9) Bhṛgu further provides that foresters may get their disputes settled by foresters, members of caravans by other members, soldiers by (a tribunal of) soldiers and those who stay in a village as well as in a forest may get their disputes settled either by villagers or by foresters by mutual agreement and that the five tribunals for foresters and others are kulikas (high officers or heads of families), sārthas (members of caravans), headmen, villagers, citizens. The texts further provide that in certain cases the court was to call in aid outsiders to help in deciding disputes. Vyāsa<sup>381</sup> says: 'In the case of disputes among traders, artisans, husbandmen and actors it is impossible for others to give a (correct) decision, hence such matters should be got decided by experts in those various matters' Br. states that in disputes among husbandmen, craftsmen (carpenters and the like), artisans (like painters), money-lenders, guilds, dancers, sectarians (like Pāsupatas) and criminal tribes the decision should be made with the help of those who understand the conventions made by them and their usages. In disputes about the boundaries of villages and about fields in a village, four, eight or ten neighbours were to settle the boundaries (vide Manu VIII 258, Kaut. III 9, Yaj. II 150-152). Kaut. 1 19 and Br.<sup>382</sup> (q in V P. p. 23) say that disputes between those who have performed austerities or between those who are adepts in witchcraft and Yoga should not be decided by the king (unaided), but with the help of those learned in the three Vedas, as otherwise they may feel offended. These quotations show that certain people could claim to be tried by their peers or at least by a jury. This jury system was resorted to for settling complicated questions of fact. It is a very ancient system, being mentioned even by Gautama<sup>383</sup> XI 21-22 'the king, having received help from the heads of husbandmen, merchants, cowherds, money-lenders and artisans as regards disputes in their own groups, should finally decide what is just'.

It has already been stated above that the king is to decide according to the smṛtis. He has also to take into consideration the duties and usages of the several varnas and the eighteen low castes<sup>384</sup> (acc. to Manu VIII. 41 and Hārīta). The eighteen low castes said to be outside the pale of the four varnas and āśramas are enumerated by Pitāmaha, viz. washerman, shoe-maker, nata (dancer caste), bamboo-worker, fisherman, mleccha, bhilla, ābhira, mātanga and nine others (the names of which are not given here as the text is corrupt).

The foregoing gradations of tribunals did not all exist at all times in ancient and medieval India. One thing is, however, quite clear. There was always a court of the Chief Justice appointed by the ruling power and final appeal lay to the ruler himself. But as regards inferior tribunals usage varied. For example, it appears from a decision of 1742 in which a ruling of king Shivaji about a Kulkarni vatan is set out that in Shivaji's time disputes could be taken before three different but inferior tribunals, viz. the got (i. e. the assembly of castemen) which is somewhat like the kula tribunal of the smṛtis, or before arbitrators hailing from a place other than where the dispute took place or before the officers, balutedars and chief men of several villages round about.<sup>385</sup>

Manu (VIII 23) prescribes that the king fully dressed and with an undisturbed mind, after taking his seat in the Hall of Justice; should perform obeisance to the gods, the guardians of the (eight) quarters (Indra and others, as specified in Manu VII 4) and should then commence the work of looking into the legal business. The transaction of legal business has four stages (from the king's or judge's point of view) viz. first receiving information from a person, then finding out under what title of law (vyavahārapada) the information falls, then consideration of the pleadings of the parties and the evidence led by them and lastly the decision.<sup>386</sup> When a litigant comes before the court at a proper time (i. e. when the court is sitting) and makes his bow, he (the king or judge) should<sup>387</sup> address him as follows. —“What is your business? What is the injury done to you? Don't be afraid, speak out, man! By whom, when, where and why (was the injury caused)? When thus asked whatever he replies should be considered by (the judge) with the sabhyas and brāhmanas and if the matter be legally entertainable he (the judge) should deliver the seal (sealed order) to the plaintiff or order the bailiff to summon (the defendant)”. These observations are made by Kāt (86-88) Whatever a man, being excited by one of the emotions of love (or anger or greed), says before the court, should be first written down on a board or the like by the scribe (Nār <sup>388</sup> II 18)

Very elaborate rules are laid down about the summoning of the defendant or accused by Nār. (I 52-54), Br, Kāt (96-100), Śukra (IV. 5-102-106) and others. A few of the rules are set out below. The first person to be summoned is the one against whom a complaint based on suspicion or truth is made by the plaintiff or complainant. But other persons may be called as defendants<sup>389</sup> either when the person proceeded against by the plaintiff puts forward another as liable to plaintiff's claim or makes another liable along with himself or when another person is accepted by the plaintiff (on behalf of another who is a minor &c.) or (acc. to the Madanaratna) another person himself comes forward (as defendant) The king should not require the personal appearance of the following persons the diseased, minors, very old (beyond 70), one in a calamity, one engaged in some religious rite, one who would suffer irreparable loss by coming, one in misfortune (such as the death or disappearance of a dear relative), one engaged in the king's business or in a (religious) festival, one intoxicated, a lunatic, one distressed, a servant, a woman<sup>390</sup> who is young and whose family is in straitened circumstances or who is of good family or who is recently delivered, a maiden who is of a higher caste than that of the complainant. Nār. (I. 53) prescribes that cowherds when it is the season for taking cows for grazing, agriculturists in the sowing season, artisans actually engaged in work and soldiers engaged<sup>390a</sup> in war should not be summoned to appear in person, while so engaged. In these cases some one on their behalf should be summoned as a representative. But it is provided that even these persons may be summoned with proper safeguards in important cases or grave charges, such as the killing of human beings, theft, rape, eating forbidden food, counterfeiting coins, high treason &c. But women who by their earnings support their families, unchaste women, prostitutes, women without family and women excommunicated for grave sins may be summoned to appear personally<sup>391</sup>. A person who is summoned and is able to appear but does not appear in person was to be fined according to the value or importance of the subject matter of dispute e. g. in slight causes fifty (copper) panas, two hundred at least in the cases of middling value and 500 panas at least in heavy causes (vide Kat. 100-101 quoted by Sm. C. II p 34, Aparārka p. 607.) After taking the fine and waiting for 30 days or a month and a half the king may give a judgment in favour of the plaintiff, due to defendant's default. But if the defendant does come after that time, the suit may be restored and proceeded with.<sup>392</sup> But when there is an invasion by an enemy or a famine or an epidemic or disease the king should not impose a fine, but send a second summons. So he corresponded to what is called a recognized agent in the Indian Civil Pro. Code, Order III r 2 (Act V of 1908). In Śukra IV. 5. 114-117 some important rules are given:<sup>394</sup> the person who is appointed to represent a party should get as his wages 1/16, 1/20, 1/40, 1/80 or 1/160 part of the amount in dispute, that the wages become less and less as the claim in dispute becomes higher or if several persons employ one representative; one who knows dharmaśāstra and the procedure of law-suits should be appointed as representative and not any one who is deficient in these; if the representative takes wages without knowing these he should be punished by the king. A representative is to be appointed by the party and not by the king at his will; if the representative allows the matter entrusted to him to fail owing to his greed he is liable to be fined<sup>395</sup>. 395 The story in the com. on Nār. is as follows: In Pāṭaliputra (modern Pāṭnā) a brāhmana named Śrīdhara acquired with great trouble a fortune and lent to a trader named Devadhara ten thousand drammas at the rate of 2 per cent per month. When one month passed Devadhara paid as interest 200 drammas. When the 2nd month was running, Devadhara died of high fever, his son died of cholera and only the great-grandson of Devadhara, by name Mahidhara, remained. He was a very young man addicted to gambling and other vices. His property was taken under their protection by his maternal uncles. They were advised by a brāhmana who had a smattering of smṛti lore and was called Smārtadnrdhara 'Don't pay even a rupee to the creditor Śrīdhara. I shall save you even in Court by citing appropriate texts'. The uncles replied 'if you save us, we shall give you a thousand drammas as a reward'. When the 2nd month passed (from the date of borrowing), Śrīdhara called upon the uncles to pay 200 drammas as interest for the 2nd month. They replied 'You cannot claim even the principal (from the great-grandson of the original borrower), much less interest'. Smārtadnrdhara, the legal adviser of the uncles, said "Nārada declares (ṛṇādāna 4) 'grandsons should pay the debts of the grandfather; that (debt) ceases from the fourth'. On hearing this Śrīdhara was stunned, but gathering his wits filed a suit in the court and had summonses issued

E vol 36 p. 238) there is a passage about certain bhikkhus in the 'city of Righteousness' (dharmanaṣaia) who are styled 'dhammāpanikas' (dealers in dharma) and are described as follows: '(Bhikkhus), who in the spirit and the letter, in its arguments and explanations, its reasons and examples teach and repeat, utter forth and recapitulate the ninefold word of the Buddha; such bhikkhus are called, O king, lawyers in the blessed one's city of Righteousness' and on p 239 there are 'dhammaseththino' (bankers of dharma), which word reminds us of the sresthin in the Mṛcchakatika. The dhammāpanikas probably correspond to such lawyers as Smārtadurdhara mentioned above. The rules of Śukra make a near approach to the modern institution of the Bar and the fees prescribed by Śukra are similar to those allowed by the Bombay Regulation II of 1827 and by Schedule III to the Bombay Pleaders' Act (Bombay Act XVII of 1920). The first legislative enactment in India to deal with lawyers for representing parties passed by the British Government was the Bengal Regulation VII of 1793 which defined the privileges, the fees (five per cent up to 1000 and then on a sliding scale) and responsibilities of nakeels (which word originally means 'agent').

The plaintiff may put under restraint till the approach of the summoner (the bailiff) by the king's order the defendant, who does not stand up to meet the claim (i e. is about to abscond or may abscond) that is to be investigated (or when the plaintiff spoke to him about the claim before coming to court) and to Mahidhara, great-grandson of Devadhara, and his uncles Suretes were taken from both sides. The uncles were asked (by the court) 'why don't you pay the interest to Śridhara?' They appointed as their representative Smārtadurdhara, who said that he and his ancestors were friends of the family of Mahidhara and so he addressed the court 'I rely on Nārada's words (quoted above), and Mahidhara being the fourth from Devadhara (including the latter) is not liable to pay'. Bhatta Smārtasākṣhara laughed at this and said 'Smārtadurdhara, you are not deeply learned in the smṛti texts nor have you studied glosses thereon. The whole of the debt of 10000 dramma lent by Śridhara is still due from Mahidhara, as he is the great-grandson of the borrower, as three male descendants of the borrower are liable to pay the ancestor's debt and as Nārada means only this that the son of the great-grandson (who is the fourth from the borrower, excluding the latter from computation) is not liable to pay the debt of his great-great-grand-father' and the learned speaker charged him with having been promised a gratification. Smārtadurdhara and his proteges lost the case.

who disregards the words of the claimant. This is called āsedha which is explained by the Mit. on Yāj. II. 5 as restraint under the king's order. It is of four kinds viz. restraint as to (sthāna) place (e. g. you are not to go elsewhere from your house or a temple), as to time (e. g. you must present yourself on the 5th of a certain month), restraint from going on (pravaśa) a journey (till the suit is decided) and restraint from doing certain actions (e. g. you are not to sell certain property or to plough a certain field till the disposal of the suit)<sup>396</sup>. The rules about āsedha are laid down by Nār. (I. 47-54), Br. (q. by V. P. p. 42, Sm. C II. pp. 30-31), Kāt 103-110 (all quoted by V. P. pp. 41-42, Sm. C. II. pp. 30-31) Nār. (I. 54) states that those persons whose personal appearance is dispensed with as stated above are not to be subjected to āsedha Nārada provides that he who disregards the prohibitory order (āsedha) of the court should be punished and that he who obtains a restraint order against a person that should not have been thus proceeded against should also be punished. Acc to Kāt. that man who restrains the defendant so as to prevent him from exercising his limbs or from talking or breathing freely should be punished and not the defendant if he breaks such restraint. A defendant would not be liable to be fined, if he disregards a restraint order which ties him down to a river ford, or to a forest, to a bad place (infested by thieves and tigers) or at the time of an invasion (Nār I 49) There is a provision which looks like one for the appointment of a Receiver in modern times. Kāt. (120) says 'A king should not allow a litigant to proceed if the litigant retains the property or money which he has (been shown to have) seized: it should be delivered over to the opposing litigant (if he be trustworthy)' or it may be kept with a third person (as receiver for the successful party)<sup>397</sup> When the defendant comes on being summoned, he and the plaintiff are both to be placed before the judges (Pitāmaha q. in Sm C II p 34) Then a surety is to be taken from both who would be capable of carrying out the decree made by the court i. e. who would be able to pay the amount of fine to the king if the defendant denied the plaintiff's claim or who would be able to pay double the amount of the claim if the plaintiff's claim be found to be false (Yāj. II 10-11) If any one of the parties cannot offer a surety, then he has to be kept in the custody of the court's bailiff (sādhyapāla) and has to pay the daily wages of the bailiff at the end of every<sup>398</sup> day (Kāt 117 q. by Mit on Yāj II 10) The following persons could not be accepted as sureties (Kāt. 114-116 q. by Mit on Yāj II 57) 'the master (in the case of a party being a servant), an enemy, one authorised by the master, one arrested, one fined, one accused of grave sins or offences, one who is a co-sharer in family property, a friend, one who is a perpetual student, one who is appointed to do the king's business, ascetics, one who would not be able to pay the amount decreed and the fine to the king, one whose father is living, one who incites the party for whom surety is demanded, one whose antecedents are unknown' When a person (of any caste) is kept guarded for want of a surety he is not to be prevented from doing necessary and obligatory acts (bath, sandhyā worship &c) and if he runs away from the guard he should be fined eight panas (Kāt 119 q in Par M III 58).

When the defendant comes before the court, the information at first given by the plaintiff is to be written down accurately in his presence together with the year, month, fortnight, day, names (of parties), caste &c (Yāj II 6) When the aggrieved party first comes to the court, all that is taken down is the matter in dispute (i. e. the draft of the plaint), when the defendant comes, the plaint is written down with all details (including the grievance as stated in the beginning).<sup>399</sup> The plaint is called by various names in Sanskrit viz. pakṣa, bhāṣā, pratyñā (Mit on Yāj II 6) Sometimes the word 'pūrvapakṣa' is used for pakṣa (as in Kāt 131, Nār II 1) Vādin and prativādin generally mean the plaintiff and the defendant, though vādin sometimes means 'a litigant' (either the plaintiff or defendant) 'Āśīlīn' (one who seeks the assistance of the court) and abhyakṣa (attacker) are synonyms of vādin, and pratyārīh and abhyukṣa (attacked) are synonyms of prativādin Kāt.

(130-131) says that the judge<sup>400</sup> should have the plaint written down on a board (or on the ground) with a piece of chalk as narrated naturally by the claimant and then on a leaf (palm leaf or bark or paper) when it is corrected (after the defendant appears) and that the plaintiff may delete some matters from the original (draft of) plaint and may fill in gaps and that such amendments may be made in the draft till the plaint is finally settled.<sup>401</sup> It appears from the Vyavahāratattva (p. 205) that the pleadings (the plaint and the reply) could be written down in Sanskrit or in the vernacular of the parties if they were ignorant. The Mrechakatika (Act IX) shows how the presiding judge asks the śresthin and kāyastha to write down the words 'not by me' as the complaint of the Śākara when the latter averred that Vasantasena was killed by Cārudatta and not by himself. The plaint could be amended till the filing of the reply<sup>402</sup> (Nār II 7). Elaborate rules are laid down about the contents of the plaint by many writers from Kautilya (III 1) downwards. Kaut<sup>403</sup> states that in the plaint should be entered the year, season, month, fortnight, day, the documents (to be relied upon), the court (in which the plaint is lodged), the (amount of) debt (or other money due) and the country, village, caste, family, names and occupations of the plaintiff and defendant together with the relationship in which they stood to each other. Kāt (127-128 q by Mit on Yāj II. 6 and Aparārka p 608) requires that in suits about immoveable property, ten details should be recorded in the plaint viz the country, the place (town or village in which the property is situated), situation (boundaries or the figure such as a square &c.), the caste (of both parties), names, the dwelling place (of the parties), the measure (so many marikānas &c), the name of the field, (names of) the father, grandfather and great-grand-father, mention of the former kings Kāt. 124-126, Br (q in Sm C. p. 36 and V M p. 294) give further details, which are passed over for want of space. All the details enumerated above need not occur in every plaint, but the necessary ones must be stated according to the facts of each case<sup>404</sup>

These rules about the contents of plaints are very similar to those in the Indian Civil Pro. Code, Order VII rules 1-5

In modern India no suit or appeal can be filed unless the plaintiff or appellant pays substantial court-fees (Rs 7½ per cent upto Rs 1000 and 5 per cent for higher claims up to 5000 and so on at reduced rates as the claim rises) It is interesting to see how the litigants in ancient India fared in this respect. It appears that in disputes of a criminal nature no court fees had to be paid in ancient India. The person found guilty had to pay to the king the fine declared in the Smrtis for offences or awarded by the Court. As regards civil disputes also nothing had to be paid at the inception of the suit. Certain rules are prescribed by Kaut (III 1), Yāj, Visnudharmasūtra, Nār and others about payments to the king after the suit is decided, which payments may be regarded as in the nature of court fees. Yāj II 42 and Visnudharmasūtra VI. 20-21 state that in the case of suits for the recovery of debts the debtor who admitted that he was a debtor (but did not pay the creditor) should be made to pay to the king 10 per cent on the amount decreed and the successful creditor should pay five per cent out of the amount decreed (as bhrta, compensation or court fee)<sup>405</sup>. When the debtor denies the fact of debt altogether and the creditor succeeds in establishing it, the debtor had to pay the amount decreed to the creditor and an equal amount to the king as fine, but if the plaintiff turns out to be a false claimant (i. e. the relationship and the amount of the debt are not proved) he had to pay to the king as fine twice as much as the amount claimed by him (Yāj II 11). Nār also (IV 132) says<sup>406</sup> that a debtor, who is able to repay a debt but does not do so through wickedness or malice, should be made to pay the debt after recovering five per cent from the debtor. The Sm. C. II. p 121 says that this applies to a case where the debtor admits his liability to the plaintiff. Manu VIII. 139 gives milder rules: 'if a debtor admits before the Court that he is a debtor, then he has to pay a fine equal to five per cent on the amount decreed, but if he denied the fact of debt altogether, then he has to pay as fine ten per cent'. Manu VIII. 59 which prescribes a fine twice of that amount which the debtor falsely denies or which the creditor falsely claims contains a somewhat different rule (which Medhatithi says applies where parties are guilty of downright fraud, while VIII. 139 applies where there is negligence or loss of memory &c.). In suits other than for debts such fines are also prescribed e. g. in Yāj. II. 26 for one who misappropriates a pledge, II. 33, II. 188 (for breach of the rules of guilds and other groups), Yāj. II. 171 (where a person claiming to be the owner of lost goods and failing to prove his ownership of them was fined pañca-bandha i. e. a fifth part of the price of the goods). Kaut prescribes<sup>407</sup> that when a party is guilty of contradictory pleadings, or does not cite witnesses though saying he has witnesses and is defeated for these and similar reasons he has to pay a fine of 20 per cent of the claim and 10 per cent only if he relied on his own deposition (and called no witnesses) and further the defeated party has to pay the costs viz. the wages of the bailiff and of the subsistence allowance of witnesses. Therefore it may be said that in ancient times Indian litigants had an easy time, while in modern times litigation is often ruinous, what with the heavy court fees to be paid in several courts, the fees of legal practitioners and the expenses of witnesses and the delay of years<sup>408</sup>. The remark of Dr. Hart (in 'Way to justice' p. 17) is as applicable to modern India as to England 'the plain truth is that the justice of the courts is unattainable by some citizens through want of the necessary financial resources; while in the case of many others it is not worth having at the cost which it involves'.

408 In modern times a plaint or memorandum of appeal is to be rejected if not properly stamped Vide Order VII. r. 11 of the Indian Civil Pro Code The Peshwa's Government appears to have taken one-fourth or one-fifth from the party whose claim for partition or for recovery of debt succeeded Vide 'Peshwa's Diaries' ed by Rao Bahadur Wad, vol 2 pp 132, 146, 163

In one of his most famous soliloquies Shakespeare (in Hamlet III. 1 'Oppressor's wrong, the proud man's contumely, the pangs of despised love, the law's delays') enumerates law's delays among the principal evils of human life. In modern India as in England<sup>409</sup> before 1873 delay in the decision of causes is a crying evil. In the rough and ready methods of administering justice in ancient India care seems to have been bestowed on disposing of cases as quickly as possible. The story of king Nrga who caused delay has already been referred to (p. 243). Kaut. (III. 1) states that if the plaintiff, after the defendant files his answer, does not on the same day begin to support his case (by evidence) he would be declared to be defeated, since the plaintiff comes to court after determining the strength of his case, but the defendant does not do so (he is dragged to the court); that the defendant may be allowed an adjournment of three or seven days for his defence; if he is not ready with his defence within that time he may be punished with a fine ranging from 3 to 12 panas; if he does not answer even after three fortnights he shall be punished with fine for parokta (viz. pañcabandha or daśabandha as stated above in note 407) and the plaintiff's claim would be recovered from the property of the defendant. A similar rule is laid down in Manu VIII. 58. Yāj. II. 12 prescribes that disputes relating to sūhasa (killing by poison or weapon), theft, abuse, assault, cows, charges of grave sins and women (about the chastity of all women and about ownership in the case of female slaves), the defendant has to make his defence at once, and that in other cases time may be granted at the discretion of the court. Nār. I. 45 is to the same effect. Nār. I. 44 holds that adjournments may be granted in suits about debts and the like for finding out the truth as such disputes are complicated and as memory is weak. Pītāmaha (q. in Sm. C. II. p. 42) says that adjournments may be granted in disputes about deposits, sealed deposits, gifts, partnerships, transgression of conventions and partition of heritage. Gautama XIII. 28 speaks in general terms of an adjournment for one year, when the defendant does not remember the transaction, but prescribes immediate trial in disputes about kine, women and children or when the matter is urgent i. e. where loss or abandonment of the thing will be the result of delay (Gaut. XIII. 29-30). Brhaspati allows time even to the plaintiff if he is not able to put forward his case owing to his immaturity or lack of boldness.<sup>410</sup> Kāt. (145-158 quoted by Aparārka p. 619, Sm. C II. p. 42, Par. M. III. pp. 69-72) contains elaborate rules about adjournments. He says that according to the importance or otherwise of the dispute, one, three, five, or seven days may be allowed to the defendant to make his defence in disputes about debts, according as the debt was contracted three months ago or 6, 12, 20 or 30 years ago; that even more than a year may be allowed if the defendant is an idiot or lunatic or is suffering from disease or if the subject of dispute or the witnesses are in a foreign country; that more adjournments than one may be granted in such cases; that according to Brhaspati in disputes about immoveable property also no adjournments should be granted; that if the act of God (dava) or the king prevents the defendant from making his defence he should not be declared defeated, but time should be granted to him to prove this. It is clear that with the advance of time adjournments became longer and more frequent in Kāt. compared with the rigid rules of Kauṭ.. Kāt. and Śukra (IV. 5. 167, 209) contain the last word on this point. According to them delay in deciding causes is tantamount<sup>411</sup> to denial of justice (dharmavyāpath, lit. death of Justice).

The sequence of stages in a law-suit is as follows: first the plaintiff makes his averments, then the defendant makes his reply; when both have finished, the members of the court speak (or deliberate among themselves) and after them (speaks) the judge (Kāt. 121 q by Aparārka p. 611, Par. M. III. p. 58). The four stages (pādas) of a law-suit, acc. to Yāj. II. 6-8, and

Kāt ( 122 q in Sm C II p 35, Par M III p. 59 ) says that preference should be given to that litigant whose injury is greater or whose cause is more important than those of the rest. Kaut III 20 went <sup>415</sup> so far as to say that judges should look into the causes of idols ( or temples ), brāhmanas, persons performing austerities, women, minors, the old, the diseased, the helpless, even if they did not come forward to complain nor should judges put forward the excuses of time ( i. e. the long delay in taking cognisance of their causes ), place, or ( long ) enjoyment ( of their opponents )

Lengthy quotations and illustrations are cited in the commentaries and digests about the requirements of a good plaint. They are all passed over. They well illustrate the penchant of ancient Indian writers for divisions, sub-divisions and subtle distinctions.

Kāt. ( 136 quoted by Aparārka p. 609 ) specifies several reasons which make a plaint unacceptable viz one that lacks flimsy or trumpery grounds. Brhaspati<sup>419</sup> says that a plaint that is mrathaka (i. e. the injury in which is very small or the monetary value involved is negligible) should not be entertained by the king. This is on the principle of de minimus non curat lex (the law does not take account of trifles) also embodied in sec. 95 of the Indian Penal Code.

When the plaint has been finally settled, the defendant should be called on to reply in writing to the plaint in the presence of the plaintiff (Yāj II. 7, Nār. II. 2). This is called uttara (reply) or pratipaksa (Nār. II. 2). When time may be given to the defendant for putting in his answer has already been stated above.

The answer of the defendant must possess the following characteristics viz it must completely meet all the points of the plaint, it must not deviate from the truth, must not employ vague words, must not be self-contradictory, it should not be such as to require further explanation (because of containing words in a foreign tongue or unknown or rarely used words or elliptical or badly arranged sentences)<sup>420</sup>. A reply is of four kinds, (1) nithyā (of denial), sampratipatti or satya (confession or admission), kāna or pratyavaskandana (of special plea or demurrer), prānnyāya or pūrvanāya (of former judgment or res judicata). A reply of denial may take four forms (Nār II. 5) viz. (1) this (what is affirmed in the plaint) is false, I do not know anything about it, I was not present (when the transaction alleged in the plaint is said to have taken place), I was then not born<sup>421</sup>. The first is a direct denial, the others are implied or indirect. Very strict rules of pleading were evolved by the time of Kāt., who provides (144) that if a statement asserted by the plaintiff in the hearing of the defendant is not traversed by the latter or if the latter remains silent when he should have given a reply, it (should be held by the court that it) is admitted (by the defendant).<sup>422</sup> When the defendant declares the truth of the claim made in the plaint that is a reply of admission. Where the defendant accepting as correct the matters (or facts) set out by the plaintiff raises a plea, that is a reply of special plea.<sup>423</sup> The same is designed by some as ādharma or ādharma (rendering futile) of the plaint. For example, where plaintiff avers that defendant took one hundred rupees and defendant accepts that fact but adds either that he later on returned them or that they were really donated to him, that is a reply of special plea. Where a person though defeated in a (former) proceeding again causes a plaint to be written and is addressed (answered) with the words 'you were formerly defeated', that is a reply of former judgment. That there was a former judgment between the same parties may be proved by citing the judges or arbitrators or by citing other witnesses or by producing the writing itself i. e the copy of the judgment (Kāt. 172).<sup>424</sup> In a reply of admission there are only two stages of vyavahāra viz. the plaint and the reply; there is no need of proof (so there is no kṛyāpāda) and the plaintiff succeeds as a matter of course (and so there is no necessity of a regular judgment, nirṇaya). Kāt. (173-190) states at great length the faults of a reply and also what are not proper replies. The Mit (on Yāj. II. 7), Aparārka pp 613-614, Sm. C. II. pp. 43-46 and other digests quote long passages from Kāt, Br, Hārīta, Vyāsa and others on faults of ultara and illustrate them at length. These have to be omitted for want of space. One of the faults is 'sankara' (mixture or confusion or misjoinder of pleas in defence). For example, if the plant alleges 'the defendant took gold, a hundred rupees, certain valuable clothes and a quantity of corn and has not returned any of them,' and the defendant's reply is 'I took the gold, I never took any rupees, the plaintiff donated the clothes to me, as to the corn plaintiff had already filed a suit against me and failed' Here the reply contains all four varieties, viz. the first is a reply of admission, the 2nd is one of denial, the third is a special plea and the 4th is a plea of former judgment. This is a sankara. But it is not meant that this reply would not be allowed. All that is meant is that, as the burden of proof varies, the adducing of evidence will not be allowed simultaneously, but one after another. Vide Mit. on Yāj II. 7, Par M III pp 77-80. These questions are concerned with cases in which several issues arise, the burden of proving some of which lies on the plaintiff and the burden of proving others lies on the defendant. If a defendant does not come forward to give a reply, the king or judge should make him give one by sūma (conciliatory words), bheda (threats) and other ways and if he does not give a reply for seven days after that, he may be declared to have been defeated and a decree may be passed against<sup>425</sup> him. Kaut (III 1), Yāj II 9, Nār I. 55, Kāt (163) state that a defendant cannot<sup>426</sup> raise a counter-claim (matyabhyoga) as long as he has not met the attack of the plaintiff, nor should another plaintiff attack a person who is a defendant in a suit already filed, except in the case of abuse and assault, sāhasa (death or grievous hurt by a weapon &c.), theft or in a very urgent matter, or in disputes among members of caravans or guilds or in charges of adultery, Yāj II 29, Nār. IV 93, Śukra IV. 5. 120 say that when a litigant dies while a suit is pending, his son (or other representative) who takes his estate should carry on the litigation or be liable for the claim and the son cannot add his own enjoyment (to make up

There were many grounds on account of which a litigant became what is called hina (a losing party) and some times either had his plaint dismissed or his defence struck out and a decree passed against him or he was simply fined. For example, Nār. II. 33 speaks of five kinds<sup>423</sup> of hina viz. one who changes his statements (or pleading), who does not prosecute his pleading by adducing evidence (i. e. avoids investigation), who does not appear when summoned, who gives no reply, who disappears or runs away when summoned. Nār. I. 56-61, II. 24 explain some of these and other hina parties. Kāt. 203 (q. by Sm C. II. p. 47) prescribes that the above five should respectively be fined 5, 10, 12, 16 and 20 panas. Nār. II. 25 states that in all civil disputes such as those about women, land or debts the litigant does not lose his cause even if he commits a mistake in his statements, but he is liable to fine. This conveys that in disputes arising out of wrath (manyukṛta i. e. in criminal matters) a person loses his cause if he is guilty of the above acts and he is prohibited from pursuing the matter again. Kaut. III. 1, Manu VIII. 53-57 contain in almost the same words, certain similar rules, Kaut. calling the several actions causes of parokṣa (defeat). Vide Yāj. II. 16, Śukra IV. 5. 136, Kāt. 191-210 for further details on dismissal for default and cognate matters. In these cases of hinavādins, though a fine was imposed, a retrial could be ordered. When defendant filed his reply and parties joined issue in court, Br. and Kāt say that they should not then be allowed to compromise the dispute privately without the permission of the court. if they did so they were both to pay double of the fine imposed on a defeated party, as they deprived the king of his dues ( court fees ). But a compromise with the court's permission was allowed when the parties were in doubt as to what the witnesses might say or the sabhyas might decide (in such cases it would be wisdom for the parties to compromise) and particularly when the evidence on both sides was evenly balanced or where there was a conflict between the different smṛtis and usages

When the reply had been given the sabhyas had to consider the question about the burden of proof. Br. <sup>430</sup> says ' the sabhyas after considering the nature of the reply should call upon one of the parties that are in court to establish his case ' ( Sm C. II. p 50 ). What a party sets out to establish is called sādhyā and the means whereby the claim ( of the litigant ) in its entirety is established is called sādhana ( Kāt. 213 in V. P. p. 79 ). Yāj II. 7 and Nār. II. 27 say that the party ( on whom the burden of proof lies ) should immediately ( after the reply is given ) write down the means whereby he proposes to prove his averments. This third stage ( pāda ) is called kṛyā i. e. proof. Sādhyā and kṛyā are synonyms, kṛyā and sādhana also are synonyms ( Kāt. in Aparārka p 616, Vyāsa in Sm. C. II. p 54 ). The rules about burden of proof are laid down by Hārīta ( q in Mit on Yāj II. 7, Aparārka p 616 ). In a reply of denial, the burden of proof is on the plaintiff, in a reply of former judgment or of a special plea, it is on the defendant and in a reply of admission no question of burden of proof arises. Compare also Nār II. 31. The Mit on Yāj II. 80 states another rule that an affirmative proposition has to be proved by him who asserts it ( bhāvapratyññāvdāna eva kṛyā ) Yāj. II. 22, Nār. II. 28-29 and IV. 69, Br. ( in Sm. C. II. p. 54 ), and others say that means of proof are two-fold, human and divine, and that documents, witnesses and possession are the human means of proof ( Vas. 16. 10 also ), while the ordeals of balance and others are divine means. Yāj II. 22, Nār. II. 29, Kāt. 217 expressly state that ordeals are to be resorted to only when none of the human means are possible or available. If one party relies on human means alone and the other offers divine means, the king ( or judge ) has to accept human means and not divine; in disputes among men, if there be human means of proof though reaching

(or covering) only a portion (of the allegations in the plaint) then human means should be accepted and not divine ones even though the latter may cover the whole ground (Kāt. 218-219 q by Mit. on Yāj. II 22). This latter rule is based on the proposition laid down in Yāj. II. 20 and Visnūdharmasūtra VI. 22 that when a party totally denies a claim and the opponent establishes by evidence a substantial portion of it, the judge may pass a decree against the denying party for the whole of the claim. This is practically the same as the maxim 'omnia praesumuntur contra spoliatorem'.<sup>431</sup> Therefore the general rule was that the divine mode of proof was to be resorted to only in the absence of any human means of proof. Kāt. 229 (q. by Mit. on Yāj. II. 22, Aparārka p. 629) allows witnesses or ordeals when the dispute is started with reference to sāhasa, assault or abuse and causes that spring from force and Kāt. 230 (q. in Sm. C. II. p. 51) provides that, in the case of a person guilty of sāhasa perpetrated in secret, investigation has to be made by divine proof. Kāt. 225-228 (q. by Mit. on Yāj. II. 22, Aparārka p. 629, Sm. C. II. pp. 53-54) lay down certain rules about preference among the several means of proof: whatever are declared as the conventional usages of the associations of traders, of guilds (of artisans) and of groups (of brāhmanas), the means of proving them are documents and not ordeals nor witnesses; enjoyment<sup>432</sup> (or possession) alone is weightier in the case of the making and (the use of) doors and ways, as also in the case of water-courses and the like (i. e. in the case of easements) and not writing nor witnesses; in the case of things promised to be given but not given, when a decision is to be given in disputes of servants with masters, in the matter of taking back a thing after it is sold or when a person having purchased a thing does not pay the price, in gambling and prize fighting—when in these matters disputes arise the means of proof are witnesses and not documents nor ordeals Marici (q. by Sm. C. II. 60, V. P. p. 141) states that as regards the sale, mortgage, gift or partition of immoveable property a document (should be executed as it) enables the person (in whose favour it is executed) to acquire (clear) title and freedom from doubt<sup>432</sup> (even after the lapse of years) It is in consonance with this that the Indian Legislature (in the Transfer of Property Act, IV of 1882) requires writing and registration as regards the sale, mortgage and gift of immoveable property Nārada IV 75 very concisely hits the special characteristics of each pramāṇa: 'a document is always strong, witnesses are strong (as evidence) only as long as they are alive, possession becomes strong as time passes'. The comparative strength of the several kinds of evidence is well put by Brhaspati<sup>433</sup>: 'Witnesses are superior to inference (circumstantial evidence), a document is superior to witnesses, undisturbed possession for three generations is superior to all these' Kāt. 221 (q. by Mit on Yāj II 80 and V. P. p. 80) gives the warning that when a litigant abandoning a strong ground or means of proof resorts to a weak one to prove his case, he would not be again entitled to rely on that (strong ground of proof) after the members of the court have decided as to who should succeed This practically propounds the same rule as that of constructive res judicata contained in explanation 4 to section 11 of the Indian Civil Pro Code (of 1908)

The means of proof will now be briefly dealt with in order And first come documents 'Those in search of an exhaustive treatment may usefully consult Dr Amareshwar Thakur's 'Hindu Law of Evidence' (Calcutta, 1933).

When writing was first employed in India and how the Indian Brāhmī alphabet was derived have been moot points for many decades among scholars Max Muller's theory ('History of Ancient Sanskrit Literature' p. 507) that the use of writing for literary purposes was unknown to Pāṇini was thoroughly exploded by Goldstücker in 'Pāṇini and his place in Sanskrit Literature' and was later on abandoned by Max Muller himself

Then Bühler (in 'the Origin of the Indian Brāhmī alphabet') started the theory that Brāhmī was derived from a foreign Semitic script about 800 B C. and this hypothesis held the field for a long time (vide e. g. Rhys Davids in 'Buddhist India' chapters VII and VIII). Even Western scholars are not now prepared to accept this dating of Bühler; vide Cambridge History of India, vol. I, p. 141 (1922). The excavations at Mohenjo-daro tend to throw grave doubts on this theory and discredit it. At Harappa and Mohenjo-daro there is writing (not satisfactorily deciphered yet) on burnt clay and pottery. The Piprahva vase shows writing on stone several centuries before the Christian era and the Shahpur copperplate inscription is the earliest writing on copper plates yet discovered (vide Annals of B. O. R. Institute, Vol. XI, p. 32 ff). This is not the place to discuss the questions about the origin of the art of writing in India and of the Brāhmī script. It cannot be gainsaid that the most ancient dharmaśāstras refer to writing as well-known. Gaut. XIII. 4 appears to refer to a witness signing himself as such on a document. Vas. 16. 10, Visnudharmasūtra VI. 23, Yāj. II. 22 mention likhita (document) as the first means of proof. Manu VIII. 51 uses the word karana in the sense of document (arthaparyayamūnam tu karanena vibhūritam), in VIII. 168 refers to documents obtained by coercion and in IX. 232 to fabricated royal edicts (kūtasāsana). Kaut. has a special chapter (II. 10) on royal writings (śāsana), in which he dilates upon the qualifications of the king's scribe, on the contents of an official document, the good points required in an official missive, on various divisions of writings and on the faults in official writings that are to be avoided. In I. 11 Kaut. prescribes that the king should hold consultations with absent ministers by sending a letter (patra, a leaf of palm or a piece of birch bark or similar material) and in I. 19 states that consultation by letter (patra) with the council of ministers should be held in the fifth part of the day. In II. 7 Kaut. advises the construction of rooms with shelves for books containing accounts (akṣapaṭālam nibandhapustakasthānam kārayet). Vide also Kaut. II. 21, II. 30, IV. 9, IV. 10 for references to writing in various other connections. Kaut. (III. 1) appears<sup>434</sup> to use the word karana in the sense of document and gives a rule which is the same as Yāj. II. 23. Yāj. I. 319 speaks of land grants being written or engraved on cloth or copperplate Megasthenes (McCrindle p. 69) no doubt says that Indians have no written laws, but there is no doubt that he is under some misapprehension as to what he was told, since in another place (p. 83) he refers to philosophers committing useful suggestions to writing. Similarly Strabo (XV. 1 53-54) states that the Indians were ignorant of writing, but (67) narrates that Nearchus states that Indians write letters on cloth. One of the oldest copperplate grants is the Taxila plate of Moga (identified with Moa of the Śakas) and is not later than 120 B. C. Vide E. I. Vol IV. p. 54 and Rapson's 'Indian coins' p. 7. It appears that wooden boards were used for writing ephemeral matters and patra for more permanent use, as Kāt (p. 293, n. 400 above) states that the first information was to be written on a board with chalk and the formal plaint on a leaf (patra). The Lalitavistara (10th chap. p. 143, B. I. ed.) states that the Buddha used a board of sandal-wood for learning the scripts (-candanamayam lipi-phalakam-ādāya).

Yāj. II. 84-94, Nār. IV. 69-75 and 135-146, Br., Kāt. 249-312, Śukra II. 291-318, IV. 172-182 and several digests devote great attention to documents. A few salient points only will be brought out here. Nār. (IV. 70-71) eulogises documents by saying that if the Creator had not created writing which is like an excellent eye, the world would have come to grief and that a document is an indubitable means of apprehending the time, the place, the object, the material, the extent and the duration of a transaction. Br. (q. in V. P. p. 141) says that, since <sup>435</sup> people begin to entertain doubts (about a transaction) even in six months (from an occurrence or transaction) the Creator therefore created in the hoary past letters which are recorded on writing material (patra). The Lalitavistara (about 2nd or 3rd century A. D.) mentions 64 scripts which were known to the Buddha, among which the first is Brāhmī (10th chap p. 143). Nār., Br., and Śukra probably try to explain why the alphabet current in their days was called Brāhmī (it was created by Brahmā). Śukra II. 297, IV. 5. 172 are similar verses. The texts divide documents in different ways. Viṣṇu <sup>436</sup> Dh. 8.

VII. 2 divides documents into three kinds viz. those written before the king (i.e. by public officers), those bearing the superscription of witnesses and those without witnesses. The first is a document written in a state office by a scribe appointed by the king and bearing the signature of the head or superintendent of the office. This is just like the registration of documents in modern India. Br.<sup>437</sup> (q by V. P. p. 141, V. May, p. 24) divides documents into three sorts viz. royal writing, writing made at a fixed place and that written in one's own hand. Nār. IV. 135 speaks of two kinds viz. one written by the executant himself in his own hand and that written by another; (the first of these is valid) without attesting witnesses, while the second requires to be attested. In the former no writer (lekha) nor witnesses are necessary, while in the latter both are necessary. Even now in India no deed concerning even immoveable property is required by law to be attested except mortgages and gifts. The author of the Saṅgraha, the Mī. on Yāj. II. 84 and several others divide documents into rājakiya (public) and jānapada (private or of the common people). The V. Mayūkha (p. 24) says that laukika and jānapada are synonyms and jānapada document is of two kinds viz. written by the executant himself in his own hand and that written by another, and that the first may be without attestation of witnesses, but the other must be attested. On Yāj. II. 22 the Mī. divides documents into śāsana and ciraka. The first is the same as rājakiya (described in Yāj. I. 318-320) and ciraka is practically the same as jānapada writing. On Yāj. II. 89 the Mī. remarks that a royal deed must be written in correct and elegant language but a document executed by ordinary people is not required to be in correct Sanskrit, but may be written in the local dialect of the parties. Yāj. II. 89 states that a document written by the executant himself in his own hand is authoritative except when it is brought about by force or fraud. Yāj. II. 84-87 prescribe that a document of debt or the like should be written down by mutual agreement, that the creditor's name should be placed first, that it should mention the year, month, half month, tithi ( day ), the names, caste, gotras, the Vedic School, the names of the fathers of the parties, that when the writing is finished the debtor should write at the end that the deed is approved by N. N ( the executant ) son of so and so, that an even number ( i e not less than two ) should attest the document, stating their father's names and that they attest as witnesses and the scribe should write at the end that he wrote the document at the request of both parties. If the debtor or any witness cannot write, his signature should be made by another in the presence of all witnesses (Nār. q by Mit on Yāj. II 87 and by Vy. Nir. p. 87 without name ). Rājakiya documents are of three kinds ( acc. to Br quoted in V P p 141, V May. p. 24 ) viz śāsana ( a royal grant of land ), jayapatra ( a judgment deciding a law-suit ), prasāda-patra ( a deed showing the king's pleasure at the devoted service or bravery of a person ); acc. to Vasīṣṭha ( q in Sm. C. II p. 55 and V May p 28 ) it is of four kinds viz śāsana, jayapatra, ājñāpatra ( a royal command addressed to feudatories, high or low officers like the wardens of the marches ), prajñāpanāpatra ( a writing of request addressed by the king to sacrificial priests, a purohita, teacher, learned brāhmanas or other highly honoured persons ), it is five-fold acc. to S V pp. 111-113 viz śāsana, jayapatra, ājñāpatra, prajñāpanāpatra and prasādapatra. Kaut in II. 10 speaks of several kinds of royal orders and names them, such as prajñāpanā ( request by a messenger about what another prays ), ājñāpatra ( as above ), paridāna ( honour to the deserving or gift in distress ), parihāra ( remission of taxes for certain castes or villages by the king ), msr̥stīlekha ( writing whereby the king accepts the actions or words of some trustworthy person as his own ), prū-vrttika ( conveying information about some portentous happening or some news about enemies etc. ), pratīlekha ( reply in accordance with discussion held with the king on a message from another ), śarvatraṅga ( order addressed to high functionaries and officers for the welfare of travellers ) The contents and form of royal grants have been described in H. of Dh. vol. II pp 860-861. The jānapada writings are divided into various sorts, seven ( acc. to Br. q. by Aparārka p 683, Sm C II p. 60 ) or eight ( acc to Vyāsa in Sm C II. p. 59 ) and the Sm. C. remarks that there is no emphasis on the number and there may be many more varieties. Br. ( S B. E vol. 33 p 305 ), Kāt ( 254-257 ) and others mention and define the following jānapada writings ; bhāga- or vibhāgapatra ( deed of partition ), dānapatra ( deed of gift ), krayapatra (sale deed), ādihānapatra or ādhipatra (deed of pledge or mortgage), sthūtipatra or saṁvṛtpatra (deed of convention, which is made by the inhabitants of a village or city or the members of a corporation or guild by mutual agreement for settling their conventions), dāsapatra (deed of bondage to serve executed by a person devoid of food or clothing), malekha or uddhārpatra (bond of debt promising return at a future date with interest), viśuddhipatra (deed of purification given to a person with the attestation of witnesses when a penance for a sin has been performed), sandhipatra (deed of peace when a compromise in the presence of leading people after a charge of the commission of a crime has been made), simāpatra (deed of boundary when a dispute about it is settled), upagata (a receipt passed by the creditor to a debtor on payment of the whole or part of a debt, Yāj II. 93), anvādhipatra (a sub-mortgage i. e. where the mortgagee or pledgee mortgages or pledges the property or thing to another and hands over the former deed to his own creditor). The two branches of private documents (jānapada) are either ciraka or not ciraka; ciraka is defined as a document written by hereditary scribes residing in the capital, who are approached by the parties and bearing the signatures of the parties and witnesses and the names of their fathers (Sangraha q by Sm. C II. p 59, Par M III. p 127). Vide n. 437 above and Śukra II. 299-318 and IV. 5. 172-177 for definitions of these and other kinds of documents. But acc to Vyāsa quoted by Sm. C. II. p 59 private documents are of eight kinds viz ciraka, upagata (a receipt), svahasta (written by the executant himself), ādhipatra, krayapatra, sthūtipatra, sandhipatra, viśuddhipatra. Some works like the Vyavahārasāra (p 69) and the Mit write the word as ciraka and not cnaka. It was so called (viz ciraku) probably because it was written on the back (of the bark of the birch or some other tree). If the proper word is ciraka then it was employed because being executed by scribes appointed by the king, it had validity for all time (cira) as compared with purely private documents. 'Ciraka' in this last sense seems to be equal to 'sthānakṛta' of other writers.

Nar. <sup>438</sup> IV. 136, Visnu. Dh. S VII. 11 and Kāt. (252) require that a document is held valid which is not adverse to the custom of the country, the contents of which follow the rules regarding pledges (and other transactions) and the sequence of the sense and of the words in which is not contradictory or confusing. Sm. C. II. p. 59 applies the word<sup>439</sup> pañcārūḍha (on which five are recorded) to documents that are signed by the creditor, the debtor, two witnesses and the scribe. The Sarasvativilāsa p. 114 holds that pañcārūḍhatva consists in having the creditor, debtor, witnesses (as one item), scribe and the matter to be written. Hārīta and Vyāsa (q in Sm. C. II. p. 59) employ the dual (sāksinau), while Yāj. II. 87 employs the plural. Therefore ordinarily two witnesses sufficed, but in very important writings there should be more witnesses. Viśva-rūpa reads 'asamāh' in Yāj. II. 87 and requires three witnesses as the minimum. Nār. IV. 137, Visnu<sup>440</sup> Dh. were allowed to overrule the force of documents there would be confusion and an end to all written transactions<sup>441</sup>. If there is a conflict among documents then a jānapada document (written by a scribe and attested) is superior to one written in the hand of the executant himself and a public document is superior to a jānapada one (Vyāsa q. by Sm. C. II p 66 S. V p 122).

Yāj. II. 91, Nār. IV. 146 and Kāt. 312 (q. by Aparārka p. 687) prescribe that when a document is in another country or when it is illegibly written, when it is lost or its letters have become indistinct (by lapse of time or other causes) or it has been stolen or is crushed or burnt or shattered into pieces, another document may be caused to be written (if both parties agree), but if they do not agree and the contents have to be proved or if the executant denies his signature, then Nār. IV. 142 and Kāt. (282 q. by Sm C II p. 63) say that time may be given to bring it from the foreign country or the contents may be proved by the evidence of the attesting witnesses or of the scribe or of those that have seen it. This shows that the smṛti law required the production of the document itself as primary evidence, but allowed secondary evidence only in exceptional cases<sup>442</sup>. If a document belonging to one man is produced by another the latter has to explain his custody of it<sup>443</sup> (Vyāsa q. by Aparārka p. 690, Sm. C. II. 66), Kāt. (308 q. by Sm. C. II. p. 65) says<sup>444</sup> that just as the reflection of a person or thing made in a mirror is seen as if it were real though it is unreal, so clever people can fabricate documents resembling (the genuine writing of a person). vv. 20-21) say the same thing and add that documents have to be carefully scrutinized and that no certain conclusion can be established by documents alone (in every case), that women, minors and illiterate persons are deceived even by their relatives by the fabrication of documents bearing the names of these (women and others) and that this has to be investigated with skill. When there is a doubt about the genuineness of a document, it can be established by comparison with other documents admitted to be written or signed by the same person, by ratiocination, by the probability of the two parties being together at the time of the transaction, by citing the attesting witnesses,<sup>445</sup> by the peculiarities or flourishes in writing certain letters or making certain signs (in the writing questioned and in other admitted writings), the previous transactions between the parties (or their subsequent conduct), and the source of the acquisition of the subject matter in dispute (Yāj. II. 92, Viṣṇu Dh. S. VII. 12, Nār. IV. 143-144, Kāt. 283 q. in Mit. on Yāj. II. 92). Viṣṇu Dh. S. (VII. 13) and Kāt.<sup>446</sup> 285-286 (q. by Aparāka pp. 689-690) prescribe that if the debtor, creditor, witnesses or the scribe be dead the authenticity of the document has to be ascertained by (a comparison of the signatures on the disputed document) with other specimens of their handwriting or signatures or other documents executed by the debtor. Kāt. 287 (q. by Aparāka p. 689, Sm. C. II. p. 64 and Par. M. III. p. 134) states the striking<sup>447</sup> rule that when a document bears the royal seal, that document is presumed to be authentic, even though all the three (viz. the debtor, the witnesses and the scribe) are dead. This shows that documents bearing the king's seal or that of royal officers were regarded as prima facie genuine and this rule is analogous to the provisions in sec. 79 of the Indian Evidence Act and sections 59-60 of the Indian Registration Act. That even copperplate grants were sometimes forged is clear from the reference in the Madhuban plate of Emperor

A. vol. 30 pp. 201-223 for many forged grants. Verses (variously attributed to Kāt. or Brhaspati by the digests) state that when a loan (recorded in a document) has not been expressly claimed by the creditor able to claim from a debtor who is able to pay off and who is at hand, the document loses its validity because a suspicion arises that the debt has been paid off and that a document executed more than thirty years before which has never been seen (by any body) nor read out (by the creditor to any body) does not attain validity even though the witnesses on it are living. Nār. IV. 141 is very similar to this last. Kāt. 298-299, 301 (q by Par. M. III. 136, Mit. on Yāj. II. 24, Aparārka p. 690-691) prescribe that if no objection is raised for twenty years as regards a patent fault in a document of debt or pledge or of the settlement of boundaries, then the document ceases to be voidable Kāt. 275 and Br. (S. B. E. vol. 33 p. 302 v. 25) both quoted by Aparārka p. 671 and V. P. p. 122 require that the latent defects in documents or witnesses must be declared (pointed out) by the disputant at the (proper) time (i. e. when they are produced), while patent defects may be considered by the sabhyas at the time (of the consideration of the evidence) by reference to the rules of the śāstra. Yāj. II 93-94, Visnu Dh. S. VI. 25-26<sup>448</sup> prescribe that when a debtor pays part of a debt, the debtor should write on the back of the document how much he paid or the creditor may hand over to the debtor a writing of receipt signed or written by himself, particularly when the original document is not at hand, and when the whole debt is paid or the contract is fully performed the creditor should tear off the document or should execute another document in order to make clear the fact of satisfaction

The fabrication of royal edicts and private documents was so much condemned by the sentiments of society that Manu IX. 232 and Visnu Dh. S. V. 9-10 prescribe the extreme penalty of death for such offences as in the case of the murder of women, minors and brāhmanas. Yāj. II. 295 (= Matsya 227. 202) prescribes the highest fine for him who adds to or writes less than what was intended to be declared in a royal grant or edict, Śaṅkha also prescribes death or the excision of a limb for fabrication of documents (q. by V R. pp. 298, 369 ).

CHAPTER XII

BHUKTI OR BHOGA (possession).

According to Gaut. X. 39 a man becomes an owner by inheritance, purchase, partition, seizure (appropriation of forest trees and other things which have no owner) and finding (i.e. appropriation of lost property the owner of which is unknown). Gaut. (X. 40-41) adds that in the case of brāhmanas acceptance (of a thing donated) is an additional mode (of becoming an owner), that conquest in the case of a ksatriya and gain (by trade or labour) in the case of a vaiśya or sūdra are also additional modes. Vas. 16. 16 mentions eight modes. Br. (quoted in V. P. p. 153, Aparārka p. 635, S. B. E. vol. 33 p. 309 v. 2) mentions seven modes of acquiring immovable property viz. by learning, purchase, mortgage, valour (i.e. conquest), through the wife (as dowry), inheritance (from an ancestor) and succession to an issueless kinsman. Nārada (q. in Sm. C. II p. 70) mentions the same except mortgage. None of these expressly says that long possession is by itself a source of ownership. Great divergence<sup>449</sup> has prevailed throughout the centuries among the sages and digests about the relation of title and possession and about the length of possession necessary for making a person secure in his right to property by reason of possession. Possession (bhukti) may be with title (sāgamā) or without title (anāgamā). Āgama means 'origin' or 'source of title' such as purchase or simply 'title'.<sup>450</sup> Manu VIII. 200, Yāj. II. 27, Nār. IV. 84 employ that word in that sense. Vide Kat. 317 (q. in Sm. C. II p. 73 and Par. M. III. p. 141). If property is held in one of the modes of acquiring ownership stated above and there is also possession, one's right to that property is indefeasible (Nār. IV. 85, Br. q. by Sm. C. II. p. 70, S. B. E. 33 pp. 309 and 312 v. 3 and 22), but possession without a clear title does not lead to (or ripen into) ownership<sup>451</sup> (with certain exceptions to be noted later on) Vyāsa and Pītāmaha<sup>452</sup> declare that possession in order to be valid must have five characteristics viz it must have title behind it, must be of long standing, unbroken, free from protest (by another person) and in the presence (i. e. before the very eyes) of the opponent (q in Mit on Yāj II 27 and Aparārka p 635) Even title, if not accompanied by some slight possession, has no strength, while title is stronger than possession not handed down hereditarily (Yāj II. 27) Nār. IV. 85 states that possession becomes strong when backed by clear title. These passages present some difficulty and make title and possession depend on each other. Nār. IV. 77 states that even if there be a document or witnesses to support a man's title, when there is no enjoyment, particularly in the case of immovable property, there is no validity All that is meant is that a transfer without possession though under a deed or before witnesses is risky and that title and possession lend support to each other as stated by Nār IV. 84-86, Br, Hārta and Pītāmaha<sup>453</sup> Nār (IV. 86-87) declares that one who pleads mere possession and no title at all should be considered a thief on account of his putting forward the deceptive plea of possession (which even a thief can assert) and that the king should punish as a thief one who enjoys a property even for hundreds of years without title. All that this last verse means is that the person in possession must prove legal origin or such a long possession that there is no possibility of an inference that the possession of his ancestor originated is wrong. Delivery of possession was the principal mode of transferring ownership in ancient times in almost all systems of jurisprudence and so possession was given great weight as evidence of ownership.<sup>451</sup> The Mit. on Yāj. II. 27 makes the position clear. In the case of a gift or sale there must be the cessation of the ownership of the transferor and the arising of the ownership of the transferee. This last occurs only when the transferee accepts the property and not otherwise. Acceptance is mental, vocal and physical (i. e. the acceptor makes a resolve to accept, says that he accepts and takes physical possession). These three may exist in the case of such movable articles as gold, clothes &c. But in the case of a field physical acceptance is not possible except by enjoying the fruits or profits thereof. Therefore in order to make a gift or sale perfect there must be some slight possession at least. In the absence of such possession mere title is weak. Title may succeed against the man in possession who has no title and who has not been in possession for the prescribed period (such as three generations). If the possessor proves possession for that period he will succeed against one who has bare title and no possession whatever. If it is known or proved that a man purchased from A but got no possession and that another purchased from A subsequently and got possession (but was not in continuous possession for the prescribed period) the prior title though without possession will prevail over the later one, acc. to Yāj. II. 23. But when it is doubtful as to which title is prior and which posterior the one with possession will prevail. Where the possession has been uninterruptedly with a man's ancestors for three generations he will succeed against one who has bare title. Therefore possession was not absolutely indispensable for transfer even acc. to the Mit. and other works, but title without possession was risky and so possession was insisted upon as it was 'nine points of law'. It follows, acc. to the Mit., that (1) when possession was comparatively of short duration and not supported by any title much weight was not attached to possession and title by itself would prevail against it, that (2) continuous possession for three generations (though there is nothing to show there was title to begin with) will prevail over a mere documentary title and that (3) a prior title with less than the possession for three generations (but with some possession) succeeds over a later title accompanied by possession. Long possession was assumed to have originated in legal title, although owing to lapse of time it was not possible to prove the origin <sup>455</sup> The main controversy has raged round the question of what is long possession. Yāj II. 24 literally translated means 'loss of land results in twenty years when it is enjoyed by a stranger before the owner's very eyes and without any protest from him and loss of chattels (results under similar circumstances) in ten years'. Manu VIII 147-148 and Nārada IV. 79-80 have two verses in common which mean 'If the owner of anything silently looks on (i.e. raises no protest) when it is being enjoyed in his presence for ten years by strangers he does not deserve to recover it (i.e. he loses the thing). When the owner is not an idiot nor a minor and his property is enjoyed within his sight then the property being lost by his conduct (vyavahāra) comes to belong to the enjoyer'. Gaut. XII. 34 has almost <sup>456</sup> the same words as Manu VIII 148. Śankha (in V. R. p. 208) also refers to ten years. These passages apparently mean that at the end of 20 or 10 years' adverse possession by the wrongful possessor the ownership of the original owner is lost and the wrongful possessor becomes the owner. But there are several other smṛti passages where it is said that possession even for a hundred years originating in wrong cannot confer title and much longer periods are required for the loss of ownership and the acquisition of ownership by prescription. Vide Nār. IV. 86-87 cited. (on p. 318 above) Nār. (IV 89) himself says elsewhere that possession requires 455 Under the Law of England 'Time immemorial or time whereof the memory of man runneth not to the contrary' was considered to include the whole period of time from the reign of Richard I. This was a very inconvenient and absurd rule which was abrogated by sec. 1 of the Prescription Act of 1832 (2 and 3 William IV, chap. 71) whereby the rights to any land became absolute and indefeasible by sixty years' uninterrupted enjoyment before that Act (except when the enjoyment was by some consent or agreement made under a deed). By French Law the time of memory was held to extend for one hundred years as done by the Mit and other Sanskrit digests. Vide Salmond's Jurisprudence (9th ed. of 1937) p. 265. note 7.

454. In English Law until the year 1845 (8 and 9 Vic. chap. 106, sec. 2) land could in theory be conveyed in no other method than by delivery of possession and no deed or conveyance was in itself of any effect. Vide Salmond's Jurisprudence, 9th ed. 1937, p. 620.

to be supported by title only during smṛtakāla (during human memory), but in cases beyond human memory possession continued successively for three generations (or ancestors) is proof of ownership even in the absence of a document (or other title). Visnu Dh. S. V. 187 is in similar<sup>457</sup> terms. The Mī. on Yāj. (II. 27) says that smṛtakāla is a period of 100 years, as the Veda declares that the span of a man's life is 100 years. For a hundred years it is possible for witnesses to depose to the origin of possession. So if there is possession for less than one hundred years, oral evidence can be adduced for establishing its origin, and title will have to be proved by the possessor and if no oral evidence is adduced to prove title, it is a case in which it may be held as certain that there was no title to begin with. Mere possession is not enumerated by sages like Gautama among the means of acquiring ownership. As the Sarasvatīvilāsa (p. 124) puts it, long uninterrupted possession only leads to an inference that it originated in title acquired by sale, gift or the like i. e. there arises a presumption of lawful origin<sup>458</sup>. Therefore in order to enable a man to rely on possession alone as proof of ownership it must extend uninterruptedly over 100 years (acc. to the Mī.). The Smṛticandrikā<sup>459</sup> (II. p. 72) accepts this meaning, only requiring 105 years' possession instead of 100 years'. Acc. to a smṛti quoted by it each generation means 35 years and so when Nārada requires possession for three generations 105 years are meant (acc. to Sm. C.) Visnu Dh. S. V. 187, Kāt. (327) also hold that continuous enjoyment for three generations makes the fourth generation owner of the land. Kāt. (321 q. by Mī. on Yāj. II. 27, Aparārka p. 636) states 'in cases falling within the memory of man it is desirable that possession must be accompanied with title

(in order to be proof of ownership as to land); but in cases beyond the memory of man possession extending over three generations (is independent proof of ownership), since there is no certainty that there was no title (to begin with)'. Vide also Br. (in S. B. E. vol. 33 p 313 verses 26-28). 'Three generations' is a vague expression. The great-grandfather, the grandfather and the father of a man may die in the space of ten years and if the great-grandfather took possession wrongfully and all died within ten years of the time of taking possession one after another, the fourth in descent might urge that there was possession for three generations and that he had become owner. Therefore Kāt. in another verse (318, q by Aparārka p 636 and V. P. p. 155) laid down that unbroken possession for three generations extending over sixty years becomes firm (independent means of proof of ownership) Thus tripurusa-bhoga or pūrvakramāgata-bhoga (in Yāj II 27) means the same thing as possession continuing from a time beyond human memory (asmānta-kāle) and is equal to 60 years acc. to Kāt., Vyāsa and a few other smṛti writers<sup>460</sup>. Nārada (q. by Aparārka p 636) says that as regards possession one generation means twenty years, while Br. (q by Sm. C. II. p 72) says it means thirty years. It will be noticed from the above that early authors like Gaut., Manu., Yāj. appear to lay down 20 years' adverse enjoyment of land as sufficient to create ownership, while other and comparatively later authors like Nār. and Kāt. require sixty years enjoyment. In order to remove this conflict and following the maxim that apparently conflicting texts should be reconciled as far as possible, the writers of commentaries and digests from Viśvarūpa and Medhātithi (on Manu VIII-148) downwards proposed various interpretations of Yāj. II 24 and similar texts. Some lay emphasis on possession and others on title. There are at least three explanations. Aparārka (pp. 631-632), Kullūka and Raghunandana take the literal sense and say that on 20 years' adverse possession there is loss of ownership (i e. there is svatahām)<sup>461</sup>. The 2nd explanation is that the meaning of Yāj. II 24 is that after 20 years' enjoyment by a stranger, if the owner brings a suit and relies on a document in his favour, he runs the risk of being unable to prove his ownership barely on the strength of the document, since it is possible to argue that, even though he had a document, by his silence he acquiesced in the stranger taking possession and tacitly consented to it. Therefore all that Yāj II. 24 means or recommends is that an owner should not be negligent (upeksā) or should not remain silent when a stranger takes wrongful possession. This view was first started by Visvarūpa among extant writers and it approaches the modern idea of requiring vigilance in the assertion of ones' rights<sup>462</sup>, that is there is only loss of the suit (vyavahārahāni). This view lays emphasis on a verse attributed to Nār. and the word vyavahāra in it and in Manu VIII 148 and Nārada IV. 80, where the word means lawsuit also, the idea being that the sages declare only what would happen or be decided by the judges in a law court and do not intend to say that the decision would be just or righteous from the higher or the moralist's point. The third view is that of the Mit. (followed by the Vyavahāramayūkha, Mītramīśra and several others) which<sup>463</sup> explains that the loss is not that of the ownership of the thing itself but of the produce of it (there is only 'phalahām') i.e. if without protest the owner allows a stranger to remain in possession before his very eyes for twenty years and then he brings a suit, he may succeed in getting back his land but he would lose his claim to the profits of the land. The Mit., the Vyavahāramātrkā and V. P (pp 157-165) contain very elaborate discussions on Yāj. II. 24; but considerations of space forbid any further reference to them. The V M <sup>464</sup> connects Yāj. II. 24 with the preceding verse (viz that in mortgages, gifts and sales a prior transaction prevails over a later one) and remarks that this verse (Yāj. II. 24) says that if a person after a gift, sale, or mortgage to him allows the property to remain with the seller, donor or mortgagor, who subsequently transfers it to another with possession and the latter holds it for twenty years, then the first dealing though prior is of no avail (as it is not accompanied with possession for 20 years). Śrīkara (as stated in the Vyavahāramātrkā) tried to reconcile the conflicting smṛti texts by holding that in twenty years the real owner lost ownership if he was present and did not protest while a stranger was in possession, but passages speaking about possession for three generations (or sixty years) applied only where the owner was absent. The Mit. and others point out that Yāj. II. 24 (who employs the words 'paśyatah' and 'abruvatah') conveys that if a stranger takes possession while the owner is absent or if the owner protests, then even 20 years' possession does not lead to the loss of anything. The text of Nār. IV. 87 quoted above (p. 318) shows that the sage held that possession for several hundred years even would not avail the possessor if it is certain or established that the possessor had no title at all to begin with or that his possession started wrongfully. This text is emphasized by those who favour title and want to discourage persons benefiting by their own wrongdoing. But there are other smṛti texts of a contrary tenor. For example, Nār. IV. 91 himself says 'whatever has been enjoyed even' unlawfully for three generations (i.e. by three ancestors) including the father cannot be recovered by the owner from the person (who is the 4th in succession) because it has gone through three lives in succession'; a text of Hārita states 'what has been enjoyed by three prior ancestors without any title whatever cannot be recovered back (from the present holder, who is 4th), since it has descended successively through three generations'. These two are relied upon by those who hold long possession as leading to an inference of title (tripurusa-bhuktvādinaḥ, as Medhātithi on Manu VIII. 148 calls them). These like the Vyavahāratattva and Vivādacandra<sup>465</sup> who rely solely on possession holdly say that long possession even originating in wrong leads to ownership. Medhātithi says 'there can be no memory of the origin of title when there has been possession for hundreds of years and (if title had to be proved for the origin of such possession) a king may resume villages enjoyed by ancient temples, brāhmanas and mathas; therefore ancient possession is evidence of ownership because it makes it extremely probable that the ancient possession originated in gift or the like'. The Mit. on Yāj. II. 27 (which is svatavādī) refers to all the three views, refutes the first two and accepts the view of loss of profits. It does not literally interpret the texts of Hārīta and Nārada quoted above, takes them to be over-statements and intended to convey that continuous possession for over three generations cannot be interfered with even if there is no clear proof of the origin of title. In modern India under the Indian Limitation Act (IX of 1908) the tendency is to prescribe the very short period of twelve years for adverse possession in order to defeat a title, following the English Real Property Limitation Act of 1833 (3 and 4 William IV chap. 27), sec. 2 of which insisting on vigilance by every one about one's rights however prescribes the period of 20 years within which to bring an action for recovery of land. Modern case law has rather gone too far and sets a premium on wrongful possession by holding that it is not necessary that adverse possession should have been brought to the knowledge of the real owner<sup>466</sup>. Ancient Hindu lawyers put down the tendency to usurp another's property and placed many obstacles in the way of the wrongful possessor.

It may be noted that there were a few rare texts that referred to very short periods for possession causing loss of title, viz. 3 years for immovable property (provided there was no permissive origin, ksamāṅga) or one year for corn, cattle and other movables<sup>467</sup>. This idea being opposed to innumerable texts was explained away as merely conveying the great importance of possession. Marici states<sup>468</sup> that cows, beasts of burden, ornaments that are borrowed through friendship should be returned within four or five years, otherwise the owner would lose them. This is opposed to Manu VIII 146 and other texts and so is explained as being applicable only if there is no sufficient cause for allowing them to remain with the borrower. The ancient Roman Law was very like this. Before Justinian the Roman Law gave the ownership of a thing by quiet possession bona fide and founded on good title if maintained during one year over movables and during two years over immovable property<sup>469</sup>. Justinian altered this and provided that possession during three years gave ownership of movables and possession during ten years (if parties resided in the same province) or during twenty years (if they did not) gave the ownership of immovable property.

Br (S. B. E. vol. 33 p. 314 verse 31) lays down the proposition that if a person has title and is already in possession and is dispossessed by another then he may succeed in a lawsuit on the strength of his prior possession provided the dispossessor does not establish continuous possession for three generations<sup>470</sup>. This is similar to a suit in ejectment contemplated by Art 142 of the Indian Limitation Act.

Br (S. B. E. vol 33 p. 310 v. 11) and Kāt. 335 (both quoted by Aparārka p 637, V. P. p. 166) state that what is enjoyed by a man's agnates and cognates and his own people does not pass to their ownership by their mere possession; one should regard possession (as leading to ownership) in cases other than these. Pitāmaha states that possession by a stranger is powerful, but possession by members of one's own family has certainly not the same force<sup>471</sup>. This appears to adumbrate the principle of modern law that possession by one co-owner or one tenant-in-common is ordinarily the possession of all co-owners and the mere fact that the profits of a property have been enjoyed by only one co-heir or tenant-in-common for many years does not by itself amount to the ouster of the other tenants-in-common<sup>472</sup>. It is stated in Gaut. XII. 35 that property which is enjoyed for a long time by a śrotriya, an ascetic or a king's officer is not lost to the owner by that enjoyment, since the owner may have thought that he would reap long-enduring spiritual merit by the first two enjoying this property (such as a vacant house) or that he might be prevented from asserting his right from fear (of the royal official). Compare Br. (S. B. E. vol 33 p. 311 v. 12),<sup>473</sup> Manu VIII. 149 (= Nār. IV. 81 and Vas. 16. 18), Yāj II. 25, Br. (S. B. E. 33 p. 312 v. 21), Kāt. (330) state the following exceptions to the rule of loss by long possession; a mortgaged or pledged property, boundary, minor's property, an open deposit, a sealed deposit, women (female slaves), the property of the king i. e. (of the State) and the property of a brāhmaṇa learned in the Veda are not lost by the possession of another (for twenty or ten years referred to in Manu VIII. 147 and Yāj II. 24). Manu VIII. 145 provides that neither a pledge nor a deposit can be lost by lapse of time and that both are recoverable even if they have remained long (with the pledgee or depositor). Yāj II. 25 adds to the above list the properties of idiots and of women. Nār. IV. 83 emphatically states that women's property (strīdhana) and state property (land) is not lost even after hundreds of years, when it is enjoyed without title. Kāt. (330) adds to the above list temple property and what is inherited from the father or mother<sup>474</sup>. All systems of jurisprudence throw protection round the interests of minors, persons of unsound mind and others similarly situated and provide longer periods of possession for loss of their right. The Mit. on Yāj (I. 25 gives reasons why the several exceptions are made. in the case of a pledge or mortgage the property is enjoyed by the pledgee or mortgagee under an agreement and so there is no fault on the part of the owner if he remains quiet while the property is being enjoyed by the creditor, boundaries between villages can be easily established by such signs as trees (growing on the border), streaks of chaff and coal (buried underground), deposits are entrusted to a person out of confidence for being preserved and not for enjoyment; idiots and minors are ignorant or incapable of understanding their rights, the king being engrossed in numerous state affairs may not be able in time to look into the question about possession of state properties; women on account of their ignorance and timidity may not assert their rights and a learned brāhmana being devoted to learning, teaching and performance of rites and duties may have no time to go to law. 475 Under the Indian Limitation Act, a mortgagor can sue for redemption and possession within 60 years from the time when the right to redeem accrues (Art. 148), though for ordinary suits for possession the period is 12 years, while a pawnor of moveable property has 30 years (Art. 145) from the date of the pawn, if a thing is entrusted to a man for a specific purpose as a trustee then sec. 10 of the Limitation Act provides that no length of time will bar a suit for recovering from him or his legal representatives or voluntary assigns the trust property or its proceeds (upaniḍhi and niḥsepa may be examples of trust), a suit on behalf of the Secretary of State for India can be brought within 60 years (Art. 149), sections 6-8 provide longer periods for persons who were minors, idiots or lunatics at the time when their rights were invaded. Under the Real Property Limitation Act of 1833 (3 and 4 William IV chap. 27 sections 16 and 17) a suit could be brought within ten years of the time when the disability ceased in the case of minors, lunatics, idiots, those absent beyond the seas, but no suit can be

CHAPTER XIII

WITNESSES (sākṣiṇaḥ).

The word sākṣin occurs in the Śvetāśvataropaniṣad<sup>476</sup> (VI. 11) where it is applied to the one immanent Spirit of the universe as All-seeing. Pāṇini<sup>477</sup> V. 2. 91 explains the word sākṣin as meaning 'one who has directly seen' Gaut<sup>478</sup> XIII. 1, Kauṭ III. 11, Nār IV. 147 state that when two persons litigate and there is a doubt or discrepancy between the two the determination of the truth in the dispute is due to witnesses Manu VIII. 74, Sabhāparva<sup>479</sup> 68 84, Nār. IV. 148, Viṣṇu Dh. S. 8 13, Kāt 346 (q in V M p 317 and V. P p 106) provide that a (proper) witness is one who has himself either seen or heard or experienced the matter in dispute. This means that the evidence of a witness must be direct and should not be what is called hearsay. Medhātithi (on Manu VIII. 74) says<sup>480</sup> that hearsay evidence occurs when a person who hears from another that has himself heard something from another comes forward as a witness and that hearsay is no legal evidence. Manu VIII. 76 prescribes that even though a man may not have been expressly asked or appointed by the parties (in the words 'you are the witness to this transaction'), he is a proper witness when asked as to any matter in dispute that he has himself seen or heard The only exception to hearsay evidence allowed by the Visnu Dh S. VIII. 12 is that<sup>481</sup> when a person that is appointed as a witness is dead or gone abroad, those who have heard what he said may give evidence. It has already been stated (p 297) that a king was not to delay the examination of witnesses. Kāt. (340-341 q by Aparārka pp 675, 677, Sm C. II. p 92, V. M p. 331) prescribes that the king (or the chief judge) should himself examine the witnesses that are present (in court) and should consider along with the sabhyas the statements made by witnesses and that, where it is doubtful who the witnesses on a disputed matter are, time should be given for producing the witnesses in order to ascertain the proper means of proof but that where it is clear who the witnesses may be he should make the hearing of the case proceed at once. Kāt. (352) further prescribes<sup>482</sup> that when it is impossible to bring witnesses because they reside in a foreign country, evidence taken in writing before a man learned in the three Vedas and sent by him should be read in deciding the cause<sup>483</sup>. Gaut. 13. 2, Manu VIII. 60, Yaj. II 69, Nār. IV. 153 and others require that ordinarily there should be at least three witnesses in a cause. Br. (S. B. E 33 p 301 v. 16) says that there may be nine, seven, five, four or three witnesses, or two only if they are learned brāhmanas<sup>484</sup>. Visnu Dh S VIII 5 and Br. (S. B. E vol. 33 p 301 v 16) emphasize that a single witness alone cannot be examined for deciding a matter<sup>485</sup>.

485 Vide Best on 'Evidence' (12th ed of 1922) p 515 The Mosaic law in some cases and the Civilian and Canonists in all exacted the evidence of more than one witness, a doctrine adopted by most nations in Europe and by the ecclesiastical and some other tribunals among us' According to the Common Law of England and the Indian Evidence Act (I of 1872) sec 134, no particular number of witnesses shall in any case be required for the proof of any fact Best (ibid p 520) notices that in prosecutions for perjury the testimony of at least two witnesses is required by the Common Law of England (now confirmed by Statute) and that by Statute two witnesses at least are required in trials for treason Vide Emperor v Bal Gangadhar Tilak 5 Bom. L R 324 where the rule about two witnesses in convictions for perjury according to the Common Law of England was relied on

But Yāj II 72, Viṣṇu Dh S VIII. 9, Nār IV 192 state that one man alone may be a witness in a cause if he is endowed with the regular performance of his religious duties (is possessed of the qualities stated in Viṣṇu Dh S VIII 8) and is accepted as a witness by both sides. Vide Manu VIII 77 also Br (S B E vol 33 p 301 v 18) allows a single witness to furnish valid proof if he is a dūtaka<sup>486</sup> (messenger), an accountant, one who has accidentally witnessed the transaction or if he is the king or the chief justice. Vyāsa says<sup>487</sup> that even a single person may be enough in a cause, especially in heinous offences called āhava, if he be one whose actions are pure, who knows the dharma and whose truthfulness has been well attested before. Kaut (III 11) says that a single witness (whether a man or a woman) may be enough in cases where the transaction in question was effected in secret (except the king and one performing austerities)<sup>488</sup>. Kāt (353-355 q by V M pp 319-320, Sm. C II 76, V. P. pp. 112-113) states that even a single person may be allowed to depose as a witness if he was taken in confidence at the time of making a deposit; so also a messenger sent by a litigant for borrowing an article (such as an ornament) or the manufacturer of an article may alone be sufficient to prove the identity of the article or when a matter has been decided by the king or chief judge, the scribe, the chief justice or any one of the śubhyas may alone prove the plea of res judicata or the point as to what was said by the plaintiff or the defendant in a suit<sup>489</sup>. Vide Br (S B E. 33 p 300 verses 13-14).

The qualifications of witnesses to be examined in a suit are stated in numerous places such as Gaut XIII. 2, Kaut III 11, Manu VIII 62-63, Vas 16-28, Śāṅkha-Likhita (q in S. V. p 138), Yāj II 68, Nār IV 153-154, Viṣṇu Dh S VIII 8, Br (S. B E vol 33 p 302 v 28), Kāt 317 (in Sm C II p 76 and

486 Br (S B E vol 33 p 300 v 8) defines a dūtaka as one who is a respectable man esteemed and appointed by both parties and had come near to listen to the speeches of the parties

V P p 111) The principal qualifications are;<sup>489</sup> they should be born of a good family, should have lived hereditarily in the country, should be householders having a son or sons, should be well-to-do and men of character, should be trustworthy, should know dharma and act up to it, should not be covetous, and should have been cited by the parties as witnesses. Some Smiti texts such as Kaut III 11, Manu VIII 68 (= Kāt. 351 and Vas. 16-30), Kāt 348 provide<sup>490</sup> that ordinarily witnesses should be of the same varṇa or caste as the parties, that women should be witnesses in disputes between women, that men of the lowest castes (andhyas) should be witnesses for litigants of those castes and that a litigant of a lower caste should not try to prove his case by citing witnesses of a higher caste or a brāhmana (unless the latter is an attesting witness on a deed). But most (even including Gaut and Manu) give an option and say that persons of all castes (even sūdras) may be witnesses for all. Vide Gaut. XIII 3, Manu VIII 69, Yāj. II. 69, Nār. IV. 154, Vas. 16-29 (śaresu sarva eva iā) Nār. IV 155 and Kāt (349-50 q by Aparārka p 666 and V. P. pp 111-112) provide<sup>491</sup> that in disputes between members of groups such as those who wear peculiar symbols (indicative of their sect), śrenis (guilds), pūgas (associations), companies of traders and all others who work in groups and who are therefore called varṇas and in the case of slaves, hards, wrestlers, elephant riders, horse-trainers and soldiers the heads (called varṇa) of these groups are the proper witnesses. Gaut. XI. 21 says that in disputes among members of classes of agriculturists, traders, cowherds, money-

Long lists of persons who are generally to be regarded as incompetent to be witnesses are given in Kaut. III. 11, Manu VIII 64-67, Udyogaparva 35, 44-47, Yāj II 70-71, Nār. IV. 177-187, Visnu Dh. S. P. p. 119) Manu VIII 118 states the general grounds why oral evidence tends to be false viz covetousness, infatuation, fear, desire of pleasures, anger, friendship, ignorance, minority. As the list of incompetent witnesses in Nār. is the longest,<sup>492</sup> that alone is set out here. one who has monetary<sup>493</sup> interest in the parties or the subject matter of the suit (such as a co-sharer, creditor and debtor of the parties), a

493 The Mit explains 'arthasambandhin' as 'vipratipadyamānārtha sambandhin' while V P. p 117 explains as 'creditor or debtor' of a party. 'Āptāh' is defined by Kāt 361 (quoted by Aparārka p 669) as 'those who depend for livelihood on the subsistence given by a party to the suit or those who serve him or cause benefit to him or those who are his relatives, friends or servants' Sm C explains 'cākrīka' as a bard, while V P. (p 118) as oil-presser. The printed text of Nār reads 'asrāddha' (who is not invited at a śrāddha), while V P and others read 'asraddha', for vrātya (one whose upanayana has not been performed) vide H of Dh vol II p 376. 'prāg-drstadosa' is explained by Asabhāya as 'one who suffers from a disease which is the effect of evil actions done in past lives' Kāt 362 (q by Aparārka p 669) explains 'sanābhayah' as sons of one's mother's sister or one's full sister or one's maternal uncle The printed text reads 'śrānta', while Sm C II p 78 reads 'asānta' (restless) and V P 117 reads 'asrānta' (one constantly engaged in work) Kulika is explained as 'one appointed by the king to decide causes' (by Kalpataru), while the Madanaratna says 'he is the person in authority over a kula i.e. a group of brāhmanas or the like'. others; one who is an apostate<sup>494</sup> from the order of ascetics (pratyavasta); a robber; a servant of the king, a brāhmana who sells human beings, cattle, meat, bones, honey, milk, water or clarified butter; a member of the three higher castes who engages in usury; one who has given up the peculiar duties of his caste (or station); a kuhla; a bard; one who is the servant of a low person; one who has quarrelled with his father, one who causes dissensions Kaut III 11, Manu VIII 65, Visnu Dh S. VIII. 1 and several others say that the king cannot be cited as a witness<sup>495</sup> (except possibly to prove the plea of res judicata or to prove what transpired before him when a litigation was going on)

The above is a formidable list of incompetent witnesses, therefore, most Smṛtis such as Gaut XIII 9, Kaut III 11, Manu VIII 72, Yaj II 72, Nār IV 188-189, Visnu Dh S III 6, Usanas (q. in Sm. C II p 79), Kāt 365-366 (q in Sm C II p 79) expressly point out that strict examination of the character of witnesses should be entered upon in disputes about debts and 494 In Omichand v Barker (Willes 1737-1860 p 538) where Willes (Lord Chief Justice) says (at p 551) that in Popish times and for some little time afterwards till the Reformation was fully established there was a notion that 'even an alien friend especially if he were an infidel could not sue in a court of justice here' That shows how non-Christians found it difficult to sue in England for their just rights a few centuries back. In the case cited above Lord Chief Justice Willes had to deliver an elaborate judgment in 1745 for holding that evidence taken in India according to the oaths administered to non-Christian witnesses could be read in a trial held in England. So one need not laugh at Nār who flourished at least about 1200 years before that date if he held an atheist or an apostate to be an incompetent witness. It should be noted that 'By the canon Law a Jew is not admitted to give evidence against a Christian, especially if he be a clergyman,' vide Taylor on Evidence (ed of 1848, p 655 note C.)

495. Vide Taylor's 'Law of Evidence' (12th ed) vol II p 872 para 1381 about the sovereign giving evidence on oath, his considered opinion being (after referring to the case of R v Mylius in which the defendant was prosecuted for a libel upon King George V) 'that the sovereign if so pleased may be examined as a witness in any case, civil or criminal, but not without being sworn' The स्यद्धि नि p 100 says सद्गु न साक्षी द्यपति. कार्य इति राज्ञः साक्षित्वनिषेधात् । तस्य कार्यं साक्षित्वमिति चेत्, उच्यते । व्यवहारदर्शनकालेऽवगतेष्वर्थेषु तस्यैव साक्षित्वमुच्यते, कालान्तरापेक्षया निषेधः । तथा च व्यासः । राज्ञा धर्मात्मन्येन यच्छ्रुतं तच्च निश्चयम् । नान्यः साक्षी भवेत्तत्र श्रुत्वा राजानमीश्वरम् । इति । बृहस्पतिः । निर्णीते व्यवहारे तु पुनर्वाच्यो यदा भवेत् । अभ्यक्ष सम्प्रसदितः साक्षी स्यात्तत्र नान्यथा ॥ The स्मृतिच II, p 80 and परा मा III, p. 103 have the verse of बृहस्पति न साक्षी द्यपति कार्यः is सद्गु. the like which are of a fixed nature (of a civil nature), but that in complaints about all kinds of sāhasa (heinous crime), in robbery, adultery or the two kinds of pāruṣya (viz. defamation and assault) there should be no (strict) inquiry into the character of witnesses (that is, all can be witnesses in such cases) and that even those like slaves and fault-finders who have been enumerated among incompetent witnesses can become witnesses in grave matters<sup>496</sup>. The idea is that in such cases the witnesses need not be strictly examined as to their possessing the good qualities ordinarily required in witnesses. But this does not authorize the examination of such persons as lunatics or idiots as witnesses, because they have not the power to understand things. Mam VIII 77 emphatically states that even a single male, if he is free from greed, may be (sufficient as) a witness, but not women of good character, even though they be many, since the feminine intellect is apt to be unsteady. But even Manu had to concede (VIII 70) that a woman or a minor or a very old person or a pupil, relative, slave or a hired servant may be a (competent) witness, if it is impossible to find another witness (in matters that occurred inside a house or in a forest or in crimes where life is lost). Kāt 367 (q by Aparārka p. 671) says the same thing. Uśanas<sup>497</sup> (quoted in the Sm. C II p 79, V. P. p. 120) provides that even a slave, a blind man, a deaf person, a leper, a woman, a minor, a very old man may be (competent) witnesses in sāhasa, provided they are not interested in the matter of dispute (or are not related or partial to the parties). Nār. (IV. 190-191) gives it as his view that even when there is to be no strict inquiry into the character of witnesses in sāhasa, still a minor, a woman, a single person, one who forges deeds (or who is a cheat), a relative and an enemy cannot be witnesses in sāhasa, since a child through ignorance, a woman from her habit of untruthfulness, a forger (or cheat) because he is accustomed to doing evil deeds, a relative from affection and an enemy from the idea of taking revenge may speak falsely. There was no total disqualification of women as witnesses, since Manu quoted above allows them to be witnesses in disputes between women and in cases where it is not possible to have other witnesses. Medhātithi on Manu VIII. 68 holds that women are disqualified as witnesses only where the plaintiff and defendant are both males but that where there is a litigation between a man and a woman or between women alone, a woman may be a competent witness. Ancient Hindu Law is not singular in its partial rejection of the testimony of women. Vide Best on Evidence (12th ed. of 1922) pp 53-56 where it is shown how ancient Roman Law and the Medieval laws of several countries of Europe more or less excluded the testimony of women, how some States in the U.S.A. excluded the testimony of negroes and persons of coloured blood. By the Canon Law more credit was given to male than female witnesses (Taylor on Evidence, ed. of 1848 p. 655, note d).

Nār. (IV. 157-172) states that incompetent witnesses fall into five classes: (1) some<sup>498</sup> like learned brāhmanas, very old men, ascetics, persons practising austerities are incompetent because ancient texts (vacana) say so and there is no other (special) reason for their exclusion. (p. 214) points out that śrotriyas and others cannot be appointed as witnesses, but they may be what is called akṛta witnesses explained below (i e. they may if they choose appear as witnesses in a cause). They are not competent like the king, not because they are untrustworthy but because it is not advisable to call them. They were privileged persons; (2) thieves, robbers, dangerous characters, gamblers, assassins are declared to be incompetent because there is the defect (dosa) of untruthfulness in them; (3) witnesses are rendered incompetent on the ground of contradiction (bheda), when the statement of witnesses who have been accepted by the king for determination of the same matter do not agree; (4) he who without having been appointed (by the parties to a transaction) as a witness (to it) comes of his own accord to depose is termed a sūci (i. e. a spy) in the śāstras (and so was styled śayanukḥ by Nār. IV. 157) and is unworthy to be a witness; (5) a person is incompetent as a witness by reason of intervening death (i e. he is mṛtāntara); when can any person bear testimony if the creditor (or claimant) is no longer alive, whose claim should have been heard by him specifically (but was not heard in that way)? Mṛtāntara is a witness whom one or other of the parties informed in a general way that there was some dealing between the parties and who was asked to be a witness (but was not told the details of the dealing) and then subsequently the party died. In such a case the person told is not a good witness, as he cannot give the details. But Nār. (IV. 94) mentions an exception to this last rule viz when a father while on the point of death tells his sons and the like 'these are the witnesses on such and such a matter,' there even after the father's death those witnesses would be competent though death intervenes.

Witnesses are divided by Nār. IV. 149 into two sorts; (1) those appointed (kṛta) by the parties and (2) those not appointed (akṛta); the first being of five kinds and the last of six kinds. The first five (acc to Nār IV 150) are a subscribing witness (likhita), one who has been reminded (smṛta) i e. one who is called as a witness without there being a document and who is present at a transaction and is again and again reminded of it by a party to it in order that the transaction may be effectively proved thereafter (Kāt. 371 and 372 q. in Mit on Yāj. II 68), a casual witness i e. one, who, while a transaction is being entered into, comes there by mere chance and is then asked to be a witness (yādrccābhīṇā or yādrccika, acc. to Br. ), a secret witness i. e. one who is made to listen the speech of the debtor while concealed behind a wall screen, an indirect (utāra)<sup>499</sup> witness (i. e. one who learn from a witness who has seen or heard of a transaction when the latter is going to a distant country or is on the point of death). The six akṛta witnesses (acc. to Nār IV, 151-152) are co-villager (in disputes about boundaries), the chief judge, the king (before whom a suit was tried), one who is closely acquainted with the transaction of the parties (i. e. kāryamadhyagala, acc. to Br. ), one who is deputed by a party (for borrowing an ornament or for settling a transaction, called dūtaka by Br. ), members of the family (kulya) in disputes among other members of the family (as regards partition &c) Br. mentions twelve kinds of witnesses that are practically the same as the eleven of Nār. except one which he adds viz lekhitā<sup>500</sup> (one whose name is caused to be written by a party in the presence of the witness when that party enters into some transaction in writing such as a loan with another) The only difference between 'lekhitā' and 'lekhitā' seems to be that the first himself writes his own name as a witness on a document while the latter's name is written as a witness by one party in the presence of the other and of the witness Br (S. B. E. vol. 33 p. 299 verses 4-15 q. by Aparārka pp 666-667) defines at great length all the twelve and Kāt also defines most of them, but these definitions are passed over as not very important. Visvarūpa remarks that these nice distinctions among eleven kinds of witnesses are made only for the sake of exposition and for the benefit of simple people<sup>501</sup>.

Before a witness for a party begins to depose, it is the duty of the opposite party to point out the ground or grounds, if any, of the incompetence of the witness put forward for examination. Kāt. adds<sup>502</sup> that the latent defects of the witnesses of a party must be pointed out by the opposite party, but the patent defects will be considered by the members of the court at the time of giving their decision. Vyāsa<sup>503</sup> states 'the defects of the witnesses of a party should be pointed out by the opponent in open court by putting them down in writing and the witnesses should be called upon (by the judge) to refute them; if the witnesses admit (the faults pointed out) they do not deserve to be witnesses; if otherwise (if the faults are not admitted) they should be established by the opponent with evidence (other than those of other witnesses); for if the defects of the witnesses of a party were allowed to be established by other witnesses to be cited by the opponent, there would result the fault of a never-ending series (anavasthā), since the first party would then try to show defects in the latter set of witnesses and this may have to be carried on ad infinitum.' Br. laid down that an opponent should not be allowed to point out the grounds of incompetency in witnesses after they have begun to depose and Kāt. adds<sup>504</sup> that he (that party), who points out, after the witnesses have deposed to a matter, faults in them in whom he found none at first and who can not set out a proper reason (for his not proclaiming the faults at first) should be fined in the first amercement. Br. further states<sup>505</sup> that the defendant may point out the defects, if they exist, in the witnesses cited by the plaintiff; but if he finds faults which do not exist in the witnesses, he should be punished with a fine equal to the amount claimed (in monetary disputes) or equal to that which is levied from a false witness. If the witness of a party is not able to refute the defect pointed out by the opponent, the party calling him should try to clear his witness of the fault; otherwise he should not succeed in his suit

When a witness is about<sup>506</sup> to depose, he was, acc, to Br. (S B. E 33 p 302 v. 23), to put off his shoes and turban, raise his right hand (in order to draw the attention of the Court) and after touching gold, cowdung or darbha grass was to depose to the truth. Āp Dh S. II. 11 29. 7 says<sup>507</sup> that a witness should depose to the truth on an auspicious day in the morning in the presence of kindled fire and near (a jar of) water in the hall presided over by the king (or chief justice) and after being exhorted as regards both (viz. the results of truthfulness and falsehood) and when accepted by all (the court and parties) as a competent witness. Kaut also (in III. 11) says that witnesses should be examined in the presence of brāhmanas, water, jar and fire. Manu (VIII 79-80) provides that the judge should in a conciliatory manner exhort all witnesses assembled inside the court in the presence of the plaintiff and defendant as follows: 'whatever acts of these two (litigants) between themselves you know as regards this matter (in dispute), narrate them all truthfully, since you are the witnesses in this case'. Yāj II. 73 also states that witnesses should be made to depose in the presence of the parties and Gaut. XIII. 13 and Kāt (q by Mit on Yāj II. 73) prescribe that witnesses<sup>508</sup> should face the east or north, are to be examined in the presence of the images of gods and brāhmanas in the first half of the day and should be exhorted to tell the truth by being bound with oaths. This examination in the public and after an oath went a long way in checking the tendency to depose falsely. The oath consisted of two parts, viz. (1) the requirement to tell the truth and (2) the exhortatory and imprecatory part. Both were administered by the presiding judge. Gaut. (XIII. 12-13) appears to prescribe that an oath (śapatha) was not to be administered to brāhmana witness, but Manu VIII. 113 (= Nār. IV. 199) does not make this distinction. Gaut. (XIII. 14-23), Manu VIII. 81-86, 89-101, Visnu Dh. S. VIII. 24-37, Nār. IV. 201-228 contain very long exhortations addressed by the judge to the witnesses relating to the importance and high worth of truth, stating how the conscience of a man pricks him, what rewards await the truthful witness here and in the next world and what sin and terrible torments in Hell are the lot of an untruthful witness, what evil befalls even the deceased ancestors of an untruthful witness and how he is liable to be punished by the king. They are too long to be cited here<sup>509</sup>. Shorter exhortations are found in Yāj. II. 73-75, Vas 16. 32-34, Baud. Dh. S. I. 10. 19. 9-12 (S. B. E. vol. XIV p. 203), Br. (S. B. E. vol. 33 p. 301 verses 19-22), Kāt. 343. Nār. IV. 200 provides 'let him (the judge) inspire them (the witnesses) with awe by (quoting) ancient texts, extolling the greatness of truth and denouncing falsehood'. Kaut. (III. 11), Manu VIII. 88 and 113 (=Nār. IV. 199), Visnu Dh. S. VIII. 20-23 add further modes of speech and exhortations according to the varṇa of the witness: A brāhmana witness is to be addressed by the judge as 'speak' and to be exhorted to swear by his veracity, a ksatriya one was to be addressed as 'speak the truth' and to be sworn by the animal he rides and his weapons (which he is to touch), a vaiśya is to be sworn by his kine, grain and gold and a śūdra is to be sworn by (imprecating on his head) all grave sins. Manu VIII. 88 provides that a brāhmana should be asked to depose

510. The exhortation in the अर्पणोक्त (III. 11) is somewhat different from Manu's 'तत्र ब्राह्मणं ब्रूयात्सर्वं ब्रूहीति राजस्य वैश्यं वा मा तद्वेदापूर्तकले, कपाल-

with the word 'speak', while VIII. 113 states that a brāhmana is to be made to swear by his truth. Some explain that the first rule applies to excellent brāhmanas and the second to inferior ones and rely on Gaut (XIII 12-13) who prescribes that an oath to speak the truth is not to be administered to brāhmanas but only to others. Vide Haradatta on Gaut and Vivādacandra p 127. Manu VIII 102 (=Baud Dh. S I. 5 95) is careful to point out that the exhortation is not to depend purely on the caste but that brāhmanas (and others) who tend kine, who engage in trade, who are craftsmen or actors, who are menial servants and usurers should be treated (by the judge) as śūdras<sup>511</sup> (in the matter of taking oaths). Witnesses after they are assembled before the Court are to be ordinarily examined separately (vide Kāt quoted in n. 508 above). But Gaut XIII 5 and Kāt 394 provide<sup>512</sup> that if a certain matter is seen by the witnesses as a body then they may be examined together. Manu VIII 78 and Kāt 392 prescribe that what the witnesses declare quite naturally (without hesitation and fear) should be taken down and that when the witnesses have declared (what they know) they should not be questioned again and again by the king (or judge). From the Smṛtis and the 9th Act of the Mrechakatika it appears that

511. The Mit on Yāj. II 73 explains Manu VIII 113 as follows a brāhmana witness is to be sworn by being told that if he spoke untruth his truth will perish, a ksatriya that his vehicle and arms will be fruitless, a vaiśya that his cattle, grain and gold will be lost and a śūdra that all sins will be his lot. Others explain differently. The Vyavahāratattva p 215 says 'गोबीजकाञ्चनापहारे यत्पारं तत्तवावृताभिधाने स्यादिति वैश्यम्'. The दीपिकलिका oo ya. II 74 says the same. Medhātithi on Manu VIII 113 appears to hold that the exhortatory part is repeated by the witness यद्यहमेव कुर्यात्तद्विद्वन्निष्ठमानुयामिति संकीर्तनक्रिया शपथः । तत्र यः श्लाघ्यते स एवं वाच्यते सत्येन शपे सत्यादिनिबन्धनोयं धर्मो वा मे निष्फलः स्यादिति । ... गोबीजकाञ्चनानि वैश्ये हस्तेन स्वर्णयित्वाभिज्ञापेदेतानि वा मे निष्फलानीति पूर्ववत् ।' The Madanaratna says that brāhmanas following such avocations as rearing cattle should be made to take an oath like śūdras, गोरक्षणादिभिरपकुटा ब्राह्मणस्तु शूद्रवच्छपये कार्यम् ये शपेताः स्वकर्मस्य परिणहोपजीविनः । द्विजत्वमभिकाङ्क्षन्ति तान् शूद्रवद्वाच्येत् ॥ Vas. III. 1 and Manu II 168 provide that brāhmanas who have not studied the Veda, who do not expound it or do not keep the sacred fires become equal to śūdras. The Indian Oaths Act (X of 1873) sec 6 allows a witness who has an objection to taking an oath to make an affirmation.

it was the chief judge or the judges who put questions and that there was no elaborate cross-examination and re-examination of witnesses as in England (which practice is followed in modern India). The only cross examination that appears to have been allowed was about the faults or grounds that made a person an incompetent witness. In this respect ancient Indian practice resembled modern judicial practice in some European<sup>513</sup> countries other than England. Witnesses were compelled to attend. Kaut. III. 11 states that witnesses who are not far removed by time or space should be produced by the parties themselves, but those who are far away or who are unwilling to stir shall be got summoned by order of the king<sup>514</sup>. Manu VIII. 107, Yāj. II. 77, Br., Kāt and Visnu Dh. S. VIII. 37 say that if a witness knowing all facts and not prevented from coming by disease or similar causes refuses to come as a witness he incurs the sin of false witness, has to pay the amount in dispute and ten per cent thereof as fine to the king. This is in accordance with the principle enforced in modern times that it is the duty of a citizen to appear before a court of justice when summoned. Kaut. (III 1) provides for subsistence allowance to witnesses. It is not quite clear whether parties could be regarded under ancient Hindu Law as competent witnesses on their own behalf. Yāj. (II. 13-15) appears to suggest that parties could be regarded as witnesses in their own cause and held to be false from their demeanour as in the case of witnesses. Kaut. IV.<sup>515</sup> 8 and the 9th Act of the Mīrchakatika show that the accused was questioned by the Court as to his movements about the time of the alleged offence and till his arrest. IV. 5. 184 defines sāksi in such a way as to exclude the litigant himself. Ordinarily witnesses were examined in the open court in the presence of the parties and never behind their back, but Kāt (387-389) prescribes that in the case of immovable property oral evidence may be taken on the property itself and in some cases even elsewhere than these two (viz the Court and immovable property), that is, in the case of the death of living beings witnesses may be made to depose before the corpse (of the animal killed) or, in the absence of the body, before <sup>517</sup> some mark (such as the horn of an animal) Br. and Manu VIII 25 state that the truth of the statements of witnesses should be examined by marking their tone, their change of colour, their eyes, their gestures, and their demeanour <sup>518</sup> Texts like Śaṅkha-Lakṣita (q by V. P. p 124), Nar IV 193-196, Viṣṇu Dh S VIII. 18, Yaj. II 13-15 and Kāt 386 point out the actions and appearances of a party or witness that deposes falsely, viz he appears restless, changes his place (i.e. moves from one spot to another), licks the corners of his lips, his forehead perspires, his face loses colour, he frequently coughs and heaves frequent sighs, he scratches the ground with his feet (toes), waves his hands and garment, his mouth becomes dry and his voice falters, he speaks incoherently, talks too much though not asked and does not reply straight to the questions asked and avoids meeting the eyes of the questioner. Such a witness may be looked upon as untrue and the king or judge should bring him under discipline (so that he will be afraid to lie). Merely on seeing these signs a witness was not to be punished or entirely disbelieved, since these signs raise only a probability of untruthfulness (as remarked by Mit. on Yāj. II 15 and V P p 124)

When there are many witnesses but they differ in their statements certain rules are laid down by Manu VIII. 73 (=Visnu Dh S. VIII. 39), Yāj II. 78, Nār. IV. 229, Br. (S. B. E. vol. 33 p 303 v. 35), Kāt. (408) They are briefly these:<sup>519</sup> The statement of the majority of witnesses should be accepted, but if they are equally divided then the statement of those who are more pure (in character or more disinterested) should be accepted and if the meritorious are divided equally then those who are the best among them should be accepted as true. The Mit on Yāj. II. 78 adds that if there is a conflict of testimony between the statements of a few but eminently qualified witnesses on the one hand and those of a larger number of ordinary witnesses, then the former should be accepted as Yāj II. 72 requires i. e. it prefers quality to mere numbers. Kaut. III. 11 prescribes that when there is conflict in the oral evidence the decision should be according to the evidence of the majority of witnesses or of those who are pure in character or of those who are approved of by both sides as good witnesses or a mean should be drawn from their statements. Nār. IV 160 and Kāt. 359 state<sup>520</sup> that if one out of the (three) witnesses attesting a document or out of (three) witnesses that are cited by a party deposes in a way contradictory to what is deposed to by the other two, then all the three become incompetent witnesses on account of contradiction. This has been interpreted by the Vyavahāra mātṛkā (p. 326) to mean that where all witnesses are of equal status and there is a majority of only one favouring one side, then all the witnesses are incompetent and oral evidence is in that case futile for decision.

The important question is how much has to be proved by the party calling witnesses. Yāj. II. 79 (=Visnu Dh S VIII. 38), Nār II 27 and Br (q by Sm G. II 91) state the general rule that that party whose averments are supported in their entirety as true by the witnesses becomes successful, while that litigant.

whose claim is declared by them to be false certainly loses<sup>521</sup>. Nār. IV. 232 and 234, Kāt. 396, 398 lay down<sup>522</sup> the rule that in civil disputes that are of a non-urgent nature (like recovery of debts), if witnesses depose to more or less (than what is averred in the plaint), then the claim is not established in its entirety, where the witnesses depose to more or less (than the claim affirmed by the party) the deposition of the witnesses should be considered as not taken down or it should be omitted (from consideration)<sup>523</sup>, the witnesses in such a case are not liable to fine; they may deserve to be fined if they do not depose (to what they know). Similarly Nār. IV 233 and Kāt<sup>524</sup> 399 say that where the depositions of witnesses are in conflict as to the place, the time, the property, the amount, the colour, the species (or caste), the form (or shape), the age (as stated in the pleading of a party), the depositions are to be regarded as good as not given at all. The rule amounts to this that any discrepancy between the essential details or particulars of a claim

523. The maxim (in Yāj. II 20) that on proof a part of a claim the whole may be held to be proved (vide above n 431) applies only where the opponent totally denies every item of the claim of the plaintiff. This is a presumption and the king or judge is not to be blamed for acting upon it in case of total denial, as said by Gaut. XI 23 and 32 'स्वायाधिगते सकोऽन्यथायः । ... तस्माद्वाजा-चार्यावादिभ्यो' This text of Yāj. is apparently in conflict with Kāt 473 (q. by Mit. on Yāj II 20) 'in claims containing several items, the creditor (or plaintiff) secures a decree for as much out of them as he is able to establish by means of witnesses'. These two verses are sought to be reconciled in various ways by the Mit. (on Yāj II, 20), the Sm. C II pp. 120-121 Vyavahāra-mātrikā pp. 310-312 (where it criticizes the views of Yogloka), V P. pp. 98-102. It is impossible for want of space to go into these interpretations. The Mit. says that Kāt 473 applies to a case where the son or the wife being ignorant of the debts contracted by his father or the like says 'I do not know' i. e. pleads ignorance. In that case he does not deny (he is not 'mūḍha-vādin' but only 'ajñānin'. The Vyavahāra-mātrikā p. 68 explains Kāt. 473 in the same way and about 396 it adds that when he cites witnesses as supporting his entire claim and the witnesses depose only to a part of it or to more than he avers then his claim fails in its entirety but in sūhasa, theft and adultery it is otherwise.

made in the plaint (such as the time, place, number &c.) and the case made out in the depositions as to any of these essential particulars will have the same consequence as tendering no oral evidence. This rule was not followed to the letter and besides other means of proof could be resorted to, as stated by the Mit., the Vivādacandra and others<sup>525</sup>. Kaut. III. 11<sup>526</sup> states that when the witnesses depose to less than what is averred in the plaint, the plaintiff has to pay a fine (of a fifth part) on the excess and when they depose to more than the claim, the excess (held proved on the depositions) may be taken by the king.

In charges of adultery, heinous crimes (sāhasa) and theft the whole of the matter that is alleged may be held proved, when witnesses depose to only a part of the matter<sup>527</sup> (says Kat. 397).

Nārada IV. 165 prescribes that a litigant<sup>528</sup> should not secretly approach a witness cited by his opponent, nor should he try to win him over (by bribes or threats) through another; if he does so, he would suffer the consequences of a losing party (hina).

There were rules about the late production of evidence. It has been already shown how if a litigant adduces weak evidence, though strong evidence is available, he would not be allowed to rely on the latter after judgment is pronounced. It is said by Nār. I. 62 that when a law-suit has proceeded far enough (lit. has been cleansed or thrashed out), evidence such as a document or witnesses, would then become useless, if that evidence had not been announced before<sup>529</sup> After a reply is filed by the defendant, the plaintiff has to give a list of his evidence i e documents or witnesses (Yāj II 7) The meaning briefly is as follows: If he does not do so, proceeds with the trial and does not call all necessary witnesses or produce all documents and the case is almost finished, but judgment is not pronounced, even then he would not be allowed to produce fresh evidence at that late stage For if fresh evidence not previously disclosed were allowed to be given at that late stage, it would cause surprise to the defendant, who would then demand time for adducing evidence in rebuttal and then the plaintiff may again cite further evidence and this process is in danger of being carried on ad infinitum. If however witnesses were already cited but all were not examined (e g. if ten witnesses were mentioned and only three examined) and the plaintiff found that the evidence of the few witnesses examined for him is contradictory or hostile, then he may be allowed to produce even at a late stage the remaining witnesses (who may be seven i e. double the number of those already examined or who may be more respectable or purer in character). This proposition is contained in Yāj II 80 on which the Mitākṣarā remarks that even if witnesses are not mentioned in a list, but before judgment is pronounced other more reliable or respectable witnesses or double in number (and of the same status as) of those examined are available, they should be examined by the court even at a late stage The rule is that as long as witnesses are available resort to ordeals should not be had Yāj. II 80 also has given rise to various interpretations Vide Mit and Aparārka on Yāj II 80, Sm C II. p 94, V. P p. 130-134 The Mit thinks that the verse applies where the plaintiff or the party on whom lies the burden of proving a positive proposition finds that the witnesses produced by him are hostile or contradictory and that in such a case he may be allowed to cite other more respectable or more numerous witnesses to prove his proposition and to show that the first set of witnesses is false, while Aparārka holds that the verse says that when the party who has to prove his case cites witnesses which the opponent feels are false, the opponent may produce more respectable or more numerous witnesses to depose to the contrary and he would thus prove the first set to be false. Aparārka relies on Kāt. (408) for this proposition<sup>530</sup>. It may be said that Aparārka's interpretation appears more natural. V. P. (p 134) accepts Kātyāyana, but says that the interpretation of the Mit. (of Yāj. II. 80) is correct. Whatever view is accepted it leads to this that one set of witnesses not only may prove the truth of a party's case but also establish that another set of that party's witnesses are guilty of perjury.

528. The fact that a party requested a witness to give false evidence is, admissible evidence against such a party, it being an admission by conduct that the party has a bad case. Vide Cockburn C. J. in Mortarty v. London Chatham and Dover Ry Co. L. R. 5 Q. B. p. 314 at p. 319 'if you can show that a plaintiff has been snubbing false testimony and has endeavoured to have recourse to perjury, it is strong evidence that he knew perfectly well his cause was an unrighteous one'. Vide illustration e to section 8 of the Indian Evidence Act.

Yāj. II. 82 provides that if a witness, having promised with other witnesses to depose to a state of things, denies at the time of his examination that he saw the matter in dispute, he should be fined eight times the amount that a defeated litigant would have to pay and a brāhmana witness similarly guilty if unable to pay may be banished (or his house should be razed to the ground). Nār. IV. 197 says that such a person is worse than a false witness. Manu VIII. 107, Yāj II. 76, and Kāt. (405) prescribe that if a person who has witnessed a transaction does not depose (i. e. remains silent) about it, though not suffering from disease or some other calamity, he should be made (after waiting for three fortnights) to pay the amount of the debt or other matter in dispute and also one-tenth thereof as fine to the king.

After the witnesses have deposed the chief justice and sabhyas have to consider the depositions of witnesses (as Kāt. 340 provides)<sup>531</sup>. The Court has to find out which set of witnesses are to be believed and what witnesses are perjured. Perjury entailed, according to dharmaśāstra works, both secular and other-worldly consequences. Āp. Dh. S. (II. 11. 29. 8-9) states: 'When a witness deposes falsely the king should fine him and, in addition, the witness incurs hell after death' and Gaut. provides (XIII. 7 and 23), 'a witness telling the truth goes to heaven, but falls into hell if he does the reverse and when he deposes falsely he is to be censured and fined'. Manu VIII. 118 states that witnesses depose falsely through covetousness, wrong ideas, fear, friendship, sexual passion, wrath, ignorance and minority and prescribes (VIII. 120-122) varying fines for perjury arising from these several causes. Br. (S. B. E. vol 33 p. 301 v. 21) regards<sup>532</sup> a corrupt judge, a perjured witness and the murderer of a brāhmana as equally sinful. Yāj. II. 81 and Kāt. (407) prescribe<sup>533</sup> that the litigant who procures perjured evidence and the witnesses guilty of perjury should each be separately fined double the amount of the fine prescribed for defeat in various disputes and a brāhmana (guilty of doing the same) should be banished from the country<sup>534</sup> (but not fined). But when a person (of any of the three castes other than brāhmana) is frequently guilty of perjury he should be fined and given physical punishment (as cutting the tongue or death) and a similarly guilty brāhmana should be fined and banished (or degraded by being carried naked through the streets or deprived of his house) The Mit. on Yāj. II. 81 says that when Manu prescribes (VIII. 380) that a brāhmana guilty of a sin is not to be awarded death or corporal punishment and that he is to be banished with all his wealth, he refers to the brāhmana being a first offender and not a confirmed one. Manu VIII. 108 says 'where within seven days from deposing in a cause a (serious or painful) disease or fire or the death of a relative befalls a witness, he should be (being held as a false witness owing to these portentous happenings) made to pay the debt in dispute to the opposite side and a fine to the king' The Sm. C. (II. p 94) explains that this applies to a witness who is the only one on a disputed matter such as a messenger and the king or judge should wait for seven days to see whether any of these calamities befalls that witness and then hold him to be perjured. Kāt. (410) contains<sup>535</sup> a similar rule, but he states that the king should wait one, two or three weeks or up to 45 days according to the value of the matter in dispute and the caste of the deponent Manu VIII. 117 (=Visnu Dh S VIII 40) prescribes that in whatever lawsuit it is established that witnesses perjured themselves, the judge should hear it again (from the beginning) or if the suit has ended he should set aside the decision and examine it again.

Gaut 13 24-25, Vas 16. 36, Manu VIII. 104, Yaj. II. 83, Visnu Dh. S. VIII. 15 prescribe that a witness may depose falsely in a cause when, if he were to speak the truth, a person of the four varnas is liable to suffer the sentence of death. Manu VIII. 105-106, Yaj. II. 83, Visnu Dh. S. VIII. 16 prescribe that as a penance for the falsehood a witness of the three higher castes may offer three oblations of boiled rice to the goddess of speech (Śarasvatī) or he may offer into fire clarified butter with the mantras called Kūsmāṇḍa (Yaj. S. XX. 14-16 or Tai. Ā. X. 3-5), or with the three verses beginning with 'yaddevā devahedanam' or with the verse sacred to Varuna (viz Rg. I. 24 15, 'uduttamam varuna') or with three verses of which waters are the deity (Rg. X. 9. 1-3 'āpo hi sthā'). Visnu Dh. S. VIII. 17 adds that a śūdra guilty of perjury in the above case may by way of expiation feed ten cows for one day. It is strange that the dharmaśāstra works should permit perjury to save a culprit from being sentenced to death. Probably popular sentiment of old standing allowing the speaking of falsehood in certain cases was responsible for this. In the Mahābhārata frequent reference is made to the permission to speak untruth in ordinary life when one's own life or another's life is in imminent danger. Vide Śānti<sup>536</sup> 45. 35, 109. 19. It is stated in Śānti 165. 30 that speaking falsely is not a sin in five cases viz in jest, to women, at the time of (i. e. in bringing about) a marriage, for the preservation of great wealth and for one's life. Vas. 16. 36 mentions those five occasions somewhat differently. Vide Manu VIII. 112 also for a similar rule. But so old a sage as Gaut (23 29) implies that he disapproves of this sentiment<sup>537</sup>, when he states, 'according to some falsehood entails no fault (i. e. no expiation need be performed) in (bringing about or breaking promises made at)

Nār. (IV. 235-236) states that when through<sup>538</sup> the carelessness of the creditor (who dies) there is no document nor witness to prove a debt and the defendant denies it, then one of three methods (of proof) may be resorted to, viz. codanā mahākālam (dunning the debtor each time to repay), yuktileka (putting forth arguments) and śapatha (special oaths and ordeals)<sup>538a</sup>. Kāt. (233 q. by Sm C. II p 52 and Par M. III 91) has a similar verse Yukti according to Nārada IV. 238 means<sup>539</sup> 'the creditor should follow (the debtor) by arguments and by himself remembering and by reminding the debtor of the time, the place, the relation (subsisting between the two)' Others interpret yukti differently, that is, it means 'logical reasoning' Kāt (214) defines<sup>540</sup> 'yukti' as 'the ascertainment or knowledge of a linga' (i e. a sign that leads on to an inference).

P p 168 appear to 'read' 'चोदनाप्रतिकालश्च (equal to चोदना+अप्रतिकाल) and interpret 'if there is no denial or protest (by the debtor) when the creditor frequently demands the debt, then the court may presume that he is a debtor'. It is stated by Brhaspati that anumāna (inference<sup>541</sup> or presumption), as a means of deciding a law suit, is of three kinds, but it is inferior to witnesses (vide note 433 above). Vyāsa (q. by Sm. C. II. p. 95) states that anumāna is the same as hetu and tarika. V. P. (p. 167) remarks that (long continued) possession and the frequent urging by the creditor both lead to the inference of title and the taking of a loan respectively and are therefore to be comprehended under yukti according to the definition of Kātyāyana. Yet by popular usage yukti is restricted to presumptions arising from certain circumstances on the analogy of the maxim of 'gobalivarda' explained below under 'steala'. Yukti therefore means circumstantial evidence from which an inference may be drawn about a fact in issue in a judicial proceeding. Āp. Dh.<sup>542</sup> S. II. 11. 29 6 says that in case of doubt (judges) should decide from signs (i. e. by inference) or divine proof (ordeals). Vas. 19. 39 mentions the view of some sages that one who is found armed or wounded or in possession of the booty (stolen) may be declared to be (the thief or offender). Manu IX. 270 (= Matsya 227. 166) requires the just king not to condemn to death one accused of theft unless his guilt is proved as certain by proof that the accused had in his possession the articles stolen and tools for theft (for house-breaking). 'An adulterer is proved'<sup>543</sup> to be so by being caught in such acts as playing with the hair of another's wife, an incendiary by being caught with a firebrand in his hand (near the house set on fire), a murderer by being found (near the murdered man) armed and a thief when caught with some of the articles stolen in his possession'—say Sankha-Likhita<sup>544</sup>.

Compare sec. 114 of the Indian Evidence Act which lays down how a court is to draw presumptions of fact from the common course of natural events in relation to the facts of the case before it, illustration (a) to which is 'the court may presume that a man who is in possession of stolen goods soon after the theft is either the thief or has received the goods knowing them to be stolen, unless he can account for his possession'.

Kaut.<sup>545</sup> IV. 12 and Yāj. II. 283 similarly say that adultery may be inferred from ( the man and woman ) being caught in the act of dalliance with the hair or from the signs left ( such as marks of nails or teeth on the lips, cheek &c ) after carnal enjoyment or from the admission of the woman concerned ( or of both ) Nār. ( IV. 172-175 ) declares that there are six kinds of disputes in which the indications ( or circumstances ) themselves serve as witnesses and lead to a conclusion without the testimony of witnesses viz one found with a fire-brand in his hand ( near the scene of arson ) may be inferred to be the incendiary, one armed<sup>546</sup> ( found near the scene of murder ) as the murderer, one caught dallying with the hair of another's wife as an adulterer, one with a spade in his hand near a breached embankment as the person who caused the breach in it and one armed with an axe as the feller of a tree, a person guilty of an assault may be inferred to be so from visible signs ( such as his club or sword being smeared with blood ) But Nār. IV 176 gives the warning that in such cases it is necessary to be careful in arriving at a conclusion, since a person in order to bring into trouble another whom he hates may create marks of injury on himself Kāt ( 337-338 ) further provides<sup>547</sup> that where one litigant proves as against his opponent ( such as a debtor ) either the offer of a bribe, or the effacing of the means of recognition ( such as effacing one's signature on a document ) or holding out temptations ( to the witnesses or sabhyas ) or the concealment of his wealth ( to avoid its being attached in execution of a decree ), there the original claim ( such as a debt ) may be presumed to be proved even if he ( the opponent ) denies his liability.

Judges often repeat from the Bench the words 'witnesses may lie, but circumstances cannot'. But this so-called maxim is often dangerous. Circumstantial evidence leads to conclusions that are in several instances false. The ancient Hindu lawyers were quite aware of the dangers of drawing inferences from circumstantial evidence. Nārada's warning has already been mentioned (p. 356). Kaut.<sup>548</sup> (in IV 8) remarks: 'even one not a thief may by chance be on the way by which thieves pass and one meeting thieves is seen to be apprehended as a thief because he is mixed up in dress, arms and articles carried with the thieves or is found near the articles stolen, just as Māndavya though not a thief declared himself to be a thief for fear of being subjected to torture; therefore (the king) should punish one only after thorough examination' Māndavya's is a leading case on the danger of relying on purely circumstantial evidence. Brhaspati<sup>549</sup> also remarks that 'a decision should not be arrived at merely by relying on the words of texts; for, if judges come to a conclusion without applying careful reasoning, loss of dharma results; a thief is held to be not a thief and a good man is held to be a wicked one in a judicial proceeding (not arrived at with proper reasoning). The sage Māndavya was held to be a thief on account of the decision being arrived at without proper reasoning'<sup>550</sup>.

The 9th Act of the Mṛcchakatika is a standing literary condemnation of conclusions about guilt drawn from circumstantial evidence and of how judicial procedure is vitiated (of vyavahāra-dustatā, as the author says in Act I) śapathas (oaths and ordeals) according to the place, time and strength of the litigant, such as fire, water, his spiritual merit and others. Manu VIII. 109 also says that when there are no witnesses the truth would have to be found out by śapathas. Divine proof is called daivikikṛyā or samayakṛyā (Visnu Dh. S. IX. 1). Some writers make a distinction between śapathas (special oaths) and ordeals (divyas), others (like Manu VIII. 109-114, Nār. IV. 239) do not. For example, the Vivādacandra quotes Nār. IV. 247 'when there is no witness in a dispute between litigants, there the judge should decide by means of ordeals<sup>551</sup> and various śapathas'. Acc. to the Mīt. (on Yāj. II. 96) and S. V. (p. 106) both special oaths and ordeals are divine proof (divya pramāna), but in disputes of small value śapathas (oaths) were generally employed, while ordeals were resorted to only in serious disputes or crimes. The Mīt. (on Yāj. II. 96), the V. May. p. 46 and V. P. (p. 170) state that ordeals are those that generally end in immediate decision of the dispute, while śapathas take time for decision (because after the oath the king has to wait for a week or more to see whether a calamity befalls the person taking the special oath). Vyāsa quoted by Sm. C. II. p. 96 employs the word śapathas for both special oaths (taken as to one's 'satya') and ordeals like balance. Śāṅkha-Likhita state that divine proofs are the balance, eating poison, entering fire, holding a piece of (hot) iron, offering one's merit acquired by sacrifices and charity and the king should make him undergo other śapathas<sup>552</sup>. Brhaspati says that where documents or witnesses do not lead to a certain decision or where inference from circumstantial evidence also is confusing, there the matter is to be decided by divine proof<sup>553</sup>.

Special oaths were taken not only in judicial proceedings, but also in ordinary dealings to clinch one's assertion or to clear one's character or reputation. Nār. (IV. 243-244) refers to the special oaths taken for clearing themselves by Vasistha when he was suspected to be a yātudhāna (a demon or sorcerer) and by the seven sages together with Indra, who (sages) were suspected to have stolen lotus fibres (by each among them<sup>554</sup>). Manu VIII. 110 also speaks of the śapatha taken by Vasistha before Sudās, son of Pijavana (when the sage was charged by Viśvāmitra with the offence of devouring his own hundred sons). Nārada (IV. 243) refers to Rg. VII. 104 15-16 in the first of which Vasistha made the imprecation,<sup>555</sup> 'May I die this very day if I am a yātudhāna or if I injured the life of a human being, May he who falsely addressed me as yātudhāna be deprived of his ten valiant sons' (Manu VIII. 110 also refers to the same hymn<sup>556</sup>). Manu VIII. 113 (= Nār. IV. 199) referred to above (p. 343) states the various oaths to be taken or administered to the parties according to their respective castes. Manu VIII. 114 further provides for special oaths for litigants by touching the heads of their sons and wives. That śapatha taken by satya was common in very ancient times appears from Pān. V. 4. 66 (satyād-asupathe).<sup>557</sup> Nār. IV. 249 prescribes that in charges of grave offences ordeals may be resorted to and śapathas in matters of small moment. Nār. IV. 248 mentions 'truth, horses and arms, kine, grains and gold, the feet of (the images of) gods and the ancestors, acts of charity and good deeds (sukṛta) are to be employed in śapathas as declared by Manu' Brhaspati<sup>558</sup> enumerates the special oaths mentioned by Manu and Nār. and adds that they are to be employed in small matters (civil and criminal) The Visnu Dh. S. (IX. 5-10) prescribes that when the litigant is a sūdra and the dispute relates to a matter worth less than one, two, three, four or five krśnalas he should swear respectively by holding in his hand dūrvā grass, sesame, silver, gold or earth taken from ploughed land, that (IX 11-12) beyond that value various ordeals may be offered and that oaths with similar objects in the hands may be offered to vaiśyas, ksatriyas and brāhmanas when the value of the subject matter is double, three times or four times of the value in the case of a sūdra Manu VIII 111 gives the admonition that a wise man should not make a false oath, because by so doing he incurs loss (of reputation) here and after death (by falling into Hell) Yāj II 236 prescribes a fine of 100 panas for one who takes an improper or profane oath<sup>559</sup>.

The benefit of doubt is to be given, according to modern ideas on the administration of justice, to the accused. This principle was put forward several centuries before Christ by Āp Dh. S II 5 11 2 'the king should not punish when there is a doubt' (about a man's guilt<sup>560</sup>) and clearest reference in ancient Sanskrit Literature to the fire ordeal Next comes the reference to holding in the hand the heated head of an axe by a person accused of theft to prove his innocence contained in the Chāndogya<sup>566</sup> Upanisad VI. 16. 1. Āp. Dh. S. II. 11. 29 6 refers to inference and divine proof (quoted above n. 542). In another place (II 5. 11. 3) Āpastamba states that after carefully considering (the charge before him) by means of divine proof and questioning (of witnesses) the king should set about awarding punishment Śāṅkha-Likhita (n 552) name four ordeals, viz those of balance, poison, water and holding red-hot iron<sup>567</sup>. Manu VIII. 114 mentions only two viz. the holding of fire (i. e. red-hot iron) in the hand or plunging in water, but Nār. IV. 251 states that Manu declared five kinds of ordeals. Yāj II 95, Viṣṇu Dh. S. IX-XIV and Nār. IV. 252 mention five viz. balance, fire, water, poison and kośa (consecrated water). Nārada, however, knew two more viz. tapāmūsa (IV. 343) and tandula (IV. 337). Brhaspati (S. B. E. vol. 33 p. 315 verses 4 and 5) and Pītāmaha speak of nine (Aparārka pp. 628, 694 respectively).

Yāj II. 95-113, Viṣṇu Dh. S. IX-XIV, Nār. IV. 239-348, Kāt. 411-461, Śukra IV. 5. 233-270 treat of the several ordeals Pītāmaha contained, as the quotations from the digests show, the most elaborate treatment That ordeals had attained great vogue in the early centuries of the Christian era is shown by the Mrcchakatika Act IX. 43 (where the ordeals of poison, water, balance and fire are expressly named) and by Bāna who mentions the same four in Kādambarī, para 47<sup>568</sup>. Among the digests and commentaries the Mitākṣarā, the Smṛticandrikā, the Divyātattva of Raghunandana, the Vyavahāramayūkha and the Vyavahāraprakāśa contain the most elaborate treatment of ordeals<sup>569</sup>.

Dīṇya is defined as 'that which decides a matter (in dispute) not determined by human means of proof' (V. Mayūkha) or 'that which decides what cannot be or is not to be decided by human means of proof' (Dīvyatattva<sup>570</sup> p. 574). Medhātithi on Mānu VIII 116 discusses the question how ordeals can be relied upon for the discovery of truth. The objection is raised that fire and water are natural forces that act in a uniform way and are not intelligent beings which may change their minds by an appeal to them. Therefore, the objector says, ordeals and oaths are like magic and are only meant to frighten the parties into telling the truth. It is further objected that thieves may (by some trick) not be burnt in the fire ordeal and good men are seen to suffer burns. The reply is: the usefulness of ordeals cannot be negatived by these examples of failures, as they are not frequent and as even direct perception and inference sometimes lead to uncertain results. No one, however, says that these latter should not be relied upon. Just as one relies on witnesses in deciding a matter (who may for aught one knows be telling lies), so reliance can be placed on ordeals. Where there is failure in case of ordeals, it must be held to be due to the results of the performer's actions in past lives. The general rule as stated by Yāj II 22, Nār. II 29, IV. 239, Brhaspati<sup>571</sup>, Kāt (217) and Pitāmaha is that ordeals were to be resorted to only if no human evidence (witnesses, documents, possession) or circumstantial evidence was available. Kāt. (218-219) prescribes that<sup>572</sup> if one party relies on human means of proof and the other on divine proof, the king (or judge) is to accept human means and not divine and that if human means of proof reach (i. e. are able to establish) only a part of the allegations (in the plaint), then human means should be accepted and no divine modes of proof, even though they may be complete (i. e. completely cover all allegations). When Nār. II 30 (= IV. 241) states that divine means of proof are to be resorted to when a transaction takes place in a forest, in a lonely place, at night, inside a house, in cases of sūhasa and when a deposit is denied, or when Kāt (230) prescribes that trial by ordeals is to be resorted to in the case of persons accused of committing sūhasa in secret (i.e. by wearing masks &c.),<sup>573</sup> those words only apply where it is impossible to have human evidence. Kāt. (229) states an exception to this viz. when the dispute<sup>574</sup> investigated is about sūhasa or about assault or abuse and defamation and in causes that spring from the use of force there is an option that witnesses or divine proof may be resorted to. Nār. IV. 242 states that divine proof could be resorted to when the chastity of women was in question, in theft and sūhasa and in all cases of the denial of monetary liability. Sita's ordeal of fire at once comes to mind as an illustration of Nārada's rule. Brhaspati<sup>575</sup> and Pitāmaha say that in disputes about immoveable property divine proof should be avoided, which does not forbid divya altogether, but only where the evidence of neighbours or of a document is available and that in the latter case even if the defendant offers to pay a fine if he fails by the divine proof, divya is not to be resorted to. The ordinary rule was that ordeals were to be administered to the defendant<sup>576</sup> (Kāt. 411 = Visnu Dh. S. IX. 21). But Yāj II. 96 gives an option that any one of the two litigants may by mutual agreement undergo an ordeal and the other should agree to pay on defeat a fine or undergo physical punishment. This means that human proof is adduced to prove a positive proposition, that divine proof may be resorted to prove a negative proposition as well (e. g. a defendant denying the claim for a debt may prove by divya that he did not borrow a loan). Making an offer to pay a fine or undergo corporal punishment is said to be being śīrasakatha<sup>577</sup> or śīrasatha

(in Yāj. 95, Visnu Dh. S IX. 20, 22, Pitāmaha, Nār IV. 257, Kāt. 412-413) Yāj. II 95 prescribes that the ordeals of balance, fire, poison and water were to be prescribed in disputes of great value and not elsewhere and in II 99 he says that all claims above 1000 panas (of copper) are to be regarded as of great value, but in charges of treason and of the committing of any one of the five grave sins (mahūpātakas) any one of these four ordeals may be resorted to without regard to value and without any offer to pay fine on defeat. So also these four ordeals were to be offered to the defendant where the plaintiff offered to pay a fine on defeat. The ordeal of kośa was allowed in all claims whether of high value or low value or whether the plaintiff offered to pay a fine on defeat or not.

Yāj. II 98 states that the ordeal of balance should be given to women, a minor (under 16), a very old person (above eighty years), the blind, the cripple, brāhmanas and the diseased; the fire ordeal (i. e. heated ploughshare and heated māsa) to ksatriyas, water ordeal to vaisyas, poison to śūdras. Nār. IV. 335 assigns ordeals to the different varnas similarly. Nār IV. 256 prescribes that ordeals should not be undergone by those who are observing a vow, who are much distressed or who are performing austerities, and by women Pitāmaha quoted by Mit. (on Yāj. II 98) adds minors and old persons to these. The Sm. C. II p. 103 explains this as referring to the ordeals of fire, poison and water only. Another Smṛti (q. by Mit on Yāj. II 98) prescribes that the ordeals of balance and kośamāy be offered to women, minors and the others mentioned above. There is in all these rules a spirit of tolerance, kindness and concern for the weaknesses of mankind. Kāt (423) holds<sup>578</sup> that persons of the higher castes who are cowherds, traders, artisans, bards, domestic servants and usurers should be given ordeals as if they were śūdras. Kāt (422) allows all ordeals to members of all castes, except that brāhmanas are not to undergo the poison ordeal. Kāt. (424-426) prescribes that the ordeal of fire should not be offered to blacksmiths or those who are leprous nor of water to those who ply boats or who suffer from difficulty in breathing or cough, nor poison to those who are experts in incantations and yogic practices or who suffer from (excess of) bile or phlegm, nor kośa to those who are drunkards, to persons fond of women, to gamblers and to those who are atheists. Visnu Dh. S. IX. 25, 29 and Nār IV. 255, 332 contain similar provisions. Kāt (427-430) further provides that no ordeal should be allowed to be performed personally by the following persons, viz. those charged with the murder of their father, mother, a brāhmana, their teacher, a minor, a woman and the king; those guilty of the (five) grave sins; particularly those that are atheists; those who wear (or subsist by) peculiar sect marks; great rogues; those who are experts in incantations and yoga practices; those who are the progeny of unions of persons of different varnas; those who repeatedly engage in sin; in the case of these the king should offer ordeals to good men appointed by them on their behalf and if such good men are not willing then they should appoint their own relatives. Śankha-Likhita also refer to the appointment of friends or relatives as representatives (Aparārka p. 842)<sup>579</sup> Kāt (433)<sup>580</sup> lays down the following rather remarkable provision, viz. when untouchables, men of lowest castes, slaves, mlecchas and those born of mixed unions in the reverse order of the castes are guilty of crimes, the determination of their guilt (by the above mentioned ordeals) should not be made by the king; he should indicate such ordeals as are in vogue among them. The Sm. C and Par M say that this applies

D. of the Mahāmandaleśvara Kārtavīrya IV that Candrikā (or Candaladevi), the queen of Lalasmīdhara of the Rattas of Sugandhavartu (Saundatti) was a pativrātā and got success by ghatasarpa 'भाति म्नास्यह्णा पतिव्रततया देवीं चिर चन्द्रिका संसा घटसर्पजातविजयं लक्ष्मीप्रत्येवसी'. only when they cannot secure relatives or other persons appointed by them to undergo the usual ordeals on their behalf. The Vyavahāratattva (p. 579) explains that the ordeals referred to among mlecchas and others are the snake in the jar and the like. This seems to have consisted in taking out a ring or coin with the hand from a jar in which a snake was placed; if there was no snake-bite or no effect even if the snake bit, the person was declared innocent. Vide note 580. Yāj. II. 97 and Nār. IV. 268, 320 prescribe that all ordeals are to be administered by the chief justice in the morning at sunrise or in the forenoon in the presence of the king, the sabhyas and brāhmanas. The Mit. adds that a Sunday is the proper day according to the usage of respectable people (śiṣtas). Pitāmaha specially provides that the water ordeal should be administered in the noon and poison in the last watch of the night (Mit. on Yāj. II. 97). Certain seasons and months were either appropriate or inappropriate to certain ordeals e. g. Nār. IV. 254 states that the fire ordeal should be given in the rainy season, balance in the winter (śiśira), water in summer, poison when the season is cool Nār. IV. 259 prohibits water ordeal in the cold season, fire in summer, poison in the rainy season and balance while the wind blows violently. The Mit. (on Yāj. II. 97) and Par. M. III. 162 quote Pitāmaha to the effect that the months of Caitra, Vaiśākha and Mārgaśīrṣa are common to all ordeals, kośa and balance may be administered in all months.

As regards the place, Pitāmaha prescribes that ordeals are to be administered by the king or the judge appointed by the king in the presence of learned brāhmanas and the public (or the ministers)<sup>581</sup>. Kāt. (434-35 and 437) provides:<sup>582</sup> 'ordeals should be administered in some well-known temple in the case of men accused of grave sins and near the royal gate in the case of those charged with treason; in a public place where four roads meet in the case of those born of mixed unions in the reverse order of castes, in cases other than these in the hall of justice. When ordeals are administered in an improper place or at an improper time and when they are performed outside human habitation (in a lonely place) they fail as to the matter in hand (i. e. they cease to be decisive). Nār IV 265 prescribes that the balance should be planted in the hall of justice or at the royal gate or near a temple or where four roads meet.

The procedure common to all ordeals and described in the Mit on Yaj II 97 and 99, the V May pp 52-55, V P. pp 183-186 (all relying on Pitāmaha) and Vyavahāra-nirnaya pp 148-53 (relying on Prajāpati, Pitāmaha, Br) is briefly as follows—In ordeals the chief justice is to do every thing at the king's bidding as the adhvaryu priest does in all sacrifices. He should observe a fast and the śodhya (person undergoing the ordeal to clear himself) is also to do the same. Both are to bathe in the morning and the śodhya was to have his wet clothes on. The Chief Judge is to invoke the gods to the accompaniment of music and to offer flowers, sandal-wood paste and incense. He should fold his hands, face the east and invoke Dharma to be present at the ordeal (Dharma being the principal deity in ordeals) and assign places to Indra, Yama, Varuna and Kubera in the four principal quarters from the east and to Agni and other guardians of quarters in the corners of the principal quarters. He is to contemplate on the eight deities of the eight quarters as having different colours (viz Indra as yellow, Yama as dark &c.) He is to assign the eight Vasus (repeating their names) to the south of Indra, the twelve Ādityas (repeating their names) between Indra and Īśāna (i. e. between east and north-east), assign a place to the eleven Rudras to the west of Agni, assign a place to the seven Mother goddesses between Yama and Nirrti (between south and south-west), assign a place to Gaṇeśa to the north of Nirrti, to the Maruts (seven) to the north of Varuna; to the north of the balance (or the place of other ordeals) he should invoke Durgā. All these deities are to be invoked with appropriate Vedic mantras (set out in V. May.) He should offer the several items of worship from arghya (water offered by way of honour) to ornament to Dharma (as the principal deity) and then to the subsidiary deities from Indra to Durgā (according to appropriateness) and then sandalwood paste, flowers, incense, lamp and navedya to the deities from Dharma to Durgā. The flowers for Dharma are to be red. Up to this is the work of the Chief Justice. Sacrificial priests should offer into fire in the four quarters 108 oblations of clarified butter, boiled rice and fuel sticks with syllable Om and the Gūyati and with 'Om' and 'sūhā' at the end of each. Having written down on a leaf the subject matter for which the party is undergoing ordeal the leaf should be placed on the head of the śodhya with the mantra,<sup>583</sup> 'the sun, the moon, the wind, fire, heaven and earth, waters, the heart, Yama, day and night, the two twilight and Dharma know (see or mark) the deeds of men'.

The several ordeals will now be briefly described.

First comes tulā or dhata (balance) A sacrificial tree (such as khadira or udumbara) should be cut to the accompaniment of vedic mantras (employed in making a sacrificial post). Two wooden posts made of that tree should support a transverse beam (called akṣa). The posts should be fixed in the ground, the part above ground being four cubits and that below being two cubits. This frame should face the east (i. e. the posts must be in the south and north). Then the beam of the balance was to be made from the same tree and was to be suspended from the transverse beam of the frame by means of a hook. Three iron rings were to be fastened to the beam of the balance, two at the end and one in the middle for suspending the balance from the transverse beam by means of a chain or string. Two scales were to be suspended at the two ends of the beam by hooks and strings from the iron rings fixed at the ends of the beam. On the two sides of the balance there should be two arches in which the scales should move and which should be ten angulas higher than the balance. There should be two perpendicular pendants made of clay hanging down from the arches and touching the upper surface of the balance. In the pan to the west the śodhya should be placed and weighed against clay, bricks and stones placed in the other pan. Then traders or goldsmiths or braziers should examine the balance and bring it on a level with the two pendants hanging down from the arches and examine the perfect horizontality of the beam of the balance by spilling a little water on the beam. When the person sitting in one pan is equal in weight to the materials (clay &c) in the other, a line should be drawn with chalk by the experts on the arch (to show the exact position of the pans). Then the man is made to get down from the pan and he is to invoke the balance as stated in Yāj. II. 101-102. 'O balance, you are the abode of truth, you were created by the gods for this purpose, declare the truth, free me from this (cloud of) suspicion. Mother! if I am a sinner then take me lower, if I am pure take me upwards'. The person is then to hear exhortations about the result of untruth after putting the writing on his head (vide Nār. IV. 276 and Visnu Dh. S. X. 9), then he is again to be placed in the pan to the accompaniment of invocations (Nār. IV. 278-279, Visnu Dh. S. X 10-11). A worthy brāhmana learned in astronomy is to calculate the time of five palas<sup>584</sup> or vinādīs. Then his weight is again to be marked. If the person goes up (i. e. is found lighter than what he formerly weighed) he is declared innocent (acc. to the com. on Nār. IV. 283, V. Mayūkha p. 60, Dipakalikā on Yāj. II. 102); if he weighs the same or goes down (i. e. weighs more) he is guilty. Then the person concerned is to distribute gifts to the judge, the brāhmanas and sacrificial priests and take leave of the deities invoked. Brhaspati (SBE vol. 33 p. 317 v. 19) states that he who weighs the same should be weighed once more. If the pan or the beam or the hooks break or the ropes give way owing to some visible cause then the procedure was to be repeated, but if the breaking is due to an unseen cause or accident, the person was to be declared guilty.

It is to be noted that विश्वामित्र quoted by the मित्रा regards this verse of the आदित्यर्वे as a मन्त्र and Prajāpati quoted by the Vyavahāraśāstra p. 153 does the same. Compare for a similar verse Manu VIII, 86.

The ordeal of fire is as follows :—Nine circles with cowdung are to be drawn from west to east, they being meant for Agni, Varuṇa, Vāyu, Yama, Indra, Kubera, Soma, Savitr and all gods. Each circle was to be 16 āṅgulas in diameter and the space between two circles was to be 16 āṅgulas. In each circle kuśa grass was to be spread and the person to be tested was to plant his feet on them; ghee was to be offered into fire 108 times. A blacksmith by birth should heat in fire a ball of iron weighing 50 palas (16 palas<sup>585</sup> in the case of a weak man) and eight 584 A vinādī is the time required for reciting 60 long syllables and 60 vinādīs make one ghatikā. So five vinādīs will be equal to two minutes.

585 A pala weighed 320 guṇjās according to the Līlāvati (I. 4). Acc. to Divyātattva (p. 608) 20 palas were equal to 66 tolakas, five māsas and 4 guṇjās, which, while accepting the view that a pala is equal to 320 guṇjās, gives the rather modern measurement into tolakas (tofas).

angulas in length till it becomes red-hot and emits sparks. Then all the details described above ending with the placing of the writing on the head of the śodhya are to be gone through by the judge and the fire (in the red-hot piece) is to be invoked with several mantras (such as Yāj. II. 104<sup>586</sup> and Visnu Dh. S. XI 11-12). The śodhya should stand in the first circle facing the east. Having made red marks on all sores of the hands of the śodhya on which grains of rice have been rubbed, he (the judge) should place seven leaves of the aśvaltha tree on them and also grains of rice and curds and should fasten round them threads. Then the judge should carry the red-hot iron piece by means of a pair of tongs and place it in the hands of the śodhya (that are covered with leaves). Then the śodhya holding in both his hands the red-hot piece should walk from the first to the eighth circle not hurriedly but slowly and at ease. Having reached the 8th<sup>587</sup> circle he should throw the red-hot iron piece on to the 9th circle. Then the judge should rub on the hands of the śodhya rice grains and when the latter shows no hesitation at the rubbing and no injury on his hand at the end of the day he is declared to be innocent. Kāt. (441) and Yāj. II. 107 provide that if the red-hot piece falls earlier (i. e. before reaching the 8th circle) or there is a doubt (whether his hands are injured or not) or if he loses his footing or is burnt elsewhere than on the hands he should again undergo the ordeal.

The ordeal of water as described in the smṛtis and digests is rather complicated. The Sm. C. (II. p. 116) remarks that<sup>588</sup> as the ordeals of water and poison had gone out of vogue (in its day) it passes over the procedure of these and takes up the description of kośa ordeal after the fire ordeal. Having gone to a reservoir of water the judge should get erected on its bank a torana (an arch) as high as the ear of the śodhya on an even and cowdunged plot. He should offer worship to Varuna (Lord of waters), to a bow of middling size and to three arrows (the points of which are made not of iron but of bamboo) with sandal paste, incense, lamp, flowers A target is to be fixed at the distance of 150 hastas (cubits) from the torana A post of some sacred tree is to be fixed in the water and a strong man of one of the three higher castes free from love or hatred for the śodhya is to stand in navel-deep water facing the east and holding the post Then the judge is to make the śodhya stand in water, invoke the deities from Dharma to Durgā, perform all the rites up to the placing of the writing (embodying the accusation) on the head of the śodhya A ksatriya or a brāhmana following the profession of arms who is of a pure heart and has observed a fast should discharge, while standing near the root of the torana, three arrows at the target. The śodhya should invoke the water with the mantra, 'O Varuna! save me by means of truth' (Yāj. II 108)<sup>589</sup>. Then a young but swift man should run to the spot where the second arrow struck the ground, and stand there holding that arrow in his hand. Another swift man stands at the root of the torana whence the arrows were discharged. Then the judge claps his hands thrice. At the third clap the śodhya dives into the water seizing the thighs of the man standing in water and at the same time the swift man near the arch runs at his best speed to the place where the second arrow fell The other man who holds the arrow starts off the moment the first runner reaches him and comes running to the arch If he does not see the śodhya or sees only his head (i. e. the back of the head) when he reaches the arch the śodhya is to be declared innocent; but if he sees other parts of the head (such as the ear or nose &c.) or if the śodhya floats to some part other than the one where he dived he is not innocent

589 Several smṛtis give different mantras to be recited by the judge in invoking the waters (so that there is an option) Vide Viṣṇu Dh S XII 7-8 (tvamambhah &c.), Piṭāmaha (toya tvam prāṇinām prāṇāh &c.) quoted by the Mit on Yāj. II 108, Nār IV. 316-317 (satyāntavibhāgasya &c.), Kālikāpurāṇa q. by V P. p 206 The mantra in Sankha-Likhita (q. by Maḍanaratna and V. P. p 206) was सद्सत्यं त्वमेव देवता । उभयोः प्रतिष्ठितस्यै सत्यं सिद्धं देव वरुण । त्वमेव सद्ब्रह्मि वरेण्यं सदादिशस्व । The Ms of मदनमल reads सदादिशस्व ।

gods and brāhmanas. The poison to be selected is śārṅga (derived from the śruga plant) or vatsanābha (aconite) or hamavata (Visnu Dh. S. XIII 3, Nār. IV. 322 &c.). Pītāmaha (q. by Aparārka p. 712) treats the three as distinct, while Yāj. II. 111 appears to prescribe śārṅga growing on the Himālaya as the poison to be selected. Visnu Dh. S. (XIII. 2-3) also does the same. In the rains the quantity of poison is to be six yavas in weight, in summer five, in hemanta (and śisira) seven or eight and in śarad (autumn) less than the latter (i. e. six yavas acc. to Mit. and three acc. to V. Mayūkha). Poison is to be administered in the last watch of the night and never in the noon or afternoon or twilight; it was to be mixed with ghee thirty times as much. It may be administered to any one except a brāhmana. Visnu Dh. S. XIII. 6-7 and Nār. IV. 325 are mantras with which the judge invokes poison and Yāj. II. 110 is the mantra which the śodhya repeats before taking poison viz. 'O poison! thou art the son of Brahman, thou art firm in the duty of (deciding) the truth. Save me from this accusation and be like nectar to me by truth (if I be innocent)'. Nār. IV. 326 states that then the śodhya should eat the poison, should be kept in shade without food and guarded the rest of the day and if he discloses no signs of the effect of poison should be declared innocent. If the dose of poison is large, the Mit. (on Yāj. II. 111) says that when the śodhya shows no change till five hundred clappings of hands then he should be declared to be innocent and medical treatment should be resorted to. Pītāmaha says that, in order to prevent fraud, for three or five nights before the ordeal the intending śodhya should be kept under the supervision of the king's servants and an examination should be made whether medicines, incantations or precious stones that are antidotes are secretly employed.

The ordeal of kośa. The śodhya is made to worship the stern deities (such as Rudra, Durgā, Āditya) with sandal wood paste, flowers etc. and made to bathe the images with water. Then the judge asks the śodhya to invoke the consecrated water with the mantra 'satyena mābhurakṣa' (Yāj. II. 108) and makes him drink three handfuls (prasṛti) of that water. Pītāmaha gives some special rules. The water may be that of the bath of the image of that god of which the śodhya is a devotee or if he holds all images in equal esteem, then of the Sun. In the case of Durgā it is her spike (śūla) that is to be bathed, the orb in the case of the Sun and the weapons in the case of other gods The water of the bath of Durgā is to be offered as ordeal to thieves and those who live by the profession of arms and the water of the bath of the Sun is not to be given to brāhmanas. In other divyas the result is declared immediately, but in the kośa ordeal there is a period of waiting which is more or less according to the value of the claim or the gravity of the offence. Acc. to Yāj. II. 113, Visnu Dh S 14. 4-5, Nār. IV. 330, if within fourteen days of taking the kośa ordeal the śodhya does not suffer any serious calamity due to the king's action or the act of God or does not fall seriously ill or does not lose by death his son or wife or other dear relative or his wealth, then he is to be declared innocent. Insignificant loss or illness did not matter as it is unavoidable in this world. Besides, the calamity or illness must not be one common to several people (such as an epidemic). Drinking holy water (kośapāna) was employed not only as an ordeal for proving innocence, but it was resorted to also for assuring another about one's good will and future honesty (vide Rājat V. 326).

Ordeal of Tanḍula (rice grains). It is to be administered in charges of theft or disputes about debts or other monetary matters. On the preceding day grains of rice should be made white (i. e. husked). The judge should perform all the rites on the previous day. The rice grains should be placed in an earthen vessel, exposed to the sun, water of the bath of (the image of) the sun should be poured over them in the vessel and the vessel should be kept in that state the whole night. The next day in the morning the śodhya should swallow thrice the rice grains. He should be made to spit on a pippala or birch leaf. If blood is found mixed in his saliva he should be declared guilty.

Ordeal of taptamāsa (heated piece of gold). In a vessel of copper, iron or clay sixteen angulas in diameter and four angulas deep, the judge should get twenty palas of ghee and oil poured and heat it to the boiling point. Then the judge should cast into it a golden piece weighing one māśaka (equal to five guṇjās). The śodhya should take out the heated golden piece with the thumb and the next two fingers. If he does not jerk his fingers or there is no scalded skin he should be declared to be innocent. There is another method. Cow's ghee should be poured in a vessel of gold, silver, copper, iron or clay and it should be heated to the boiling point so that when a green leaf is cast into it the sound 'churu' is produced. Into the boiling ghee he should cast a golden, silver, copper or iron seal ring once washed. Then he should invoke the ghee with this mantra 'O ghee! thou art the holiest thing in sacrifices, thou art nectar; burn him (the sodhya) if he is a sinner; be cool as ice if he be innocent.' Then the sodhya takes out the ring from the boiling ghee. If there are no marks of scalding on his forefinger he is innocent

Ordeal by phāla (ploughshare). This is described by Brhaspati (S. B. E. vol. 33 p. 318 verse 28) quoted by the Sm C II. p. 119, V. P. p. 218 and others. A ploughshare of iron weighing twelve palas, eight angulas long and four broad should be made red-hot and the thief should be made to lick it once with his tongue. If he is not burnt he establishes his innocence; if otherwise, he is guilty. The Vyavahāratattva (p. 608) mentions that acc. to Maithila writers the thief meant is a cattle-lifter. The ordeal mentioned in the Chāndogya Upaniṣad is a phāla divya.

Ordeal of dharma (i. e. of the images or pictures of Dharma). Men guilty of causing bodily injuries or who have monetary disputes or who desire to undergo this ordeal as an expiation for sins should undergo this. A silver image of Dharma and a leaden or iron one of Adharma should be prepared or the judge should draw on a birch leaf or a piece of cloth figures or pictures of Dharma and Adharma respectively white and dark in colour. Having sprinkled pañcagavya over the two, he should worship them with white and dark flowers respectively. The images or figures should then be placed in two balls of clay or cowdung. The two balls should be then placed inside a new earthen vessel in a cowdunged spot in the presence of images of gods and in the presence of brāhmanas. Then the judge should perform all the rites from the invocation of Dharma to the placing of the writing on the head. The sodhya should repeat the words 'if I am free from guilt may (the image or picture of) Dharma come to my hands'. Saying this he should take out one ball from the vessel. If he takes out Dharma he is innocent. This resembles the drawing of lots.

Ordeals played their part in the judicial systems of most ancient countries. In early England handling of red-hot iron and plunging the hand in boiling water were the commonest ordeals. In the ordeal of water sinking was a sign of innocence and floating of guilt. Stephens (History of Criminal Law of England, vol. I p. 73) suggests that the ordeal of water was a form of honourable suicide. The Assize of Northampton (1176 A. D.) prescribed the ordeal of water for murder, robbery, theft, forgery and arson, but ordeals were abolished in England from 1215 A. D. (ibid. vol I p. 300) In India<sup>591</sup> there is epigraphic and other evidence to show that ordeals were resorted to till the end of the 18th century and rarely even later. In the Kittur Pillar Inscription (J. B. B. R. A. S. vol IX, pp. 307-309) dated in Kaliyuga era 4289 in the reign of Kadamba king Jayakesideva there is a description of the phāladvya which was administered by mutual agreement on Sunday to an ācārya Śivaśakti who had a dispute about a plot of land with Kalyānaśakti the ācārya of another shrine and whose hand was examined the next day after he underwent the ordeal by all the bankers of the agrahāra village Degāve In the Silimpur stone slab Inscription of the time of Jayapāladeva (E. I. vol XIII, p. 283 at p. 291-292) there is a reference to the ordeal of 591 In Beal's 'Buddhist Records of the Western world,' vol I p. 84 (also Watters on Yuan Chwang's travels vol. I p. 172) four kinds of ordeals are mentioned as in vogue, viz. by water, fire, weight and poison. In the water ordeal the accused is placed in a sack connected with a stone vessel and thrown into deep water. If the man sinks and the stone floats he is guilty, if the man floats and the stone sinks then he is pronounced innocent. The ordeal by fire is they heat a plate of iron and make the accused sit on it and again place his feet on it and apply it to the palms of his hands, moreover he is made to pass his tongue over it. If no scar results he is innocent, if there are scars his guilt is proved. In the ordeal by weight a man and a stone are placed evenly in a balance. If the accused is innocent the stone rises in the balance, if he is guilty the man rises and the stone falls. In the ordeal of poison an incision is made in the right thigh of a ram, all sorts of poison with a portion of the food of the accused are placed in the incised wound. If the man is guilty poison takes effect and the animal dies, if he is innocent the poison has no effect and the animal survives. It will be noticed that these descriptions of the four ordeals do not agree in several respects with the descriptions in the smṛtis and digests, while the poison ordeal in Beal has nothing in common with the smṛti poison ordeal. Alberuni (tr. by Sachau, vol II, pp. 159-160) probably speaks of poison ordeal in the words 'the accused person is invited to drink bīṣh called hrāhmaṇa' (he is probably referring to poison being called the offspring of Brahman in Yāj. II 110 and Nār. IV 325). In the ordeal of water the accused is simply thrown into a deep and rapidly flowing river or a deep well and he was held innocent if he was not drowned. He describes the kośa ordeal and balance ordeal accurately, but states that if the man has spoken the truth he weighs more than before. He describes correctly taṭṭamāsa (gold piece taken from boiling clarified butter) and also the ordeal of the red-hot iron piece.

balance<sup>592</sup> (about 1200 A. D.). The Visnukundin king, Mādhavarman in the 7th century A. D. (Journal of Andhra Historical Research Society, vol. VI pp. 17, 20, 24) is said to have carried out various ordeals (avasta-vardha-divyah). The E. C. vol. III (Māndyā Taluka Ins. No. 79 p. 47) records that a dispute having arisen about the boundaries of land bestowed by means of a copperplate grant by the Hoysala king Virā-Narasimhadeva, one Kannaya, a descendant of the original donee, performed an ordeal by holding consecrated food in the presence of the God Hoysalesvara in the capital Dorasamudra and came out successful. E. C. IV. p. 27 (Yelandur Jagir Ins. No. 2 page 27, about 1580 A. D.) is a charter to potters whose headmen underwent the ordeal of dipping their hands in boiling ghee as against barbers and washermen who denied that potters could pare their toe nails and tie on upper cloth (at the time of marriage). In the Indian Antiquary for 1931 (vol. 60 p. 179) an extract is cited from the Archaeological Report for Travancore 1930 which describes the balance ordeal undergone by a brāhmana 18 years before and seen by the writer himself in the temple of Śiva at Calicut. For the ordeal of red-hot ploughshare in the case of thefts, vide Report of South Indian Epigraphy for 1907, para. 27.

In the times of the Maratha kings ordeals were resorted to. For example, in 'Peshwa's Diaries' vol. 2 p. 150 (in 1764-65 A. D.) mention is made of taptakatāha ordeal (i.e. taking out a coin or ring or a piece of metal from a large vessel in which either water or oil or ghee had been brought to the boiling point) in which the person undergoing it had his right hand burnt up to the middle joints of the fingers and was declared to be false. In a Marathi publication called 'Vatanpatrem, nivādatrem &c' pp. 46-56 edited by P. V. Mavjee and D. B. Farasnis (1909) there is a document which describes in great detail the ordeal of fire undergone in connection with a dispute about the office and emoluments of Deshpande in the district of Kalyan in śake 1666 Pausa bright 11th, Thursday (1745 A. D.). It is stated therein that the ordeal was performed on the tank of the sacred river Godāvari at Kopargaon in accordance with Dharmaśāstra in the presence of the Peshwa himself and learned brāhmanas and pañchās near the temple of the god Śrī Sukleśvara, that as the opponent was long in possession the ordeal had to be performed by the man claiming title, that an iron ball of 50 palas (i. e. 166 tolas and two māśas) was heated red-hot and the śodhya carried it across seven circles and threw it in the 8th circle on flour and bundles which began to burn, that his hands were examined in the presence of the opponent and the respectable people and were found unaffected and the opponent was made to pass a document of victory to the śodhya called 'yejutapatra'. The description agrees very closely with that given above. In the same work at pp. 36-41 there is a remarkable description about an ordeal undergone (in 1742 A. D.) by Mahomedan litigants in their own mosque for 15 days by lighting lamps and sitting down in the shrine. There are several other vatanpatras in the same work which refer to ordeals.

For an informing article on divyas reference may be made to Dr. Dines Chandra Sirkar's 'The successors<sup>593</sup> of the Sātavāhanas' Appendix pp 354-376 (Calcutta, 1939) He quotes therein a passage from the 'Asiatic Researches' vol. 1, from which it appears that a magistrate named Ali Ibrahim Khan at Benares tried by phāla divya two cases in 1783 A. D. and reported them to the then Governor-General, Warren Hastings. In the 'Trtiya-sammelana-vṛtta' (pp. 18-26) and in the Caturtha-sammelana-vṛtta pp 100-154 of the Bhārata-itihāsa-samsōdhaka-maṇḍala at Poona (both in Marathi) Mr Bhaskar Vaman Bhat contributes two thoughtful and scholarly papers on the administration of Justice in the times of the Marathas in which the part played by ordeals is described at some length.

593. It is somewhat strange that Dr Sirkar refers to 'Divyatattva of Brhaspati' (in 'Successors of the Sātavāhanas' Appendix p. 360). A Divyatattva of Raghunandana is well-known. A Divyatattva of Brhaspati has so far been mentioned nowhere.

CHAPTER XV

DECISION

The last (i. e. 4th) stage in a judicial proceeding is siddhi (Yāj. II 8) or munaya (decision). If pratyākālita (as defined above on p 298) is regarded as a pāda of vyavahāra (and since all are agreed that there are only four pādas) then the decision is not a pāda of a lawsuit but is the fruit thereof (V. P. p. 86). When the evidence has been led, the king (or chief justice) should with the help of the sabhyas decide upon the success or failure of the plaintiff<sup>594</sup>. Nār. II. 42 says that the sabhyas should ask the parties to leave the court when they are considering their verdict or what decision was to be pronounced<sup>595</sup>. It is stated by Vyāsa and Śukra IV. 5. 271 that the decision of a case is based on eight sources<sup>596</sup> (6 acc to Śukra) viz. the three pramāṇas (possession, documents and witnesses), logical inference, the usages of the country, śapathas (oaths and ordeals), the king's edict and the admission of the litigants. Pitāmaha prescribes that, in disputes where there are no witnesses, no possession nor documents and no recourse can be had to divine proof, there the king is the final deciding factor as he is the lord of all<sup>597</sup>.

It is stated by Nārada II. 41 and 43 that, whether a party is defeated by his own admission or by his own conduct (i. e. because he adduces false witnesses or forged documents) or

595. Dr Jolly (S. B. E. vol. 33 p 35) is not right when he translates Nār II. 42 as 'whenever the false assertions have been removed the judges shall pass a decree'. He has not also correctly rendered the com. of Asahāya. There is no word for 'assertions' in Nār. II 42 पक्षानुसारां तु सम्ये कार्ये निनिश्चयः सदा' on which the comment of Asahāya is: यदा निर्णयकादो भवति लग्नस्तदा वादिप्रतिवादिनोः पक्षेः सर्वस्तक्षणसम्बन्धमानकैः सह द्वावप्युत्सार्य सम्ये निर्णयः कार्यः ।

whether he is defeated after full trial and the adducing of proof, it is proper that the defeat should be declared by the sabhyas (the judges) and that a Jayapatra (a document of success i.e. a judgment) should be given to the successful party couched in fitting terms. Several verses of Nārada (quoted by Aparārka p. 684), Brhaspati (S B. E. vol. 33 p 307 verse 19), Kāt. (259-265), Vṛddha-Vasistha (q. by Mit. on Yāj II 91- and Aparārka p. 684) and Vyāsa (Sm C II p 57) lay down the contents of the judgment.<sup>598</sup> It was to contain a brief statement of the plaint, the reply, the evidence, the depositions of witnesses, discussion thereof, arguments, the smṛti texts applicable, the opinion of the sabhyas, the decision and the relief granted, and should be signed by the chief justice and bear the royal seal. Vas. 19 10 refers to precedents also in the decision of cases and the awarding of punishments (āgamād-dṛṣṭāntāc-ca). The Mit quotes a smṛti text (on Yāj. II 91) that other members of the assembly (who are not judges) proficient in smṛti may also sign the judgment to show that the decision is acceptable to them also. But this was not absolutely necessary, as is made clear by the Vivādacandra p. 146. Kāt (256) applies the word paścātkāra<sup>599</sup> (refutation) to a judgment containing the above particulars given after a complete contest, while he restricts the word jayapatra to a document (given by the judge) when a plaintiff becomes what is called hinaūdi (because he makes a change in his pleading or for similar cause) and when there has been no complete trial of an action; and such a document embodies only what happened. Kaut. (III. 19) appears to employ the word 'paścātkāra' in a somewhat different sense when he says 'the person, who, when charged with murder, does not reply to the charge that very day, stands refuted' (i. e. is found guilty)<sup>600</sup>. The Mit (on Yāj. II. 91) differing from Kāt holds a jayapatra to be a judgment giving 'a summary of the plaint, the reply, the evidence and the decision, while when a plaintiff is defeated for change of pleading or for default of appearance or for non-prosecution the document stating this is called 'hīnapatraka'. It is to be regretted that ancient jayapatras in Sanskrit have not yet been discovered. In 25 Calcutta Weekly Notes pp. CXLII—III Dr. Jolly communicated the substance of a jayapatra, couched in ancient Javanese, engraved on a copper-plate found in the island of Java and described by Dr. Brandes in a Dutch paper. That judgment is dated śaka 849 (928 A. D.), relates to a dispute about a debt of one suvarṇa in which the plaintiff failed because he did not appear at the trial. At the end there are the signatures of four witnesses and the document is styled jayapatra at the end. Vide for the same jayapatra J. B. O. R. S. vol. VII pp. 117 ff The late Mr. K. P. Jayaswal published in 24 Calcutta Weekly Notes (pp. CXLIX—CLVI) a jayapatra (text, translation and remarks) granted by the Hindu court of Mithilā in śaka 1716 (1794 A. D.) and in J. B. O. R. S. vol. VI pp. 246—258, which strictly conforms to the rules of procedure laid down in the smṛtis and nibandhas and is couched in dignified, technical and scrupulously formal language. It related to the ownership of a slave girl. Plaintiff at first made default in appearance; the judgment notes this and also refers to the restoration of the suit. The defendant raised an objection that a single witness to prove a matter was inadmissible. This objection was upheld. Then plaintiff prayed that he might be allowed to undergo an ordeal, but this request was disallowed as human proof was possible and plaintiff ultimately lost his suit. The judgment is written and signed by one Sacalāmīśra, who was the chief justice, and is addressed to other members of the sabhā, called dharmādhyaksas and panditas, seven of whom express their concurrence (sammah) at the top of the document. Vide Journal of the Bihar and Orissa Research Society vol XXVIII for 1942 for nine Sanskrit jayapatras from the courts of Mithilā in the 18th and 19th centuries.

The Mit. (on Yāj. II. 91), and V. Mātṛkā p. 309 note that a jayapatra is given specially to prevent the same matter being agitated again, while a document given where a party is hinavādi (i. e. a hinapatra) serves the purpose of making that party liable later on to pay a fine. When a dispute was decided by a domestic tribunal (kula &c) there was no jayapatra but only a nirṇaya-patra (kulādibhiḥ nirṇaye jayapatrābhāvān-nirṇaya-ptram tatra kṛyam paratapatrami yāvāt, as the Vy. Nirṇaya p. 85 says). It would be better to adopt the reading 'eritapatram' as given by one Ms

The defeated party has to pay a fine to the king and the successful party was complimented (or honoured) by the king (or chief justice) and was to be put in possession of the matter that he succeeded in proving<sup>601</sup>. Manu VIII 51 prescribes that in monetary matters (i. e. in civil disputes) the defeated party should be made by the king to pay the judgment debt to the successful party and also some fine to the king according to his ability, while Manu VIII 139 lays down that when the defendant admits in the court his liability he has to pay to the king five per cent as fine and if the defendant denied his liability altogether and was proved to be false he had to pay as fine double of that (i. e. ten per cent). This is analogous to court fee, for which see above pp. 294-295. If one or both parties had laid down a stake or 'wager' (viz. 'if I be defeated in this suit I shall pay a hundred panas') then he had to pay that stake to the king and a fine as above and the subject of dispute to the successful party (Yāj. II 18 and Nār. II 5)<sup>602</sup>; compare Visnu Dh. S. V. 153-159 for similar rules. The punishments awarded in criminal matters will be discussed immediately below.

It would be necessary to see in what cases review of judgment was allowed. The general rule is stated by Manu IX. 233, 'whenever any legal proceeding has been completed (tīrita) or has been carried out so far as to recover a fine from the defeated party, a wise king shall not annul it' (at his mere will or pleasure or through greed). The words 'tīrita' and

'anuśiṣṭa' have been variously explained<sup>603</sup>. The word 'tīrita' is very ancient and occurs in the Delhi Pillar Edict IV of Aśoka (E I. Vol. II. p. 253) as 'tīrita-dandānam' qualifying men imprisoned in jails. Medhātithi and Kuṭṭūka explain them as 'decided according to the rules of the śāstra' and 'taken so far as to recover fine from the unsuccessful party' respectively. Kāt. (495) defines them differently: "When a certain side is decided by the sabhyas themselves (without the examination of witnesses) to be either true or false, it is said to be tīrita and that matter or side is called 'anuśiṣṭa' which is declared (to be true or false) on the testimony of witnesses." The lexicon called Vaijayantī seems to have Kāt. in mind and defines 'tīrita' as a perverse decision given by the sabhyas themselves and 'anuśiṣṭa' occurs where the evidence of witnesses makes what is true appear as false (Bhūmikāṇḍa, vaiśyādhyāya, verses 11-12). Nār. II. 65 (S. B. E. vol. 33 p. 22) employs the two words, which the Mit on Yāj. II. 306 respectively explains as (tīrita) 'decided by reliance on documents and witnesses but not carried so far as to recover a fine', and ('anuśiṣṭa') as 'decided so far as to recover a fine from the defeated party'. Vide Aparārka p. 866 and V. P. p. 90 for explanations.

According to Kāt. quoted in the Vyavahārasāra (p. 101)<sup>604</sup> the decree should provide for the successful party receiving the interest on or accretions to the movable or immovable property placed (during the pendency of the suit) in the hands of a third party (as a sort of Receiver). Kāt. (477-480) points out the various ways in which a decree may be executed. The king should make a brāhmana debtor return the decretal debt to the judgment creditor by conciliatory words, should make other debtors return it according to the usage of the country and compel bad people to satisfy the decree by means of physical pain (i. e. imprisonment). The king should make a co-sharer or friend (of the successful party) pay the decretal debt by means of a ruse (i. e. by borrowing an ornament or the like from him on a festive occasion and handing it over to the creditor) and also make traders, husbandmen and artisans (to pay) in a similar way. On finding that the debtor is unable to return the debt in cash, the king should make the debtor, whether a ksatriya, vaiśya, śūdra or husbandman, work (for the creditor). If he be unable to work the debtor should be sent to jail except when he is a brāhmana. Manu also (IX. 229) says that if the members of the three varnas other than brāhmana are unable to pay the fine imposed by the king they should be made to work for the king, but a brāhmana may be allowed to pay in easy and small instalments. If a brāhmana debtor was unable to pay, nothing could be done for recovery of the decretal debt except taking a surety from him if any one cared to be one. In modern times also judgment debtors are liable to be arrested and detained in civil jail in execution of decrees under rules 55-58 of the Indian Civil Procedure code (except women in execution of a decree for the payment of money). If in ancient times state policy exempted brāhmanas from arrest and detention in a civil jail for monetary debts on spiritual grounds and on the ground of caste, in modern times the State in India exempts agriculturists from arrest or imprisonment in execution of a decree for money on economic grounds under certain legislative enactments like sec. 21 of the Deccan Agriculturists' Relief Act (Bombay Act XVII of 1879). As regards women also Kāt. (488-489) laid down certain prudent rules "Women who are not<sup>606</sup> independent should not be arrested (for offences like adultery); it is the male who should be regarded as the offender; women should be punished by their lord (i. e. the person on whom they depend) but the king should take away for punishment the male offender. Even if a woman whose husband has gone abroad be consigned to jail she should be kept imprisoned only till he returns." The Sm. C. II. p. 323 explains that the first verse applies to a woman who can perform the expiation for adultery and who is dependent and the adultery is not with a male of a lower caste.

Nār (II. 40) lays down<sup>607</sup> a qualification that when a party has been defeated by his own conduct (i. e. by his demeanour or by his having adduced manifestly false witnesses or forged documents) there is to be no retrial or review of judgment, but where a man has lost his cause through (the dishonesty of) witnesses or the sabhyas, the cause may be tried anew. There are four exceptions to the finality of the judgments of the king's court. Where a litigant either through folly or insolence<sup>608</sup> thinks a decision to be wrong, he may be allowed a retrial, provided he agrees to pay double the fine inflicted on the losing party (Yāj II. 306, Nār. I. 65, Kat. 496). Secondly, where the former judgment is obtained by fraud or force, it may be set aside (Yāj. II. 31)<sup>609</sup>. Thirdly, where the litigant was incompetent, i. e. was a woman or a minor or a lunatic or intoxicated, seriously ill or distressed by a calamity or where the proceeding was carried on by another on behalf of a litigant who did not appoint him or with whom he was not connected in any way or was held inside a house or outside a town or village (i. e. in a forest) or by an enemy, the decision may be set aside and a retrial ordered (Nār. I. 43 in S. B. E. vol. 33 p. 16, Yāj. II. 31-32). Fourthly, a king could set right a former decision of his predecessor which was unjust and arrived at through ignorance (Mit. on Yāj. II. 306)<sup>610</sup>.

Yāj. (II. 4 and 305) prescribes that legal proceedings that are suspected to have been wrongly decided by the sabhyas through partiality or greed or intimidation should again be tried by the king and if the suspicion turns out to be true he should levy from the sabhyas and the party who at first succeeded double the fine that is imposed on a defeated party. and 334 prescribe that when officers appointed to administer justice cause loss to litigants by taking bribes, the king should deprive them of all their wealth and when the amātyas (ministers) or chief justice disposes of a matter wrongly (but without being bribed), the king should himself decide the matter correctly and should impose on the amātyas or chief justice a fine of 1000 panas

Though there is hardly any express smṛti text for the transfer of cases from one court or judge to another court or judge, in practice this must have been done, though rarely. In "Selections from Peshwa's Daftar" vol 43 p 108 there is a letter (of 12-8-1764 A.D.) written by the renowned minister Nana Phadnis to the Peshwa Madhavrao in which the former endeavours to persuade the latter to cancel his order for transfer of a case from the court of Rāmsāstri, famed for his impartiality and strict life, to another judge on the ground that one of the litigants was afraid that Rāmsāstri showed some partiality to the other litigant. Manu (VIII 174-175) states that the king who decides the causes of people unjustly through greed is soon subjugated by his enemies, while the king who curbing his own temper and desires impartially decides causes according to the dictates of sāstra becomes of one mind with his subjects as rivers merge in the ocean. Br and Nār I 74 (S.B.E vol. 33 p 24) lay emphasis on both the secular and spiritual effects of doing even justice, saying that when the king gives decisions according to sāstra he spreads his fame in this world and secures Heaven<sup>611</sup>

A crime may be defined as an act or omission that breaks the law and is subject to public punishment. But all kinds of breaches of the law do not result in punishment; only some do. Those breaches are crimes which are deemed to be menaces to the conditions of existence of society, which society, the ruler or legislation recognises as preventable only through punishment. The menace is not that of the specific action, but the abstract menace inherent in that type of action. A breach that is held to be a crime at one time may even be held not to be a crime at another time or in another country. For example, adultery is a crime under the Indian Penal Code (sec 497), while it is not a crime but a civil wrong in English Law.

Many crimes and wrongs were sins and entailed secular punishments and also religious sanctions (viz expiations, prāyaścittas). Vide Manu IX. 236, 240, Br. (S. B. E. vol 33, p. 362, verse 22) and Paithīnāsī quoted below<sup>612</sup>. Maine in his 'Ancient Law' chap. X (3rd ed of 1866) examines ancient western systems like those of Greece and Rome and makes the generalisation (p. 370) that the 'penal law of ancient communities is not the law of crimes; it is the law of wrongs or, to use the English technical word, of Torts. The person injured proceeds against the wrong-doer by an ordinary civil action and recovers compensation in the shape of money damages if he succeeds'. Dr. Priya Nath Sen in his Tagore Law Lectures on 'Hindu Jurisprudence' (1918, Lecture XII) rightly points out that this generalisation is not applicable to Ancient Hindu Law. It has already been shown (on pp. 264-266) that the king could of his own motion take cognisance of many wrongs called chālas, padas and aparūdhas and it is clear that in such crimes as theft, assault, adultery, rape, and manslaughter the smṛti texts do not prescribe only a money compensation to the person wronged, but corporal punishment in the first instance and monetary compensation in addition. Vide for example, Manu VIII. 287, Yāj. II. 222, Br. (SBE vol. 33 p. 358 verses 9-10), Kāt. (787) which prescribe a punishment for causing pain to the body or the loss of a limb and also the expenses of curing the person injured and some solatium to him<sup>613</sup>. Āp. Dh S (I. 9. 24. 1 and 4) lays down that the slayer of a ksatriya should give a thousand cows in order to remove the enmity (i. e. as compensation to relatives) and one bull in addition for expiation.<sup>614</sup> The Chāndogya Upanisad quoted above (p. 362) shows that a thief was punished with death in those early days. There is a passage in the Tai. S II.

6. 10. 1 (quoted in H. of Dh. vol. II p. 151 n. 346) which states, 'He who threatens a brāhmana should be made to pay a hundred, he who strikes a brāhmana should be made to pay a thousand'. It is rather doubtful whether the figures stated are fines or are meant as solatium to the wronged. In Rg. II. 32. 4 (which also occurs in Tai S III 3. 11. 5) the poet prays to Rākā<sup>615</sup> (the Full Moon personified) that she may be pleased to grant the boon of a valiant son, who would be 'śatadāya'. Sāyana's rendering of this word as 'possessed of plentiful heritage or wealth' appears to be the right one. The words 'śatadāyam vīram' in the Tai S. III. 3. 11. 5 are translated by Prof Keith as 'a hero whose wergild is a hundred'. This is incorrect, confounding as it does the ideas of western Germanic tribes with the Rgveda composed several millenniums earlier. It would be a strange thing to pray to a goddess for a son and at the same time to have in mind or refer to the price set upon him if he happened to be killed.

The ancient smṛti writers were quite aware of the several purposes served by punishments for crimes,<sup>616</sup> though they do not develop a regular science of penology. The person wronged feels a great urge for revenge or retaliation and other men sympathise with that emotion. The individual, however, could not, in civilized societies, take the law into his own hands and therefore the State saw to it that the emotion for retaliation or revenge was to some degree satisfied by the adequate punishment of the wrongdoer. Yāj. II. 16 and Nār. I. 46 (SBE vol. 33 p. 17) state that when a person without complaining to the king sets about to secure what is denied by the opposite side or is doubtful he becomes liable to punishment and he also cannot secure the object he wants.<sup>616a</sup> In all ancient societies the lex talionis (the law of retaliation, viz. an eye for an eye,

V. 19 and Śāṅkha-Likhita prescribe that with whatever limb<sup>618</sup> a man of low caste offends against a brāhmana, that very limb of his shall be cut off. Another and the most important purpose of punishment is deterrent. Punishment of the evil-doer serves as an example and a warning to all others that might be tempted to tread the paths of violence and crime. This aspect of punishment (danda) has already been dwelt upon in the section on rājadharmā (p. 21). The end sought to be served by punishment was the protection of society and the securing of its happiness. The Śāntiparva (15 5-6) remarks that people do not commit sins through fear of punishment at the hands of the king, through fear of Yama and of the next world and through fear of others (i. e. public opinion).<sup>619</sup> Gaut. XI. 28 derives the word danda from the root dam to restrain or to deter. This purpose of punishment is well brought out in the Mṛcchakatika (X) when the sentence passed on Cārudatta for the alleged murder of Vasantasenā is proclaimed to the citizens by the executioners.<sup>620</sup> Another purpose of punishment is preventive i. e. if a culprit is imprisoned for an offence he is prevented or disabled from repeating the same offence or

In Hammurabi's Code (text tr. by C. H. W. Johns, 1903) sections 196 and 200 are: 'If a man has caused the loss of a gentleman's eye, his eye one shall cause to be lost. If a man has made the tooth of a man that is his equal to fall, one shall make his tooth to fall out'.

committing further offences for some time at least and if he be sentenced to death or transported for life or banished, the commission of offences by him is prevented for his life-time. Another purpose was that of reform or redemption of the evil-doer. The punishment was deemed to be a sort of expiation, which purged the man of sinful promptings and reformed his character. Manu VIII 318 (= Vas. 19 45) states that men who are guilty of crimes and have been punished by the king go to heaven, becoming pure like those who perform meritorious deeds. Medhātithi remarks on this verse that this applies only where the punishment is corporal and not merely monetary. It will be seen from the early sūtras like that of Gautama and from the Manusmṛiti that the more ancient criminal law in India was very severe and drastic, but that from the times of Yājñavalkya, Nār. and Br. the rigour of punishments was lessened and softened and fines came to be the ordinary punishments for many crimes, as is noted by Fa Hien (399-400 A.D.) in relation to middle India (Madhyadeśa) under the Guptas apparently 'The king governs without decapitation or other corporal punishments. Criminals are simply fined, lightly or heavily according to the circumstances. Even in circumstances of repeated attempts at wicked rebellion they only have their right hands cut off' (Legge, 1886 p. 43). This may be contrasted with the state of things depicted by Megasthenes 700 years earlier than Fa Hien: (Fragment XXVII p. 71) 'a person bearing false witness suffers mutilation of his extremities. He who maims anyone not only suffers loss of the same limb but his hand also is cut off. If he causes an artisan to lose his hand and eye he is put to death'. The Daśakumāracarita (II p. 56) states that the Mauryas conferred a boon on traders that for certain offences they were not to be sentenced to death, but were to be deprived of all their wealth and banished. The first separate Rock Edict of Aśoka at Dhauli (Corpus I. I pp. 93, 97) shows that great Emperor's anxiety that his judicial officers should strive to see that there is no undeserved fettering or no undeserved harsh treatment. In India the list of capital offences at any time was much shorter than in the West. Stephens is constrained to admit that in England 'there can be no doubt that the legislation of the 18th century in criminal matters was severe to the highest degree and destitute of any sort of principle or system' (His. of Cr. Law, vol. I. p. 471). As stated by Dr. Hart (in 'Way to justice' p. 94), at the beginning of the 19th century in England more than a hundred offences were punishable by death. In 1832 a child was convicted at Ludgate Hill for stealing a box of paints worth two pence, was tried at the Old Bailey and hanged (vide 'In the service of youth', by Dr. J M. Brew, 1943 chap XV. p 208).

Manu VIII. 129, Yāj I 367 and Br. (S B E. 33 p. 387 verse 5), Vṛddha-Hārīta (7195) speak of four methods of punishment (danda) viz. by gentle admonition by severe reproof, by fine and by corporal punishment and declare that these punishments may be inflicted separately or together according to the nature of the offence.<sup>621</sup> The first takes the form of saying 'you have not done a proper thing', the 2nd 'lie upon you who are a wrongdoer and guilty of adharma'. Br. lays down that preceptors, puṇyatas and sons should be sentenced to the punishment of wordy admonition, other persons who engage in disputes should be punished with reproof or fines and those guilty of mahāpātakas should be punished with corporal punishment. That admonition and reproof were two modes of punishment shows that ancient writers were alive to the notion that among very sensitive persons or in a very sensitive society verbal condemnation would be enough to achieve the main purposes of punishment. Br. (SBE vol. 33 p. 388 verse 8) states that the first two are within the privilege of the brāhmaṇa (appointed as chief justice) but fines and corporal punishment are to be inflicted by the king (on the recommendation of the chief justice, prāḍvṛkamate śikṣitah). The Mṛcchakatika (IX) bears this out when the judge says 'We have authority only to pronounce the judgment; as to the rest the king is the final authority' (mrnaye vāyam pramāṇam śeṣe tu rājā). Gaut. XII 51, Vas. 19 9, Manu VII. 16, VIII 126 and Yāj I. 368 (=Vṛddha-Hārīta VII. 195-196), Brhat Parāśara p. 284, Kaut IV. 10 lay down that the award of punishment must be regulated by a consideration of the motive and nature of the offence, the time and place, the strength, age, conduct (or duties), learning and monetary position of the offender and by the fact whether the offence<sup>622</sup> is repeated. This provision means that the dharmaśāstras did not hold that the same punishment must be meted out for the same offence irrespective of the antecedents, characteristics or physical and mental condition of the offender. They always took extenuating circumstances into account. Kaut (I. 4), differing from the view of the ācāryas that there is nothing like danda for bringing under one's complete control all beings, gives his own opinion that, as a king whose control and punishments are most severe makes the subjects disgusted with him and as the king who deals mild punishments is disregarded by the people, the king should distribute punishments according to the deserts of the offenders and would then command respect<sup>623</sup>. One reason why some of the works on dharmaśāstra prescribe mild punishments is the doctrine of karmavipāka (a man committing certain sins is born in the next life afflicted with certain diseases or bodily deficiencies or is born as a low or filthy beast or bird) Vide Manu XI 49-52, Yāj III 207-216, Visnu Dh. S 44-45. This doctrine will be dealt with later on under pātaka and prāyaścitta. Gaut. XII. 48 first provides that the king must take into account, when awarding punishment to the criminal, his physical or monetary circumstances, the nature of the crime, the fact of repetition of the crime and then adds that the king should award punishment after consulting an assembly of learned brāhmanas. The Dandaviveka (p. 36) quotes a verse in which the considerations that should weigh in awarding punishment are brought together viz. the offender's caste (as in Manu VIII 337-338 for theft), the value of the thing, the extent or measure (as in Manu VIII 320), use or usefulness of the thing with regard to which an offence is committed (as in Manu VIII 285), the person against whom an offence is committed (such as an idol or temple or king or brāhmana), age, ability (to pay).

qualities, time, place, the nature of the offence (whether it is repeated or is a first offence). The Rajatarangini (VIII 158) provides that in disputes where parties are in doubt as to their rights it is proper to award punishment with forbearance but where a man starts on an evil path of set purpose (the king and officers) must award severe punishment. In modern times there are controversies among several schools of criminology. Some hold that every man has freedom to act criminally or not or to act in the way he does and that each man has complete moral responsibility for his own acts. On the other hand there are some who go to the other extreme and propound that a so-called criminal act is mostly due to biological, physiological, pathological or sociological conditions, to the upbringing and environment of the person charged with crime. They favour determinism. The ancient Indian writers do not enter into these speculations. But when they said that regard must be paid to time and place and other considerations they were faintly conscious of or were groping towards the ideas of the 2nd school.

Fines are either fixed or not fixed (i. e. variable). They range from a kāṇi to the confiscation of all wealth; fixed fines were of three kinds called prathama sāhasa, madhyama sāhasa (middling amercement) and uttama sāhasa (highest). These are variously defined. According to Śankha-Likhita the first<sup>624</sup> amercement is fine from 24 panas to 91, the middling one is from 200 to 500 panas and the highest is from six hundred to 1000

There was great divergence of views about the metal in which the fines were to be paid. According to Vijñānesvara the figures of fines in such verses as Manu VIII. 378 (where no metal is specified) the panas are those of copper, while according to Bhāruci (quoted in S. V. p. 150) they are of gold. The S. V. remarks that local usage is to be followed. The V. Mayūka (p. 255) states that in all texts (about fines) the mention of a number without specifying the object to which it refers is to be deemed to refer to panas, that pana is a copper piece one karsa in weight and that karsa is one fourth of a pala. Br. (q. by Sm C. II p. 99) states that the tables in Manu (VIII 132-136) beginning with the dust particle in a heam and ending with kāśāpana is to be followed in ordeals and fines. An interesting sidelight is shed on crimes and their punishments in the Inscription of Cāṅkya Vikramāditya V (dated śaka 934) from Gadag which provides that the fines for abuse, assault, for drawing out a dagger, for stabbing and for adultery by a bachelor were respectively 2 panas, 12 panas, 3 gadyānas, 12 gadyānas and 3 gadyānas (vide E. I. vol. 20 p. 64.)

in proportion to the value of the matter in dispute or the injury caused. Manu VIII 138 (= Visnu Dh S. IV. 10) states that the first, middling and highest fines are respectively 250, 500 and 1000 panas, while Yāj I 366 puts these respectively at 270, 540 and 1080. The Mit explains that the lesser figures of Manu represent the fines to be awarded for offences committed without set purpose. Nār. (sāhasa, verses 7-8) prescribes that 100 panas is the lowest limit of fines for the lowest kind of sāhasa, 500 is the lowest for middling sāhasa, 1000 is the lowest fine in what is called the highest amercement (and might include death penalty, forfeiture of all property, banishment, branding and cutting off of a limb). Fines were supposed to be lesser than corporal punishment. Kāt (490-493) lays<sup>625</sup> down the following rules: Whatever figure of fine is prescribed in the smṛti texts for a wrong it is to be paid to the king in panas of copper or their equivalent. Where the fine is said to be one-fourth or one half of a māsa, there it is a golden māsa that is meant; when the fine is declared in māsas, they are to be understood as those of silver and where the fine is declared in kṛṣṇaśas the same is to be understood; a māsa is 1/100th of a kārṣāpana. The general rule that lesser punishment is to be inflicted on women is stated by Kāt. (487) 'In the case of all offences, women are to suffer half of the fine in money which is prescribed for a male offender (of the same kind) and when the punishment is death for a male, the punishment for a woman would be the excision of a limb.'<sup>626</sup> Kaut (III 3) provides, 'a woman attains ability to enter into transactions on completion of 12 years and men when they are 16; if they disobey after that (i.e. after attaining majority) the woman shall be fined twelve panas and a man twice that amount.'<sup>627</sup> Angiras quoted by the Mit (on Yāj,

(on the same verse) that a child less than five commits no crime nor sin by any act and is not to suffer any punishment nor to undergo a prāyaścitta<sup>629</sup>. Under the Indian Penal Code, sec. 82, nothing is an offence which is done by a child under seven years of age. The severity of punishment depended on caste also. In the case of theft, Gaut. XII 15-16, Manu VIII 338-39 prescribe that a vaiśya, a ksatriya and a brāhmaṇa should respectively be fined twice, four times and eight times of the fine to be imposed upon a sūdra for a theft, since each of these is deemed more and more aware of the heinousness of the crime. Kāt (485) and Vyāsa state this as a general rule for all offences<sup>630</sup>. In the case of abuse and defamation the scales are turned in favour of the higher castes as regards fines. Gaut. XII 1, 8-12, Manu VIII 267-268 (=Nār. pārusya 15-16), Yāj II 206-207 prescribe that a ksatriya or a vaiśya or a sūdra abusing or defaming a brāhmaṇa was to be respectively punished with the fine of 100 panas, 150 panas and with corporal punishment (cutting off the tongue), while a brāhmaṇa defaming a ksatriya, vaiśya or sūdra was to be fined 50, 25 or 12 panas respectively (nothing in the last case acc to Gaut. XII. 13). In the case of adultery and rape the difference in the punishment awarded. For adultery with a woman of the same caste Yāj II 286 prescribed the highest amercement, the middling one when the paramour was of a higher caste, but if the male be of a lower caste than the woman, the male offender was sentenced to death and the woman had her ears cut off. Corporal punishment assumes (as pointed out by the Dandaviveka p. 20) various forms according as it is meant to cause only harassment (pain) or is carried out by cutting off (or destroying) a limb or to cause death. Harassment or pain may be inflicted by imprisonment, beating, putting fetters, by making ridiculous (by the complete shaving of the head, declaring the offence by beat of drum in the presence of the convict, parading him through the streets on an ass) and marking him with signs indicative of offences like theft. Manu (VIII 125) provides that punishment may fall upon any one (or more) of ten places in the case of the three higher castes, viz. the private parts, the belly, the tongue (either whole or half), the hands, the feet, the eyes, the nose, the ears, wealth and the whole body; but a brāhmana shall depart unhurt from the country (i. e. he is to be only banished). Br. (SBE 33 p. 388 verses 9-10) speaks of fourteen places of punishment adding the neck, the thumb and index, the forehead, the lips, the hind part, hips, one half of the feet (to Manu's ten) and omitting wealth and the whole body therefrom. Gaut. XII. 43, Kaut. IV. 8, Manu (VIII 125, 380-381), Yāj. II. 270, Nār. (sāhasa, 9-10), Viṣṇu V. 1-8, Br. (SBE. vol 33 p. 388 verse 11), Vṛddha-Hārta VII. 191 prescribe that a brāhmana was not to be sentenced to death or corporal punishment for any offence whatever, but if he were guilty of an offence deserving the death penalty, he was to be punished by ordering his entire head to be shaved, he might be banished from the country (from the city acc. to Nār.), a mark appropriate to the grave sin committed by him might be branded on his forehead and he might be paraded on an ass.<sup>631</sup> Yama,<sup>632</sup> quoted by Sm. In these days of fasts as part of the technique of satyāgraha for redress of grievances or for justice pursued by Mahātmā Gāndhī and some of his ardent followers it is interesting to note that the widow of the murdered brāhmana referred to on p. 397 had been undergoing voluntary starvation (prāyopaveśa) for four days for securing punishment of her husband a murderer (who she believed was a wizard) and that the king himself being unable to prove the guilt of the accused began to starve himself and found proof by supernatural means (Rājataranginī IV 82-105).

the king to keep a brāhmana offender in confinement in a secret place and give him bare maintenance or the king may make him do the work of guarding cattle for a month or a fortnight or make him perform other work not fit for a decent brāhmana. The Mīt. on Yāj. II. 270 explains that the mark of female private parts for violating guru's bed, of a tavern for drinking the liquor called surā, a dog's foot for theft, of a headless corpse for brāhmana murder (as laid down by Manu IX. 237 and 240, Visnu Dh S. V. 4) is to be made on the forehead only if the offender (whether a brāhmana or not) did not perform prāyaścitta for those grave sins. Branding with marks appropriate to the crime committed were in vogue in Rome and in Britain up to 1699 (such as the mark of the letter M for murderers, T for thieves &c.). Vide Barnes' 'Story of punishment' p. 62. The Rājatarāṅgīni (IV. 96-106) refers to a case in the reign of king Candrāpīda of Kashmir when a brāhmana guilty of the murder of a brāhmana was exempted from death sentence because of the smṛti rule. Manu IX. 241 gives option that a brāhmana (unintentionally) guilty of grave offences may be punished with the middle amercement or he may be banished from the realm keeping all his wealth. The punishments for a brāhmana offender, according to Gaut. XII. 44, were preventing him from doing the same thing again, depriving him of all wealth, taking sureties from him, proclaiming him as a thief in the city banishment, putting on his forehead the mark indicative of his crime. Āp. Dh.S. (II. 10 27. 16-17)<sup>633</sup> lays down that a brāhmana guilty of murder, theft, forcible seizure of another's land was to have his eyes covered over with cloth for the whole of his life (while a śūdra guilty of any of the three was to receive the death sentence). Vṛddha-Hārīta (VII.209-210) says that a brāhmana should be branded on the body for all those offences that entailed corporal punishment for other offenders, that he should have his head shaved, that he should be deprived of all his property and banished from the realm. The force of popular feeling on the point of exempting a brāhmana offender from the death sentence was so great that Elphinstone (Governor of Bombay) in Regulation 14 of 1827, sec. IV (cl. 5) exempted brāhmanas and women from death sentence even for murder where public feeling would be shocked<sup>634</sup>. It is not to be supposed that this exemption of the brāhmana from the death sentence was unanimous or universal. Kāt. (806) contains this remarkable statement.<sup>635</sup> Even a brāhmana deserves to be killed if he be guilty of

The Sm C II p 124 relying on Manu IX 236 says that a brāhmana could be imprisoned but he could not be subjected to such corporal punishment as cutting off a limb or whipping. The Smritis openly regarded the brāhmaṇa's person as sacred and so saved his body. The smritis endeavoured to reach the ideal of the rule of law and succeeded to a great extent in doing so. They held that every man, whatever his rank or condition, was subject to the ordinary law of the realm and amenable to the jurisdiction of the ordinary tribunals. The only differential treatment that we find is in the appointment of judges (pp. 272-273), in the order of taking up causes of litigants (p 298), in the punishment for perjury (Manu VIII 123-124), in the matter of corporal punishment, in abuse, defamation and assault (pp 395-397), in punishment for adultery, in the repayment of debts and in the punishment for theft, which was severer for a brāhmana. It will be shown below that from the 13th century, as indicated by the Sm C, S. V. and Madanaratna, differential punishments had gone out of vogue. The smritis did not, like some modern freedom-loving people, declare the equality of all before the law on paper and in practice indulge in lynching. Further the smritis required all offenders of whatever caste to be brought before the same tribunals. Manu VIII. 335 and Yāj. I 358 emphasize that there is none who is exempt from punishment in the king's court whether the person be the king's father or teacher or friend or mother or wife or a son or a family priest or brother or father-in-law or maternal uncle. Sankha-Likhita and Kāt (481) no doubt say that a king should not punish his parents, his family priest, teacher, near relatives, forest hermits, ascetics. But, as the Sm C. II. p. 126 explains, the real meaning is not that the king is to allow these to escape scot-free, but that he should not inflict corporal punishments or fines on these, but should employ admonition or severe reproof towards them. The smritis do not contain rules like those in the Indian Criminal Pro. Code entitling Europeans and Americans in India to claim a jury preponderantly composed of their countrymen and claiming trial only by the High Court or like the privileges of the English Peers to be tried only by the House of Lords for felonies or the doctrine of the benefit of clergy abolished in 1827. Vide H. of Dh vol II. pp. 140-143 and 147-152 about certain privileges of brāhmanas.

causing abortion, if he be a thief (of gold) or if he kills a brāhmana woman with a sharp weapon or if he kills a chaste woman'. Kautilya (IV. 11) prescribes that a brāhmana who aims at the kingdom or who forces entrance into the king's harem or who incites wild tribes or enemies (against his king) or who foment disaffection (or rebellion) in forts, the country or the army should be sentenced to death by drowning.<sup>636</sup> The fact that Cārudatta, a brāhmana, is represented as having been condemned to death by king Pālaka in the Mrcchakatika indicates that the sentence of death against brāhmanas was not entirely unheard of. It appears from Fick's 'Social organisation' &c p. 212 that in many Jātaka passages the execution of brāhmanas is referred to.

The Śāntiparva chap. 268 contains an interesting dialogue between king Dyumatsena and his son prince Satyavat on the subject of the punishment of death, which contains some of the arguments forcibly urged in these days by those that are opposed to capital punishment altogether. The prince pleads that punishment should be light even for grave offences, that when the sentence of death is carried out in the case of robbers,<sup>636a</sup> several innocent persons (such as the wife, the mother, the son of the condemned man) suffer great loss (and they may die also), that if offenders give themselves up to priests, swear before them that they will never commit sin, they may be let off after undergoing penance, that if great men go astray their punishment should be proportionate to their greatness. The king replies that in former ages when people were most truthful, soft-hearted, and not hot-tempered the punishment of saying 'fie on you' sufficed, then vocal remonstrances and upbraidings sufficed, but in the later ages (of Kali) corporal punishment and death sentence have to be resorted to and that some people are not deterred even by the fear of death sentence.

A few remarks will be made on each of the several modes of punishment. The sentence of death was, acc. to Kām XIV. 16, Śūkra IV. 1 93, to be avoided even in the gravest offences except for the offence of subverting the state.<sup>637</sup> Visnu Dh. S. V. 1 provides that all persons except brāhmanas guilty of the mahāpātakas may be sentenced to death. But Manu IX. 236 says that this extreme penalty was to be awarded only if they performed no prāyaścitta. Kaut (IV. 11) prescribes death sentence for causing the death of any one with a sharp weapon. Vṛddha-Hārta (VII 190) prescribes it for incendiaries, poisoners, murderers, robbers, bad characters, rogues and those guilty of grave sins. The death sentence was carried out in various ways such as by giving poison or by trampling at the feet of an elephant, or by a sharp weapon (like a sword), by being burnt or drowned<sup>638</sup>. Impalement was a punishment prescribed by Manu IX. 276 for thieves guilty of housebreaking by night (after first cutting off their hands), by Yāj II. 273 for those who made another a captive or stole horses and elephants or killed another by the use of force and by Vṛddha-Hārta VII. 202 for the murderer of a brāhmana or for one who killed a woman, a child or a cow. Death sentence by being trampled under the feet of an elephant continued up to the times of the Marathas. The Daśakumāracarita 4th Ucchvāsa shows that a thief could be trampled upon by an elephant by way of punishment. Vide 'Selections from Peshwa's Daftar' (edited by Mr. G. S. Sardesai) vol. 43 No. 143 p 114 (dated 7-9-1775 A. D.), where out of seven dacoits of the Berad caste two were ordered to be trampled to death at the feet of an elephant<sup>639</sup> and five were ordered to be simply beheaded. Death sentence is said by the Daṇḍaviveka (p. 20) to be simple suddha, which is of two kinds, avacitra when the offender is beheaded (with a sword), and citra or vacitra (when the offender is impaled or burnt) and it is miśra (when his hands or feet or other limbs are cut off and then he is killed)<sup>640</sup>. is prescribed by Manu IX. 271 for those who abet thieves by giving them subsistence, instruments of house-breaking or asylum. If a man of a low caste had sexual intercourse with a woman of a higher caste (with or without her consent) or kidnapped a maiden he was to be sentenced to death (Manu VIII. 366, Yaj. II. 286-288, 294) Vas. XXI. 1-5 prescribed for a śūdra, vaiśya or ksatriya guilty of adultery with a brāhmana woman the horrible punishment of being burnt to death after being respectively covered with viṇāṇa grass, with red darbhās and śara leaves respectively and similar punishment for a śūdra paramour of a ksatriya or vaiśya woman and for a vaiśya paramour of a ksatriya woman. The consenting woman (adulteress) was, acc. to Vas. XXI. 1-3, to be shaved, to have her head anointed with clarified butter and to be paraded naked on an ass and left to die on the Great Journey, while, acc. to Gaut. XXIII. 14 and Manu VIII. 371, an adulteress, vain of her charms or the wealth of her parents, was to be openly devoured by dogs, if her paramour was a man of lower caste. Śāṅkha<sup>641</sup> prescribes this punishment (of being devoured by dogs) for a woman's paramour of a lower caste and for the erring woman death by burning. Vṛddha-Harita VII. 192 prescribes that in the case of a woman who is a confirmed adulteress, or who destroys her foetus, her husband should have her ears, nose and lips cut off and then she should be banished and verses 220-221 prescribe death by being burnt with grass (kaṭāgni) for those guilty of incest. These severe penalties for adultery were very much relaxed and softened by later smṛti writers as is shown in H. of Dh. vol II. pp. 571-573. A man who made a breach in the embankment of a lake or tank (and thereby caused it to become dry) may be sentenced to death by drowning (Manu IX. 279) or a woman who was extremely wicked (such as one who killed her own child in the womb) or who murdered a man or who destroyed the embankments of a tank may have a stone tied round her neck and be drowned, provided she be not pregnant at the time of the sentence (Yaj. II. 278). Yaj. II. 279 (= Matsyapurāṇa 227. 200) prescribes death by being gored by the horns of bulls (after the nose, lips, ears and hands are cut off) for a woman who is guilty of poisoning (the food or drink of another) or who is guilty of incendiarism or who kills her husband, elders or her own child (provided she is not pregnant)<sup>642</sup>. Yāj II 282 provides death by being burnt with the fire of straw for those who set fire to growing crops, houses, forests, village, pastures and threshing floors or who approach the queen Nār. (pārusya, verse 31) prescribes that one who strikes with a weapon the king, even though the latter be at fault, should be impaled and roasted in fire. These examples are enough to convey an idea of the crimes for which the sentence of death was provided in some of the ancient smrtis. Manu VIII 272, Nār (pārusya 24), Visnu Dh. S. V. 24 prescribe the pouring of boiling oil in the mouth and ears of a śūdra who through insolence tries to expound dharma to brāhmanas. Cutting off limbs as a punishment (particularly hands and feet or fingers) was common in the case of thieves, pickpockets and cut-purses (Manu IX. 276-277, Nār., parīśista verse 32, Yāj II 274). Excision of the tongue was the sentence when a śūdra abused a brāhmana or a ksatriya by falsely charging him with some grave sin (Āp. Dh. S. II. 10. 27. 14, Manu VIII. 270, Nārada, pārusya 22), when a śūdra loudly repeated the Veda along with twice-born persons (Gaut XII. 4), when a person abused the king (Nār., pārusya 30), when a person repeatedly proclaimed what was disliked by the king or divulged the secret policy of the king (Yāj. II. 302). Excision of the male organ was prescribed for a śūdra who sexually approached a woman of the three higher varnas (Gaut XII. 2), for any one guilty of the rape of another's wife (Vṛddha-Hārta VII. 201 and also confiscation of all property), for any one guilty of incest or intercourse with mother, mother's sister, paternal aunt, sister, 642 The general rule was that women were not to be killed on any account. Vide H of Dh. vol II, pp. 575, 593-94. Certain offences were exceptions. Even as to them Vas. XXI. 10 and Yāj I. 72 suggest another and very mild alternative viz abandonment (tyāga), when a woman conceives from intercourse with a man of lower varna or when a woman was guilty of killing her husband or foetus. Acc to the Mit on Yāj III 268 the king appears to have had to undergo some expiation for ordering the death of a guilty woman. In the 18th century the famous judge of the Peshwa's court, Rāmāstrī Prabhū, ordered a woman guilty of a brāhmana's murder to undergo only the expiation of circumambulating the holy shrine and hill of Tryambakeśvara near Nasik ('Selections from Peshwa's Daftar', vol. 43 No 156 pp. 121-122) Under sec 382 of the Indian Criminal Procedure Code 'if a woman sentenced to death is found to be pregnant, the High Court shall order the execution of the sentence to be postponed and may, if it thinks fit, commute the sentence to transportation for life'.

the wife of an uncle, friend or pupil, daughter, daughter-in-law, teacher's wife, a woman come for refuge, the queen, an ascetic woman, a wet-nurse and any chaste woman or a woman of a higher varna (Nār., śrīpumsayoga 73-75) The nose, the ears and the hands were cut off in the case of an offender guilty of selling false gold or forbidden flesh such as that of a dog (Yaj. II. 297). For branding, vide Gaut. XII. 44, Baud. Dh. S. I. 10. 19, Nār. (śābasa 10), Manu XI 237 (= Matsya 227. 16), Visnu Dh. S. V. 3-7. The Dandaviveka (p. 47) states that branding was to be resorted to if the proper penance was not performed and if the offence was intentional. Yaj II. 202 provides branding for a gambler using false dice and (II. 294) for persons of the three higher varnas having intercourse with a very low caste woman and Dakṣa VII 33 prescribes it for an ascetic giving up his duties. The Rājataranginī mentions (VI. 108-112) that king Yaśaskara (939-948 A. D.) of Kashmir branded on a brāhmana's forehead the mark of dog's foot. Keśavapandita in his Dandanīti-prakarana (p. 6) quotes the author of the Vaijayanti (Nanda-pandita) to the effect that the making of marks was to be effected with the juice of the marking nut in the case of brāhmanas and with a red-hot iron śalākā in the case of others. In England about a hundred years ago branding for desertion from the army was practised. Manu VIII. 370 prescribes the shaving of the head as a punishment for a woman who pollutes a maiden, Nār. (śābasa 10) prescribes it for a brāhmana who is not sentenced to death on account of his caste, Śankha-Likhita (q. by Aparārka p. 807) for one who abuses officers, brāhmanas and elders. Megasthenes (Fragment XXVII. p. 72) notes 'If one is guilty of a very heinous offence the king orders his hair to be cropped, this being a punishment to the last degree infamous'. Imprisonment for life is prescribed by Visnu V. 71 for striking out both eyes of a man and by Śukra IV. 1. 88 (for repeating an offence more than three times) For imprisonment with labour, vide Śukra IV. 1. 92 and 108-109. Flogging was prescribed<sup>643</sup> by Vishnu Dh. S. V. 105 for a woman.

643. The punishment of whipping is allowed in England for several offences; vide 'Laws of England' (ed. by Lord Halsam, vol. IX, pp. 229-230). In India under the Prisons Act (IX of 1894) by section 46 whipping is allowed for certain prison offences and under the Whipping Act (IV of 1909) whipping is awarded for certain offences such as theft, house-breaking, dacoity, rape and for juvenile offenders. In modern times many persons interested in criminology and penology condemn most strongly the sentences of death and whipping. परतन्वास्तु ये केचिद् दासत्वे ये च संनिषदा । अनीयास्ते तु निदिष्टास्तेषां दण्डस्तु ताडनम् ॥ श्रीपालेन्मसहृद्भाना दृष्टिणा तु रोमिणाम् । शिफादिलरज्जवाद्यैर्विद्वह्यान्धपातितम् ॥ कात्या. q. 11 त्व. ति. pp. 531-532.

in her monthly course touching intentionally members of the higher castes. It was also prescribed for offenders who were slaves or who were dependents and for women, minors, lunatics, old men, poor men and those suffering from diseases (Kāt). The punishment of banishment was prescribed for brāhmanas guilty of the gravest offences meriting death sentence (Gaut XII. 44, Manu IX. 241, VIII. 380, Visnu Dh S V. 3 and 8, Baud Dh. S. I. 10, 19, Yāj. II. 270). It was often associated with branding. Banishment is also prescribed by Yāj I 339 for officers taking bribes (and also confiscation of all wealth), for a perjured brāhmana witness (Yāj II. 81), for one who embezzles the money of a corporation or transgresses the conventions agreed upon by a guild or village &c (Yāj. II. 187, Manu VIII. 219, Visnu Dh S. V. 167-168), for playing with false dice (Yāj. II. 202 and Nār., dyūtasamāhvaya 6), for a brāhmana guilty of very heinous offences<sup>644</sup> (Śānti 14 116) Śukra (IV. 1. 98-108) contains a long list of offenders that deserve to be sentenced to banishment. Confiscation of all property was the punishment for several offences such as the commission of the mahāpātakas by persons other than brāhmanas, provided they committed them unintentionally (Manu IX. 242), for perjury, for taking bribes by sabhyas (Visnu Dh. S V. 179-180) Nār (prakṛnaka 10-11) provides a humane rule that even when the king orders the confiscation of all the property of an offender he should not deprive the offender of the tools of his trade or the tools of his craft, such as arms in the case of a soldier, materials of art in the case of artisans, ornaments of courtezans, musical instruments of musicians Śāṅkha-Likhita<sup>645</sup> quoted by V. offence (though a first offender may be let off with a mere admonition). Kaut. IV. 10 states that when a person is a first offender as to theft at a holy place or as a pickpocket or house-breaking from the roof, his thumb and index finger may be cut off or he may be fined 54 panas, for a second offence all fingers may be cut or a fine of 100 panas may be levied; for a third offence the punishment is cutting of the right hand or a fine of 400 panas and for the fourth death in any way the king may direct Manu IX. 277, Yāj II. 274, Visnu Dh. S. V. 136 contain a similar rule Vide Āp Dh. S. II. 10. 27. 11-13 for adultery. If several people conspire together and kill or injure a single man the punishment was to be double of what a single man committing the same offence would receive (Kaut. III. 19, Yāj. II. 221, Visnu Dh. S. V. 73). As indicative of the superstitions of ancient (and even modern) times punishment for witchcraft may be mentioned. Kaut. IV. 4 prescribes<sup>646</sup> the employment of spies to find out those who profess to use charms for securing illicit love and banish them and adds that persons who are engaged in witchcraft to injure others may be similarly dealt with. In the times of the Peshwas wizards<sup>647</sup> and raisers of ghosts appear to have been frequent and were severely dealt with by the people themselves by being put to death, but the State generally confiscated the property or cut off the alleged wizard's finger. Up to the beginning of the 18th century even in England wretched old women were frequently convicted as witches and hanged<sup>648</sup>

Manu IX. 290 (=Matsya 227. 183) prescribes the very mild punishment of the fine of 200 panas for all incantations intended to destroy life, for magic rites and various kinds of raising ghosts and goblins. Medhātithi and Kullūka say that if the magic rites are successful the punishment would be that for murder. Br. (S B E. vol. 33 p. 361 verse 16) provides banishment for those who practise incantations with roots.

Kaut. in II 5 prescribes<sup>649</sup> that a jail should be constructed in the capital provided with separate accommodation for men and women kept apart and well guarded at the entrances. He further provides<sup>650</sup> that among the duties of the nāgaraka is to let out of the jail on the day of the festival of the birth constellation of the king and on the full moon day (of every month) such persons as are young, very old, suffering from diseases and helpless, or those who are charitably disposed may pay the fines or others bind themselves by an agreement to pay in cash the fines for the offences for which the prisoners are jailed (and then the prisoners may be released). The persons jailed may be set free on their working every day or once in five days or by undergoing corporal punishment (whipping &c.), paying fines in cash. Prisoners may be released from jail (as a favour) on the conquest of fresh territory or on the coronation of the Crown Prince or on the birth of a son to the king. In the Delhi Topra Pillar Edict No. IV (Corpus I I vol. I p. 123 and E. I. vol. II, pp. 253-54) Emperor Aśoka promulgates that he gives three days' respite to prisoners on whom judgment has been passed and who have been condemned to death and in the 5th Pillar Edict of Delhi Topra (Corpus I I vol. I p. 126-128 and E. I. vol. II, pp. 258-259) he says that he let off prisoners 25 times in 26 years (which is in conformity with Kautilya's dictum cited above). In the first separate Edicts at Dhauli Aśoka addresses his officers of justice in the capital (Nagaravyāvahārikāh) that they should so act that even a single person should not unnecessarily suffer imprisonment or pain. In spite of this if we are to believe Yuan Chwang, Aśoka in his early career was most cruel and had constructed a jail that was called Hell-prison of Āśoka (vide Watters, vol. II. pp. 88-90). Manu IX 288 requires that all jails should be so built as to abut on the royal road where the offenders suffering pain and in bad condition would be seen by all (in order to deter others from committing offences). The Śilappadikāram, one of the earliest works in Tamil, mentions the release of prisoners on the king's birthday and at the founding of a temple (pp. 38-39 of Mr Dikshitar's translation). Kālidāsa in the Mālavikāgnimitra<sup>651</sup> (Act IV) makes the Vidūsaka report to the king, 'the astrologers think that, as the constellation on which Your Majesty was born is in evil aspect now, let all prisoners be released'. Kālidāsa (in Raghu 17.19) alludes to the release of prisoners and the commutation of death sentences at the time of the coronation of king Atithi. The Brhat-Samhitā (47-81) states that when the king takes the Pusyaśnāna (ceremonial bath on the day on which the moon is in conjunction with the Pusya constellation in the month of Pausa or every month) he may order release except as to those prisoners who were convicted for offences connected with his own person or with the harem.<sup>652</sup> In the Mṛcchakatika (Act X) also various occasions for the release of prisoners are mentioned by the executioner. The Harsacarita<sup>653</sup> (II. 2nd para) refers to the usage of releasing prisoners at the time of a coronation and on the birth of Harsa (IV. ). The prisoners are described in the latter passage as having long beards and as darkened by the accumulation of dirt on their bodies.

Manu IX. 243 enjoins upon the king not to appropriate to himself the property of a man guilty of the mahāpātakas (by way of fine or confiscation) and warns that if he takes it out of greed he is tainted by the guilt of the offender. Manu (IX. 244-45) recommends that such fine may be cast into water as an offering to Varuna (the Lord of waters) who wields sceptre even over kings or may be bestowed on learned and virtuous brāhmanas, that are lords of the whole world Mamu (IX. 246-247) further states that in the country where the king avoids taking the property of very wicked sinners men become long-lived, crops spring up, there is no infant mortality &c.

Generally no one was allowed to take the law into his own hands except as to recovery of debts (which will be discussed below). But Nār. (pārusya<sup>654</sup> 11-14) contains the following remarkable passage: 'If a śvapāka, a meda, a caṇḍāla, one devoid of a limb, one gaining livelihood by killing animals, an elephant driver, vrātya (i. e. deprived of caste for non-performance of upanayana), a slave, one who disregards his elders or spiritual teacher—if these should transgress the limits they must observe towards their superiors, they should be punished then and there by the person offended and the person so doing is not regarded as committing an offence (equal to theft) Should any such low person insult another (who is his superior) that man himself shall punish him and the king has nothing to do with the punishment. These people are like the refuse (dregs) of humanity and their property also is impure. The king is entitled to inflict bodily punishment (whipping), but he should not inflict fines on them'. The Mit. on Yaj. II. 270 quotes a text of Vṛddha-Manu of similar import and explains that the words 'the king should avoid taking fines' refer to cases of grave offences<sup>655</sup>.

Something must be said about the law of Limitation. In the smṛtis and digests rules of Limitation play very little part for several reasons. As on spiritual grounds, which will be set out under the title of mnādāna, not only the debtor, but also his sons, grandsons and great-grandsons were liable to pay a debt (Mit. on Yaj. II. 50), there was no scope at all for prescribing any period of limitation so far as recovery of debts was concerned. Unpaid purchase money was treated as a debt. In other matters also the smṛtis and dharmaśāstras, under the influence of religious and other-worldly considerations always lean against allowing mere lapse of time to prevent a man from asserting his just rights. But rarely there were writers who were more secular and laid down periods of limitation. For example, Kaundinya<sup>656</sup> (quoted in V. Mātrakā p. 341) holds that a debt not claimed for ten years cannot be recovered except when the creditor was a minor or very old or was a woman or was suffering from disease or there was confusion due to invasion or (the creditor or debtor) had left the country. Some important rules on the law of Limitation are set out here in one place:

1. Manu VIII. 148, Yāj II. 24, Gaut. XII. 35, Vas 16. 17, Nār. IV. 79 and others state that enjoyment of immovable property in the presence of the real owner without protest from him causes loss of ownership and ten years' enjoyment of movables under similar circumstances leads to the same result. There are various views on the subject which have already been indicated above (on pp. 322-325).
2. An exception to the above rule is stated to be that no limitation applies to pledges boundaries, deposits, and to the property of minors, idiots, the State, women and brāhmanas learned in the Vedas. Vide Gaut. XII. 35-36, Vas. 16. 18, Manu VIII. 149, Yāj II. 25, Nār. IV. 81, Br. (S. B. E. vol. 33 p. 312 verse 21).
3. As the rules about deposit are extended by Nār. (upanidhi verse 14) to articles borrowed or given to artisans for being worked, and to anvāhita, nyāsa and pratinyāsa, in the case of these also there would be ordinarily no bar of limitation. Vide Manu VIII. 145-146, Yāj II. 58, Visnu Dh. S. VI. 7-8. Here also there are dicta to the contrary. Marici (q. in Sm C II. p. 69 quoted above on p. 326) says that cows, beasts of burden, ornaments and the like borrowed in a friendly way would have to be returned (at the latest) in four or five years, otherwise they are lost. Acc. to Vyāsa<sup>657</sup> this rule would not apply to what is lent to

In the preceding pages we have passed in review the law of judicial procedure, evidence and limitation A careful perusal will convince any unbiassed reader that the Dharmasāstras evolved during the course of centuries an indigenous system of judicial procedure of a high order Nārada, Brhaspati and Kātyāyana represent the high water mark of ancient Indian adjective law These writers flourished before 600 A. D and the first two of them are probably older by several centuries than that date They present an orderly system providing for the appointment and duties of judges, proper pleadings, the law of evidence and limitation, decrees and their execution, crimes and punishments. This system compares most favourably with any system of judicial procedure prevalent anywhere in the West up to the 18th century A. D.

CHAPTER XVI

CONTRACTS

There are only three titles of law, viz. recovery of debts, the relation of husband and wife (stripuṃsavyoga) and partition of wealth (dāyabhāga) that are of importance to modern Hindus, since to a very large extent they are even now governed in these matters by the ancient Hindu Law as interpreted by the commentators. These three topics therefore have to be described in detail while other titles will not and cannot be allowed to occupy much space. In almost all smrtis and digests of Hindu Law rnādāna (recovery of debts) is treated of first. Therefore here also that subject will be taken up first. A good deal of the matter falling under the title of the relation of husband and wife has already been dealt with in the 2nd volume of the History of Dharmaśāstra pp. 427-636. The topic of dāyabhāga will be dealt with last of all, the other topics being taken up in the same order as in Manu. Many of the vyavahārapadas are concerned with the law of contracts in various aspects, viz. the contract of debt, of pledge or mortgage, of bailments, of sale, of partnership, of hire and service.

Our writers do not set out with an analysis of the conception of contract in general. They had before them the ancient 18 titles of law, many of which related to various kinds of contracts and therefore they take up one title after another, in the order contained in Manu or in Nārada (as the Sm. C II. p. 206 expressly says). But it is not to be supposed that they did not evolve certain general principles about contracts. They do say a good deal about the competence of persons to enter into contracts, about fraud vitiating all contracts, about damages for breach of contract &c. Similarly the dharmaśāstras do not lay down a general Code of rules applicable to all transfers of immovable property, nor do they treat of transfers by way of sale, mortgage or gift in separate sections. What they have to say on these transfers is tacked on to some vyavahārapada e. g. they speak about sales and exchanges of land under asvāmi-vikraya and simāvivāda, about gifts under dattapradānika and about mortgages under rnādāna. As this work has to represent what the ancient law was like the same arrangement has been followed here. Similarly the law of crimes is not to be found in one place. It is scattered under different titles of law such as vākpārusya, dandapārusya, sāhasa, strisangrahana and steya; nor is there a complete analysis of intention or motive or of the right of private defence, although all these subjects are briefly dealt with in the smṛtis in different places

A great deal has been said by ancient writers about what persons are competent to enter into transactions (vyavahāra). The Arthasāstra ( in III. 1 )<sup>661</sup> has a lengthy disquisition on it. Briefly, it holds that dependent persons, minors, extremely old people, those charged with grave sins, sannyāsins, persons who are devoid of a limb and those who are addicted to vices (like drinking and whoring) are incompetent and agreements made with such people are invalid. Among dependent people Kautilya mentions a son when the father is alive (and manages the affairs), a father when he has a son (who manages the family affairs), a brother who has left the family, a younger brother whose share has not been separated, a woman whose husband or son is alive, a slave or a hired servant. He states that these may enter into binding agreements if those on whom they are dependent authorize them to do so. He further says that contracts made by persons that are at the time of making them intoxicated or are under the influence of wrath or are distressed or are of unsound mind or under duress (imprisoned or confined) are invalid. Yāj ( II 31-32 ) concisely puts down the same propositions by saying that all transactions brought about by force or fraud should be declared (by the king) to be unenforceable, so also those entered into by women or the other persons specified above or entered into at night, or in the interior of the house or outside the town or village (in a forest &c.) or with one's enemy or by persons unconnected with or unauthorized by the persons who are to be bound by them<sup>662</sup> Manu ( VIII 165 and 168 ) also declares that all transactions (such as sale, mortgage, gift) brought about by force or fraud are

662. It should be noted that the rules of Kaut and Yāj are in remarkable agreement with sections 11 to 19 of the Indian Contract Act ( IX of 1872 )

null and void. Nār. IV. 26-42 treat this subject<sup>663</sup> exhaustively. Some of Nārada's dicta are interesting. He says: 'in this world three are independent viz. the king, the Vedic teacher and the head of the house in his own house (32). Wives, sons and slaves are not independent; the head of the house has independent power as to what belongs to him by inheritance (34).' Kāt. (497) also prescribes that one should not give a loan to women, minors or slaves. When the texts say that women are incompetent to make contracts, what is meant is that they cannot make contracts binding on their husbands or family or against the family property. Women are not inherently incompetent to deal with their own separate property except that the husband has some control (these matters will be discussed at length later on under stridhana). Another proposition laid down by Yaj II 23, Nār. IV. 97, Kāt. (517) and others<sup>664</sup> is that in all transactions relating to a debt or any other title of law the last act is the deciding factor; but in the cases of gift, pledge or purchase each prior transaction (of gift &c.) is of superior efficacy to the succeeding one.<sup>665</sup>

After the establishment of British rule in India during about 150 years numerous publications dealing with Hindu customs and usages and the Hindu law of debts, contracts, adoption, family rights, partition and inheritance have been published. It is impossible to give an exhaustive list of these nor is it necessary to do so. Most of them have now only an academic or historic interest. But a few of them must be mentioned for their worth, for purposes of study and for a knowledge of the modern Hindu Law as administered by the British Indian courts. They are: Bannerjee's 'Hindu Law of Marriage and stridhan'

663 The Vyavahāramātrikā p 288 quotes five verses as from Kaundinya which are almost the same as Nārada IV. 29, 30, 39, 34, 40 respectively. The learned editor does not notice this

665. For example, if A establishes that he lent a sum to B but if the latter establishes that he repaid the amount, this later fact of repayment is decisive of the dispute if A files a suit for recovery of the money. If A mortgages a field to B for a loan and then mortgages the same field to C, the mortgage of B, being prior is superior to that made in favour of C. The same principle is laid down in section 48 of the Transfer of Property Act (1V of 1882).

The idea of the liability to pay off one's debts was developed in India in the most ancient times. In Rg VIII. 47. 17<sup>666</sup> the poet exclaims 'Let us drive away the evil effects of bad dreams as we pay off debts'. In Rg X 34. 10 (the gambler's lament) it is stated that the gambler, because he owes a (gambling) debt, is afraid and approaches the houses of others at night, desiring wealth<sup>667</sup>. This indicates that a debtor was afraid of being detained by his creditor in those days. Rg. VIII. 66. 10 indicates that money-lenders made a stipulation to receive double of what they lent, 'Indra strikes by his power all panis who make representations of taking double'.<sup>668</sup> The Ait Br 33 1 (nam-asman san-nayati)<sup>669</sup> employs the very verb 'san-nayati' which occurs in Rg. VIII. 47. 17. The Atharvaveda VI 117. 3 and Tai Br III 7. 9. 8 contain the same verse about a man being free from the obligations of this world, the next world (of pitrs) and the third world (the world of gods).<sup>670</sup> The Tai. S. (III. 3. 8. 1-2) uses the very word 'kusida', which occurs<sup>671</sup> in the Dharmasūtras and smrtis (for money-lending) when it says, 'O Agni! whatever debt has not been paid back by me, the tribute that I owe to Yama, here do I make return of it; may I be freed from that debt!'. The Śat. Br. XIII. 4. 3. 11 associates kusidin with black magic in the Pāriplava. The Nirukta (VI. 32) while commenting on Rg. III. 53. 14 explains the word 'Pramaganda' occurring therein as 'one who is born of a family that is extremely usurious'.<sup>672</sup> Pānini employs the technical word 'uttamarna' (creditor) in his sūtra 'dhārer-uttamarnaḥ' (I. 4. 35), he speaks of 'ādhamarnya' (the position of a debtor) in II. 3. 70 and the word 'pratibhū' occurs in Pānini II. 3. 39, the word 'vrdhhi' (interest) in V. 1. 47. Pānini (IV. 4. 31) derives the words 'kusidika' and 'kusidākin' It is noteworthy that Pānini does not derive or mention the word vārdhika, which is employed by even Āp. Dh. S and Baud. Dh. S and which is derived by Kātyāyana (the grammarian) in Vārtika 3 on Pānini IV. 4. 30, in which Pānini refers to such words as 'dvaigunika' or 'traigunika' which were applied to people that carried on the condemned methods of money-lending viz. extorting twofold or threefold of the money lent (the sūtra is 'prayacchati garhyam'). Brahmanaspati is spoken of as 'one who recovers a debt (nam-ādudh) in Rg. II. 24. 13 and the Ādityas as those 'who, themselves being the observers of ṛta (the universal Law of Right), collect<sup>673</sup> debts' (Rg. II. 27. 4) In Rg. VIII. 32. 16 it is said that those priests who extract (and offer) Soma juice do not indeed owe a debt (to the gods) Divodāsa is said in Rg. VI. 61. 1 to have been the gift of Sarasvatī to Vadhyaśva as a son to pay off debts (macnyutam).<sup>674</sup> These passages certainly establish that in the remote ages of the

Rgveda it was a firm belief that men were under obligations to gods and pitrs, which could be fulfilled only by worship (yajña) and by the birth of a son. These passages contain the germ of the doctrine of the three religious and spiritual debts that a man owed to gods, Manas (pitrs) and sages, which he paid off by sacrifices, by the birth of a son and by vedic study (vide Tai. S VI 3 10.5, Śat. Br. I 7. 2. 11 and Ait. Br. 33. 1 quoted in H. of D. vol II. pp.270, 560 notes 621 and 1302 and above n 669). Gradually further universal obligations came to be added to this theory of spiritual debts. The Ādiparva (120. 17-20) holds that men owe four debts, viz the three vedic ones and the fourth to humanity in general (which is paid back by goodness to all) and Anusāsana 37. 17 raises them to five (adding brāhmanas and guests to the well-known three)<sup>675</sup>. It appears to me that this theory of spiritual debts being already in the air, the same sanctity came gradually to be transferred to one's promises to repay monetary debts and carry out other secular engagements. The word ṛna had been applied both to spiritual and secular debts. It is on account of this that the son was not only desired for repaying the spiritual debt owed to one's ancestors, but he was also expected to free his father (if the father could not himself repay the monetary debt) from the liability he incurred to his creditor. Nār. IV. 5-9 puts this clearly and most emphatically: "fathers desire to have sons for their own benefit thinking in their heart 'he will release me from liability to creditors and debtors' (or probably 'from high or low debts' i. e. spiritual and earthly debts). Three deceased (ancestors) must be honoured (by a man) and he must subsist on three (descendants) that come after him. These (the first three) series of ancestors rely (for repayment) of their twofold debts (spiritual and secular) on the fourth in descent. If a man fails to pay on demand a debt or promised gift that sum (by the addition of interest) goes on growing till it amounts to a hundred crores and when a hundred crores are reached he is born again and again in the house of his creditor as a slave in order to repay the debt (by his labour). If an ascetic or a brāhmana perpetually keeping the sacred fire (agnihotra) dies without discharging his debts, the whole merit due to his austerities and the perpetual tending of fire belongs to his creditors".<sup>676</sup> Kāt. (551, 591) expresses the same idea but adds that a debtor who has not repaid money borrowed may be born as a slave, a servant, a woman or a beast in the house of his creditor. It was this belief that led to the doctrine of the pious obligation of the son to pay off his father's debts even if he received no property from the father.<sup>677</sup>

Nārada IV. 98 defines 'kusīda' in a rather obscure verse as 'the receiving of money paid in consequence of the original (amount advanced) and the profit (agreed to be paid) thereon and those are called kusīdā who maintain themselves by this occupation'. Brhaspati (S. B. E. 33 p. 320 verse 2) derives<sup>678</sup> kusīda as 'that is called kusīda, which is taken fourfold or (even) eightfold without any qualm (by a person) from a wretched man who is sinking (or distressed)'. Nār IV. 110 defines vārdhusa as the interest (in kind) on grain,<sup>678a</sup> but Āp. Dh. S. I. 6. 18. 22 and Baud. Dh. S. employ the word 'vārdhusika' and Āp. Dh. S. I. 9. 27. 10 has a verse in which the word vrdhu occurs. Vas (II. 41-42 = Baud. Dh. S. I. 5. 93-94) quotes his three descendants for the pinda (they offer). Upajīvyā does not mean

two verses: 'a vārdhusika (usurer) is one who taking cheap grain lends it on condition of receiving a quantity of grain of high price and is condemned among the brahmanavādins (students of the veda) Brāhmana murder and usury were weighed in a balance; the murderer of a brāhmana rose to the top while the usurer trembled'. Here usury of the type of the one described in Vas. II 41 (and not all lending of money at interest) is condemned as a great sin Gaut. XII 26, Vas II 50, Kaut III 11, Manu VIII 140-141 and others declare it righteous (dharma) moneylending when an 80th part is stipulated as the interest per month.<sup>679</sup>

Megasthenes (fragment XXVII B p. 72) states: 'The Indians neither put out money at usury nor know how to borrow,' but he is under some misapprehension, for he again says (p 73) 'one who is unable to recover a loan or deposit has no remedy at law. All the creditor can do is to blame himself for trusting a rogue'.

Nār. IV. 1 states that the principal topics under the title of ṛṇādāna are seven - what debts must be paid and what not; by whom, where and in what manner (they are to be paid); and the rules about advancing the loan and receiving it back. The first five of these relate to the debtor and the last two to the creditor. Brhaspati (S. B. E. 33 p. 320 v 4) says that interest (vrddhi) is described to be of four kinds by some, of five kinds by others and of six kinds by still others. Nār. (IV 102-104) names four kinds and defines them, viz kāṇṇā (interest that is stipulated by the debtor himself), kāṇṇā (interest accruing and payable every month), kāṇṇā (interest of a pana or quarter, pana to be paid every day without the principal being liable to be reduced, whatever interest may have been recovered), akāṇṇā (interest on interest called compound interest). Manu VIII 153 mentions these four and commentators thereon give varying interpretations. Brhaspati (S. B. E. 33 p 321 verse 6) and Vyāsa (q by Sm C II p 154) define kāṇṇā as interest received from the body i. e. milk received from a cow pledged or the work put in by a slave or by a bull pledged. Br (S. B. E. vol 33 p 321 verses 7-8)

adds two more varieties viz. śikhāvṛddhi<sup>680</sup> (hair-like interest i. e. interest payable every day and so growing every day, just as the top-knot on one's head grows every day) and bhogalābha (profit by enjoyment i. e. making use of a house or taking the produce of a field in lieu of interest in the case of a mortgage). Gaut. (XII. 31-32) mentions the six, but instead of bhogalābha he uses the word 'ādhabhoga', which is defined by Kāt. (501) as a transaction in which the complete enjoyment of the thing pledged or mortgaged is to be the interest Kāt. (498-500) defines kāritā, śikhāvṛddhi and bhogalābha

Br. (S B E 33 p. 319 verse 1) states<sup>681</sup> that the creditor should always advance a loan after taking an adequate pledge or a deposit (with a mutual friend) or a reliable surety and after committing the transaction to writing or making the loan in the presence of witnesses. The interest may be either stipulated (kṛta) at the time of the loan or not stipulated (akṛta), as indicated in Visnu VI 4. Yāj. II 38 and Visnu Dh. S. VI 3 state the general rule that debtors of all castes may pay to creditors of all castes the interest settled by mutual agreement and the rate of interest stipulated may be with reference to an article pledged or with reference to a surety given or with reference to a debt totally unsecured. Though this was the general rule, Manu VIII 153 and Br condemn taking even agreed interest if it exceeds the rates (to be specified below)<sup>682</sup> allowed by the smrtis or taking the agreed heavy interest for more than a year or taking compound interest or more than double the principal or the capitalization of interest. The smrtis lay down various rates of interest from different points of view Gaut XII 26, Yaṣ II 37, Baud. Dh S I 5. 90-91, Manu VIII, 140 (= Nār IV. 99), Br (S B E vol 33 p 320 v. 3), Vṛddha-Hārīta VII 235 and others state the rule first laid down by Vasiṣṭha that it is just and proper to take every month  $\frac{1}{80}$ th part of the principal lent, so that the principal is doubled in six years and eight months,<sup>683</sup> and Viddha-Hārīta adds

Gaut and Vas provide that five māśas were the interest on 20 panas per month and if we are to suppose that they accepted the rule that  $\frac{1}{80}$  of the principal sum was the proper rate of interest (as ascribed to Vasiṣṭha by Manu VIII 140, Nār IV 99 and others), then the pana, acc to those two, must be equal to 20 māśas (i e 100 raktikās), while acc to Baud the pana would be equal to 16 māśas. When Hārīta says that 8 panas are the monthly interest on 25 purāṇas (which were silver coins and each of which weighed 32 raktikās) and that in 4 years and 2 months the interest on 25 purāṇas at 8 panas per month came to be as much as the principal, it follows that a raktikā of silver was 40 times as valuable as a raktikā of copper ( $8 \times 80 \times 50 = 32000$  divided by 800) But this does not agree with what Sōkra states (note 162 above) Probably the relative values of gold, silver and copper varied from age to age, according to the supply of some or all of these metals from foreign countries that double the interest stated above may be taken when there is nothing pledged to secure the debt. Yāj and Vyāsa provide that this rate is the proper one when some thing is pledged or mortgaged by way of security. Yāj. II. 37, Manu VIII. 142 (= Nār. IV. 100), Visnu Dh S VI. 2 provide an option that two, three, four or five per cent per month may be charged as interest in the order of the varnas<sup>684</sup> (i. e. 2 per cent per month for a brāhmana debtor and so on). Yāj. II. 37 allows these rates only if there is nothing pledged by way of security. Vyāsa<sup>685</sup> (in Par. M. III. p. 221) provided that the monthly rate of interest was  $\frac{1}{16}$ th of the principal lent when a pledge or mortgage was given as against the loan,  $\frac{1}{8}$ th when only a surety was offered and two per cent per month when money was lent on personal security. The Anuśāsanaparva 117.20 condemns to Hell those who take exorbitant interest. Kaut. prescribed (as stated in n. 688) fines for taking heavier interest than that allowed by him. Kāt (498) provides that if a debtor himself stipulates a higher rate of interest than is allowed by the sūtra in times of difficulty (in order to induce the creditor to part with his money) that stipulated interest must be paid but a rate of interest imposed by the creditor otherwise (by force &c.) should not be enforced by the Court<sup>686</sup>. It is probable that these rates are specified because of the economic conditions of those times which proved too much even for the ancient sages or different mercantile usages about interest prevailed in different countries at different times, as expressly stated by Nār. IV. 105-106 that<sup>687</sup> these high rates (including eight per cent per month) had to be paid according to the law merchant in different countries. Manu VIII. 141 (= Nār. IV. 100) holds that to take two per cent per month (on unsecured debts) is not improper. In medieval times also the rate of interest was rather high e. g. interest at 25 per cent is said to have been charged on a deposit of six qadyūnas kept with the mahājanas of Śivapura ( vide Yewur Ins. in E. I XII. p. 273 ) Yāj. II. 38 provides that those debtors who carry on trade by traversing dense forests and those who are sea-faring traders should respectively pay 10 per cent and 20 per cent per month and the Mit adds that these exorbitant rates are allowed because of the great danger of the loss of even the principal as the debtors may perish by ship-wreck or from the attacks of robbers and wild beasts. Manu VIII. 157 leaves the rate of interest in the case of seafaring merchants to those who are clever in these matters and who know the proper time and place Kaut. ( III. 11 ) states<sup>688</sup> that the prescribed (dharmya) rate of interest is 1½ pana per cent per month, but in transactions (or in commercial usage) it is five panas per cent per month (as the highest, it appears), that those who traverse forests and those who carry on maritime trade should pay respectively ten and twenty per cent per month, that those who exceed or induce creditors to exceed these rates should be punished with the first amercement, that each of the witnesses to such usurious transactions should be punished with half of the above fine

Other rules laid down in the smrtis relate to the maximum that can be recovered by a creditor from a debtor at one time All are agreed that the creditor cannot recover at one time from the debtor for principal and interest more than double of the money lent Vide Kaut. ( III 11 ), Manu VIII 151, Gaut XII 28, Yāj II 39, Visnu Dh VI 11, Nār IV. 107, Kāt ( 509 ) This is called the rule of dvagunya<sup>689</sup> in the smrtis and of dāmdhupat in modern times It will be explained in detail a little below As regards the interest in kind on articles lent there is some difference of opinion, which need not be gone into in great detail Manu VIII 151 and Gaut XII 33 state that on loans of grain, fruits, wool and beasts of burden, and products like ghee and milk had from cattle the total recoverable cannot exceed in any case five times of what is lent Yāj II 39 states that in the case of cattle and female slaves when loaned their progeny is the profit, in the case of liquids (like oil and ghee) when loaned the maximum recoverable is eightfold and in the case of clothes and grain it is respectively four and three times Vas. II 44-47 says the maximum recoverable at one time in the case of grain, flowers, roots, fruits and fluids (like oil) is three-fold and eight-fold in the case of things that can be weighed Vide Visṇu Dh. S VI 12-15 Visṇu VI 17 (amultāntūm daḡunā) provides that where no special rule is laid down the maximum recoverable is to be only double of what is lent Kāt. (570-572) states<sup>690</sup> that the maximum recoverable in the case of precious stones, pearls, corals, gold, silver, fruits, silk, wool is double of what is loaned; of oils, liquors, ghee, raw-sugar and salt and land eight-fold, of baser metals five-fold Vide Br. (S B E vol. 33 p. 322 verses 13-16) and V Nirṇaya p 229 (quoting Bharadvāja) for similar provisions.

The rule of what is called dāmdupul in modern times expressed laconically by Manu VIII. 151 and Gaut XII 28 is this that 'the amount of principal and interest recoverable' at one time in a lump sum cannot be more than double of the money lent' As a debt was recoverable not only from a man himself but also from his three descendants and as therefore there was practically no period of limitation for bringing a suit for money lent, creditors had great temptations to allow interest to go on increasing Therefore the sages who condemned the profession of usury and particularly waiting long for the increase of interest<sup>691</sup> laid down that whatever the length of time during which the principal was at interest and whatever the rate of interest might have been, the creditor could recover by suit in a lump sum only double of the money lent This acted as a great

check on the creditors' rapacity. Several propositions are laid down in the Mit.,<sup>692</sup> the Vyavahāramayūkha and other digests that graft exceptions on the general rule, and that flow from the interpretation of Manu VIII 151 in both readings. The first modification is that if interest is received every day, month or year and is not claimed in a lump sum at one time then the total interest received by a creditor may be even several times more than the principal lent Br. provides (S B E. vol 33 p. 321 verse 11) that every day interest or bodily interest and bhogalābha may be taken by the creditor (irrespective of the question of dvaigunya) as long as the principal is not paid<sup>693</sup> (2) Further, if after the interest has accumulated for some time, there is a fresh agreement with the same debtor whereby the sum lent together with interest due is taken as the principal and interest is agreed to be paid on the amount so arrived at, then the total recoverable after this fresh agreement may exceed double the original sum lent. Manu (VIII 154-155) and Br (S. B. E. vol. 33 p 331 verse 60) allow such a fresh agreement. But if the debtor does not make a fresh agreement then the rule of dāmdupat would apply. (3) If after the sum due to the creditor has become double of the principal lent, the creditor accepts another man as the debtor (who takes the liability on himself), then the creditor may recover from the substituted debtor after the lapse of years an amount which may be more than double of the sum originally lent (4) If the debtor pays a part of the principal or if the creditor makes a concession (called 'reka' in the Mit on Yaj II 39) and reduces the total recoverable or if the debtor receives an additional amount of money (called 'seka' in the Mit) and it is added to the original amount borrowed and a fresh agreement is made between the parties to put the whole to interest, then the rule of dāmdupat would not apply

The rule of dāmdupat has been acted upon by the courts in India in modern times<sup>694</sup>. Though under the Transfer of property Act before its amendment in 1929 there was a conflict of decisions, since 1929 it is settled that the rule of dāmdupat does not apply to mortgages governed by the Transfer of Property Act. But the rule is so reasonable and humane that the Deccan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879) has made (by sec. 13) the rule of dāmdupat applicable to all agriculturists as defined by the Act, whether Hindus or non-Hindus; and the Bombay Agricultural Debtors Relief Act (of 1939), sec. 42, the Madras Debt Conciliation Act (XI of 1936, sec. 16) do the same.

A loan has to be returned on demand if no time is fixed for repayment or on the expiry of the time (if one has been fixed by the parties) or when interest ceases on account of becoming equal to the principal (Bf. in S. B. E. vol. 33 p. 328 verse 47). Interest stops when on the debtor offering to pay the loan the creditor refuses to accept it and the debtor deposits the money in the hands of a third person (Gaut. XII. 30, Yāj. II. 44). With Yāj. II. 44 section 84 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV. of 1882) may be compared. Vas. II. 49 states the remarkable rule that interest stops the moment the king dies and begins to run only after the coronation of the successor.<sup>695</sup> Nār. II 39

It is interesting to find that in ancient Egypt the legal maximum rate of interest was thirty per cent and it was forbidden to allow interest to increase beyond the double of the principal. Vide Wilkinson's 'Manners and Customs of the ancient Egyptians' (First Series), 1842, vol. II p. 50. Usury was condemned in ancient Egypt, among the Jews (vide Psalm XV. 5, Ezek XVIII 8 and 17, Lev XXV. 36-37) and by the ancient smrtis (as more heinous than even the murder of a brāhmana, H. of Dh. vol. II. p 124 n 269).

(S. B. E. vol. 33 p. 33) provides that no interest runs on the price of commodities, on wages, on a deposit, on a fine, on what has been idly promised (to bards and the like) and on the stake won in gambling, unless there is a special or express agreement to pay interest.<sup>696</sup> Kāt. (508) has a similar verse,<sup>697</sup> but adds hides, crops, liquor, bride-price and suretyship debts to some of those mentioned by Nār. Kāt. (III. 11) provides that no interest runs where the debtor is a person engaged in a Vedic sacrifice of long duration, or is suffering from a disease or is staying at his teacher's house (gurukula) for study or is a minor or is a man without any substance. As regards some cases where originally a thing is lent to a person out of friendship or because he asked a loan of it, Nār. (IV. 108) and Kāt. (502-505) lay down certain rules which are quoted in the Mit. (on Yā, II. 38) and other works. Nār. (IV. 108) prescribes<sup>698</sup> that no interest ever attaches to things loaned through friendship, unless there is an express stipulation to that effect; but even in the absence of a stipulation interest starts running after the expiry of six months. Nār. IV. 109 and Kāt. (505) both lay down that a loan (of money or an article) made through friendship cannot begin to earn interest as long as no demand is made for its return. If the debtor refuses to return it after it is demanded interest begins to run at the rate of five per cent. Kāt. (502-504)<sup>699</sup> lays down three propositions about yācātaka (a temporary loan of money or of an article). (1) When a person takes such a loan and goes to another country without returning it, that loan begins to acquire interest after a year from the date of the loan (though no demand be made); (2) if a person after taking a loan goes to another<sup>700</sup> country without returning it even when pressed by the lender to return it that loan begins to acquire interest three months (after demand); (3) when the borrower of a thing does not return it even though he is pressed to return it, the king should make him pay interest from that day (i. e. day of demand), though it was not agreed upon, though he remained in the country and though he be unwilling to pay interest. The Madanaratna says that in these cases where no interest is settled beforehand and where the texts do not specify the rate (as Kāt. 505-506 do viz. what is lent through friendship, a deposit, balance of interest, unpaid purchase money, if not returned on demand, begin to carry interest at five per cent per month), the rate of interest would be the one stated by Yāj. Ādhi<sup>701</sup> means pledge of a movable or mortgage of immovable property. Nār. IV. 117 remarks<sup>702</sup> that in lending money an ādhi and surety are the two sources that inspire confidence (in the creditor that his money will be safe) and a document and witnesses are the two modes of proof that will establish (the existence of a debt). An ādhi is so called because the creditor is authorised to wield power over it or it is placed within his power (Nār. IV. 124 and Mit. on Yāj. II. 58)<sup>703</sup>. The word ādhi occurs in Āp. Dh. S. I. 6. 18, 20<sup>704</sup> (which includes among those who are unfit to be invited at a śrāddha 'one who subsists on ādhi'). Gaut. XII. 29 also refers to ādhi. Kaut. (III. 12) briefly deals with ādhi and after stating some rules extends the principles of upanidhi (deposit) and debt to it. Manu VIII. 165 employs the word 'ādhamana' in the sense of 'mortgage'. According to Br.<sup>705</sup> (S. B. E. vol. 33 p. 323 verse 17) an ādhi is of four kinds viz. of movable property, of immovable property, gopya (to be kept in custody of the pledgee only), bhogyā (to be enjoyed). Nār. IV. 124 first divides ādhi into two sorts, viz. one that is to be redeemed within a certain time fixed (by agreement at the time of contracting the debt) or to be retained till the debt is paid off and Nār. IV. 125 again subdivides each of these two into gopya and bhogyā. This latter division was known to Gaut. XII. 32, Manu VIII. 143, Yāj. II. 59, Kat. (576). The subdivisions of ādhi are made from several points of view viz. the nature of the property, the form of the pledge, the mention or non-mention of a period and the evidence to establish it. The Mit. on Yāj. II. 58 explains<sup>706</sup> that the first kind of ādhi mentioned in Nār. IV. 124 contains the conditions that the money will be repaid at a fixed time and that if the money be not so paid at the time fixed the thing pledged or mortgaged will belong to the creditor. Yāj. II. 58 sets out three provisions viz. (1) when a time is fixed for payment, the thing pledged or mortgaged is lost to the debtor if the time fixed is allowed to pass without there being any repayment (whether it be an ādhi that is to be merely kept or whether it is one to be enjoyed); (2) but if no time be fixed the thing given as security is not lost

But that sense is very rare and besides hardly any smṛtikāra has condemned the letting out of one's house for rent. It is better to take ādhi as pledge or mortgage and hold that vārdhnska refers only to those who lend corn in order to take 1½ times as much (or more) after the rainy season as defined by Nār. IV., 110 quoted above (on p. 417).

to the debtor at all, when it is an ādhi that is to be enjoyed; (3) if no time is fixed and the ādhi is only to be kept (gopya) then it is lost to the debtor only if it is not redeemed even when the debt has grown to double of the principal by non-payment of the interest agreed upon. There is a period of fourteen days' grace after this, as stated by Br. (S. B. E.<sup>707</sup> vol. 33 p 324, verses 27-28) that when the principal has been doubled or the stipulated period in the case of a pledge delivered for a certain time only has expired, the creditor becomes the owner of the pledge, after waiting for a fortnight during which the debtor may repay the debt and redeem his property. Gaut. XII. 29, Manu VIII. 143, Yaj. II. 58, Visnu Dh. S. VI. 5 provide that an ādhi which is mortgaged with the condition that the fruit or profits are to be enjoyed bears no interest nor can the creditor, even after keeping such an ādhi for a long time, make a gift of it or sell it. Medhatithi on Manu VII. 143 holds that a mortgagee with possession who is to enjoy the produce cannot, by virtue of the last quarter of Manu VIII. 143, make a sub-mortgage (called anvādhi). Kullūka on<sup>708</sup> the other hand says that it is common practice in all countries for a mortgagee to execute a sub-mortgage of land and the like and that Manu VIII. 143 does not forbid it. Prajāpati<sup>709</sup> (q. by Par. M. III. p. 242) defines a deed of sub-mortgage: 'if the creditor pledges to another the thing already pledged to him for the same amount (for which it was pledged to him) he should pass a fresh deed of pledge (or mortgage) and should hand over the former deed to his own creditor.' It appears that sub-mortgages came to be recognized rather late. Bharadvāja states that if a sub-mortgage be effected without the mortgagor's consent, the mortgagee would lose his money.

The general rule was that an ādhi (whether of movable or immovable property) that was bhogya carried no interest but the profits were to be taken in lieu of interest (vide Kāt 516)<sup>710</sup> and the debtor would in this case get back his property on paying the principal. Kaut (III 12) states<sup>711</sup> that immovable property mortgaged may be such that it can be enjoyed only by expending labour over it or without expending one's own labour the creditor may enjoy the fruits or income thereof. But as noted by Vyāsa and Bharadvāja<sup>712</sup> the stipulation about a bhogya ādhi may be that the income from the property is to be taken as in payment of the whole interest and part of the principal. This latter is called sapratyaya-bhogyādhi and the other variety where the income is taken in lieu of interest only is called apratyaya-bhogyādhi. The Mit. on Yāj. II. 64 after citing a text of Brhaspati refers to these two varieties (though it does not use these terms) and adds that if the income is not sufficient to meet the interest wholly then the debtor may have to pay the principal and the unpaid part of the debt before redeeming his property. The Mit. (on Yāj. II. 64) states that the appropriate name 'ksayādhi' is given by the people to what is called (above) as sapratyaya-bhogyādhi. Bharadvāja states that on taking an account (where there is an agreement to apply the income towards interest and reduction of the principal) if the creditor has been overpaid he is to restore the overpaid amount to the debtor and that if a portion of the principal remains unpaid the debtor has to repay it.

If a man first mortgaged his property and then sold it, the purchaser took it subject to the rights of the mortgagee (Vasistha quoted by Sm. C II. p 145) 'If a person executed a mortgage, a sale and a gift of the same thing on the same day, then the donee would take one-third of the thing and the mortgagee and purchaser would share the remaining two-thirds in proportion to the money paid by each<sup>713</sup>. If a person was liable to pay several debts, some secured by a pledge or mortgage and some taken on personal security, the latter were to be paid first and redemption of the mortgage was to be ordered afterwards, according to Bharadvāja ( q. by Vy. Nir p. 245 ).

The restriction that more money should not be taken from the sub-mortgagee than what was advanced to the mortgagor was for the benefit of the latter. The Par. M. ( III p. 242 ) provides that a sub-mortgage can be made only when the amount due has risen to double the principal, but that if the owner consents a sub-mortgage may be made even before that contingency arises.

Kāt. ( 522 ) requires that an ādhi becomes valid when such particulars as the boundaries of the field or house and the village ( in which it is situated ) are specified<sup>714</sup>. Kāt. ( 518 ) further provides that a writing of pledge or sale or gift is superior to a similar transaction made in the presence of witnesses only. If the same field or other thing is mortgaged or pledged to two persons separately, Visnu Dh. S. V. 185<sup>715</sup> and Br. ( S. B. E. 33 p 326 verse 34 ) prescribe<sup>716</sup> that the one who got possession first ( without force ) is entitled to preference. This shows that under ancient Hindu Law possession was nine points of law and that hypothecation without delivery of possession was known to Kāt. and other smṛti writers, even if earlier smṛtis did not recognise an hypothecation without possession. Yāj. II. 60 and Nār. IV. 139 emphatically assert that a pledge or mortgage becomes perfect or effective only if there is enjoyment and not otherwise. This is to be taken along with Yāj. II. 23 and so the first in time shall prevail only if the first is accompanied with possession. If a sale or mortgage be made before witnesses to one man and in writing to another, the latter prevails over the former<sup>717</sup>. If a debtor were to pledge or mortgage the same thing to another after pledging it to one and without redeeming the first debt, Visnu Dh. S. (V. 181-182) prescribed<sup>718</sup> the drastic measure of corporal punishment (whipping or imprisonment) if the land mortgaged was a gocurma or more in extent or a fine of 16 suvarnas if it was less. Kāt (517) in similar circumstances made the debtor liable to the fine imposed on a thief. Kāt. (519-521 q. in Sm. C. II pp 144-145 and V. P. pp. 240-241) states that in a competition between a document of pledge which does not give particulars of the thing pledged or which refers to a thing not existing at the time and a document in which the thing pledged is described with particulars or in which the thing existed at the time the deed was executed, the latter is entitled to preference; similarly the pledge of a thing specifically described is superior to a prior pledge of all the debtor's property mentioned in general terms.

If an ādhi deteriorates<sup>719</sup> in value (i e. becomes inadequate to meet principal and interest) or if it be lost or destroyed though proper care be taken thereof by the creditor, then the debtor must either pledge another adequate thing (in substitution) or the debtor should return the amount due (Yāj II. 60, Kāt 524). The Mit on Yāj. II. 60 remarks that it follows from this that it is the duty of the pledgee to take proper care of the thing pledged. Br. (S B E 33 p. 323 verse 19) expressly says that the pledge has to be kept carefully like a deposit, as otherwise interest is forfeited in case of its being damaged. If a pledge which is to be kept only is enjoyed by the creditor, then the interest stops and if it deteriorates or is lost the creditor has to restore it to its former condition or substitute another of equal value; if a pledge to be enjoyed is lost or deteriorates by use then also the interest stops; and the creditor has to restore it, otherwise he will lose his principal (Yāj II. 59 and the Mit thereon, Nār. IV. 125, 127). If a pledge is lost without any fault or negligence of the creditor, but through fate (i. e. accidents like fire or flood) or the action of the king, the debtor has to furnish another pledge or to pay the amount due (Kāt. 523, Nār IV. 126, 130, Yāj II. 59, Visnu Dh S VI 6, Gaut. XII. 39, Br., S. B. E. 33 p. 323 verse 21). From the time of Gautama<sup>720</sup> (about 500 B. C.) onwards the rule about the care required of a pledgee, bailee, depositee was the same viz that he is to take of another's property kept with him as much care as he would take of his own Nār. (mukṣepa 14) and Yāj II. 67 lay down the same rule for all kinds of bailments Manu VIII. 189 (=Nār., mukṣepa, verse 12) illustrates what is meant by accidental loss.

The debtor cannot redeem the pledge or mortgage before the time fixed by mutual agreement, but by mutual agreement he can redeem even before (Br. S. B. E. p. 325 verses 32-33). If the creditor does not allow redemption when the debtor has a right to redeem and is ready to do so, the creditor may be liable to be fined as a thief (Yāj II. 62). Acc. to Kaut (III. 12) the fine is 12 panas<sup>721</sup>.

It has already been stated above (p. 429) that in certain cases (i. e. when it is a gopya ūdhi) the ownership is lost to the mortgagor (i. e. in the language of modern law there is a foreclosure), if the amount has risen to double of the money lent without payment (even after the period of grace) or if the period fixed has passed away without there being repayment (whether the amount has risen to double of that lent or not, acc. to Mit on Yāj. II. 58) But if at the time of contracting the debt the stipulation is to repay the sum lent with interest and there is no stipulation about loss of the ownership of the thing mortgaged (i. e. it is like a simple mortgage of modern times), then there is no loss of ownership. There is then only a power of sale in the mortgagee. So also in the case of a bhogyādhi the mortgagor or his heirs can redeem the property at any time by paying the principal and there is no loss of ownership to the mortgagor. According to Yāj. II. 63 and Br.<sup>722</sup> (S B E vol 33 p 325 verse 29) the creditor can sell in the presence of (the debtor's relatives) and witnesses the ādhi, when the amount has grown to double of that lent or when the period fixed has passed, if the debtor has not redeemed and is absent or dead. After meeting his own dues the creditor has, as said by Kāt. 529, to hand over the balance of the sale price to the king (i. e. probably to the court of the locality). Kaut.<sup>723</sup> (III. 12) provides that if the debtor is present and the creditor is afraid of the loss of his money because it may exceed the market value of the ādhi he may sell it with the permission of the judges (dharmaśtha) or he may demand a surety for assurance. It appears from these passages that a sale through court and a right of private sale were both recognised in the case of mortgages in ancient India (as in modern times under sections 65 and 69 of the Transfer of Property Act).

There were two other special kinds of ādhi described in Yāj. II. 61 viz. cartrabandhaka<sup>724</sup> and satyanikāra. The first occurs either when the creditor being known to be very honest the debtor gives as security a property of very great value for a small debt or where a debtor being known to be very honest a property of very small value is accepted as security for a large debt. In such a case there is no forfeiture or foreclosure of the property in any case but the king (or judge) should award only double the principal lent. Another meaning is that in a caritrabandhaka it is the merit (apūrvā or punya) arising from bathing in the Ganges or from performance of agnihotra that is given as security (i.e. he will forfeit merit on non-payment). In this case the creditor will receive double and there is no loss or forfeiture of ādhi. A pledge made with satyankāra occurs when at the time of making a pledge the stipulation is 'I am liable to pay only double but there will be no loss of the thing pledged' or (a second meaning of) satyankāra is that 'when an earnest (a ring or the like) is given at the time of a sale and the vendor breaks the promise he has to pay double of the earnest'.

If the mortgagee is dead or absent abroad, and the debtor wants to redeem he may take back the ādhi after paying the amount due to the family i.e. to his sons and other agnatic relations or to his cognates and in the absence of these (if the creditor be a brāhmana) to other brāhmanas (and if no brāhmanas be available) he may cast the money into water (Yāj. II. 62 and Nār. IV. 112-113). The Kaṣika-sūtra<sup>725</sup> (46. 36-40) contains provisions about casting the debt in the cemetery or where four roads meet if the creditor is dead and there are no heirs. The Sangraha says that it may be thrown into water with a palāśa leaf to the accompaniment of Tai S. III. 3. 4. 1-2 quoted above (n 671). Another alternative is that the debtor may have a valuation of the ādhi made at the time when he wants to redeem (and the creditor is absent), and allow it to remain with the creditor but without interest (and redeem it at the valuation when the creditor comes or secure the price from the creditor if the ādhi be afterwards lost or destroyed, acc. to Mit. on Yāj. II. 63).

Pratibhū. A pratibhū or lagnaka (Br. quoted in n. 681 and Kāt. 530) means 'surety'. Prātibhāva (being a surety) was known to Gautama (XII 38) and pratibhū was known to Pāṇini

( II. 3. 39 ). Suretyship requires the concurrence of three persons viz. the creditor, the borrower ( called the principal debtor ) and the person who agrees, for inspiring confidence in the creditor<sup>726</sup>, to pay or indemnify if the principal debtor commits default. Manu VIII. 160 speaks of surety for appearance and for repayment of debt. According to the purpose of the transaction a surety is of three kinds ( Yāj. II. 53 = Visnu Dh. S VI 41 and Nār. IV. 118 ) viz for appearance, for payment and for honesty. The first undertakes to produce a person before a court and assures the court that the person concerned will not abscond from the country; the surety for payment agrees that in case the debtor does not pay the principal and interest, he will himself pay both; the surety for honesty assures the employer or other person with whom another man deals that the latter is an honest and good man, that he would not deceive and that reliance may be placed on him ( vide Mit. on Yāj II 53 and Sm. C II p 148 for these explanations ). Br ( S. B. E <sup>727</sup> vol. 33 p. 327 verses 39-40 ) speaks of four ( including the three of Yāj II. 53 ), his fourth being one who promises to deliver or restore the assets that are with the debtor ( such as household furniture or ornaments ). Yāj. and Nār. must be deemed to include this last under the surety for payment. Kat. ( 530 )<sup>728</sup> says that a surety ( lagnaka ) may be caused to be given for repayment ( of a debt ), for appearance ( upasthāna ), in lawsuits, for honesty and for taking oaths ( or ordeals ). Acc. to Hārita a surety is taken for five purposes viz., for keeping the peace ( abhaya ), for honesty, for repayment of debt, for delivering the debtor's property to the creditor, for appearance V. P. p 248 quotes Vyāsa (who mentions seven kinds of sureties) and remarks that all can ultimately be reduced to three varieties.

If the surety for appearance cannot produce the person at the time and place agreed upon, he should in that case pay to the creditor what he has bound himself to pay except where the debtor is prevented from appearing by act of God or of the king. But a period of a fortnight, a month or three fortnights at the most should be allowed to the surety to find out the absconding person<sup>729</sup>. If he can produce him within that time the surety would be free from liability (Kāt 531, 532, Br. in S. B. E vol 33 p. 327 verse 42). If the surety for appearance cannot (even after time is given) produce the debtor or the debtor dies then the surety has to pay from his own pocket the money due from the debtor (Manu VIII 158 and Kāt. 532-33). All this is subject to the proviso of the act of God or of the king.

Sureties of all kinds are personally liable to make good the loss arising from the non-appearance of the debtor, or from his dishonesty or non-payment (Yāj. II. 53, Visnu VI. 41, Br. in S. B. E 33 p. 327 v. 41); but the sons of the surety for appearance or honesty were not liable, if the surety died<sup>730</sup>. Yet if the surety for appearance or honesty stood surety only after taking some security from the debtor for so doing, then even the son would be liable to reimburse from such security the person losing. The liability of sons and grandsons for the suretyship debt of the father or grandfather will be discussed a little later on. If there are several sureties, then each will have to pay a proportionate part of the debt; but if each of the sureties has undertaken the whole liability of the debtor (i. e. if the liability of all is joint and several) then the creditor may at his will recover the whole debt from any one of the several sureties (Yāj II 55, Nār. IV. 120) Kāt 538 states<sup>731</sup> a special rule that whichever out of several sureties that have incurred joint and several liability is found present at the place (of the agreement) should be made to pay the debt, if such a surety has gone abroad his son may be made to pay the whole, but if the surety be dead the son should be made to pay only the share of his father (there being several sureties) If a surety being pressed or harassed by a creditor pays openly (before all people) the debt (wholly or in part)<sup>732</sup> then the debtor will be made to pay after three fortnights double of what the surety has to pay (Yāj II 56, Nār. IV. 121, Viṣṇu Dh S. VI 44, Kāt 539) But if the surety pays without being pressed he would get only what he paid and if the debtor reimburses the surety without loss of time then he has not to pay double These rules apply to money lent, but in the case of grain, clothes and liquids the debtor must pay to the surety three, four or eight times respectively (Yāj II 57) Who could not be accepted as sureties has already been stated (on pp. 291-292).

Several were the modes of the recovery of debts Manu (VIII. 47-48) requires the king to make the debtor repay his debt to the creditor in whatever way he can do it There is a difference in the modes of recovery according as the liability is admitted by the debtor or not. If liability is denied then the only method is to file a suit for the recovery of the debt. But if the liability is admitted by the debtor, then Manu VIII 49 (=Nār IV 122), and Br (S B E vol 33 p 329 v. 54) mention five means of recovery viz dharma (persuasion), vyavahāra (legal proceeding), chala or upadhi (trick), carita (sitting down at his door) or bala (compulsion to do work or confinement) It appears from Āp Dh S (I 6 19 1) that the method of sitting at the door for recovery of debts was known to Āp (the creditor so doing is designated pratyupavista). dated saṃvat 1198 (1141-42 A. D.) this practice is called kāya-vrata (yadā brāhmanah kāyamalam kṛtvā mṛjate). Vide E. I. vol. XI p. 37 at p 40 These modes of recovery except vyavahāra are explained by Bṛhaspati as follows :<sup>733</sup> The method of dharma consists in sending messages (to the debtor) from his friends and relatives, in persuading him to pay with sweet words, by following the debtor (i. e. by persistent dunning) and by frequent requests. Trick consists in the creditor borrowing from the debtor some ornament or other article under the pretext of its being required in a festival and not returning it or in retaining what the debtor has handed over to the creditor for being delivered to another, that is compulsion when the debtor is brought to the creditor's house, is then confined or beaten and thus induced to repay the debt; that is ācarita where the creditor keeps tied his own wife or son or cattle at the debtor's house or sits down at his door (fasting) All these methods could not be employed in the case of all debtors Kāt. (477-480) has already been cited (on p. 383) to show how the king is to employ the various methods in the case of brāhmanas, traders &c. If the creditor employs any one of the methods (other than vyavahāra) and harasses a debtor when the latter claims judicial investigation and there is a doubt or dispute between the two as to the amount, the rate of interest, the liability to pay, the creditor would lose his claim and would have to pay a fine equal (to the claim)<sup>734</sup> Kāt 589 and Br <sup>735</sup> (S. against the creditor, the debtor would be compelled by the king to pay the debt and a fine for unnecessary complaint (Yāj II 40, Manu VIII 176, Visnu Dh S VI 19) Kāt (580-584) provides that where<sup>736</sup> it is the custom of the country, the creditor may hold the debtor in restraint openly before an assembly of people until he pays what is due, that when a man so restrained has an inclination to answer calls of nature, he should be followed behind by the creditor or he should be allowed to go alone but fettered, that he should be allowed to go home for his meals and at night if he furnishes a surety, and that the surety will have to remain in restraint (while the debtor is absent), that if the debtor cannot secure a surety or does not accept the proposal of furnishing one he should be confined in jail or should be kept guarded by men, but that a respectable man who is trust-worthy and pure in conduct should not be put in jail, that he should be allowed to go without fetters or after being bound by an oath. Manu VIII 177, Yāj II 43, Nar. IV 131 lay down that if a debtor is unable to pay a debt then he should be made to do work suitable to his caste in the house of his creditor of the same or higher caste in order to gradually liquidate the debt (but without detriment to his own family) and a brāhmaṇa debtor should be made to pay by easy instalments<sup>737</sup>. Kaut. III. 11 provides<sup>738</sup> that agriculturists and king's servants should not be seized (for debts) at the time when it is the season for them to work, nor a woman for her husband's debt unless she has promised to repay her husband's debt, but wives of cowherds and those who take a lease of lands for half produce may be arrested for non-payment by the husband. As compared with the harsh legislation against debtors in most ancient and medieval systems of jurisprudence the rules laid down by the smṛtis are very mild and humane<sup>739</sup>. If there were several creditors there was priority among them i.e. the earlier debt prevailed over the later one; a brāhmaṇa creditor however (whatever the date of his advance) was preferred to a ksatriya or other creditor (Yāj II. 41, Kāt. 514). Kaut<sup>740</sup> states that the debts owed to the Crown and a śrotiṛya take precedence over other debts and that unless the debtor is going to abscond several creditors should not simultaneously proceed against one debtor. Section 56 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code makes Government assessment a paramount charge on the land. But acc. to Kāt. (513) if several debts were contracted in writing on the same date, they should all be treated as equal and paid off pro rata from the debtor's assets if insufficient; but, if a creditor established that a particular article belonging to a debtor was manufactured by the debtor with his money only, that creditor alone got the money recovered by sale of the article (Kāt. 515). Bharadvāja states<sup>741</sup> that if a debtor has no cash then the creditor should be paid by sale of the debtor's other property in order viz. grain, gold, iron, cattle, clothes, land, slaves, and conveyances, (in the absence of fields) his garden and lastly his house and in the absence of even a house time should be granted to debtors of the three higher castes.

739. Under the law of the Twelve Tables in Rome a creditor could put the debtor to death or sell him to a stranger beyond the Tiber or, if there were several creditors, they could divide the body of the debtor among themselves after the third market day (Table III in Ortolan's Roman Law p. 106). Vide Sen's 'Hindu Jurisprudence' pp. 316-17 for later Roman and Irish rules.

When a debtor was not able to return the entire debt in a lump, he should write on the back of the document of debt the sums paid by him from time to time or the creditor may pass a receipt (upagata or praveśapālā, as the Mit designates it) to the debtor signed by himself (Yāj II 93, Nār IV. 114, Visnu Dh S VI 26). If the creditor, though requested by the debtor, would not pass a receipt he was to lose the balance of his debt (Nār. IV. 114) Nār. IV 115 and Br (S B E vol 33 p 332 verse 66) further provide that if the creditor does not write down (either on the bond itself or in a separate document) the money recovered by dharma or some other method then the debtor himself will be entitled to interest on the amount paid by him <sup>741a</sup> When the whole debt is paid off, the creditor should tear off the bond of debt or he may execute another document in order to show that the debtor is freed from the debt (if the original is lost or is not within easy reach) and when a debt is borrowed in the presence of witnesses, it should be returned in the presence of the same or other witnesses (Yāj II 94, Visnu Dh S. VI. 24-25) Nār IV 116 requires the creditor to return the document when the whole debt is paid off or to announce openly to others that it has been paid <sup>742</sup>

It has now to be seen who (other the man himself) are liable to pay a man's debt The liability to pay another's debt may arise on three grounds, (1) religious, (2) equitable and moral, (3) legal, such as agency (express or implied) or authority. That the sons and grandsons of the original debtor are liable to pay on religious grounds the debt of the father is expressly stated by numerous writers such as Kaut <sup>743</sup> III 11, Yāj. II 50, Nār. IV. 4, Br. (S. B. E vol 33 p. 328 verse 49), Kāt (560), Vṛddha-Hārīta VII 250-51, Visnu Dh. S VI 27.

The important question is whether the smṛtis declare the liability of the great-grandson. It is clear that smṛtis like that of Br. expressly say that the great-grandson is not liable to pay his great-grandfather's debt. The Visnu Dh. S. VI. 28 says that the descendants beyond the grandson need not pay if they are unwilling to pay. Others like Nār. IV. 4 and Kāt. say that the obligation to return a debt ceases from the fourth. The question is what is meant by the fourth i. e. is it meant to exclude, in calculating, the original debtor or to include him? It is possible to hold (particularly because the great-grandson is not expressly mentioned in most smṛtis) that the fourth means 'inclusive of the original debtor'. But this appears to be in conflict with the rule in Manu IX. 137 (which is the same as Baud Dh. S. II. 9. 6, Vas. 17. 5, Visnu Dh. S. 15. 46) that the son, grandson, and great-grandson confer the greatest spiritual benefit on the ancestor, the rule (Manu IX. 186, Nār. IV. 6) that pindaś (in śrāddha) are to be offered by three persons in descent and the general rule that whoever takes the inheritance must offer the pinda and pay the debts of the ancestor (Gaut. XII. 37, Yaj. II. 51, Nār. IV. 23, Visnu Dh. S. XV. 40 and VI. 29). Therefore, following the canons, viz. the rights to property are co-extensive with the liability to perform śrāddha and to pay off debts (which is quite logical and reasonable), that the texts relating to the same subject matter must be harmonized and reconciled as far as it is reasonably possible<sup>744</sup> to do (ekavākya-tā-nyāya), that apparently conflicting texts are to be assigned their appropriate spheres (viśayavyavasthā), and that a direct conflict (and so an option) is to be presumed only if no other recourse is open, the Mitākṣarā and other commentators put forward the interpretation that the texts stating that the great-grandson is not liable to pay the great-grandfather's debt apply only to cases where the great-grandson inherits no ancestral property, but that he is liable if he takes ancestral property. Dr. Jolly in his note on Nār. IV. 6 (in S. B. E. vol. 33 p. 44) remarks: "the doctrine, viz. the liability to pay debts contracted by an ancestor extends to the great-grandson, is opposed to the teaching of such an eminent authority as Vyāñeśvara, who maintains in the Mitākṣarā that the great-grandson<sup>745</sup> is not liable for debts contracted by his great-grandfather, and conversely that he does not inherit his property'. He makes similar remarks in his Tagore Law Lectures for 1885 (on 'adoption, partition' &c. p. 171). Dr. Jolly is under some misapprehension since the Mit. in two places deals with this matter and expressly states that the great-grandson is liable to pay debts contracted by his great-grandfather if he has taken ancestral estate but not otherwise. The following propositions are deducible from the smṛti texts and authoritative commentaries like the Mit and the Viramītrodaya (Vyavahāraprakāśa). The<sup>746</sup> first proposition is that the debts of a man must be paid by his three descendants (son, grandson and great-grandson) if they have ancestral estate in their hands (Mit on Yāj II 51 quoted in note 745, Sm. C II p 171, V. P. p. 264). The 2nd proposition is that even when no ancestral estate was taken by the descendants the son was liable to pay his father's debts with interest, the grandson was liable to pay his grandfather's debt but without interest and the great-grandson was not liable to pay even the principal, if he was unwilling to pay. This proposition is enunciated by Viṣṇu Dh S VI 27-28, Br. (S. B. E. vol. 33 p. 328

745. On वृद्धस्वपति &c. of बृहस्पति referred to above the मिता (on या II 50) remarks, 'सम यावद्गृहीतं तावदेव देयं न वृद्धिः । तत्पुत्रस्य प्रपौत्रस्य अदेयं नगृहीतघनस्य । एतच्चोत्तरश्लोके स्पष्टयिष्यते' On the words पुत्रहीनस्य रिक्थिनः (on या II. 51) the मिता explains इत्येतदपि पुत्रपौत्रहीनस्य प्रपौत्रादयो यदि रिक्थं गृह्णन्ति तदा ऋणं दाप्याः नान्यथेत्येवमर्थम् । पुत्रपौत्रौ च रिक्थग्रहणाभावेपि दाप्यावित्युक्तम् ।'. Dr Jolly probably misunderstood 'अगृहीतघनस्य' and held it to mean 'that a great-grandson does not take the ancestral estate', but it really means 'if he has not taken &c'. The स्युतिच. II. p 171 says, 'एव च अयितामहादिकृतर्णापकरणानधिकारो चतुर्थादिरगृहीतरिक्थस्यैव न पुनर्गृहीतरिक्थस्येव नन्तव्यम् । .. गृहीतरिक्थानां तु पौत्राणामधिकारो वृद्धिसहितकणापाकरणे .। देयं वेतामह समन्वितस्यागृहीतरिक्थविषयत्वात् ।'

746 The first proposition is followed by modern decisions in British India. Vide Lachman Das v Khunnu 19 All. 26 (F. B.) which holds that the mortgagee of a man who had mortgaged joint ancestral property can enforce his mortgage against the grandson of the mortgagor for the realization of interest as well as principal, Ladu Narain v. Gobardhan 4 Patna 478, Masit Ullah v. Damodar Prasad 48 All. 518 (P. C.) where the Privy Council held that the great-grandson is liable for the debts of his great-grandfather as much as he is liable for those of his father or grandfather. In all these cases passages from the smṛtis of Yāj, Nār, and Br and from the Mit. and the Viramītrodaya are quoted and discussed.

v. 49 referred to on p. 443) and Kāt. 556<sup>747</sup>. In Narasimharav v. Antaji 2 Bom. H. C R. 61 it was held (probably following Brhaspati, though not quoted in the judgment) that the grandson was liable to pay the debt of his grandfather without interest even if there was no ancestral estate. This was felt to be a great hardship on heirs (taking no ancestral estate) and in order to remove it Bombay Act VII of 1866 (the Hindu Heirs' Relief Act) was passed whereby it is provided that a son or grandson is not liable to be sued for the debts of his deceased ancestor merely by reason of his being such a son or grandson and that the son, grandson or other heir shall be liable only to the extent of the assets that come to his hands. The same is the law laid down in other parts of India by judicial decisions. Br. (S B. E. vol. 33 p. 328 verse 48) recommends that the father's debt must be paid first of all and after that one's own debt; but a debt of the grandfather must always be paid even before the preceding<sup>748</sup> two kinds of debt. These two propositions of Hindu jurists are very lucidly, but succinctly, set forth by the Viramitrodaya quoted below<sup>749</sup>. The third proposition (which is an exception to the above two) is that even a son is not liable to pay certain illegal and immoral debts of his father. This proposition will be discussed a little further on. A fourth proposition is that even when the father is not dead, the son, grandson or great-grandson may be liable to pay the father's or other ancestor's debt under certain circumstances. Yāj. II. 50 provides that sons (and grandsons) must pay the debt of the father when he is dead or has gone to a distant country or is afflicted with an incurable disease. Some of these ascribe the last to बृहस्पति. The first and third verses of Kāt are quoted in Peda Venkanna v. Sreenivasa 41 Mad. 136 at p 149. The च्य. नि. (p 256) remarks that these texts indicate that during the father's lifetime only the sons are liable for the father's debts and not the grandsons, but if no sons are alive then even grandsons will be liable.

548-550 state that when the father, though living and near, becomes an ascetic (acc. to Visnu), is afflicted with such diseases or calamities as blindness from birth or loss of caste (due to grave sins), lunacy, tuberculosis, leprosy and other (incurable) diseases or when he has left his country or has gone on a long journey or is very old (above 80) the son will have to pay the debt of the father after the twentieth year (from his going abroad). Acc. to V. R. (p 50) if the father's disease was incurable or if it was certain that he would not return from his journey then the son was bound to pay at once and was not entitled to wait for 20 years. Kāt (552-553) introduces <sup>751</sup> a further restriction that even when the father is dead, if the son has not attained years of discretion (i e. if he is a minor) he need not pay the debt of his father during his minority; but when the proper time to pay arrives he must pay the debt, otherwise the (ancestors) may remain in hell. Thus the son's liability during the father's lifetime or absence was not absolute but limited according to the smrtis and digests; judicial decisions, however, have brushed all this aside and the son's liability to pay his father's debts during the latter's lifetime is now as absolute as after his death. This will be discussed further on.

According to all smṛti writers even the son, though he may have taken the ancestral estate, is not liable to pay certain debts of the father which are compendiously described as 'illegal or immoral' in the decisions of courts. Gaut., <sup>752</sup> XII.

(564-565), Uśanas and Vyāsa provide that the son is not bound to pay the following debts of his father viz. those incurred as a surety (for honesty or appearance), for drinking or in gambling, those arising from idle promises (to bards, wrestlers and the like), debts for promises made under the influence of wrath or illicit love to women, the balance of a fine or toll and those that are not vyāvahārika. A debt arising from wrath is explained by Kāt. as one where the father causes physical injury to another or destroys another's property through anger and then promises something to pacify the person wronged. As regards the suretyship debts of the father, Yaj. II. 54, Vyāsa and Kāt. (561) provide that when the father was a surety for payment, then the son was bound to pay the principal of the debt for which the father stood surety, but the son of the son was not liable at all to pay the suretyship debt of his grandfather even when the latter was a surety for payment<sup>753</sup>. These verses about the debts which the son was not bound to pay have been quoted and explained in numerous decisions of the courts. But as this work does not profess to be a treatise on modern Hindu Law those cases are passed over here. What is meant by 'debts that are not vyāvahārika' has presented the greatest difficulty to the medieval commentaries and digests and also to modern courts as noted below<sup>754</sup>. (1939) Bom. 533 a Full Bench has dealt with the meaning of 'avyāvahārika'. In Hemraj v. Khemchand I L. R. (1943) All. 727 the Privy Council state the various renderings of avyāvahārika given by different authors and judges and hold that Colebrook's rendering makes the nearest approach to the real meaning of the word as used in the śruti and that it is the character of the debt that is to be looked to and not the actions of the father.

where the father became a surety for appearance (or honesty) after receiving a pledge from the person whose surety he became, then the son of the surety may be made to pay the money due from that pledge in case the father is dead or has gone abroad<sup>755</sup>.

The case law on the subject of the father's debts and the son's liability to pay them has assumed enormous proportions. This is not the place to discuss the case-law. But as the courts in India profess to follow the Hindu Law of the sages and medieval digests, it is necessary to examine some of the principles laid down by the latest decision of the Privy Council. In Bry Naram v. Mangla Prasad 51 L. A. 129 (=46 All. 95) the following five propositions are laid down by the Privy Council (at p 139): (1) the managing member of a joint undivided estate cannot alienate or burden the estate qua manager except for purposes of necessity; (2) if he is the father and the other members are the sons, he may, by incurring debt, so long as it is not for an immoral purpose, lay the estate open to be taken in execution proceeding upon a decree for payment of that debt; (3) if he purports to burden the estate by mortgage then, unless that mortgage is to discharge an antecedent debt, it would not bind the estate; (4) antecedent debt means antecedent in fact as well as in time, that is to say, that the debt must be truly independent and not part of the transaction impeached; (5) there is no rule that this result is affected by the question whether the father, who contracted the debt or burdened the estate, is alive or dead. Vide Choudhurr Govind Chandra v Hayagrībā 10 Patna 94, where it was held that when a father stood surety for the honesty or good behaviour of another as guardian for a minor's property, the son was not bound to pay the suretyship debt of the father. In Kottaballi v Kanupark 58 Mad 375, where the father executed a surety bond that a certain judgment debtor would file an insolvency petition within a specified period and the debtor failed to do so, it was held that the guarantee was one for confidence or honesty and that the sons were not liable on the father's death. Similarly in Dhr Naram v Shiva Sahay A. I R. 1935 Patna 127 it was held that sons are not liable under Hindu Law where the father stood surety for appearance only. In Narayan v Venkatacharya 6 Bom L. R. 434 it was held that under the law of the Mitākṣarā a grandson is not liable to pay a debt which his grandfather contracted as a surety unless the latter in accepting the liability of a surety received some consideration for it. is necessary to see how far these principles agree with or deviate from the law of the smṛtis and the digests. The first proposition is in consonance with the law of the smṛtis and of the commentaries like the Mit. Yāj. II. 45 provides<sup>756</sup> that whatever debt is contracted by the head of the joint-family for the necessities of the family has to be paid by the members who take the ancestral estate when the head is dead or goes to a foreign country. The Mit. on Yāj. II. 114 quotes and explains a smṛti text, "Even one (the head or manager of a joint family) can make a mortgage, sale or gift of immovable property in a time of distress, for the necessities of the family and particularly for religious and charitable purposes". What is meant by 'debts in times of distress' and 'kutumbārthe' is explained by Kat. (542-43) quoted in n. 756. This has been the foundation of numerous cases, the first and the most important of which is that of Hunoomanpersaud v. Mussumat Babooe<sup>757</sup> 6 Moore's Indian Appeals p. 393 (P. C.). The 2nd proposition laid down

IV. 3, Mann VIII 166, Visnu Db S. VI. 39 contain similar provisions, all of them employing the word कुटुम्बार्थे (for the purposes or benefit of the family).

757. At pp 423 and 424 of 6 Moore's Indian Appeals the Privy Council employ the following words that have become classical: 'The power of the manager for an infant heir to charge an estate not his own is under the Hindu Law a limited and qualified power. It can only be exercised rightly in a case of need or for the benefit of the estate. The actual pressure on the estate, the danger to be averted or the benefit to be conferred upon it in the particular instance, is the thing to be regarded.... They think that if the lender does inquire and acts honestly, the real existence of an alleged sufficient and reasonably credited necessity is not a condition precedent to the validity of his charge and they do not think that under such circumstances, he is bound to see to the application of the money'. The words 'the actual pressure, the benefit to be conferred' and the remarks about inquiry by the lender are a prolific source of litigation and have given rise to a mass of case law. In L. R. 51 I A 129 at p. 137 the Privy Council themselves say that the distinction made between secured and unsecured debts of the father is anomalous. They give an instance 'A father who is manager borrows a like sum from A and B. To A he gives a mortgage on the family estate containing a personal covenant. To B he gives a simple acknowledgment of loan. B sues and gets a decree, on this decree execution can follow and the estate can be taken, A, suing on his mortgage, cannot recover' (because the debt was not antecedent).

above also follows from several smrtis (such as Yāj. II. 5<sup>7</sup> Visnu Dh. S. VI. 35, Nār. IV. 2, 4, 6) and the rules about immoral debts cited above. But it is difficult to understand why the Privy Council make a distinction between a simple personal money debt of the father and a debt secured by mortgage (as in propositions 2 and 3). The ancient texts and commentaries make no such distinction. Vide 42 Mad 711 at p. 731, 26 Bom. 206 at pp. 217-219 (F.B.) and 60 Bom. 311 (F.B.), where this is pointed out. With the greatest respect it must be said that the distinction is not only without dharmaśāstra authority, but is also anomalous. The distinction between 'antecedent debt' and a debt contracted at the time of executing a mortgage is unknown to the smrtis or digests. The Privy Council had used for the first time in a very early case (viz. Suraj Buns v. Sheo Proshad 6 I. A. 88 at p. 106 = 5 Cal. 148, 171) the words 'antecedent debt'<sup>758</sup> for which there is nothing corresponding in the Sanskrit authorities and round which elaborate arguments came to be centred in numerous later cases. According to the Privy Council (proposition 5) the son's pious duty to pay his father's debt is as absolute during the father's lifetime as after his death. It has been shown above that the duty was not absolute but qualified and limited during the father's life according to the smrtis.

Yāj. II. 52, Kaut. (III. 11) provide<sup>759</sup> that husband and wife, father and son and brothers cannot, as long as they are undivided, stand sureties for each other or be debtors and creditors of each other or be witnesses for each other. The Mit. has a long note on Yāj. II. 52. It shows that a wife may be divided as to estate from the husband if the latter desires (as laid down in Yāj. II. 114) and that in that case there may be the relation of debtor and creditor between them.

758 The proposition laid down in 6 I. A. at p. 106 is 'where joint ancestral property has passed out of a joint family, either under a conveyance executed by a father in consideration of an antecedent debt or in order to raise money for an antecedent debt or under a sale in execution of a decree for the father's debt, his sons, by reason of their duty to pay their father's debts, cannot recover that property, unless they show that the debts were contracted for immoral purposes and that the purchasers had notice that they were so contracted'.

The Mit. further explains the sūtras of Āpastamba<sup>760</sup> (Āp. Dh. S. II. 6. 14. 16-19) which lay down 'there can be no division between husband and wife, for since the day of marriage they have to perform religious rites together, they also participate together in the rewards of merit arising from religious rites and also in the wealth acquired; for this reason when the husband has gone abroad if the wife spends on necessary occasions (out of the family wealth) it is not declared to be theft'. The Mit. explains that the absence of division between husband and wife is restricted to religious rites performed with śrāuta fires or smārta fire and in the rewards of meritorious acts and not in all actions or as to all property. Therefore in other charities where no sacred fire is required (pūrta acts such as constructing a well or a public park) they have separate rights. Vide S. V. pp. 353 for various explanations of Bhāruchi and others on Āp. Dh. S. and V. P. pp. 255-56.

The father is not bound to pay his son's personal debt; the husband is not liable to pay the wife's debt, nor the wife her husband's or son's. But in all these cases if the debt is incurred for the benefit or purposes of the family by the son, the wife or the husband then the father, husband or wife respectively would be liable (Yaj II. 47, Nār. IV. 10-11, Kat. 545, 579)<sup>761</sup>. If the father promised to pay his son's individual debt or if he approved or acquiesced in it he was liable to pay it. Manu VIII. 167, Yaj II. 45, Nār. IV. 12, Br. (S. B. E. 33 p. 329 v. 50), Kat. (545) provide that a debt incurred for the purposes of the family by any one such as the son, brother, uncle, the wife, the mother, the pupil or a servant or a slave even without the consent of the head of the family when he has gone abroad, should be paid by the head of the family. This liability and the liability when the manager of a family contracts a debt for the benefit or necessities of the family arise from agency (implied) or authority. Kaut. (III. 11) holds that the husband may be seized (for work)

if he starts to go abroad without providing for the return of the debt contracted by his wife <sup>762</sup>

The general rule that the husband was not liable to pay the wife's debt had an exception viz the husband was liable for the debts of the wife in the case of cowherds, vintners, actors, washermen and hunters (and the like) whose income depends on their wives and whose household expenses are defrayed by their wives (Yāj II. 48, Viṣṇu Dh S VI. 37, Nār IV. 19) Similarly the rule that the wife was not liable for the husband's debt had certain exceptions, viz a debt of the husband which she promised to pay because he was dying or going abroad or which was contracted jointly with her husband <sup>763</sup> (Yāj II 49, Nār IV 16-17) The Mit. on Yāj. II. 49 answers the objection raised by some that, as according to Manu VIII. 416 (= Udyogaparva 33. 64) the wife, son and slave are without property and whatever they earn is acquired for him to whom they belong, the wife would not be able to pay anything at all. The reply is that this verse of Manu does not mean that a wife or son can own no property at all, but all that it declares is that they have no independent power to dispose of their property.

The order in which persons are liable to pay a man's debts after his death is declared by Yāj II 51, Nār IV. 23, Br. (SB E. vol. 33 p. 329 verse 52), Kāt. (562, 577), Viṣṇu <sup>764</sup> VI 29-30.

Whoever takes the wealth of the deceased (whether a son or a collateral heir) is primarily responsible to pay the debts of the deceased; but if the deceased died without leaving any property, then he who takes his wife has to pay the deceased's debts; if there be no wealth or taker of the deceased's widow, then the son even if he succeeds to no wealth has to pay. This liability may be said to be based on the equitable and moral principle that whoever takes the wealth of the deceased or his widow (over whom the deceased had a sort of dominion) was bound to pay his debts. There appears to be some conflict between the texts; but it is more apparent than real Verses (like Kāt 577) where the son is placed after the taker of wealth and before the taker of the widow refer to a son who has separate and independent wealth of his own and is more wealthy than the taker of the widow (though he himself being disqualified did not succeed to, ancestral wealth) When there is no wealth and there are several sons one of whom is congenitally blind or otherwise incompetent to succeed then the other sons are liable. From the fact that the taker of the widow is made liable for the debts of the first husband it should not be supposed that the ancient sages approved of widow-remarriage. On the contrary they condemned it (vide Manu V. 162), but, as the Mit. (on Yaj. II. 51) remarks, remarriages took place by custom among certain castes and nothing could prevent persons from taking widows as kept mistresses. Therefore as the wife was half of the husband (acc. to Vedic and other passages q. in H. of Dh. vol. II. pp. 428, 584 n.) she was practically the husband's wealth (Nār. IV. 22 expressly says so)<sup>765</sup> and so the taker of the widow was saddled with the obligation to pay the debts of the deceased. This sentiment continued to modern times and in the Bombay Presidency the Legislature had to declare (by Bombay Act VII of 1866, sec 4) that 'no person who has married a widow shall merely by reason of such marriage, be liable for any of the debts of any prior husband of such widow'. The Vaijayanti on Visnu Dh. S. VI 30 quotes Yaj. II. 51 and Nār. IV. 23 and explains them differently. According to it the word 'putra' (in Yāj II. 51) is qualified by all the three adjectives viz 'rikthagrāha', 'yosidgrāha' (one who is married) and 'ananyā-śritadravya' (one who has no wife nor child and one who has taken no ancestral wealth, either because he does not desire it or because none exists). Therefore according to it among sons, the son that takes ancestral wealth has to pay the debts of the father, on failure of such a son when some of the sons are married and some are not, the married ones have to repay ancestral debts and lastly when there are no married sons the one that is wifeless, childless and also without wealth has to pay them.

Niksepa (deposit). The words niksepa, upanidhi and nyāsa are sometimes said to be synonyms (as done by Amara)<sup>766</sup>, though several ancient works define them separately. According to Yāj II. 65 upanidhi is the deposit of an article enclosed in a box or the like made with another without telling him of the contents of the box. Yāj II. 67 holds nyāsa and niksepa to be different from upanidhi. Nārada<sup>767</sup> as quoted in the Mit. on Yāj. II. 65 defines upanidhi as the deposit of an article in a sealed receptacle without counting it in the presence of the person to whom it is entrusted and without telling him what the receptacle contains, while a niksepa is a deposit entrusted to a man after counting the articles in his presence. Manu VIII 149 (= Vas. 16. 18), Kaut. III. 12 hold niksepa and upanidhi to be distinct. A verse quoted by Kṣīrasvāmin on Amara defines nyāsa as an open deposit and niksepa as the delivery of some goods to an artist or craftsman for being worked up or manufactured. Nār. (V. 1 and 5) defines niksepa as 'the deposit of one's articles with another through confidence, while upanidhi is defined in the same way as Yāj II. 65. Viśvarūpa<sup>768</sup> defines nyāsa as an open deposit for safe custody and niksepa as delivery of one's article to another for handing over to a third. Kāt. (592) makes <sup>769</sup> upanidhi a generic term for all bailments such as a sold article remaining in the hands of the vendor, a deposit, a pledge, bailment to one for delivery to another, loan of article for temporary use, goods handed over for sale to an agent. The Mit. on Yāj. II 67 defines nyāsa as handing over to some member in the house an article in the absence of the head of the house for delivery to the head of the house and nikṣepa as a deposit in the presence of the deposittee himself. The V. P. p 280 briefly distinguishes the three as noted below.<sup>770</sup>

Nikṣepa or upanidhi was a bailment made in trust and differed from an ādhi in this that the former was not given by way of security for a debt or for collecting interest but in confidence for safe custody.<sup>771</sup> Br. (SBE vol. 33 p. 332 verse 2) says that such a deposit is made with another when one is leaving one's home, or through fear of the king or for depriving one's kinsmen.<sup>772</sup> Manu VIII 179 (=Nār. V. 2) says that one should entrust a deposit to a person who is born of a good family, is well-conducted, knows dharma, speaks the truth, has a large family, is wealthy and straightforward. The person with whom a deposit is made generally receives no personal benefit from it; hence the smṛtis (such as Br. in SBE 33 p. 333 verses 6-8) extol the holder<sup>773</sup> of a deposit made in trust to be as meritorious as one who makes gifts of gold or other inferior metals or clothes and condemn the misappropriation of a deposit or the losing of it through negligence as very sinful. The idea is that no one is bound to accept a deposit, but when a person accepts it, his primary duty is to preserve it with care and the next duty is to return it at the time agreed or on demand. The obligation arises from the trust reposed in a person. The rights of the bailee are limited as compared to those of the mortgagee or pledgee, but the very fact of his custody in trust clothes him with certain rights. The amount of care required of the depositary is the same as in the case of an ādhu, viz he is to take the same care of it as he takes of his own goods and is not liable if the deposit is lost (along with his own property) through act of God or the king or is stolen by thieves (Manu VIII. 189, Yāj. II. 66, Nār. V. 9 and 12, Br. in S.B.E. 33 p. 333, verse 10, Kāt. 593).<sup>774</sup> In the Mrcchakatika Cāradatta accepts liability for the loss of the ornaments deposited with him by Vasantasena, though they were stolen, because of his high sense of chivalry and of his idea that proper care was not taken by him or his friend. But Nār V 9 is careful to add that the loss through vis major or through theft must be real and not fraudulently brought about.<sup>775</sup> Nār. V. 6 and Br (in SBE 33 p. 334 verse 14) state that a deposit may be made in the presence of witnesses or without them, that it should be returned in the same way and condition in which it was made and that if there is a dispute, it may be settled by ordeal (when there are no witnesses).<sup>776</sup> The article deposited must be returned in the same condition (as regards seal &c.) in which it was handed over (Yāj II 65). It must also be returned to the man himself who made the deposit and not to his co-owners (Manu VIII 185, Br. in SBE 33 p. 333 verse 9).<sup>777</sup> He is estopped from recognising the title of any one except the depositor, as in section 116 of the Indian Evidence Act. But if the bailor be dead the bailee can return it of his own accord without demand to the co-owners (Manu VIII. 186 = Nār. V. 10). In doing so however he must not return it to one of several heirs, but to all or in the presence of all. The loss of a deposit may be due to the fact that the bailee consumes it by using it, or to the bailee's negligence or to his ignorance. In these cases the bailee was made to reimburse the bailor for the loss. But Kāt. (597)<sup>778</sup> makes a difference, viz. when a bailee consumes the deposit by use he should be made to pay the price with interest, when he loses it through negligence he is to pay only the price (but without interest) and if he loses through ignorance, then he is to pay a little less (i. e. less by one-fourth) than the price. Vide Br. (S B E vol. 33 p. 333 verse 11) and Nār. V. 8. If a bailor knowing the proposed bailee to be a careless man deposits his goods with him, the bailee is not liable even if the goods are lost from any cause whatever (Kāt. 599).<sup>779</sup> If immediately on demand by the depositor the bailee does not return the thing deposited or it is lost after demand from any cause whatever (including act of God or king), the bailee has to return the thing or the price of the thing (when lost) and also is liable to be fined by the king in the same amount (Yāj. II. 66, Nār. V. 7). If the bailee makes use of the article bailed without the permission of the bailor, he should be fined by the king and should be made to return the thing bailed with interest (Yāj. II. 67, Nār. V. 8). In the Rāj. T. (VIII. 124-157) occurs the story of a person who had deposited one lakh of dināras with a merchant and had withdrawn some money from time to time. It further states that, when the balance was demanded, the merchant furnished a statement of accounts giving a list of fictitious items of withdrawals for many years with interest and showing that very little of the deposit was left. The king brought home the fraud to the merchant and ordered that the original deposit being used by the merchant should bear interest.

Kāt. (506) provides that when a deposit, a balance of interest, purchase price (not paid though the article be delivered to vendee), or sale price (article sold being retained by vendor though price is paid) is not returned or paid when demand is made, it carries interest at 5 per cent (from the date of demand).<sup>780</sup> Manu VIII. 191 (which is almost the same as Nār. V. 13) provides that where a bailee does not return the deposit though demanded or where a person without making a deposit claims it from a person, both are to be punished as a thief by the king and to be made to pay a fine equal in amount to the price of the bailed article (claimed). The deposit has to be taken back at the proper time by the depositor and the bailee has to avoid returning it at an improper time; if the latter returns at an improper time he should be made to pay a fine double of the value of the thing<sup>781</sup> (Kāt. 601).

Yāj. II. 67, Nār. V. 14, Br.<sup>782</sup> (S. B. E. vol. 33 p. 334 verse 15) extend these rules about niksepa to other kinds of bailments viz. to yācitaka (an article such as an ornament borrowed from a man on a festive occasion), anvāhita (what is handed over to a third man and is the property of another and has been pledged with a man), nyāsa, upanidhi, śilpinyāsa (giving an article such as gold to an artisan like a goldsmith for preparing an ear-ring or the like), pratinyāsa (mutual deposit). Some of the rules about yācitaka are stated above

(pp. 426-427). Kaut.<sup>783</sup> III. 12 states that a yūcīlaka or avakṛīta (lent on hire) article should be returned in the same condition in which it was received. If lost through act of God or king or through theft (after taking proper care) the depositoe would not be liable. Kat. (610) provides<sup>784</sup> that he who having taken the loan of an article for use does not deliver it even on demand should be restrained (by the owner) and forcibly made to return it and fined by the king if he does not return it; he should be made to pay the price with interest (if the thing be lost after demand). If the loan of an article was taken for a specified period or for a particular occasion or purpose and a demand for return be made in the middle and the article is not returned when demanded, the person taking the loan would not be made to pay the price: but if a person who has taken on loan an article does not return it after the period fixed has expired or the purpose is served, the borrower must offer to the owner the price if the article be destroyed or lost and if he does not return even after demand (when the period has ended) the borrower would have to pay the price with interest.

Kat. (609) states a reasonable counter-exception to the rule in 606 viz. 'when the owner of an article borrowed by another is likely to sustain loss if the article borrowed were not returned on demand, then the borrower should be made to deliver it even though the time fixed has not ended or the purpose of the loan was only half fulfilled'.

There are some special rules about śilpinyāsa also. Kat. (603-604) provides that if an artisan or craftsman retains an article delivered to him beyond the time that was settled (or

From the fact that Kāt. 596 (quoted above in n. 778) employs the expression 'dāpyah sa eva tat' (he alone who misappropriates or causes loss of a deposit by negligence), the words of Gaut. XII 39 (quoted above under ādā) and the fact that niksepa is a title distinct from rnādūna (under which alone the liability of sons, grandsons, and great-grandsons is expressly declared) it follows that sons are not liable for the misappropriation or loss of a deposit or article bailed to their father or other ancestor provided they have not themselves joined or helped in the embezzlement or loss. This is made clear by Haradatta on Gaut. XII 39, the Vivādacintāmani and the Vivādacandra quoted below <sup>786</sup>.

It is interesting to note that Nār. <sup>787</sup> V. 15 places on the same level (as to liability for loss) with the deposittee and the like the man who takes in his charge a minor that has a good deal of wealth i.e. the person undertaking the position of the guardian of a minor's property has to take as much care of it as of his own and is liable in the same circumstances as a

788. The British India Courts have been very much exercised over the question of the liability of ancestral property in the hands of the son for the obligations incurred by the father by his misconduct or embezzlement either as agent or manager for another or as guardian of a minor's property. It would follow from the passages quoted in n. 786 that ancestral property in the hands of the sons is not liable, acc. to some of our digests, if the father used or lost a deposit or loaned article by his negligence or mismanaged a minor's property. It is firmly established that the son is not liable for a debt incurred by the father in circumstances which would render the father liable to a criminal prosecution. Vide Toshanpal Singh v District Judge of Agra 61 I. A. 350. In the latest case on the point, Govindprasad v. Raghunathprasad 41 Bom L. R. 589 (F.B.) the exemption is carried further and it is recognized that as to the exemption of the son for 'avyāvahārika' debts of the father, there are many cases which cannot be reconciled, that it is repugnant to good sense to construe ancient texts in the light of a system of criminal jurisprudence developed long after and that the correct rule is to hold that 'the son can claim immunity when he proves that the debt of the father was of a character which was illegal, dishonest or immoral (p 602)' though difficult cases may arise in the application of this rule. It would be far beyond the scope of this work to cite or discuss the other numerous decisions.

CHAPTER XVII

ASVĀMIVIKRAYA (sale by one not the owner).

The different modes of the sources of ownership have already been referred to (H. of Dh. vol. II. pp. 130 ff) and will be referred to again under dāyabhāga. According to Nār. VII. 1 and Br. (SBE vol. 33 p. 335 verse 2) when<sup>789</sup> a person, who holds an open deposit, a sealed deposit, an article bailed for delivery to another, stolen property, an article borrowed for some festival, a pledge, or property lost by a stranger and found (by him), sells it in secret (or behind the back of the owner) it is to be considered as a sale by one who is not the rightful owner. Vyāsa has a similar verse. The word 'sells' is only illustrative and includes gifts and pledges. Similarly as most sales by one not the owner are clandestinely brought about, Br. employs the words 'in secret' but even if the sale is effected openly the same consequences may follow. The same rules will apply to an article lost by the owner and found by a stranger. Kāt. (612) provides<sup>790</sup> that a sale, gift, or pledge, made by one who is not the owner, should be rescinded (by the king or judge), Manu VIII. 199 and Nār. (q. by Sm. C. II. p. 213, V. P. p. 291) and others say the same thing. Yāj. II. 168, Nār. VII. 2 provide that the owner is entitled to recover his property from the person that purchases from one who is not the owner. If the buyer purchases an article not in the open market, then he is liable for punishment; if he purchases from one who could have no means of possessing the thing sold (such as a slave without the master's consent) or for a very inadequate price or at a very unusual hour (at midnight or the like) or from bad characters then he is to be punished as a thief (Yāj. II. 168, Visṇu Dh. S. V. 166, Nār. VII. 3, Manu VIII. 202, Br. in SBE vol. 33 p. 336 verse 11). Such a sale is a fraudulent one. If the buyer purchases (through ignorance) in market overt from one who is not the owner, he incurs no blame (no punishment), but he may have to hand over the article to the real owner (Visṇu Dh. S. V. 164-166).<sup>791</sup> The purchaser from one not the real owner can free himself by producing the vendor (called mūla in Manu VIII. 202, Br. and Kāt.) and should not attempt to conceal from whom he came by the thing, otherwise he would be liable to be punished equally with the vendor as a thief (Nār. VII. 4). Br. (SBE 33 p. 335 verse 3), Manu VIII. 201 and Yāj. II. 170 say that when the vendor has been produced by the vendee, then the latter is not to be proceeded against, but the vendor has to litigate with the real owner who has lost his property and when the vendor loses the suit he has to pay the price to the buyer and a fine to the king and the owner gets his property back.<sup>792</sup> If the vendor has gone abroad adequate time should be granted to the purchaser to produce him (Kāt. 615). The purchaser in order to escape blame (punishment) has to produce the vendor and if that cannot be done owing to the vendor's absence he has to prove that he purchased<sup>793</sup> openly (Br. in SBE 33 p. 335 v. 4, Manu VIII. 202, Kāt. 615, 618-619). If he cannot do any of these two, then the purchaser would be liable to pay the price to the real owner as claimed and a fine to the king. Manu VIII. 198 prescribes that one who sells without being the owner but being a member of the owner's family should be fined 600 paṇas, while a vendor unconnected with the real owner's family should be dealt with as a thief. The same rule applies to a vendor selling another's article through ignorance or mistake and one doing so with full knowledge. The person who has lost a chattel and claims it from the finder is described as nāstika<sup>794</sup> in Kaut III, 16, Manu VIII 202, Kāt. (614) and elsewhere, the word being derived from nasta (what is lost). The idea is that openly purchasing an article in the presence of a number of people for an adequate price negatives fraudulent intent and leads to the inference of a purchase in good faith and such a purchaser even though he may have to part with the chattel to the real owner when the latter proves his title, incurs no blame and is entitled to recover from the vendor, if he has to surrender the article, the price paid by him. When a person claims a lost article as his he has first to prove his title and possession by evidence (such as that of his kinsmen or a document &c.) and that he had not sold or donated or abandoned it;<sup>795</sup> after he has proved his title the purchaser is called upon to prove his purchase as honest by evidence i. e. by producing the vendor or by showing that he purchased openly and for adequate price (Kāt 613, Yāj. II. 170). When this is done the purchaser escapes blame but has to surrender the article to the true owner. Kāt. (616) adds<sup>796</sup> that in the case of 'asvāmi-vikraya' no other means of proof whether divine or human (except the evidence of witnesses such as kinsmen) is declared to be proper. Acc to the V. P p 293 other evidence and even ordeals may be admissible in sale without ownership, but the Sm. C. p. 216 and the Madanaratna say that on account of the express words of Kāt. this is not possible. If the owner who alleges the loss of an article fails to prove his title and prior possession he has to pay a fine to the king equal to  $\frac{1}{16}$ th of the price of the article. Kāt. (620) and Kaut. (III. 16) state that on failure to prove his title the person claiming<sup>797</sup> the article as his should be fined as a thief, in order to deter (others) from taking undue advantage (i. e. preferring false claims). provide that when the real owner finds his lost article in the hands of a stranger he should get him apprehended by the royal officers (such as chauroddharanika, acc. to Mit.), but that if the owner thinks that much time will be lost or distance will have to be traversed (for going to officers) he should himself seize the person and bring him before the court. The Mit explains that the buyer should have the seller arrested and, if the seller is dead or gone abroad, that he should hand over the article to the real owner. Where a purchase has been made in the midst of a row of traders to the knowledge of the king's officers, but from a vendor whose habitation was unknown or where (after the purchase) the vendor dies, the real owner (of the thing sold by one not the owner) will recover his own property after paying half the price to the purchaser, since the rule of justice in such a case so requires, because to purchase from one (whose habitation is) not known is a fault (in the purchaser) and not taking proper care (of one's goods) is also a fault in the real owner (Br. in S. B. E. vol. 33 pp. 335-36 verses 7-9 or Kāt 621-623)<sup>799</sup>. Marici (q by Aparārka p. 775, Sm. C. II. p. 217) has similar provisions. Br. (S. B. E. vol. 33 p. 335 verse<sup>800</sup> 6) provides that in a suit where there is no evidence the king shall take into consideration the character of the litigants and give a decision according as the credibility of the parties is equal, greater or less.

The rules under 'asvāmivikraya' are based on the doctrine that no one can confer a better title to the goods sold than he himself has (vide section 27 of the Indian Sale of Goods Act IX of 1930). The verses recognise an exception in cases where both purchaser and the real owner are equally at fault.

CHAPTER XVIII

SAMBHŪYA-SAMUTTHĀNA <sup>801</sup>

(A joint undertaking, partnership)

Where traders or others (like actors, musicians or artisans) carry on a business jointly it is termed a partnership (Nār. VI 1 and Kāt. 624).<sup>802</sup> Br (SBE vol. 33 p. 336 verses 1-2) says that a man should carry on a joint business with other persons of good family, that are clever, active, intelligent (or educated), familiar with coins, skilled in (controlling) expenditure and income, honest and valiant (or enterprising) and that joint undertakings like trade should not be carried on by prudent men with persons (partners) who are weak or lazy or afflicted with disease or are unlucky or destitute (of money).<sup>803</sup> The meaning is not that all the above qualities must exist in all partners, but that according to the nature of the undertaking some of these qualities will be absolutely necessary Nār. VI. 2-3, Yāj. II. 259, Br. (SBE vol. 33 pp. 336-337 verses 3 and 4) prescribe that the expenses, loss, profit or work of those who jointly lend gold, grain or liquids shall be according to the capital put in by each.<sup>804</sup> The duty of each is to act honestly towards the others, whether they are present or absent, 801 सम्भूय is the indeclinable past participle of the root भू with सम् and means 'having formed together or come together' and समुत्थान means 'undertaking'. So the two words mean 'undertaking in which are joined together' (labour, capital or both) in sales or purchases of various commodities.<sup>805</sup> Br. (SBE vol 33 p 337 verses 5-7) provides that whatever<sup>806</sup> property one partner may give (or transfer), being authorised to do so by the rest, or whatever document (or transaction) he may cause to be executed, all that is to be deemed as done by all partners; the partners themselves are declared to be the judges (the deciding persons) or witnesses among themselves in a doubtful case and in case of fraud, provided they are not already at feud among themselves. It follows from this that by entering into an agreement of partnership, each partner agrees that he submits to the decision of the other partners in cases of doubt. If any one from them is found out to have practised fraud on the others in sales or purchases he should clear himself by special oaths or ordeals. Yāj II. 260, Nār. VI 5,<sup>807</sup> Br. (SBE vol. 33 p. 337 verse 9) provide that each partner is responsible to make good what has been lost through his negligence or in consequence of his acting against the instructions of the others or of his acting without their authority or consent. If any one of the partners saves partnership property from act of God or the king or thieves (or similar calamity) by his own exertions he is to be awarded (as his special share) one tenth of the property saved (Yāj II 260, Kat 631,<sup>808</sup> Nār VI 6) If any partner is brooked or fraudulent the rest may expel him without giving him any profit; a partner who is incompetent to work (personally) should get the partnership business done through another (Yāj II 265) Yāj. goes to a foreign country and dies, his share should be taken by his heirs (son &c.) or by his agnates or cognates; in default of these the other partners may take it and in default of them the king may take it after waiting for ten years to see whether any heir or claimant turns up. Kātyāyana<sup>809</sup> states that in the case of artisans who together carry out some work, those among them who are directors of new methods get four shares, those who are adepts in the craft three shares, those who have studied the craft two shares and the apprentices only one share. Whatever is given to strangers by all together (i.e. by the partnership firm) should be claimed back by the firm as such; any single partner should not claim it; if he does so he will lose his share of the profit<sup>810</sup>. Some rules are prescribed by Br. that among dancers, singers and musicians, the singers get equal shares, while those who beat the tune only get half share each; similarly in the joint construction of a mansion or a temple the head of the artisans gets two shares. An artisan<sup>811</sup> (śilpm) is one who manufactures or works upon gold, silver, yarn, wood, stone and hides or one who has mastered one of the (64) arts. If a king has ordered a band of adventurers from among his subjects to make a plundering expedition in enemy country, Br. (in V. R. p. 125) and Kāt. (633-635)<sup>812</sup> prescribe that the king gets one tenth ( $\frac{1}{10}$  acc. to Br.), the leader gets four shares in the remainder, the valiant among his followers three shares, the more capable two shares and the rest one each and that if any one of them is caught the money for his ransom should be contributed by all according to their shares. When no agreement is made as to shares in property by traders, husbandmen, thieves and artisans similar rules apply<sup>813</sup>.

It is interesting to note that the ancient Dharmasūtras of Gautama, Āpastamba and Baudhāyana are silent about partnerships, that Manu (VIII. 206-210) lays down rules about the distribution of fees among the priests at a sacrifice and that in one verse (VIII. 211) he remarks that the same principles are to be applied in all matters where men work conjointly (i. e. each is to be paid according to the importance and volume of the work he does). The rules about sacrificial priests in Manu are: If a priest chosen to do work in a sacrifice abandons his work a share only of the fee in proportion to the work (done) shall be given to him by those conjointly working with him; if a priest leaves after the fees are distributed (as at the time of midday extraction of Soma in the great sacrifices like Jyotiṣṭoma) then he keeps the whole of it and shall cause the remaining work to be performed by another (who will be paid by the sacrificer, acc. to Medhātithi). When specific fees are prescribed to be paid to individual priests at the performance of the several parts in a complicated sacrifice, the individual priests are to receive them and all are not to participate; as for example, the adhvaryu takes the chariot, the brahmā priest takes the horse in Agnyādhāna, the hotr also takes the horse and the udgātṛ the cart used in purchasing the soma plant. The four chief priests are entitled to one half of the fees, the first group of their assistants will get half of what the chief ones get, the 2nd group  $\frac{1}{3}$  and the fourth  $\frac{1}{4}$ . Nār. VI. 10 and Br. (in V. R. p. 120) state that sacrificial priests are of three kinds viz. one hereditary and honoured by the ancestors of the sacrificer, one appointed by the sacrificer himself and one who performs the functions of his own accord through friendship and that (VI. 9 and 11) if an officiating priest forsakes a sacrificer who is free from any fault and who has caused no harm or if a sacrificer abandons a priest who is faultless, they both shall be punished but this does not apply to the third kind of priest. Śāṅkha-Likhita, as quoted in V. R. pp. 117 and 120-121 and Sm. C. II. p. 188, give elaborate rules about sacrificial priests dying or leaving work and the fines to be imposed on them. Kaut. III. 14 lays down rules for the receipt of fees by priests when they leave off at different stages of such solemn sacrifices as the Agnistoma and also when the sacrificer dies without completing the sacrifice. The Vy. Nir. (pp. 284-285) quotes a few sentences from Kaut. III. 14.

The above shows that in the times of the ancient sūtras, secular partnerships had not attained sufficient importance and

CHAPTER XIX

DATTĀNAPAKARMA (resumption of gift).

This title is also called dattāpradānka<sup>815</sup> (lit that which is concerned with the non-delivery or resumption of a gift). Nār. VII. 1 defines it as that title where a man desires to resume what has been given by him because it has been improperly (in a manner opposed to law) given by him. Nār. (VII. 2) divides this title into four topics viz what may not be given, what may be given, what are valid gifts and what are invalid gifts. Nār. VII. 3-5 and Br (SBE vol. 33 p. 342 verse 2) state that there are eight things that cannot be given (adeya) viz an anvāhuta, a deposit, yūctaka, a pledge, property jointly owned with others, a deposit, son and wife, the entire property in the case of one who has offspring, and what has been already promised to another. Vide Kaut. III. 16, Yāj. II. 175<sup>816</sup> for a similar but more compendious statement, and Kāt. 638. These cannot be given either because they are not one's absolute property or because the gift of them is forbidden by the sages. In the case of even those who hold that one has ownership over one's son or wife, the gift of them is not possible because it is forbidden, just as though one owns rice, yavas and mūṣa beans, one cannot make offerings of māsa because the veda prohibits their use in the words 'ayajñiṣā vai māsāḥ' (q by Sabara on Jai. VI. 3. 20). So son and wife cannot be given on account of the prohibition in the smrtis. The general rule of what may be given is stated

815 मेधातिथि on मनु VIII. 214 explains it as अपक्रिया क्रियापायः तस्य तत्राप्रतिषेधः । दानमेवं न चछितं भवति । एवैव दाने स्थितिविति यावत् । कथं प्रतिश्रुत्यादीवमाने धर्मो न नश्यतीति नैवा शङ्का कर्तव्या । एव एवात्र धर्मो यत्र दीयते दत्तं च प्रत्यादीयते । So acc. to this दत्तस्यानपाकर्म means 'not improper abstraction of what is given or promised to be given' The mitta on या II. 175 explains both दत्तापदानिक and दत्तानपाकर्म as follows : दत्तरय अयदानं पुनर्हरणं यस्मिन्दानारूपे तद् दत्तापदानिकं नाम स्वयहारपदम् । .. दत्तस्य अनपाकर्म अनुनरादानं यत्र दानारूपे विवादपदे तद् दत्तानपाकर्म . Acc to this दत्तानपाकर्म means 'that in which what is donated cannot be taken back because the gift is according to law' (also impliedly the converse of it)

by Yāj II 175, Nār. VII. 6 and Br. (SBE 33 p 342 verse 3), Kāt 640 viz. whatever is absolutely one's own excepting that required for the maintenance of one's family may be given<sup>817</sup> Manu (XI. 9-10), Nār. VII. 6 and Br. (quoted in H. of Dh. vol II pp. 850-851 n. 2007) condemn those who stint their family or servants in order to be charitable to others and say that he who does so would incur sin. Manu XI. 7 (=Nār. VII. 7), Vas VIII. 10, Yāj I. 124, Visnu Dh S. 59.8 prescribe that he alone who has property sufficient to provide for three years' maintenance for those whom he is bound to maintain or has more wealth than that may drink soma i. e. may engage in a soma sacrifice (which costs much)

Nār. VII. 8 states that there are seven kinds of datta gifts, i. e. gifts or transfers that cannot be resumed because they are made by a person in full possession of his faculties and of things that belong to him absolutely and are not forbidden. They are: the price paid for goods bought, wages, what is paid for pleasure (derived from dancing, singing, wrestling), a gift through affection, a gift made in gratitude, money paid to a bride's kinsmen, and gifts for spiritual or charitable purposes. Acc. to Br.<sup>818</sup> (SBE vol. 33 p. 343 verse 8) there are eight kinds of valid gifts. Nār. VII. 9-11 mentions sixteen kinds of invalid gifts, which have already been set out (in H. of Dh. vol. II p. 887 where Gaut. V. 22 that specifies some invalid gifts has also been cited). Vide Kāt. 647. The difference between gifts of adeya and adatta gifts is this. In the first class of cases, the gifts being forbidden are entirely null and void, while adatta gifts are those that are voidable and may be set aside by the court on the application of the donor himself, because, of the incapacity of the donor due to intoxication, lunacy, old age, minority, mistake etc. Kāt 646 and Kaut (III. 13) state that if a man<sup>819</sup> is in danger of life and promises the gift of all his property to whomsoever may save him, he may renege from the promise and pay only what an expert or arbitrator may award. Kat. (650-651) defines utkoca (bribe)<sup>820</sup> as what is obtained in these ways viz. by giving (or threatening to give false) information about a person as a thief or a felon, or as one who breaks the rules of decent conduct, or as an adulterous person, or by pointing out those who are of bad character or by spreading false reports about a person. He further provides that a person offering the bribe should not be fined, but the intermediary may be fined and if the person accepting the bribe has been appointed to an office by the king he should be made to return the bribe and pay a fine eleven times as much to the king. But Kat. adds that where a person, not holding a public appointment obtains some gratification for work done, he would not be held guilty and would not have to return what he received as a reward or in gratitude. Hārta holds out<sup>821</sup> other-worldly evil consequences for not actually delivering what is promised or for resuming what has been already delivered as a gift viz the person doing so falls into Hell and is born as one of the lower animals and adds that what is promised as a gift for a religious purpose in so many words but is not actually delivered becomes a debt in this world and the next i. e. the king should make the promisor give the promised gift and should inflict a fine. Kāt. (642) provides<sup>822</sup> that a man who 'having voluntarily promised a gift to a brāhmana does not deliver it should be made to render it as a debt and should be awarded the lowest amercement and further (verse 566) that if a man promises a gift for a religious purpose whether in good health or in disease, his son (or other heir) should be made to pay it if the promisor died without actually delivering it. These verses show that in two cases gifts though not completed by delivery of possession were enforced by ancient Indian courts viz. when the gift was promised to a brāhmana or when the gift was declared to be made for a religious and charitable purpose. The last verse contains the beginnings of the idea of a will, since the mere declaration of the intention of a man to give for a religious purpose is made enforceable after his death against his son or heir. But this germ could not evolve into a full-fledged law of testamentary succession on account of the practice of adoption, the requirement that a gift must be accompanied by present possession and the incidents of the joint family on account of which no single member could alienate family property except for legal necessity and which involved the doctrine that on the death of a member his rights ended and passed by survivorship to other members. Br. expressly states this.<sup>823</sup> But a gift though promised need not be paid or carried out if the promisee turns out to be an irreligious man (Gaut. V. 21). Nār. VII 12 and Br. provide that he who enjoys an invalid gift and he who makes a forbidden gift are both to be punished by the king.<sup>824</sup>

In H. of Dh. vol. II. p. 841 it has been stated that gift consists in the cessation of the ownership of the donor in a thing and creating ownership in another. This latter is effected by acceptance (svikāra) by the donee. Acceptance may be made mentally, vocally or physically. For the formalities accompanying a gift such as sprinkling water on the thing donated and the offering of a dakṣiṇā to the donee, vide H. of Dh. vol. II. p. 855. Some writers like Jimūtavāhana dispute the statement<sup>825</sup> that acceptance is necessary to constitute a gift. The Dayabhāga states that by the mere relinquishment of a thing by the donor (i.e. by the activity of the donor himself) the ownership of the thing passes to the person intended as the donee, that the ownership of the other man does not arise by acceptance, that though ownership in the donee does arise by the mere activity of the donor, yet acceptance (svīkāra) which is an activity of the donee makes the thing donated capable of being disposed off by the donee as he likes on account of his idea 'this is mine'. The Dayabhāga indulges in casuistical reasoning in support of its view, which it is not necessary to set out here. But the remarks of the Dayabhāga are not satisfactory, since it does not adequately explain what is to happen if the intended donee refuses the gift. On its hypothesis ownership has passed to the donee without acceptance being necessary. If the donee refuses, or dies without accepting, who is the owner? Can it be said that the thing becomes the property of whosoever first takes it up and that the donor cannot prevent a third person taking it up? The V. P. pp. 426-428 severely criticizes the Dayabhāga for its views.

VETANASYĀNAPĀKARMA, ABHYUPETYĀSŪRŪSĀ AND SVĀMIPĀLAVIVĀDA

(Non-payment of wages, non-rendition of service, dispute between master and herdsman).

The question about the payment or non-payment of wages to those whose services are hired for work is dealt with under this title ( Nār IX. 1 ) According to Br. there<sup>826</sup> are three titles of law in which the question of hiring enters, viz. abhyupetyā-sūtrūsā, vetanasyānapākarma and svānupālavivāda. Manu and Kaut. do not treat of the first of these three Here vetanasyānapākarma will be first dealt with, then abhyupetyā-sūtrūsā and svānupālavivāda will be separately treated of. All these three topics are concerned with masters and servants or employers and employees The rules are different according as the contract of service is for a fixed term or for an indefinite period or is for executing a definite piece of work and according as the rate of wages or the hire is fixed beforehand or is not fixed. We have further to remember that the rules are spread over a large period i. e. from about 6th century B. C. to about 500 A. D. (from Gaut. and Āp. to Br. and Kāt ) The rules deal with the liabilities of both masters and servants Nār. IX. 2 states that the wages agreed upon may be paid at the beginning, in the middle or at the end of the work undertaken. But when no wages are settled beforehand Nār. IX. 3, Yāj. II. 194, Kaut. III. <sup>827</sup> 13 provide that the (agent of a) trader, the cowherd, the husbandman should receive a tenth part respectively of the profit, of the milk and of the crops. This latter according to the Sm. C. II p. 201 holds good where the crops are raised easily But Br.

[S. B. E. vol. 33 p. 345<sup>828</sup> verse 13] lays down the rule that if the employer supplies food and clothing to the servant, the latter should get a fifth part of the crops (if no wages are settled) or a third part if the servant is given no food nor clothing by the employer. When no wages are settled Vṛddha-Manu prescribes that proper wages will be determined by experts in carrying<sup>829</sup> maritime trade (and other traders) who take into consideration the time, the place and the purpose. Even when the wages were settled the employer could give less or more according to his pleasure in certain cases viz when a servant or agent acts against the restrictions of time and place prescribed by his employer and consequently the profit is much less, the employer may give less than what is agreed but if the agent brings more profit (than expected) he may give more (Yāj II. 195). When two or more employees undertake to finish a work but cannot finish it (owing to ill-health or similar obstacle) each of them should be given the wages appropriate to the portion done by each (as settled by an arbitrator), but if the whole work is finished by them the agreed wages must be paid to all of them together (Yāj. II. 196). Yāj. II. 193, Nār. IX. 4 and<sup>830</sup> Br. state that it is the duty of the employed or servant to take as much care of the utensils supplied by the employer as he would take of his own, and that he should not act in that respect wantonly (or crookedly) and that if he did so his wages would become less. If a hired servant, after receiving his wages, does not do the work agreed to be done though able to do so, he should be made to repay to the employer the wages received and a fine equal to double of the wages and if he had not received wages but left the work without cause he should be made to pay to the employer an amount equal to the wages (Yāj II 193, Nār. IX. 5, Br. in <sup>as</sup> S. B. E. vol. 33 p. 345 verse 15). Kaut. (III. 14) prescribes a fine of 12 panas for a hired servant who does not do the work undertaken even after receiving the wages and that he should be compelled to do the work. Nār. IX. 5 and Kāt. 657 provide that the king should compel him to do the work and then the agreed wages may be paid to him; but if he does not do it he should be fined <sup>832</sup>. The fine in such cases acc. to Vṛddha-Manu was 200 panas. Manu VIII 215 and Br. (S. B. E. 33 p. 345 verse 16) and Matsya 227. 9 provide that a hired servant, who though not ill, does not arrogantly do the work agreed should be fined eight krśnalas and would not get wages at all. This applies where a substantial portion is left undone, but where only a little of the work undertaken is left undone then the servant is not to be fined, but he would lose all the wages (Manu VIII 217). But if a servant falls ill, then he may do the work after he becomes well and would get the agreed wages even if a long time may have elapsed (Manu VIII. 216). Kaut. (III. 14) also provides that if the servant suffers from illness or is overwhelmed by a calamity, concession may be given to him or he may offer a substitute. The Āp. Dh. S. (II. 11. 28. 2-4) prescribes that if a husbandman who is not a slave but is hired for work) gives up the work or a cowherd acts similarly he should be punished with flogging and the animals handed over to the cowherd should be taken back from him. This may have been the ancient law, but it was modified in later ages. Kaut. (III. 13) states that if the employer does not pay the wages he should be fined six panas or a tenth part of the proper wages or the wages agreed upon and if the hired person denies the receipt of wages (though he really received them) he should be fined twelve panas or a fifth part of the wages <sup>833</sup>. Kaut. (III. 14) further provides that in the contract of service it may be provided that the master is not to employ another servant or that the servant is not to work for another master during the period fixed.

Yāj. II. 197, Nār. IX. 9, Kāt. 659, Visnu Dh. S.<sup>834</sup> V. 155-156 provide that if through the fault of a carrier (and not through act of God or the king) goods entrusted to him for carrying are lost or become deteriorated, he should be made to pay for the loss. Vṛddha-Manu specifies that if the goods are lost through the negligence of the servant he has to pay only the price, but if through spite then he should be made to pay double the price. If a hired servant (such as a palanquin-bearer or an armed guard) causes obstruction (by refusing to work) at the time of starting for an auspicious matter (such as a marriage), he should be made to pay double the amount of the wages agreed upon and another servant may be engaged (Yāj. II. 197, Nār. IX. 8, Kāt. 658, Vṛddha-Manu in V R. p. 163). Yāj. II. 198, Nār. IX. 7 provide that if a servant abandons his work (as a bearer or guard) after a start is made (when not seized by illness) he should be made to pay  $\frac{1}{4}$ ,  $\frac{1}{2}$  or the whole of the wages according to the distance traversed and a master abandoning a servant in similar circumstances should be made to pay similarly.

If a servant agrees to take a lump sum for some work to be done for a certain period and leaves the work before the period elapses he would lose all the wages, but if he leaves in the middle of the period through the fault of the employer (such as scolding without any fault of the servant) he would be entitled to receive a proportionate part of the wages (Nār. q. by V. R. p. 161).<sup>835</sup> Visnu Dh. S V. 153-154 and 157-158 provide that in the same circumstances the servant would have to pay a fine of 100 panas and that if the employer abandons the servant before the period fixed has expired he would have to pay the whole of the wages to the servant and a fine of one hundred panas (except in the case of act of God and the king). Kāt (660) provides that a master deserting on a journey his servant that is tired or falls ill should be fined the first amercement if he does not wait for three days in the village. If a trader after engaging a vehicle or draught animals for carrying his merchandise for hire, does not employ them to carry his goods he should be made to pay a fourth of the hire settled and the whole of it if he discharges them when only a part of the journey has been made (Nār. IX. 7) If the merchandise be attached<sup>836</sup> (by the king's officers for toll &c.) or be stolen the servant engaged to carry the goods will receive a proportionate amount (out of the lump sum agreed to be paid for a certain journey) according to the distance travelled (Kāt. 661) If the employer does not pay the wages of a servant even though the latter has done his work the king should make him pay the wages and also a proper fine (Br in S. B. E vol. 33 p 346 verse 18). If a man<sup>837</sup> having hired elephants, horses, bulls, asses or camels does not return them even though the work (for which he hired them) is finished he should be made to restore them together with the hire (up to the day of return) The same rule applies to a man taking on rent a house or water (reservoir) or a market and not giving it up at the time fixed (Kāt. 662-663) Nār. (IX. 20-21) provides that if a person builds a house on another's land by paying rent (stoma) for the land, he may take away when vacating the land the bricks, the timber and grass (thatch) of the house built by him, but if a man builds a house on another's land without paying rent and against the owner's wish then he has to leave

The word भादक (which corresponds to the word भाद in Marathi and other vernaculars) appears to be a prākṛit equivalent of the old Sanskrit word भृति treated again as a Sanskrit word In Sanskrit वेतन or भृति is used for wages, while भादक or स्तोम means rent of a house or land or the like the materials of his house to the owner of the land when he has to give up the land. An important rule is stated by Br. (S. B. E. vol. 33 p. 346 verse 17) that when a servant<sup>838</sup> employed by an employer does some improper act (such as a theft), to another for the benefit of his master, the latter would be held responsible for the loss. The Matsyapurāṇa says that if a teacher having agreed to teach a lore or craft for money which he receives fails to do so, he should be fined the whole of the amount<sup>839</sup> of the fee.

From the above it will be clear that contracts of service and letting on hire are lumped together under one head by the smṛtis.

Kaut. III. 14 provides that persons may be paid wages by a guild or corporation of workers of which they are members. The earnings of such guilds may be divided equally among all workers or as agreed upon among themselves. Yaj. II. 265 also refers to the fact that rules similar to those of partnerships may apply to guilds of husbandmen and artisans.

Certain rules are laid down in Nār. IX. 18, Yaj. II. 292 and Matsyapurāṇa 227. 144-146 about the monetary liabilities of prostitutes and persons visiting them. Vide H. of Dh. vol. II. pp. 638-39 above. The Matsyapurāṇa (227. 144-146) states that a brāhmana who visits a prostitute should be fined as many panas as he paid to her, that if a prostitute after receiving her fee does not receive the visitor and goes elsewhere she should be made to pay to the visitor double of the fee and a similar sum as fine to the king, and that if one, after telling a prostitute that she is to visit a certain person, takes her to a different person, he should be fined one gold māśaka.

The Matsyapurāṇa (227. 147) further states that a visitor who has had sexual intercourse with a prostitute and yet has not paid her fee should be made to pay double the (agreed) fee to her and a similar sum as fine to the king. Nārada provides that the chief prostitutes and the voluptuaries that stay with them

Abhyupetyāśūs, ūsā (non-rendition of service after making a contract to serve or obey) <sup>841</sup>. Nār VIII. 1 defines it as the title in which after having undertaken to serve or obey one does not act up to it. The ancient dharmaśāstras mention only two kinds of servants viz. agricultural labourers and herdsmen Vide Āp Dh. S. II. 11. 28. 2-3 and Gaut. XII. 16-17 <sup>842</sup>. Acc. to Nār. VIII. 2 and 3 there are five kinds of servers (or attendants) viz. four that are called karmakara (performers of labour) and the fifth class comprehends slaves of fifteen kinds; and the four karmakaras are pupil (śiṣya), apprentice (antevāsin), a hired servant (bhṛtaka) and one who supervises hired servants (adhikarmakṛt). Not being free to do as they like is the common attribute of these five kinds of attendants, but there is a distinction among them due to their castes, their peculiar actions and their mode of maintaining themselves (Nār VIII. 4). A śiṣya (pupil) is one who desires (from his teacher) instruction in Vedic learning, an antevāsin is one who receives instruction in some craft such as goldsmith's work or dancing, a hired servant is one that does some work for wages, an adhikarmakṛt is one who supervises hired servants. Work is of two kinds, śubha (i. e. pure, done by the four kinds of karmakaras) and aśubha i. e. impure (done only by slaves). Aśubha acts comprise <sup>843</sup> (Nār. VIII. 6-7 and Kāt. 720) sweeping the doors of houses, pits in which leavings of food are thrown, roads, rubbish heaps; scratching or shampooing the private parts (of the masters); collecting and throwing away leavings of food, ordure and urine and making use of one's limbs (hand &c) at the master's desire for wiping off the master's private parts, all other actions are pure. Karmakaras do work for securing Vedic learning or vyñāna, (art or craft), some desire or money. duties of a vedic student are described by Nār. VIII. 8-15 and have been set out above in H. of Dh. vol. II. pp. 305-312 viz. to wait upon the teacher, his wife and son, to beg for food, to sleep on the ground, to do the bidding of the teacher, to learn the vedas, to offer fee to the teacher at the end of vedic study. An apprentice is distinguished in his actions and mode of maintenance from a śiṣya. The antevāsin, acc. to Yāj. II. 184, Nār. VIII. 16-21, Br. (S. B. E. vol. 33 p. 344 verse 6) and Kat. 713, resides with a master craftsman to learn some<sup>844</sup> art or craft (such as goldsmith's work, singing, dancing, house-building), agreeing to work under him for a stated period, the master craftsman gives him food and teaches him in his own house, does not put him to any other work; if the apprentice leaves the teacher even though the latter is willing to teach him, he (the pupil) should be made to stay with the teacher and may be whipped or confined; the pupil even though he may have become an adept has to stay with the master till the end of the agreed period and the teacher appropriates the fruits of the apprentice's labour. If the master does not instruct the apprentice in the craft and makes him do other work, he would be liable to pay the first amercement and the pupil may leave him<sup>845</sup>.

Hired servants have different grades among them arising from the work they do, the wages they receive and the period for which they are employed and they are distinguished from apprentices in these respects and not as regards caste or mode of maintenance. According to Nār. VIII. 22-23 and Br. (S. B. E. vol. 33, p. 344 verse 8) a hired servant is of three kinds and his wages depend on the work he does and his ability to do it. 'The three kinds are the highest (viz. a soldier), middling (an agriculturist), the lowest<sup>846</sup> (a porter)'. A hired servant may be engaged for a day, a fortnight, a month or for longer periods, should perform the work undertaken and get the wages agreed upon. He may be paid in cash or by giving him a share of crops or a share in the milk of the cattle he tends<sup>847</sup>

A person who is employed and given authority over all servants and also one who looks to the affairs (expenditure &c.) of the household is called 'adhikarmakṛta (or-kṛt), acc. to Nār. VIII. 24. All these four are called workers in clean occupations, while the fifteen kinds of slaves are employed in the lowest and dirtiest work (Nār. VIII. 25) The difference between the hired servants and slaves is this that the latter surrender all their freedom and themselves entirely to another, while the former, though dependent to some extent, do retain some freedom (Kāt 715), but a brāhmana was not to be a slave<sup>848</sup>. In very ancient times the master's liability for the acts of his servant does not seem to have been recognized. For example, Gaut XII 17, states that if cattle entrusted to a herdsman cause loss to crops, then the herdsman is to be held responsible (and not the owner who employs the herdsman). But Manu, VIII. 243, Yāj. II. 161, Nār XIV. 29 appear to hold the master liable to make good the loss caused by the herdsman's default Vide Br. quoted above under letamasyū-napūkarma.

The kinds of slaves and the incidents of slavery have been already dealt with in H. of Dh. vol. II pp 180-189. A few matters not referred to there may be dealt with here 'Buddhist India' p. 55 (by Rhys Davids) shows how slavery in the Buddhist period was not as miserable as under the Greeks The Rājataranginī IV 39 states that king Vajraditya of Kashmir (in the 8th Century A. D.) sold many men as slaves to Mlecchas. One cannot help blaming the British Indian Government for the Assam Labour and Emigration Act (VI of 1901) whereby a modified form of serfdom or slavery was legalised for the benefit of the tea planters of Assam, Bengal and other provinces and by sections 168-169 of which poor indentured labourers who were induced to labour on the sumptuous monthly wages of five rupees were liable to be sentenced to fino or in default to imprisonment, if they left off the work to which by agreement they were tied down in unhealthy districts and unhealthy surroundings.

Kāt. (725) provides that<sup>849</sup> if a woman who is not a slave marries a slave she becomes a slave since her husband is her lord and is dependent on his master. If a person buys or sells a brāhmana woman<sup>850</sup> as a slave the king should annul that transaction and all persons (concerned in it) should be fined by him and the same holds good in the case of a woman of a respectable family who took shelter with a person and was made a slave by him or transferred by him to another as a slave (Kāt. 726-727). The punishment of first amercement is prescribed for a person who has sexual intercourse with the nurse of his child or with another woman who is not a slave and the wife of his attendant as if she were a slave; and a fine of two hundred panas is provided in case a master who is not in difficulties and is well-off desires to sell a female slave who is faithful and weeps bitterly (being unwilling to leave him). Nār. VIII. 40 provides that if a slave leaves his master and goes over to another saying 'I am your slave' that would not help the slave, as his former owner would be entitled to claim him back. Uśanas states<sup>851</sup> that a guru (elderly person), a sapinda, a brāhmana and persons of the lowest castes (cāṇḍālas &c.) cannot be made slaves, nor can any one (of the higher castes) who is superior in learning be the slave of one of the same caste.

CHAPTER XXI

SAMVID-VYATIKRAMA AND OTHER TITLES

( Violation of compacts or conventions )

Nār. ( XIII. 1 ) employs the expression samayasyūnapākṣaṇa. Manu VIII. 5 employs the first expression. Manu (VIII. 218-219) has both names in view, when he says 'I shall now declare the rules applicable to those who violate samayās (conventions) He who having entered into a compact (samvad) under (the sanction of) an oath with the inhabitants of a village or a district or with a group of traders or other persons breaks it through greed should be banished from the kingdom by the king.' In Āp. Dh. S. I. 1. 1. 2 and II 4, 8 13 the word 'samaya' <sup>852</sup> is employed in the sense of 'convention or accepted doctrine'. The same word is also used in the sense of 'agreement' as in Yāj. I 61 (gāndharvāḥ samayānmutāḥ) In this title it means 'the acceptance of a certain rule or convention arrived at by many', as explained by <sup>853</sup> Medhātithi on Manu VIII. 219. It signifies a local or caste usage or convention made by groups of people (such as guilds and corporations) binding on all members that form or join the several groups. The Amarakosa holds that ācāra and samvad are among the several meanings of samaya. Medhātithi explains that, if the inhabitants of a village come to a decision that they would oppose the inhabitants of a neighbouring village who were indulging in grazing their cattle in the pastures of the former village or diverting the watercourses, and that if in doing so there was a riot or a suit were filed before the king, all should be of one mind, that any one of those who encouraged this decision would be liable to be punished if he backed out of it through some inducement offered by the headman of the other village. Nār. XIII. 1 explains that saṃaya means the rules (or conventions) settled among heretics, naigamas<sup>854</sup> and the like. Yāj II. 192 and Nār. XIII. 2 provide that the conventions of guilds, naigamas, heretics, śrenis, pūgas, ganās and in towns and districts should be enforced by the king and their traditional mode of conducting their business should be protected. Some remarks have already been made on guilds and corporations above (pp. 156-57 notes 196-198). Vide also H. of Dh. vol. II pp. 66-69 for the guilds and corporations and the meanings of words like śreni, pūga, gaṇa etc. Some further information is added here. The Sm. C. (II p. 223) has a very<sup>855</sup> interesting note illustrating the various conventions of several groups and its remarks are copied verbatim by the V. P. pp. 332-333. It says: 'Even heretics have certain rules made for the benefit of their monasteries. Among naigamas there is a practice that those who disregard messages brought by servants wearing a specific jacket (as a uniform) should be fined. Śrenis are guilds of craftsmen such as weavers. They have rules that certain articles are to be sold only by a certain guild and by no other. Pūgas are groups of elephant riders and horse riders.' Vrāta is defined by Kāt. as a body of persons armed with various weapons, while the Mahābhāṣya on Pāṇini V. 2. 21 (vrātena jivati) explains it as a 'group of men of several castes and several occupations who make a living by relying on their formidable bodies'. Acc. to the Mit. heretics are those like the Baudhdhas who do not regard the Veda as authoritative. Gana means, acc.

to Mit 'an assemblage of armed persons subsisting by following one occupation', while Kāt (680) says it is a corporation of brāhmanas. In the Rājat II. 132 reference is made to corporations of purohitas at temples and tirthas (sacred places). The Sm. C states that among pūgas and vrātas there is a convention that they must go to battle all together and not separately. Among ganas there is a usage that the lobes of the ear (of a child) are to be pierced on the 5th day or in the fifth year from birth. Among mahājanas in a settlement of brāhmanas there is a convention that a brāhmana repairing to them for collecting fees to be paid to his teacher (at the close of Vedic study) should be honoured (i. e. should be paid some contribution). In certain districts there is a usage that either the seller or the buyer should keep in his hand  $\frac{1}{16}$  of the price (probably for finding out whether the article is useful for the purpose in hand and resiling from the bargain if it is not). In forts or capitals there is a rule that corn taken out of it by a person with him whom going out elsewhere should not be sold by him. In villages there is a rule that in pastures no digging would be allowed. In the hamlets inhabited by abhīras there is a convention that for adultery by a male or female there is to be no fine. It does credit to the ancient writers on dharmaśāstra that they were tolerant enough to require the king, whatever his own religious persuasion might be, to honour and enforce the usages of even heretics among themselves. The only requirement was that the enforcement of their usages must not be opposed to the interest of the country or the capital and must not cause commotion and must not be plainly immoral<sup>856</sup> (Nār XIII. 4-5 and 7 and Medhātithi on Manu VIII. 220) Yāj (II. 188-192) lays down the following rules : there should be a committee (of two, three or five, acc. to Br.)<sup>857</sup> to look after the business of the guilds &c (called kāryacantaka) who should be religious, pure, not covetous and all members should carry out what they decide upon ; when the committee members approach the king on some business of their guild he should bestow on them gifts and honour them. Whatever is obtained by any one sent on the business of the group must be handed over by him to the heads of the group (also Br. in S. B. E. vol. 33 p. 349 verse 22)<sup>858</sup> and if he does not do so he should be fined eleven times as much. Whoever goes against the heads of the group that are working for its benefit should be punished in the first amercement (by the group itself, acc. to Sm. C. II. p. 224). Kāt. (677) states the general rule that whatever is obtained (by the committee or advisers of the group) or is saved by them or whatever debts are incurred by them for their group and whatever they obtain through the king's favour should be shared equally by all (members of the group). Kāt. (674-675) provides that whatever debt was professedly incurred by the committee for the group but was misappropriated by them or applied to their individual purposes must be paid by them and that those who subsequently join the groups already formed become equally entitled to the property and liable for the debts previously acquired or incurred. Manu VIII. 220 and Br. (S. B. E. vol. 33 p. 348 v. 14) provide a fine of six niskas of four suvarnas each (or six niskas and four suvarnas) for him who falls out with his associates. Kāt. (671) provides that that member (of a group) who opposes what is reasonable, who gives no scope to (i.e. obstructs or persistently interrupts) a speaker (in a meeting of the group) or who speaks absurdly should be made to pay the first amercement. Yaj. II. 187 prescribes forfeiture of all property and banishment for him, who misappropriates the property of the group or corporation or who violates the conventions made by the group (or the king). As stated by the Mīti this and other sentences depended upon the nature and gravity of the offence and the capacity of the offender<sup>859</sup>.

Krayavikrayānusāya (repentance after purchase or sale). Manu VIII. 222 and Kāt. III. 15 regard this as one title of law. But Nār. (XI and XII) splits this into two titles viz. vikriyāsampādāna (non-delivery of a thing after it is sold for a price) and krītvānusāya (repentance after buying) Manu states the general rule that whenever a person after buying or selling anything repents of having done so, he may return or take back that thing within ten days Nār XI 2 states that property is of two kinds in this world viz movable and immovable and that all property is designated as panya (saleable) in rules about purchase and sale. According to Yāj II. 254, Nār XI. 4-5, Visnu Dh S. V 127<sup>860</sup>, if a man sells property and does not deliver it to the purchaser, he should be made to deliver it to the purchaser together with profits (between the time of sale and delivery) and if it is movable together with the price of profits arising<sup>861</sup> from it (such as milk in the case of a cow) Visnu Dh S V 128 prescribes a fine of 100 panas against the vendor. Kaut III 15 prescribes a fine of 12 panas against the vendor who after selling a thing does not deliver it and also against a buyer who having purchased does not take delivery of it, except when the thing itself is defective or is lost by act of king or theft or by fire or flood or unless the transaction was for inadequate price or brought about in distress<sup>862</sup> If the article sold is not delivered by the vendor after demand by the vendee and it is injured, destroyed by fire or stolen, the loss will fall on the vendor (Nār. XI. 6, Visnu Dh. S V. 129, Yāj II. 256). These rules apply when the vendor does not feel repentance for having sold the thing, but if he feels repentance then Manu VIII. 222 will apply and the vendor may pay back the price and recover the article within ten days<sup>863</sup> from the sale Kāt. (684) provides the same rule. No one, either buyer or vendor, can rescind the sale after ten days and if any one uses force in

This applies when both parties are inhabitants of the same place, but if the purchaser is one who comes from another country then he may be awarded the profit that he would have made in the other country by selling it if it had been delivered to him at once recovering the article sold or bought after that period the king should fine him 600 panas. Manu VIII 228 extends these rules about repentance and recovery within ten days to all transactions whatever. Kāt. (685) prescribes that the period of ten days for repentance is allowed to vendors and vendees only in the case of land, and that the period is 12 days when the parties to sale of land are sapindas of one another and that in other cases the period is even shorter.<sup>864</sup> Yāj. II. 257, Nār. XI. 7-8, Br. (S. B. E. vol. 33 p. 350 verse 4) provide that when a vendor having sold a thing to one man for a price received sells it to another or having concealed the defects of an article sells it as free from defects he should be made to return double the price to the purchaser and a fine equal to double the price to the king.<sup>865</sup> The above rules apply where the purchaser has paid the price, but if there is a mere agreement and no price is paid, then the vendor or vendee is guilty of no wrong if he resiles from the bare agreement to sell or buy unless they have made an express stipulation that the agreement cannot be rescinded (Nār. XI. 10). When at the time of the agreement for sale, the vendee pays something by way of earnest, then if the sale goes off through the fault of the vendor, the latter has to return to the vendee double of the earnest;<sup>866</sup> but if the purchaser does not finally take it he loses the thing and also the earnest. Nār. XII. 1 prescribes that when a vendee after having purchased a thing for a price repents of the purchase that is the title of law called 'rescission of purchase.' Nār. XII. 2 prescribes that if the purchaser thinks that he has made a bad bargain he may return the thing purchased to the vendor on the same day in an undamaged condition (and may receive back the price paid); but if he returns it on the 2nd or 3rd day after the purchase (including the day of purchase) he will have to lose respectively one-thirtieth or one-fifteenth of the price and after the third day he cannot return the thing at all (Nār. XII. 3). the following periods for examination of things purchased, viz one, three, five, seven, ten days, half a month and one month respectively in the case of iron (and clothes), milch cattle, beasts of burden, jewels (precious stones, pearls and corals), all sorts of grain, a male slave and a female slave. It must be supposed that these verses contain exceptions to the general rule in Manu VIII 222 cited above. Kaut. (III. 15) allows only one night, three nights, five nights and seven nights for repentance to traders, husbandmen, cowherds, the mixed castes and higher castes and provides that where the articles sold are perishable a very short time only may be allowed. The above rules apply only when the purchaser made no examination at the time of purchase Nār.<sup>867</sup> XII 4 and Br. (S. B. E vol 33 p. 350 verse 3) recommend that a purchaser should himself closely examine an article before buying it and also show it to others in order to find out its defects and good qualities and provide that when he has approved of an article after close examination he cannot return it to the vendor. Vyāsa provides that hides, fuel, bricks, yarn, grain, intoxicants, fluids, gold, inferior metals (like lead and tin) and other wealth should be carefully examined then and there i. e. when once bought after close examination none of these can be returned even if some defect<sup>868</sup> is found therein Nār. (XII. 5-6) cited above contains exceptions to this. Nār XII. 7 gives an example of a purchase being not liable to be rescinded when a defective article is purchased with open eyes viz. a worn garment which is soiled with dirt and is in ragged condition cannot be returned to the vendor if it was in that state at the time of the purchase i. e. the maxim 'caveat emptor' applies. If a purchaser does not take delivery of the thing sold to him, the vendor may sell it again to another<sup>869</sup> and if the thing is lost through act of God or the king the loss falls on the buyer alone (Yāj. II. 255, Nār XI 9) Kāt (692) provides<sup>870</sup> that what has been sold by a lunatic or an intoxicated person or through intimidation or for an inadequate price or by one who is dependent or by an idiot should be relinquished by the purchaser; it still belongs to the seller Kāt. (705-706) lays down a novel rule to find out what is adequate or inadequate price. What<sup>871</sup> is decided by the neighbours assembled together, who know (the land &c and its value) and who are afraid of committing sin, as the price of fields, gardens, houses and the like, of bipeds and quadrupeds, is declared to be the proper price; a price which is less or more than it by one-eighth is declared to be improper; what is sold for an improper price may be annulled even after a hundred years Kāt. (704) states that when the owner of a field absconds together with the surety<sup>872</sup> for the payment of the land tax, the judges of the court may order a sale for recovery of the tax and that such a sale may be set aside up to ten years and a compromise or exchange up to three generations, if it is inequitable Bhāradvāja provides that when taxes are not paid both by the tax-payer and his surety even when called upon to do so, then the king may order a charge on the land or sale of the land.

Uktalābha is defined as a conditional sale, where a man borrows only a portion of the proper price of a land and stipulates that he would return the money on a certain day and that if he did not do so his ownership over the land would come to an end<sup>873</sup> Kāt (711) adds that a sale of the uktalābha kind will be valid if it is for more than half (the proper price of the land), provided more than ten years have elapsed (after the period fixed for repayment) An avakraya<sup>874</sup> becomes valid after possession for over three generations and a (regular) purchase by mutual agreement becomes valid at once Kāt. (712) further<sup>875</sup> prescribes that the unpaid purchase money carries compound interest after demand if no time is fixed for payment, but, if a time is fixed, then only the balance has to be paid up to the end of that period Br provides that in all sales, the sale deed should mention the wells and trees (on the land), the water and ways and that the crops, trees and fruits, wells, tanks and house standing on the land sold would belong to the vendor if they are not put down in the deed of sale.<sup>876</sup> According to Hārīta the rules of sales are to be extended to exchanges.<sup>877</sup>

From the Rājatarangini VI 41 it appears that a fraudulent purchaser, who, by means of the heavy bribe of 1000 dināras, induced the officially authorized scribe to include a well in the sale of a house when it was intended to be excluded from it, was banished from the country by the king, his property being confiscated and given over to the cheated vendor.

II. 238 defines it as a transaction whereby a bailer (e g a washerman) transfers an article bailed to him (for washing &c.) to another for hire Pāṇini IV 4 50 employs the word 'avakraya', but the Siddhāntakaumudī explains it as the due to be recovered by a king from a market (or the like). Gaut XII 39 employs the word 'avakṛita' which is explained by Haradatta as meaning 'what is purchased, but the price of which is unpaid or only partly paid' This last seems to be the sense intended by Kāt. who provides that a sale of land, the price being wholly or partly unpaid, would become indefeasible only after enjoyment for three generations सुमन्तु as quoted in S V p 321 defines अवक्रय as 'अर्धदत्तमवर्त्तते क्रयमाहुरवक्रयम् । अवक्रयो निवर्त्तते यदि काले न दीयते ॥'

The Vyavahāranirnaya, after quoting Br. and Vyāsa, very lucidly explains what is meant by sale, purchase, exchange &c. Gold and the like which a man desires to render or pay is called price, while land, house and the like are said to be 'panya' (saleable thing). Purchase means acceptance of a thing preceded by the offering of a price (either paid or agreed to be paid); sale is the acceptance of a price preceded by the offering of a saleable thing. Parivṛth or parivartanā is the acceptance of an article for an article of the same kind; if there is a disparity in value between the two articles exchanged the exchange is called 'avakṛaya'; when there is an exchange of two articles of different kinds but of the same value it is called rammaya.<sup>878</sup> The Vyavahāranirnaya makes elaborate provisions for sale of land at the order of the king for non-payment of land tax. It quotes Prajāpati (p. 350) to the effect that the purchaser at such a sale must offer half or at least one-fourth of the real price of the field and that the original owner could get back his property sold for the royal dues by paying the full price to the purchaser up to three generations. Other elaborate rules on the same subject are passed over here for reasons of space. These provisions indicate that ownership in cultivated fields belonged to individuals and that the State had only the right to levy taxes. Vide H of Dh. vol. II pp 865-869 and Kāt. quoted above (on p. 196) for a discussion of the theory of the State's ownership of all lands. Taking into consideration the Pūrvamīmāṃsā texts, the Vyavahāramayūkha and the verses of Kāt. and others it appears that the State was deemed to be the owner of all lands as a general proposition, but that where individuals or bodies of persons had been in long possession of lands that they cultivated, the ownership of the State was qualified and restricted only to the recovery of a tax or share of crops and that individuals and groups that had cultivated lands in their possession were regarded practically as owners of the land subject to the liability to pay land tax and to the right of the State to sell the land for non-payment of tax. The Vyavahāranirnaya quotes Br and another smṛti text that sūdras, persons excommunicated for grave sins ( patita ), cāndālas and desperate characters cannot be allowed to possess the lands of a brāhmana by sale, partition or in lieu of wages,<sup>879</sup> the same work further quotes Vyāsa, Bhāradvāja and Br. that when land is sold there is a right of pre-emption in favour of full brothers, sapindas, samānodakas, sagotras, neighbours, creditors and one's co-villagers in order.<sup>880</sup>

Gifts of immovables were looked upon in very ancient times with disfavour, though they were made even in the times of the Upanisads. Vide H. of Dh vol II, pp 740-41. But sales of land must have been rarer still in ancient times owing to the patriarchal and joint family systems. The Mit on Yāj II 114 quotes a verse forbidding the sale of immovable property;<sup>881</sup> but sales of lands are mentioned in many copperplate grants. Vide Paharpur plate grant of Gupta year 159 i.e. 478-79 A.D. in E. I. vol 20 p. 59 (where one kulyāvāpa of land is stated to have been sold for two dināras to a brāhmana and his wife named Rāmi by the city council for the provision of the worship with sandal-wood paste &c of the divine arhats at a vihāra), E. I. vol 17 p 345 (grant of the time of Kumāragupta I in Gupta year 113), the Damodarpur plates (E I vol. 15 p 113), Faridpur plates (Ind Ant. vol. 39 p 193), E I vol 18 p 74. From these records of the 5th and 6th centuries A.D. it appears that land was owned by private individuals or by joint families or by the village community or by the king and there was a fixed procedure when land was to be sold, that the purchaser approached the District Officers who consulted the pustapūlas that kept a record of titles and that the villagers and headmen were consulted and asked to mark off the land to be sold. It appears that the smrtis recommended that sales should be clothed in the formalities of gifts, probably because gifts were frequent and sales were not. A smṛti quoted by the Mit (on Yāj. II 114) states 'land passes (i. e. is transferred) with the assent of the villagers, the agnatic relations, the neighbours, the co-sharers and with the offering of gold and water'. The Mit explains that these<sup>882</sup> are not absolutely necessary formalities of a sale, but that they are recommended for the sake of greater caution and convenience, that the assent of the villagers is to be secured for the publication of the transaction of sale, as a text says that acceptance, particularly of immovables, should be made openly, that the neighbours' assent should be secured for preventing boundary disputes, that the assent of agnates and co-sharers is desired for making it easy to complete the transaction, that it does not follow that without the assent of these the sale of land is not valid or complete. Water and gold are to be offered because gifts being highly commended, a sale should be clothed outwardly with the same formalities. Vide Dr. P. N. Sen's 'Hindu Jurisprudence' pp. 76-78 for the opposite procedure of the ancient Roman Law that gifts were to be clothed with the formalities of sale. For water and gold in the case of gifts vide above under dattapradānika.

Svāmpālanaśāda (disputes between the owner of cattle and herdsman who is engaged to look after them) In ancient times this must have been a prominent source of litigation in a predominantly agricultural country like India. Nār. appears to have included this title under śatanasjānapākauma. Yāj. II 164, Nār. IX 11 provide that the cowherd has to bring back to the owner in the evening the cows (and other domestic animals) handed over to him in the morning by the owner, after grazing them in the pastures and making them drink water. Manu VIII. 230 says that during the day the responsibility for the safety of the cattle rests on the herdsman and during the night on the owner provided they are in the latter's house. When there is no express agreement as to wages Nār IX. 10 and Br (S. B. E. 33 p. 346 verse 19) prescribe that a cowherd<sup>883</sup> will get as his wages all the milk of the cows tended by him on every eighth day plus a heifer (two years old) every year out of every one hundred cows tended by him or a milch cow with her calf every year for every two hundred cows looked after by him. Manu VIII 231 provides another method when no wages are fixed by agreement viz. a hired herdsman, who is paid with milk, may milk as hire the best cow out of ten with the consent of the owner. It is the duty of the cowherd to struggle as much as in him lies to protect the cows from accidents and if he is unable to do so he must quickly inform the owner (Nār. IX. 12). Br (S. B. E. 33 p. 346 verse 20) states<sup>884</sup> that the cowherd shall save cattle from the danger of worms (or reptiles), robbers, tigers and from caverns and pits and that he should try to protect them to the best of his ability, should call out for help or inform his master. If the herdsman does not struggle to protect the cows, nor raise a hue and cry nor inform his master he must make good the value of the cow lost and must pay a fine to the king (Nār. IX. 13). Manu VIII 232 and 235, Yaj II 164-165, Viṣṇu Dh S V<sup>885</sup> 137-138, Nār (IX. 14-15) provide that if a cow or other domestic animal strays or is killed by worms (or reptiles) or slain by dogs (and wild animals) or dies by falling into a pit or by any negligent act of the herdsman, he himself shall make good the loss, if he did not exert himself to prevent this happening or if goats and sheep are surrounded by wolves and carried away while the herdsman does not hasten to their help he shall bear the responsibility for the loss. S II 11. 28. 6 makes<sup>887</sup> the herdsman liable to pay the price if an animal in his charge dies or is lost (by theft &c.). Manu VIII. 233, 236, Nār. IX 16, Vyāsa state exceptions to the above viz where an animal is carried away<sup>888</sup> by robbers though the herdsman raised a cry, he would not be liable to make good the loss provided he gave information to his master at the proper time (immediately after the animal is carried away) and proper place; or when the herdsman himself is seized or the village is attacked or the country is invaded, the herdsman would not be liable for loss or seizure of any animal under his charge; and also where, while the herd is grazing in a proper order near a forest, a wolf suddenly kills an animal. Manu VIII 234, Nār. IX. 17 state that when cattle die through act of God or king or die without any fault of his while in charge of a herdsman, he has to free himself from liability or from the suspicion of himself having<sup>889</sup> carried away surreptitiously the animal by producing before his master their ears, skin, tails, bladders, tendons and yellow bile or by showing their limbs (viz. their characteristic marks). Vyāsa states that if a herdsman, who has received his wages, abandons cattle in an untenanted forest and moves about in the village he should be fined by the king.<sup>890</sup>

Those who purposely set cattle to eat or destroy crops were to be punished as thieves (Nār XIV. 34)

Ancient India entertained tender feelings for certain animals and in certain circumstances Nār. XIV 30, Yāj II. 163, Manu VIII. 242, Kaut III 10<sup>894</sup> and Usanas provide that cows within ten days after calving, a stud bull, a horse, an elephant, animals let loose in honour of ancestors or deities, and cattle that have strayed from the herd or that have no herdsman to look after them and have met with an accident are to be warded off when causing harm to crops, but the owner is not to be fined. Usanas<sup>895</sup> states that the reason for this leniency is that horses and elephants are protectors of people Aparārka (p 771) explains that this exemption applies only to the king's horses and elephants. Usanas adds that (owners of) cows should not be fined when they cause some loss at the time of festivals and śrāddhas. The great veneration for cows led Usanas to lay down that he who requires the owner of a cow to re-imburse the loss of crops that are eaten up or destroyed by a cow will find that his pitrs and the gods do not receive the offerings made<sup>896</sup> by him This is explained by the Par. M. III. p 385 as referring to crops in fields near a village not enclosed by a hedge and by the Madanaratna to crops eaten at the time of śrāddha Br., Yāj II 161 and Nār. XIV. 38 require the owner of the cow to re-imburse the owner of the crops for the loss as settled by the neighbours. Vide under 'steya' for cases in which there is no offence of theft even if a person takes certain things belonging to another without his permission.

CHAPTER XXII

SĪMĀVIVĀDA (boundary disputes).

This is called kṣetravivāda<sup>897</sup> (disputes relating to fields) by Nārada XIV. 1, who defines it as 'dispute with regard to land in which questions about dikes or embankments, the boundaries of fields, ploughed land and fallow land have to be decided' Nārada's idea appears to be that the word 'sīmāvivāda' in Manu is only illustrative and is a compendious way of mentioning disputes about land in general. According to Kāt (732) there are six causes<sup>898</sup> of land disputes viz claiming more land, claim that a person is entitled to less than he possesses, claim to a share, denial of a share, seizing possession when previously there was none, boundary. In all these cases boundaries have directly or indirectly to be settled and therefore all these are included under the topic of sīmāvivāda. A boundary dispute may relate to the boundaries of a district (janapada), a village, a field and a house. Boundaries, acc. to Nār., may be of five kinds.<sup>899</sup> They are described as follows: dhvagnī is what is indicated by trees which are like a flag-staff. Manu (VIII. 246-247) prescribes that trees such as aśvattha, the silk cotton, śāla, tāla (palmyra palm), that have milky juice (like udumbara) should be planted to indicate boundaries and also bamboo clumps, bushes, reeds &c. A matsynī (lit. having fish) boundary is provided by rivers flowing naturally and full of fish and tortoises or by tanks and reservoirs of water (Manu VIII 248). A naidhānī boundary is one indicated by concealed signs (just as nidhāna i.e. treasure is concealed in the earth), such as pots filled with chaff, coal, bricks, bones and similar things that the earth does not corrode and are buried inside the earth. Manu (VIII. 250-251) enumerates those objects that should be buried in the earth, which would serve to indicate the boundaries of a village or field and which are therefore called concealed (upacchannu) by him. A bhayaṃgīlū (free from danger) boundary is settled by the agreement of the parties. The fifth kind is the one that is laid down by order of the king. B. (S. B. E. 33 p 351 verse 2) prescribes<sup>900</sup> that at the time of founding a village definite boundaries should be erected or constructed by means of visible or patent (prakāśa) and concealed (upāśu or upacchanna) signs and the Sm C II. 228 explains that a row of big stones should be employed to indicate the boundary. Brihaspati (S. B. E. vol 33 p 351 verses 3-7) states what patent and concealed boundary marks should be and requires elderly persons to point them out to youths and children who in their turn when old are to point out the boundaries to other youths and in this way traditional knowledge of boundaries may be kept up. Manu (VIII. 252-253) states that in disputes boundaries should be settled in accordance with the visible and concealed signs described above, by reliance on long former enjoyment and by the constant flow of water and that if there be doubt even after observing the signs then the dispute has to be decided on the evidence of witnesses. Witnesses could either depose to the marks of boundaries or to the boundaries themselves. Those who could not point out the marks but were to define the boundaries themselves were to follow a certain procedure. Manu VIII. 254 states that the witnesses should be asked about the marks of boundaries in the presence of the litigating parties and groups (or families) of the villagers. The witnesses on being asked were to trace, point out and settle the boundary unanimously, being clad in red garments, wearing red chaplets and being exhorted to depose truly by their spiritual merit<sup>901</sup> and carrying clods of earth on their heads, by reference to mounds or depressions, coals, bones and chaff (buried underground,

Vas 16 13, Kaut III 9, Yāj II. 150, Manu VIII. 258, 260, Nār (XIV 2-3) prescribe that on failure of witnesses of the adjoining villages, neighbours (sāmānta),<sup>902</sup> old men, cowherds, husbandmen who plough the fields near the one in dispute, hunters, fowlers, fishermen, snake catchers and foresters should settle the disputed boundary in the presence of the king. The Mit. on Yāj<sup>903</sup> II. 153 quotes Kāt (743-745, 51) to show that witnesses were divided into sāmānta, manū, viddha and viddhā, each preceding group being superior to the succeeding. The Mit. further says that the neighbours as witnesses are to be arranged in the form of the layers of the petals of a lotus viz. the nearest ones (samakṣaka) are those most preferred, (but if this group has faults) then a second but a more removed group and then a third group still more remote may be examined. Sankha-Likhita and Vas.<sup>904</sup> 16.13-15 prescribe that in boundary disputes the decision depends on neighbours, in the case of conflict of witnesses on documents and then on the old men in the town or village and the guilds. Yāj. II. 152 and Manu VIII. 258 require that the neighbours who are to settle the boundary should be four, eight or ten (even in number) and inhabitants of the same village (if possible). Br. (S B E 33 p 352 verse 14) requires that the witnesses<sup>905</sup> should know the source of title (to the disputed land), the measurement (in mṛttāṇas, dandas &c.), the length of enjoyment or possession, the names of persons (in possession) and the characteristic geography or lie of the land. The general rule was (as stated by Nār XIV 9)

that a single witness however confident he might be (or how-ever reliable) should not take upon himself to point out and settle the boundary, since this (boundary) dispute being a very important (difficult) matter, its decision should rest with many. The Mit. (on Yāj. II. 152) explains that this prohibition holds good only if the single witness is one not accepted by both sides as reliable. But Nār. (XIV. 10) and Br. (S. B. E.<sup>906</sup> 33 p. 352 verse 11) hold that where a single witness accepted by both sides has to settle the boundary (in the absence of more witnesses and in the absence of reliable patent or concealed signs) he should do so after placing a clod of earth on his head, after being dressed in red robes and wearing red flowers and after observing a fast. If it was a śūdra who was to trace or lay down a boundary Viśvarūpa<sup>907</sup> on Yāj. II. 156 quotes a prose passage of Brhaspati that he was to be decked in red pieces of cloth, his face was to be smeared with ashes from a cemetery, a mark was to be made on his chest with five fingers dipped in the blood of a goat and the entrails of the sacrificed goat were to be tied round his neck and he was to hold a clod of earth in the right hand. All this was to impress upon him the gravity of the work and the necessity of doing his best impartially. If no knowing witness or no patent or concealed signs are available the king has himself to settle the boundary between the two villages at his own discretion (Yāj. II. 153, Nār. XIV. 11, Manu VIII. 265). He may divide the land between the two villages equally and construct new marks of boundaries, but if the disputed land will be of greater benefit to one village than to the other the king may assign the whole of the disputed land to the former Manu VIII. 245 prescribes that when there is a boundary dispute between two villages the king should decide it in the month of Jyestha when the embankment (marks) become quite clear (owing to water being dried up in summer). The decision made by the witnesses or neighbours became final only after the lapse of three weeks if no calamity (from act of (God or king) befell the witnesses (Kāt 751).<sup>908</sup> Manu prescribes (VIII. 261) that the boundary settled by witnesses should be fixed by the king (or recorded in a document containing the names of witnesses). An ancient instance of the fixing of boundaries by two feudatory chiefs is recorded in the Bhumara stone Pillar inscription of the Parivrajaka Mahārāja Hastin and Mahārāja Śarvanātha, who erected a pillar at Ambhoda to show the boundary between their territories about 510 A. D. (vide Fleet's Gupta Inscriptions No 24 p. 110). Vide also E. I. vol. 24 pp. 32-34 for inscriptional evidence about the carrying out of all the details laid down in dharmasāstra works on the settlement of boundaries. Manu VIII, 263, Yāj II. 153, Nār. XIV 7 prescribe the middle amercement for each one of the sāmantas that falsely settle the boundaries, while Manu (VIII. 257) and Nār XIV. 8 prescribe the first amercement only for other witnesses such as members of corporations and elderly villagers. If through friendship, greed or fear the witnesses who know the facts do not come forward to settle the boundary they are each to be fined in the highest amercement (Kāt.<sup>909</sup> 750).

Br. (S. B. E. 33 p. 353 verses 19-21) lays down certain interesting rules about alluvion and diluvion. Where a river is the boundary between two villages and the river carries away soil from one village and attaches it to another, the accretion belongs to the village to which it becomes attached, but this is so when the soil carried away has no crops growing on it; if however soil with growing crops is separated from a village and joined to another by a river in flood, the former owner can reap only the crops and the land will belong to the village or field to which it has become attached.<sup>910</sup>

Manu VIII. 262, Yaj. II. 154, Nār. XIV. 12, Kāt 749 prescribe that the decision of disputes about the boundaries of fields, wells, tanks, groves and parks, palaces, houses, cottages, temples and channels carrying rain water is to be similarly arrived at by the testimony of witnesses (sāmantas and others)

Several rules are laid down by Nār., Br. and Kat. about easements and water-courses

Br. (S. B. E. 33 p. 354 verse 24) prescribes that no<sup>911</sup> interference should be caused to the manner of the enjoyment of houses (as regards doors, compounds &c.), to the enjoyment of water and markets in the way in which they had been enjoyed from the time the village or house was established or built. This means, acc. to the Sm. C. II. p. 234 and V. P. p. 363 that if a new mode of enjoyment is started in the case of these after the village was established or the house was built then interference may be allowed. Br. (S. B. E. 33 p. 354 verse 25) further says that ancient windows,<sup>912</sup> watercourses, balconies (pegs?), raised platforms on the borders of streets, waterspouts carrying rainwater from a square of houses (and cottages) enjoyed from former days should not be allowed to be interfered with, even if they might cause some inconvenience to the neighbouring house. Kāt (752-753) similarly provides 'one should not interfere with the base of the wall, a drain (or waterspout), a balcony, window, watercourse and dwelling house of another. These are not to be added to one's house after the first building of it (so as to cause obstruction or annoyance to another), one should not open a window<sup>913</sup> (so as to command a view) in the interior of another's house or open a spout (that will drain off

One should construct places (pits) for depositing ordure, urine and filthy water, a fireplace and a pit at a distance of at least two cubits from the walls of other people (his neighbours) and should not construct these very near to another's house' (vide also Br S. B. E. vol 33 p. 354 verses 25-26).

Br. (S. B. E. 33 p. 354 verse 27) defines a samsāraṇa<sup>914</sup> as the road by which men and beasts pass to and fro without let or hindrance Kāt. (755) calls it catuspatha and defines rāja-mārga as the road by which people are allowed to pass at certain times (and not at all times). Several rules are prescribed by Kautilya and others for obviating nuisances on public roads or near private houses. Br. (S. B. E. 33 p. 354 verse 28) and Kat (756) provide that roads should not be obstructed by parking<sup>915</sup> carts and the like thereon, that no one should plant anything on a public road, that a man who puts obstruction on the public road, makes pits or plants trees or wilfully voids excrement thereon should be fined a māsaka, and one who does not give<sup>916</sup> precedence on the road to his guru, preceptor or the king should be fined. Manu IX. 282 prescribes the fine of two kāśāpanas for voiding or dropping ordure on the public road in the absence of distress and requires the wrongdoer to clean the road, but Manu (IX. 283) makes an exception in the case of persons diseased, very old men, a pregnant woman and a child, who are not to be fined but only reprovod for voiding ordure on the road. Vide Matsya 227. 175-76 for the same two verses Kaut II. 36<sup>917</sup> prescribes the fine of  $\frac{1}{6}$  of a pana for throwing dust on a cart-road and  $\frac{1}{2}$  for obstructing it with mud and a fine double of these for doing the same on a royal road; prescribes a fine of one, two, three or four panas respectively for voiding ordure on or near a holy place, or a place whence water is taken, or a temple or the king's buildings and exempts from fine such persons as those mentioned in Manu IX. 283. Kāt. (758-759) provides<sup>918</sup> that he who defiles a tank, a garden or holy water (or ghats) by throwing filthy matter (ordure &c.) therein should be made to remove the filth and fined the first amercement and also one who pollutes by washing soiled clothes in holy and purifying sacred places (ghats &c.) established by great or saintly persons. Yāj. II. 155 prescribes the first, the highest and middling amercements respectively for making breaches in the boundary (between two or more fields), for ploughing a field beyond the boundary of one's field and for depriving a man of his field by intimidation and the like. Vide also Visnu Dh. S. V. 172 and Śankha-Likhita<sup>919</sup> who prescribe a fine of 1008 panas for transgressing (the whole of) the boundary (of a field). Manu VIII. 264 (= Matsya 227. 30) provides a fine of 200 panas for seizing another's field, garden or house through inadvertence, but 500 for seizing any one of these by intimidation. Nār. XIV. 13-14 and Kāt. (760-761) state<sup>920</sup> that the fruits and flowers of those trees that grow on the boundary between two fields should be declared (by the Judge) as joint between the owners of the two fields and that if the branches of trees growing in one man's field spread over another man's field that man should be understood to be the owner of the trees and branches (together with fruit &c.) in whose field the trees are born (have taken root). A setu (watercourse) is said by Nār (XIV. 18) to be of two kinds, viz that which is dug (lheyā) into the soil in order to drain off excessive water and that which is constructed (bundhya) as an embankment to prevent water from flowing away. Yāj II. 156 and Nār XIV. 17 provide that a setu made by the owner of one field in the neighbouring field should not be forbidden by the owner of that field, if the loss of soil it causes (to the latter) is small as compared with the great benefit that it may confer Nār (XIV. 20-21) and Yāj II. 157 prescribe that one should make a dike or watercourse on another's land with the permission of that man or with the permission of the king as otherwise he cannot reap the benefit thereof. Kāt (762-63) provides a similar rule about the repairs to a house or garden or tank made by a stranger without the owner's or the king's permission. It is stated by Nār (XIV. 23-25) that when the owner of a field is unable (to cultivate it) or is dead or is not heard of, if a stranger cultivates the field without objection from any body, the stranger shall enjoy the produce of the field, that if the owner (or his son) returns while the field is being tilled by a stranger, he can get his field back on repayment to the stranger of all the money expended on making the land (ready for crops). If the owner is unable to return the expenses, the stranger may retain  $\frac{1}{4}$ th of the produce every year for eight years giving  $\frac{3}{4}$ th to the owner every year and should hand over the field to the owner when the 8th year arrives Yāj II. 158 and Vyāsa provide that if a person takes a field from the owner on rent for cultivation, but gives up the cultivation after slightly ploughing it and does not employ someone else to complete the cultivation, then he should be made to pay the produce that would have been recovered from the field if properly cultivated and also should be fined and the field may be taken from him and given to another tenant<sup>921</sup>.

CHAPTER XXIII

VĀKPĀRUSYA AND DANDAPĀRUSYA

(Abuse and defamation; assault)

Vākpārusya, dandapārusya, steya, strisangrahana, sāhasa are five titles out of 18 that are concerned with what may be called criminal matters or crimes in modern nomenclature. Vide under sāhasa below.

Nār. XVIII. 1 defines vākpārusya as 'abusive words that loudly proclaim censure of another's country, caste, family and the like and that cause mental pain or offence to that man.' Kat. (768) defines it as<sup>92</sup> consisting in making the sound 'hum' (of defiance) before another or coughing before him, of imitating or uttering before another whatever is censurable according to popular notions. Nār. (XVIII. 2-3) says that abuse is of three kinds, usthura (reproachful such as calling a man a fool or a rogue), atila (obscene or insulting), tivra (mercilessly severe such as charging a man with such grave sins as brāhmana-murder or drinking liquor) and that the punishment for each later one is more severe than for each preceding one. Examples of the abuse of country, caste and family are respectively 'the Gaudas are quarrelsome', 'brāhmanas are extremely greedy', 'persons of the Viśvāmitra gotra commit cruel deeds'. Br. (S. B. E. vol. 33 p. 355 verses 2-4) divided vākpārusya into three kinds viz. lowest (when the country, caste or family of a person is abused or sinfulness is ascribed without specifying any definite act), middling (speaking that the abuser will have sexual intercourse with the mother or sister of the abused or ascribing the commission of upapātakas<sup>93</sup> or minor sins to the abused), highest (charging him with taking forbidden food or drink or mercilessly exposing or ascribing the grave sins to a person). Various fines are prescribed in the smṛtis that depend upon the above distinctions and also on the castes of the abuser and the 923. For upapātakas vide Manu XI. 59-66 (such as govadhā, adultery), Yāj III. 234-242, Viśnudharmasūtra (37) which contain long lists of them.

abused. For example, Manu VIII. 267 (= Nār XVIII. 15 = Matsya 227. 66) prescribes the punishments of 100 panas, 150 or 200 panas, corporal punishment respectively against a ksatriya or a vaiśya or a śūdra abusing a brāhmana and conversely Manu VIII. 268 (= Nār. XVIII. 16) provides that a brāhmana calumniating a ksatriya, vaiśya or śūdra should respectively be fined 50, 25 or 12 panas. In the case of the abuser and the abused being of the same varṇa the fine for ordinary abuse is 12 panas, but double of this if the abuse is, according to Manu VIII. 269 (= Nār. XVIII. 17), foul (relating to mother, sister &c.). Vide Yāj II. 206-207, Visnudharmasūtra V. 35. From the remarks of the Sm. C. and the Madanaratna it appears that these discriminating provisions<sup>221</sup> based on the caste<sup>222</sup> and the ascription of minor or grave sins had become a dead letter and were not being enforced by the kings in India by the 12th century A. D. at least. One or two matters, however, may be noted. Manu VIII. 268-272 and 274 are the same as Nār. XVIII. 16-17, 22-24. Even the truth of an imputation<sup>223</sup> afforded no complete exemption e. g. if a person angrily calls a man a thief (who was once convicted of it) or speaks of him as blind or cripple, the former would be fined at least one kārṣāpana (Manu VIII. 274 = Nār. XVIII. 18). Kāut. (III. 18) provides in this case three panas<sup>224</sup> as fine and Visnudharmasūtra (V. 27) two panas. When the imputation is false all provide for a fine double of that provided in case the imputation is true. Ironical praise of a man (such as describing one who is blind of one eye as one endowed with a beautiful eye) is made punishable by Kaut. (III. 18). To warn<sup>928</sup> a man against associating with a person who is guilty of a grave sin or of theft does not entail punishment if the truth of the imputation be established (Kāt. 776). Acc to Kaut and Kāt (775) the king was to award only half the fine prescribed if the accused said 'what I uttered in abuse was done through ignorance, carelessness, rivalry or friendship; I shall not again do so'<sup>929</sup>. A person who abuses a king doing his duty was to have his tongue cut off or forfeited all his property (Nār XVIII 30, Yāj. II. 302). Āp. II. 10. 27. 14 prescribed for a sūdra that abused any one of the three higher castes leading a religious life the punishment of the cutting of the tongue<sup>930</sup>.

Dandapārusya (assault). Kaut III. 19 begins his treatment of this topic by saying that it comprises touching, threatening to strike and actually striking another<sup>931</sup>. Nār. XVIII. 4 defines it as injuring the limbs of another with the hand, foot, weapon or other means (such as stones) or defiling or causing pain by (bringing) ashes and similar substances in contact with another. The Mit. on Yāj II. 213 explains that even causing injury to animals and trees would fall under this title Nār XVIII 5-6 provide that assault may be of three kinds viz. mild, middling and highly punishable according as a person merely makes preparations to assault or attacks without any qualm or causes a wound and that this crime can further be divided into three kinds according as the object attacked is low in value or middling or high. A verse from the Parīśista (quoted by Sm. C. II. p. 327 and V. P. p. 370) states 'whoever causes pain or draws blood, wounds, breaks, cuts off, pierces (the limbs or bodies) of living beings is guilty of dandapārusya' According to Br. (S. B. 1) danḍapāṇi <sup>932</sup> consists in striking (a person) with the hand, with a stone, a club, ashes, mud, dust or a weapon. The Mit on Yaj II 312 following Nār XVIII 7-12 lays down certain propositions about both abuse and assault. A person who does not return abuse or does not assault when abused or assaulted, deserves to be commended, if he returns the abuse or assaults in return, the person who began the quarrel is to be dealt with more severely than the other. When two persons <sup>933</sup> attack each other and there are no means for finding who began the quarrel equal punishment is to be awarded to both, but when two quarrel he who began the quarrel or he who persists longer than the other is to be fined more than the other party and lastly if men of the lowest <sup>934</sup> castes such as śāpāka, meda, cūṇḍāla, hunters, elephant riders, vrātyas and dāsas (slaves) assault respectable men and ācāryas then they are to be punished (whipped) by good men then and there, but if such punishment is not possible, then the king should award corporal punishment (of various kinds according to the nature of the crime) and should not take fines from them, since they are the foulest among men and their wealth also is foul. Kāt (783) and Br (S. B. E 33 p 359 verse 15) are to the same effect. The several smṛtis lay down various punishments for various kinds of assaults but no useful purpose will be served by going into details. Kāt <sup>935</sup> (786) provides that just as in abuse punishments depend on the castes of the abuser and the abused so also in assaults higher punishment is to be awarded if the attacker is of a lower caste than the person attacked or lower punishment if the person attacked is of a lower caste. Manu VIII 286 and Uśanas <sup>936</sup> lay down that the punishment for the offence should be commensurate with the pain or injury caused by the offender to a man or beast. A few examples may be set out. Probably the oldest reference to fines for assault in Sanskrit literature is contained in the Taittiriya Samhita<sup>937</sup> II 6 10. 2. 'He who threatens to strike a brāhmana shall be fined with a hundred (cows or niskas?), he who strikes a brāhmana shall be fined with a thousand, he who draws blood from him shall not behold the pitrs for as many years as there are particles of dust mixed with the blood that falls on them'. This passage is interpreted in Jai III<sup>938</sup> 4 17 as being a recommendatory injunction (purusāthi) to all at all times to desist from assaulting a brāhmana. Gaut (21 20-22) and Manu XI. 206-207 appear to take the Tai. S passage differently and refer the figures of 100 and 1000 to years. Kaut III 19 prescribes various fines for various kinds of assaults. Br (S. B. E 33 p 357 verses 2, 3 and 7) says that if a person throws ashes or the like at another or beats him with the hand the fine should be one māṣa, but if he strikes with a brick, stone or stick the fine should be two māsakas; this however applies when both are of the same caste, but if he assaults a woman who is another's wife or a person of a higher caste, the fine may be higher and higher. For one who bruises the skin of another or draws blood by assault the fine is one hundred panas, and for him who causes a wound by removing some flesh the fine is six māsakas and he who causes breaking of bones should be banished (Manu VIII 284 = Nār XVIII 29). Kāt prescribes the highest amercement for cutting off the ear, the lip, the nose, the foot, the eye, the tongue, the penis, the hand, and the middle amercement for causing injury (or wounding) (Gaut XII 1, Kaut III 19, Manu VIII<sup>939</sup> 279, Yāj II. 215, Br provide the punishment of the cutting of that limb with which a sūdra strikes a person of the three higher castes. And the Mā on Yāj II 215 applies by analogy the same rule to a vaiśya striking a kātriya. Manu VIII 280 extends the same punishment to a sūdra for merely raising the hand or a club to strike one of a higher caste. Manu VIII 281-283 (=Nar. XVIII 26-28) provide that a person of a low caste defiantly sitting on the same seat with one of a higher caste was to be first branded on the waist and then banished or his hips were to be gashed (in such a way that he might not die), that a śūdra defiantly spitting on the body of a brāhmana had his lips cut off or a śūdra voiding urine or faeces on a brāhmana had those offending limbs cut off, or a śūdra defiantly seizing a brāhmana by the hair or the feet or beard or neck or testicles would have both his hands cut off. If several conspire and strike a person who is alone, each one was to be sentenced to twice the punishment prescribed for the offence (Yāj II. 221, Kaut.<sup>940</sup> III 19, Visnu Dh. S. V 73) Kaut. III 19, Manu VIII 287, Yāj II. 222, Br., Kāt 787, Visnu Dh S. V. 75-76 provide that the king should make an offender pay a fine and also the expenses of medical treatment and diet till the wound is healed up and the person attacked is able to do his usual work (vide note 613 above) For mischief to property<sup>941</sup> and for killing or maiming animals, Kaut., Manu, Yājñavalkya, and others provide various fines. For example, Kaut. III. 19 prescribes that when property of small value is destroyed by a man he should be punished with fine equal to the value of the article and should be made to restore the article or its value to the owner; but in the case of articles of substantial value the fine is double of the value. Manu VIII 288 is of similar import. Yāj II. 223 provides varying fines if a person wrongfully causes damage to a wall by knocking it (with a club), or pierces it or divides it into two or demolishes it and makes the offender pay to the owner the cost of restoring it. Manu. VIII. 296-298, Yāj II 225-226 prescribe fines for causing death or injury to animals of small value (such as goats) and big animals like elephants, horses and cows. Yāj II 227-229, Kaut III 19, and Kāt 793 provide fines for causing loss by injuring or felling trees, shrubs and creepers. Yāj II. 214 holds<sup>942</sup> that if a person throws mud, dust or saliva or filthy things on another or strikes with his feet, he should not be fined if he is under the influence of intoxicants at the time or is not in his right mind or does it through mistake, while Kaut. III 19 prescribes half of the usual fine in such cases.

An important question is how far the right of private defence of person or property was recognised by the dharmaśāstra works. This subject has partly been dealt with in H. of Dh. vol. II. pp. 148-151 in connection with an ātātāyīn (a desperate man) who is an incendiary or a poisoner or is armed with a weapon, is a robber, one carrying away another's wife or seizing by force (a field). Although there is great diversity of views about killing a brāhmana ātātāyīn, there is no difference of opinion as to repelling with force culminating even in death an ātātāyīn of any other caste. Gaut. VII. 25 allows even a brāhmana to arm himself when his life is in danger.<sup>943</sup> Baud. Dh. S. II.<sup>944</sup> 2. 80, Manu VIII. 348-349 lay down that brāhmanas and vaiśyas may oppose with force when they are prevented from doing their religious duties by felons or when there are disturbances caused by invasion or the like, for saving their own lives, for preventing the seizure of their cows or other wealth or for protecting women or brāhmanas. The Mit.<sup>945</sup> on Yāj. II. 286 remarks that these rules of Manu are applicable when there is no time to report to the king or when delay in opposing violence will mean loss or ruin. According to Kāt.<sup>946</sup> (800) no blame attaches to a man who kills wicked men that are about to kill another, but when they have desisted from their attempt, they should be arrested and not killed. Aparārka (on Yāj. III. 227) remarks that persons are to be regarded as ātātāyīn while they are about to set fire or to kill or they are in the act of setting fire or killing and the like, that where it is not possible to prevent them from doing what

CHAPTER XXIV

STEYA (theft).

In the Rg. there is frequent mention of taskara, stena and tāyu. In Rg. VI. 28. 3 the sage<sup>948</sup> says 'may the cows not disappear from us, may a thief not injure them'. In Rg. VIII. 29. 6 it is said 'Pūsan guards the ways and knows of concealed treasures as a thief does'. From Rg. X. 4. 6 it appears that thieves were desperate and bound people with ropes and (from Rg. I. 191. 5) that thieves (taskaras) appeared at night. Tāyu (thief) occurs in Rg. I. 50. 2, IV. 38. 5, VI. 12. 5 and is an Indo-Iranian word. The word 'stena' occurs in Rg. VI. 28. 7 and means 'one who is a cattle-lifter'. Rg. VIII. 67. 14 indicates that a stena was bound with ropes (when caught). In Rg. VII. 55. 3 the dog is asked to run after a stena and a taskara, the first being probably a thief (who secretly carries away property) and the second a thief who openly carries it away. In the Vāj<sup>948a</sup> S. XI. 79 (=Tai. S. IV. 1. 10. 2) we have the mahimlu in addition to stena and taskara. Atharvaveda IV. 3 contains charms against wolves, tigers and thieves (taskaras).

Steya is distinguished from sāhasa in Manu VIII. 352, Kaut. III. 17, Nār. XVII. 12 and other works as stated under sāhasa below. Kāt. 810 defines<sup>948b</sup> it as 'depriving a man of his wealth either clandestinely or openly and either by night or by day'. Nār. XVII. 17 defines it as 'deprivation of wealth by various means from people that are asleep, careless or intoxicated'. It may be of three kinds according to the value of the thing stolen viz. trifling (when earthen-ware, seats, cots, wood, hides, grass, beans in pods or cooked food is stolen) or middling (when the theft relates to clothes except silken ones, animals except cows and bulls, metals except gold, rice and barley), grave or high (when gold, jewels, silken cloth, women, men, cattle, elephants, horses and the wealth of brāhmanas or temples is stolen) Vide Nār. XVII 13-16 and Yāj II 275. Thieves are either prakāśa (open or patent) or apākāśa (secret) acc to Manu IX 256, Br<sup>949</sup> (S B E 33 p 359 v 2) Acc to Manu IX 258-260, Nār. (parīśista 2-3) and Br (S B E. 33 p 360 verses 3-4) patent thieves are traders who employ false weights and balances, gamblers, quacks, bribers of sabhyas, prostitutes, those who profess to arbitrate, those who manufacture imitation articles, those who subsist by prognosticating good fortune or portents or by magic or palmistry, false witnesses &c Manu (IX 261-266) states that in order to find out such thieves the king should employ spies in various disguises at various places such as meeting halls, refreshment rooms, brothels, wineshops, theatres &c The concealed thieves are those who move about with tools for house-breaking without being observed and whose residence is not known, they are principally<sup>950</sup> of nine kinds viz. one who quietly relieves a man of his money when the latter is attending to something else, a house-breaker, a highway robber (who robs travellers), a cut-purse, one who steals (or kidnaps) a woman or a man, cattle, horses and other animals. Yāj II 266-268 and Nār. (parīśista 9-12) indicate the various ways in which thieves may be detected and caught viz by the (police) officers recovering a part of the booty from a man or by tracing foot-steps, or by seizing one who has been often found to be a thief, or by finding out that the man suspected cannot state his place of residence; and they recommend that on suspicion others may be caught, if on being questioned they attempt to conceal their caste or name or if they are found addicted to gambling, wine and women or if their mouth becomes dry or their voice changes or if they spend lavishly though they have no ostensible means of earning, or those who sell lost or second-hand goods or who move about in disguise or who are found making inquiries about others' houses or wealth. The Mit. on Yāj<sup>951</sup> II. 268 quotes Nār and gives the warning that the king must carefully examine whether the man caught is really the thief and should not convict merely on suspicion, since even an innocent man may have stolen property near him or betray some of the signs noted above. When property alleged to be stolen is found with a man, it may be that the articles came to his hands from another's hand or he may have taken it up when it lay unclaimed on the ground or he may have taken it as a thief; liars often have the appearance of honest men and uce lo va (Nār I 71)<sup>952</sup> Nārada's dictum (I. 42) that one who is not a thief may be held to be a thief as in the case of Māṇḍavya has already been quoted above (p 357n 549). Vide Manu IX 270 (= Matsya 227. 166) cited on p 355 above. When a person is seized on suspicion of being a thief he could not be acquitted on his mere denial of the offence. He had to prove innocence by ordinary evidence (such as proof that he was elsewhere when the theft was committed) or ordeals (Yāj II. 269). The general rule about the punishment of patent thieves was that the punishment was to be proportionate to the lightness or gravity of the crime and not to their wealth (Vyāsa)<sup>953</sup> Br. (S B E 33 p 361 verses 10 ff) quoted in Par. M. III pp. 439-440 and V P pp 387-88 prescribes various punishments for particular kinds of patent thieves e. g. sabhyas giving wrong decisions (for bribes) or those who deceive by betraying the trust imposed in them are to be banished. Manu IX 292 (= Matsya 227 184-185) holds that the goldsmith is the worst of all deceitful persons (kantakas) and if he is found committing fraud his limbs should be cut off bit by bit.

As regards the concealed thieves the texts lay down special rules. Nār XVII 21 extends to theft of the three kinds mentioned above the same punishments that are awarded in the three kinds of sāhasa. Manu VIII 323 prescribes death sentence for kidnapping men of good family and particularly women and for theft of costly jewels; while Vyāsa prescribes death by burning on red-hot iron bed for kidnapping women and mutilation of hands and feet for kidnapping a man Yāj. II 273 provides impalement for those who confine others as captives, for those who steal horses and elephants and who strike others with violence, while Manu IX. 280 prescribes death for those who break royal store-houses and armoury, the inner shrine in a temple and who steal horses, chariots and elephants. For him who commits theft by housebreaking at night Manu (IX 276) and Br. (S B E 33 p 361, verse 17) provide impalement<sup>951</sup> after cutting off his hands. Yāj. II 274, Manu IX 277, Visnu Dh S. V 136 prescribe for the cut-purse the punishment of the cutting of the thumb and index finger for the first offence, the cutting of the hand and foot if it is the second offence and death if he repeats the same offence a third time. Not only was the thief made to undergo punishment but he was also liable to make good the loss of property to the person robbed (Manu VIII 320, Yāj. II 270, Visnu Dh S V. 89, Nār. parisiṣṭa 21). According to Nār (parisiṣṭa 22-24) for thefts of articles of small value the fine was five times their price, while Manu (VIII. 326-329) said it was twice as much as the price. Gaut XII 12-14,<sup>955</sup> Manu VIII. 337-338, Nār. (parisiṣṭa 51-52) lay down that the fine for theft is higher in the case of the higher castes i. e. if the śūdra thief is fined eight times of the value of the article stolen, the vaiśya, ksatriya and brāhmaṇa thieves were respectively fined 16, 32 and 64 times the price of the article, as each is deemed to know better owing to his higher status and culture. Manu VIII. 380 lays down the general rule that a brāhmaṇa offender was not to be killed whatever the offence might be but he was to be banished from the country allowing him to take with him all his wealth. But there were other provisions and exceptions also. Kat<sup>956</sup> (823) states that the school of the Mānavas declared that thieves caught with the stolen things on them should be at once banished but that the school of Gautama disapproved of this mode, since it is condemned because it entails loss (reduction) of people in the country. The V. R. p. 332 explains this verse as referring to a learned brāhmana. Two more verses of Kāt. (824-825) are quoted by V. R. p. 332 and V. C. p. 92 the first of which provides that a brāhmana who is not learned whether caught with booty or not should be branded (with the appropriate signs) and deprived of all his property, provided his guilt is brought home with certainty and the second provides that a brāhmana thief who is neither learned nor rich but is strongly built should be kept under guard with fetters on his feet, should be fed on meagre food and made to do hard labour for the king till his death. Gaut. XII. 46-48, Nār. (parīṣista 13-14), Manu IX. 271 and 278, Kāt (827) hold that the punishment for those who knowingly give food, fire (when they feel cold), water or asylum to thieves or who receive or purchase stolen property or who conceal them are to be punished like the thieves themselves.<sup>957</sup> Yāj II. 276 prescribes the highest amercement for any one who knowingly gives help to a thief or murderer in the above ways or by directions or by supplying tools or money wherewith to go to a place for committing the offence.

In certain cases a person could take without being liable to be punished as a thief certain things belonging to another even if he had not the latter's permission. Gaut XII.<sup>958</sup> 25, Manu VIII. 339 (= Matsya 227. 112-113), Yāj II. 166 allow a person of the three higher castes to take grass, fuel-sticks, flowers of trees and plants for feeding cows and for the worship of fire from any place as if they belonged to himself and also fruits of trees that were not enclosed. In such cases he would not be liable to a fine nor does he incur sin (Kullūka on Manu VIII. 339). A smṛti passage stating that if a man takes grass or fuel or flowers or fruits without permission deserves to have his hand cut off is explained by the Mī. (on Yāj 166), Aparārka p. 774 and others as meant to apply to persons other than dviyas or as meant to refer to a case where they are taken by a person who has really no difficulty in securing these or where these are not taken for the use of cows or for worship. This matter had been a subject of discussion from ancient times. Ap. Dh S <sup>99</sup> (I 10 28 1-5) contains a discussion from which it appears that Kautsa, Hārīta, Kānva and Puskarasādi were of the opinion that whatever (however trifling or in whatever circumstances) a man took without the consent of the owner, he became a thief, that Vātsyāyana held that there were exceptions to this rule viz. that owners should not forbid the taking (of a small quantity of) grain in pods (such as mudga or mūsa) or grass for bulls yoked to carts, but that if large quantities even of these were taken there would be theft. Śānti 165. 11-13, Manu XI 16-18 and Yāj III. 43 state that when a brāhmana or other person has fasted for three days because he has had no grain with him, he may on the 4th day take grain for one day's meal from anywhere he can get, whether from a threshing floor or from a field or a house, and that if the owner questioned he should declare to him the reason, but a person of a lower caste should not in this way take grain belonging to one of a higher caste, unless the latter pursues a sinful course or does not perform the duties of his caste. Vyāsa quoted by Sm. C. I. p. 175 allows a man to commit even theft, when he is in distress for food, first from a person of a lower caste, then from one of the same caste and then from one of a higher caste Manu VIII. 341 (= Matsya 227. 110, 114), Nār (prakīrnaka 39), Śankha and Kāt (822A) state that a traveller whose food has run out may take from another's land without being liable to punishment two sugarcane stalks, two mūlakas (esculent roots), two cucumbers or melons, five mangoes or pomegranate fruit

Sāhasa (crimes of violence). Manu VIII 332, Kaut III 17, Nār. XVII 1, Yāj II 230, Kāt. (795-796) define sāhasa <sup>962</sup> as any act which is done with violence in defiance of or in spite of the presence of royal officers or guards or people. The word sāhasa is a derivative from 'sahas' meaning 'force' (Nār XVII 1). Sometimes it is distinguished from theft (as in Manu VIII 332, Kaut III 17 and Nār. XVII 12) by saying that theft consists in depriving a person of his wealth stealthily (without force), while in sāhasa there is the use of force or violence <sup>963</sup>. Nār. XVII 2 and Br (S B. E. vol 33 p. 359 verse 1) state that sāhasa <sup>964</sup> is of four kinds viz manslaughter, theft, violence to the wives of others, and the two kinds of pārusya (treated as one head). Although these topics can be comprehended under sāhasa, they are generally dealt with separately in the smrtis and digests as a matter of convenience and in order to provide heavier punishment for crimes of violence <sup>965</sup>, since a man guilty of a crime of violence is a worse sinner than one guilty of abuse, theft or assault (Manu VIII 345 and Mit. on Yāj. II 230) and Manu VIII 244 enjoins upon the king not to tolerate for a moment a man guilty of violence. The

Sāhasa is divided by Nār. XVII 3-6 and Br (S B E 33 p 363 verse 24) into three varieties, viz. the lowest (destruction, abuse and trampling of fruits, roots, water, agricultural implements), middling (destruction &c of clothes, food and drink, household utensils), highest (killing with weapons or poison, violence to others' wives and whatever causes pain to sentient beings) These three kinds are respectively punished with the three kinds of punishments described above (pp. 393-94) The principal crimes included under sāhasa in its narrow sense are homicide, rape and robbery Rape will be dealt with under śāṣṭāṅgrahana Br.<sup>967</sup> states the general rule that one guilty of murder by violence should be punished with death and not with fines (S B. E 33 p. 363 v 29) To this the brāhmana offender was an exception (Manu IX. 241), who was only to be banished Manu IX 242 introduces another exception viz. persons other than brāhmanas when guilty of the great sins (specified in IX 235) through negligence should be only deprived of all their property but if they murder a man intentionally then only are they to be sentenced to death. Manu IX. 232 and Visnu Dh S V 9-11 provide the punishment of death for those who fabricate false royal edicts, or who tamper with the loyalty of the elements of the State or who kill women, children and brāhmanas Baud Dh S I 10. 20-21, Br and Vyāsa prescribe<sup>968</sup> that if a brāhmana is killed by a ksatriya, vaiśya or śūdra, the king should sentence the offender to death in various ways and confiscate all his property, but if a man kills another of his own caste or of a lower caste then the king may punish the offender with some punishment appropriate to the crime and the strength of the offender. In IV. 11 Kaut. provides sentences of death in various ways for murder following ancient śāstras, but remarks that if murderers have not been guilty of cruelty they should simply be sentenced to death without torture or the like<sup>969</sup>. One special rule deserves notice Gaut. 22 12, Āp Dh. S. The different meanings of 'ātreya' given from ancient times are noted below<sup>970</sup>. Texts

970 आत्रेयाश्रैवम् । गौ 22 12. आत्रेयी च स्त्रियम् । आप घ छ I 9 24 9. आत्रेयी is variously explained. The word occurs as early as the Sat Br I. 4, 5, 13 where in explaining why the offerings to Prajāpati are made in a low tone a legend about the goddess 'Vāc' is narrated and it is said that in having sexual intercourse with an ātreya, a man incurs sin' (तस्मादप्यात्रेया योयितैस्त्री). Here the word appears to mean a woman who is in her monthly illness. Vas (20 35-36) defines ātreya as a woman who has taken the purificatory bath on the 4th day after her monthly illness begins and derives the word from अत्र 'आत्रेयी वदयामो रजस्वलापृष्टुस्मातामात्रेयीमाहुः । अत्र ह्येव्यदपत्यं भवतीति.' Vasistha either cites or summarises a Vedic passage (as stated by Viśvarūpa) which means 'here (i.e. in the womb of this woman) a child is to come'. In SBE vol. 14 p. 107 the same is translated as 'if the husband approaches her at that (time) he will have offspring'. But this is not correct. 'Eśyat' qualifies 'apatyam' and is not in the masculine. Vas derives the word from अत्र and the root ङ् Visnu Dh S 36 1 and 50 9 appear to hold that ātreya means a woman of the *Atri*gotra. Haradatta on both Gaut. and Āp explains ātreya as Vasistha does and states that others interpreted it as 'अत्रिगोत्रा', on Yāj III 251 (तथात्रेयिनिपुद्क) विश्वरूप explains आत्रेयी as a woman within 16 days from the beginning of the monthly illness and quotes बसिष्ठ 20 36 and also says 'आत्रेयी अत्रिगोत्रा वर्णयन्ति । तदपि युक्तमेव । तथा च्वाग्न्याः ततोभिः सम्बभूवेत्युक्त्वा तस्मादप्यात्रेया योयितैस्त्रिजमाहुः । तेनोभे सम्यग्व्याख्याने एव ।'. From Sabara on Jai VI 1 7 it appears that some derived the word as 'अत्र कुक्ष्याख्या विद्यत इत्यात्रेयी', while Sabara himself preferred the meaning 'अत्रिगोत्रा' and regarded the prohibition to kill an ātreya as simply meant for praising that gotra 'तथा गोत्रमर्शस्तार्थं आत्रेया अवधसङ्कीर्तनम् । न चापन्नसत्त्वा आत्रेयी । गोत्रं येतत् । न हि अत्रशब्दादप्यं तद्धित उत्पन्नः । समर्थानां हि तद्धित उत्पद्यते । न च अत्रशब्दस्य सामर्थ्यमस्ति' (on जै VI. 1. 9) यम quoted by परा मा II 1 p 103 gives two meanings 'जन्मप्रभृति संस्कारैः सत्कृता ब्रह्मचर्यया । गमिणी वाध वा या स्यात्तामात्रेयी विनिर्दिशेत् ॥'. The अमरकोश gives आत्रेयी as a synonym of रजस्वला

like Āp I 9 24. 1-5, Gaut XXII prescribe different prāyaścittas for murder depending upon the castes and sexes of the murderer and the murdered. These will be briefly dealt with under prāyaścitta later on. In certain cases acc. to Manu VIII 291-292, Yāj II 298-299, Kaut IV 13, though death or injury to persons or loss of property results, no punishment was prescribed viz when the nose-string of bulls yoked to a cart snaps, when the yoke breaks, when the cart swerves on one side owing to the unevenness of the ground, when the axle or wheel breaks or when the leather thongs with which the several parts of the cart are tied give way, or when the rope cast round the necks of bulls or the reins break or when in spite of the driver loudly calling upon a person to move aside from the way an accident occurs. But Manu VIII 293, 294 (= Matsya 227. 95-96) provide that where through the want of skill of the driver knowingly engaged by a master the cart is overturned and injury is caused, the master should be fined 200 panas, but if the driver employed be known to be skilful, then when injury is caused the driver should be fined (and not the employer). Further if the driver, though seeing that the road is blocked by cattle or other carts, rashly drives and kills men and animals he should be punished (Manu VIII. 295). It is stated by Nār (pārusya 33, S. B. E. vol 33 p 212) that the father is not liable for his son's offence, nor is the owner of a horse, dog or ape liable to punishment (for injury caused by any of these) provided they are not set up (to do harm) by the owner. If a driver kills a man by rash or negligent driving he is to be punished like a thief, if he kills any one of the larger animals (such as a cow, a horse, a camel or elephant) the punishment would be half of the preceding, if he kills one of the inferior animals, the fine would be two hundred. Kaut III 19, Manu (VIII 285), Yāj. II 227-229 and Visnu Dh S. V 55-59 prescribe graduated fines for the destruction of trees, plants and branches, flowers and fruits according to their usefulness and sanctity. The smutis made a distinction as regards punishments between crimes of violence and crimes due to negligence or mistake. For example, Manu VIII 264 (= Matsya 227 30) prescribes a fine of 500 panas for depriving a man of his house, garden or field by threats of violence, but only prescribes a fine of two hundred if a man deprives another of his house &c by mistake.

Various rules were laid down about inciters or abettors Yāj II. 231 and Kaut<sup>771</sup> III. 17 prescribe for the man who incites another to crimes of violence double the punishment to be inflicted on the perpetrator himself and four times for one who incites another by assuring him 'I shall give as much money as will be required'. Kāt. (798) and Br<sup>772</sup> (S. B. E. 33 p 363 vers 31) prescribe that if several violently beat a man to death, he who gives the fatal blow on a vital part is declared to be the murderer and is to suffer the full punishment for murder. Kāt (832-834)<sup>773</sup> and Br. (S. B. E. 33 p. 364 verse 32) provide that he who commences a crime of violence, who is a helper, who gives advice as to the way (in which sāhasa is to be carried out), who gives refuge (asylum) to the offender or supplies weapons, who gives food to wrongdoers, who incites (offenders) to put up a fight, who shows how the person (killed) is to be destroyed, who connives (at the commission of an offence), who exposes the faults (of the person killed), who gives his approval (to the offence), who though able does not forbid or prevent the commission of the offence—all these are (practically) perpetrators of the crime and the king should award punishment according to their ability and their guilt. Vide also Āp Dh. S. II. 11 29.1<sup>774</sup> For those who begin an offence or abet its commission Br (S. B. E. 33 p. 364 verse 32) prescribes half the punishment prescribed for the wrongdoer.<sup>775</sup> Yāj. (II. 232-242) enumerates several kinds of offences as allied to sāhasa and prescribes punishments therefor, such as breaking a house that is closed under seal, causing harm to neighbours and kuḷuka.

CHAPTER XXV

STRISANGRAHANA (Adultery or unlawful intercourse with a woman ).

The Mit. ( on Yāj. II. <sup>976</sup> 283 ) states that sangrahana means the unlawful coming together of a man and a woman for sexual enjoyment. Br. ( S. B. E. 33 p 365 verses 1-2 ) says that sinful <sup>977</sup> sangrahana is of three kinds, viz. brought about by force, deceit or sensual passion. The first ( which is rape ) occurs when intercourse is had in a secluded place against the will of a woman, or with a woman who is intoxicated or is disordered in mind or is under a mistake or when she raises a cry ; the second occurs when a woman is brought to one's house by some trick or pretence, an intoxicant ( such as Dhatuā ) is administered to her or her mind is brought under control ( by chants or otherwise ) and sexual intercourse takes place ; the third occurs when intercourse takes place by conveying ( passion ) to each other by means of the eyes ( glances ) or by employing a go-between and when the parties are drawn to each other by the temptation of beauty or of wealth This last is again of three kinds acc to Vyāsa and Br. ( S. B. E. 33 p. 365-66 verses 6-8 q. by Śm. C. II. p. 8 ) viz. trifling, middling and grave The first is characterised by winking at a woman, smiling at her, sending a go-between, touching her ornaments or clothes ; the second by the sending of flowers, unguents, fruits, incense, food, clothes, and indulging in private talks ; the third is characterised by lying on the same bed, dalliance, kissing and embraces. Strisangrahana by force ( that is rape ) is really included under sāhita,<sup>978</sup> as stated by the Madanaratna, the V. P. pp. 396-397 and others. The punishments for rape were very heavy. Br (S. B. E. 33 p. 366 verse 10) states that if a man commits rape on a woman of the same caste, he was to forfeit all his property, to have his penis and testicles cut out and was to be paraded on the back of an ass, that if the woman raped was of a lower caste, then half of this punishment was to be awarded and if she was of a higher caste, he was to be sentenced to death together with confiscation of all property. Kat (830) prescribes that when<sup>980</sup> a man has forcibly had sexual intercourse with a woman capital punishment is to be inflicted inasmuch as it is a violation of (proper) conduct. When sexual intercourse was had by deceit the man was punished with confiscation of all property, with branding on the forehead of the sign of the female private parts and banishment from the town (Br. in S. B. E. 33 p. 366 verse<sup>981</sup> 11). Here also the rule of Br. cited above (about the reduction of sentence according to the caste of the woman concerned) applies. In the case of rape and sexual intercourse by deceit the woman was not at all punished<sup>982</sup> but she had to undergo a penance (prāyaścitta) of krucchra or pañcāka for contact with a male other than her husband and till she performed the prāyaścitta she was to be kept well-guarded in the house, was to remain dirty (i. e.

After performing prāyaścitta she was restored to her former position. Acc. to Yāj. II. 286 and Br (S. B. E. 33 p. 366 verse 12), for adultery (in which there is consent) the highest fine is prescribed for the male in the case of a woman of the same caste, half of this in the case of a woman lower in caste (than the paramour), but when adultery is committed with a woman of a higher caste the male shall be put to death and the woman shall have her ears and the like cut off. Vide Shakespeare's Othello IV. 1, where Othello exclaims 'I see that nose of yours but not that dog I shall throw it to' There were other sages who were humane and opposed to the punishment of disfigurement by way of the cutting of the ear or the nose. Yama<sup>982a</sup> states that in the case of a woman guilty of adultery at her will, there was to be no punishment of death or disfigurement, but only abandonment. Kāt (487) lays down the general rule that in all offences women should be sentenced to half the fine in money which is prescribed for a male and that when the punishment is death for a male the punishment for a woman would be cutting off a limb (vide note 626).

Nar. (XV. 73-75) holds<sup>983</sup> that sexual intercourse with the step-mother, mother's sister, mother-in-law, the paternal or maternal uncle's wife, father's sister, a friend's or pupil's wife, sister, sister's friend, daughter-in-law, daughter, the wife of one's vedic teacher, a woman of the same gotra, a woman that has sought protection, with the queen or an ascetic woman (pravrajitā) or a wet-nurse or a virtuous wife (sādhwī) or a woman of a higher caste is incestuous and the punishment to be prescribed for this crime is the excision of the penis and no less. Vide Manu XI. 170-71, Kaut IV. 13,<sup>984</sup> Yāj III. 231-233, Matsya-purāṇa 227 139-141, which latter (three) prescribe excision of the penis and death by way of punishment (except for a brāhmaṇa) and expiation and for the woman (if she was a consenting party) death sentence Brhad-Yama III 7, Āp (in verse) IX. 1 (Jivananda ed.) and Yama (Ānandāsrama) 35 prescribe that there is no expiation except that of entering fire for incest with mother, teacher's wife, sister or daughter. It is remarkable that Kaut.<sup>985</sup> and Yāj (II 293) prescribe only a fine of 24 panas for adultery with a female ascetic, while Nār. XV. 74 and Matsya 227. 141 deem it a most heinous offence. The explanation probably lies in the fact that Kaut. and Yāj refer to female ascetics of the lowest castes not following the orthodox religion, while Nār. refers to nuns of a higher order. Vide Manu VIII. 363 also. For forcible intercourse with a prostitute against<sup>986</sup> her will Kaut. IV. 13 and Yāj II 291 prescribe a fine of 12 and 24 panas respectively. For unnatural offences or offences against the order of nature, Kaut. IV 13, Yāj. II 289, 293, Viṣṇu Dh. S. V. 44, Nār. XV. 76 provide fines of 12, 24, 100, 500 panas<sup>987</sup>.

Manu IV. 134 (= Anusāsana 104. 21 = Mārkaṇḍeya-purāṇa 34. 62-63) forbids a man to have sexual intercourse with another's wife and states that there is nothing so detrimental to long life as that. There are stray indications in the Vedic literature about sexual intercourse outside marriage. Vide H. of Dh. II pp. 637-639. In Rg. I 92. 4 ( udhī peśūnsi vyajite arlū-va ) there appears to be a reference to a dancing girl or hetaru. Wives hating (or proving false) to their husbands are believed to go to Hell in Rg. IV. 5 5 ( patiripo nu janayo durevāh ). In Rg. II. 29 1 the sage prays to the Ādityas 'remove away from me sin as a woman who gives birth to a child in secret removes it' ( āre mathanta rahasūr-vāgah ). The gambler (in Rg. X. 34 4) states 'others have intercourse with his wife' ( anye jūyām janī-mśantasya ). The word pumścali occurs in Vā. S. XXX 22. We have already seen ( H. of Dh. II pp. 576, 1098 ) how in the Varunapraghāsa (one of the Cāturmāsya-s) the wife of the sacrificer had to confess if she had a lover and how even after she confessed to having had one she was allowed to co-operate in the sacrifice on undergoing an expiation. After a man performed the solemn sacrifice called Agnicayana he was enjoined (Tai. S. V. 6. 8. 3)<sup>988</sup> not to approach a śūdra woman and after he performed Agnicayana twice he was not to approach another's wife (H of Dh vol. II p. 1255).

The punishment for sangrahana (rape and adultery) varied according to the caste of the man and the woman, according as the woman was married or unmarried and according as she was guarded (guptā) or unguarded. Vide Gaut. XII 2, Vas XXI. 1-5, Manu VIII. 359, Visnu Dh. S V. 41, Yāj. II. 286, 294, Nār. XV 70 (as to higher or lower caste of offender), Gaut. XII. 3, Manu VIII. 374-378, 382-385, Kaut. IV. 13 (about offence against guarded or unguarded woman), Manu VIII. 364-370, Yāj. II 285, 287, Kaut. IV. 12, Nār. XV. 71-72 (about maidens). Further the ancient sūtras and smrtis prescribe more severe sentences than later smrtis. Details of these matters are passed over here for want of space and as being now of academic interest only. But some examples may be noted. Gaut. XXIII. 14-15 and Manu VIII. 371 prescribe for an adulteress death by being devoured by dogs, but Yāj. II. 286 softened the rigour of this. Āp. Dh. S. (II 10. 26. 20-21) prescribed the penalty of cutting the penis and testicles for the male if guilty of adultery with a married woman, but only confiscation of all property if he committed adultery with an unmarried woman. But Yāj. II. 288, Manu VIII. 366, Nār. XV. 72 went so far as to say that if a man had sexual intercourse with a maiden (of the same caste) who encouraged his advances, then there is no offence punishable by the king, but he was to bestow ornaments on her, honour her and must marry her.

It has further to be noted that Yāj. II. 290 and Nār. (XV 79)<sup>989</sup> make it punishable to visit a dāsi kept by a man in his own house or outside and Yāj. prescribes the fine of 50 panas for so doing. Vide H of Dh. vol. II pp. 637-639 about prostitutes. But Manu VIII. 362 states that the rules making conversation with others' wives in lonely places punishable does not hold good in the case of the wives of actors, singers and those who live on the earnings of their wives, since they themselves introduce their wives to others and make them mix among men ( while they themselves remain concealed )

Strīpundharma ( duties of husband and wife ). Most of the matters falling under this head have been dealt with in H of Dh. vol. II. pp. 556-592. The liability of the husband or wife for the debts of the other has been already dealt with under rāṇādana. The rights of partition, inheritance and maintenance will be discussed later on under dāyabhāga. Nār. XV. 1 defines this title of law as that in which the rules of the marriage of women and men and other related matters are described. Under this head Nār. speaks of the essential ceremonies of marriage, the rules about selecting a bride and a bridegroom, restrictions as to the caste of the bride, the guardians for marriage, faults or defects in a proposed bride or bridegroom, the forms of marriage, women called punarbhū and svamnī, the practice of niyoga, illicit sexual intercourse, punishment of women for adultery, re-marriage, varnasankara, mixed castes. In IX 1 Manu promises that he will dilate upon the obligatory duties of man and wife, whether they are staying together or apart. Manu IX. 2 holds that the first duty of the husband and the males in his family is to keep women dependent and under their control if they become attached to a life of pleasure and Nār. XVI. 30 states that even women of good family come to ruin by independence. The next most important matter acc to Manu IX. 5 and Br. ( S B. E. 33 p 367 verse 2 )<sup>990</sup> is to guard women against improper attachments however trifling, since if they go astray they bring sorrow to both families ( of the husband and of the father ). Acc to Hārīta,<sup>991</sup> Śankha-Likhita,<sup>992</sup> Manu ( IX. 7, 9 ) and others the husband has to guard the wife from the approaches of other men in order to ensure the purity of the issue and by guarding her the husband guards his reputation, family, soul and his dharma, since a woman gives birth to a son similar to the male with whom she consorts or on whom she sets her heart during the days after the monthly illness. Here there is some anticipation of modern Eugenics. Manu IX. 10 was quite clear that women could not be completely guarded by confining them with force in seclusion, that their minds must be occupied in family work as stated by him in IX 11 and by Br. (S. B. E. 33 p. 368<sup>993</sup> verse 4), that the husband must try to deserve her regard and affection and show her honour (Manu IX. 22-24, 26, Yāj. I. 82). Divorce has been already dealt with in H. of Dh. vol. II. pp 619-623 Vide 'Selections from Peshwa's daftar' vol. 43 p. 112 where the divorce of a woman (ghatasphota) is ordered because the husband was really a converted Mahomedan who had been illegally admitted to caste after an incorrect method of expiation

CHAPTER XXVI

DYŪTASAMĀHVAYA

( Gambling and prize-fighting )

Manu IX. 223, Nār. XIX. 1 and Br. (S B. E. 33 p. 385 verse 3) define dyūta (gambling) as that sport which is carried on with inanimate objects such as dice, pieces of leather, ivory and the like and in which there is a stake, while sport carried on with animate objects such as cocks, pigeons, rams, buffaloes and wrestlers is called samāhvaya. The attitude of Manu towards gambling was uncompromising. Manu (IX 221-222, 224-226) calls upon the king to suppress gambling and prize-fighting in his country as they cause the destruction of the State; he states that gambling is open theft and therefore the king should endeavour to put it down and that the king should punish with corporal punishment all those who engage in gambling or who induce or help others to gamble, and that he should banish gamblers from the city because gamblers residing in the country harass wellconducted subjects by their deceitful tricks. Manu IX. 227 (= Udyogaparva 37. 19) states that in ancient times gambling engendered great enmities and therefore a wise man should not resort to it even for amusement or in jest. Kāt (934) is to the same effect Yāj II. 203 and Kaut. III. 20<sup>994</sup> allowed gambling in a central place under State supervision as it led to the detection of thieves Br<sup>995</sup> (S B. E. 33 p. 385 verse 1) refers to this divergence of views: 'Gambling that causes loss of truth, purity and wealth was forbidden by Manu, but others allowed it because it led to the detection of thieves, provided it was carried on in the presence of a master of the gambling hall and provided it yielded revenue to the king' The person who was in charge of the gambling hall which gamblers made their haunt and who supplied the dice and other instruments of gambling was called sabhika and the stake or money agreed to be paid by the defeated gambler to the winning gambler was called panu or glaha (Yāj. II 199) Nār. XIX. 8 provides an optional method viz. instead<sup>996</sup> of gambling in a hall presided over by a sabhika, gamblers may give the king his share in the stakes, then indulge in gambling openly and if they do so they incur no punishment. Acc. to Yāj. II. 199 as interpreted by Par. M. III p. 574 and V. P. p 565 the sabhika was to receive five per cent or  $\frac{1}{10}$ th part when the stake was 100 panas or more and 10 per cent or  $\frac{1}{5}$ th when the stake was less than 100 panas. Aparārka (p. 802) explains that the sabhika was to receive as his fee five per cent from the victorious gambler and ten per cent from the losing gambler. Nār XIX. 2 prescribes a flat rate of ten per cent on the stake as the fee of the sabhika, while Kaut.<sup>997</sup> III 20 lays down the fee as five per cent and allows the sabhika to charge hire for supplying gambling accessories (such as dice, leather pieces) and for supplying water and accommodation The sabhika receiving protection from the king was to pay to the king the tax agreed upon by him, was to recover from the defeated gambler the stake (by means of confinement or restraint order) and pay it over to the victor and was to be honest and forbearing<sup>998</sup> (Yāj. II 200, Kāt 940, Nār. XIX 2) Kāt (937) states that the sabhika<sup>999</sup> may give to the winner the money won out of his own pocket and may recover from the losing gambler within three fortnights or at once if there is fear of losing the money. Kāt (935)<sup>1000</sup> holds that if gambling was to be allowed it must be carried on openly with an arch constructed near the door in order that respectable people might not be misled (about its real nature) and it should yield revenue to the king If the sabhika is unable to make the defeated gambler pay the stake to the victor, the king would make the former pay to the latter provided the gambling was done openly in the presence of the sabbhika and a group of gamblers and the king's dues were paid by the sabbhika, but not otherwise (Yāj II 201). Nār. XIX 6-7 and Yāj II 202 provide that when gambling is carried on secretly and without the king's permission or with false dice or other deceitful tricks, the gamblers and the sabbhika would not be able to gain their object (i.e. recovering bets won or the fee) and would be liable to punishment, viz. branding on the head (with dog's foot and the like) and banishment. Nār. XIX. 6 adds that the banished gamblers would have wreaths of dice tied round their necks. Kāt. (941) and Br. (S. B. E. 33 p. 386 verse 7) state that a person ignorant of gambling should, if defeated in gambling in private, be released from his liability, but one who is an adept in gambling should not be relieved when defeated, but even an adept in gambling if he has lost the whole of his wealth as a stake should not be made to pay the whole.<sup>1001</sup> In disputes among gamblers, in deciding on victory or in the matter of gain to the winner, and as regards the question of false dice the keeper of the gaming house, if honest, is the final authority<sup>1002</sup> (Kāt. 942). Nār. XIX. 4, Yāj. II. 202, Br. (S. B. E. 33 p. 386 verse 6), Kāt. (943) provide that when there is a dispute as to success or defeat the king should appoint gamblers to decide the dispute and gamblers will also be the witnesses in such a dispute (in spite of the rule stated above on p. 335 that gamblers are not competent witnesses), but if the gamblers are alleged to be inimical to the disputants the king may then<sup>1003</sup> himself decide the matter. Yāj. II 203 extends all the rules about gambling to samāhvaya. Br. (S. B. E. 33 p. 386 verse 4) notes that the stake is to be paid by the owner of the animal that is defeated.<sup>1004</sup> The S. thereon that the king gets one-fourth of the stake from each of the owners of the fighting animals and that the animal that is defeated (except a wrestler or a buffalo) is to be made over, whether living or dead, to the owner of the winner. The Mānasollāsa (vol. III. p 229) contains an elaborate description of a king's amusements by way of wrestling matches, cock-fights &c. The Daśakumāracarita makes frequent reference to gambling. In Ucchvāsa II. (p. 47) we are told that there are 25 kalās on which gambling depends, that legal proceedings between gamblers were decided by reliance on the sabhika and that out of a stake of 16000 dīnāras, the successful gambler took half and distributed the other half among the sabhika and the denizens of the gambling hall.

Gambling is one of the most ancient vices. Rg. X. 34 is a hymn which contains the lament of a gambler. Elsewhere also in the Rg. gambling is referred to. Vide Rg. I. 41. 9 (explained in Nirukta III. 16), VII. 86. 6 (where it is said that dice made of Vibhīdaka tree are one of the sources of sin), Rg. X. 42. 9, X. 43. 5. In the Atharvaveda also dice and glaha occur frequently. Vide Atharva IV. 16. 5, IV. 38 (a hymn for good luck in gambling) In Vāj. S. 30. 18 we have the words 'aksarājāya kitavam'. In certain solemn sacrifices like the Rājasūya dice play was an important item. Vide H. of Dh. vol II. p 1219. Pāṇini teaches the formation of many words relating to gambling. In II.<sup>1005</sup> 1. 10 he teaches the formation of Avyayībhāva compounds like 'aksapari' or 'salākāpari' in the sense 'that loss was caused by one dice being cast in a way different from the way in which it was cast in a prior game'. In IV. 4. 2 he teaches that 'aksika' means one who uses dice in gambling or wins by using <sup>1006</sup> dice and in IV. 4. 19 he states that 'aksadyūtika' <sup>1007</sup> means '(enmity) brought about by using dice in gambling'. Vide also Pāṇ. II. 3. 57-58. Āp. Dh. S. II.<sup>1008</sup> 10. 25. 12-13 prescribe that in the midst of the sabhā (hall) having raised a table for playing dice one should place thereon dice even in number and made from the vibhītaka wood and that players should be men of the three higher castes, pure and devoted to truth. In the Mahābhārata Yudhiṣṭhira<sup>1009</sup> is made to say that it was his vow not to refuse dice play when he was challenged to it. It was well-known that gambling affects the minds even of the good, while in the case of those who were not ordinarily good it led to dissensions and calamities. Many modern people justify the action of Yudhiṣṭhira on the ground that the code of ksatriya chivalry and morality of those ancient days required that he should not be afraid to play with dice when challenged by an adversary. Conceding for the sake of argument that indulgence in gambling even on the part of such a virtuous, noble and philosophic warrior as Yudhiṣṭhira was justified or at least excusable, there is nothing to show that the code of ksatriya chivalry permitted him to gamble away his own spirited, devoted and virtuous queen and his four valiant brothers. It appears that the real aim of the great author of the Mahābhārata is to emphasize that gambling is such a reprehensible pastime and so ruinous and degrading that even the greatest and the best, when once they indulge in it, lose all sense of duty, morality and of the claims of love and affection. It has already been seen how gambling was looked upon as a great vice in the king by writers on politics and also on dharmasāstra. Even the Purāṇas here and there condemn gambling. For example, the Brahmapurāṇa (171. 29-38) condemns it in strong language. It says that the gambler's wife is always in distress and the gambler on seeing the condition of his wife is also worried (this is in almost the same words as Rg. X. 34. 10-11), that the Veda condemns gambling and that there is no sin comparable to gambling.

CHAPTER XXVII

DĀYABHĀGA

( Partition of wealth )

The word dāya has been used even in the oldest period of the Vedic Literature Rg. II. 32.4 (dadātu vīram śatadāyam-ukthyaṃ) has already been quoted above (on p. 388) In Rg X. 114.10 (śramasya dāyam vābhujantyeḥbhyah) the meaning of the word seems to be 'a share' or 'reward'. In the Tai S and the Brāhmanas the word dāya appears to be employed in the sense of 'paternal wealth' or simply 'wealth'. In the story of Nābhānedīstha<sup>1010</sup> it is stated that Manu divided his dāya among (for) his sons' (Tai S III. 1.9.4) That 'dāya' here stands for 'dhana' follows from another passage of the Tai S. (II. 5.2.7) 'Therefore they distinguish (or establish) the eldest son by wealth'. In the Tāndya Brāhmana<sup>1011</sup> 16.4.3-5 also it is said 'Therefore whoever among (a man's) sons secures the best or major portion of wealth as dāya, him they regard as the son who would be the lord of all'. Another word viz. riktha occurring in the sūtra and smṛiti literature is also employed in the Rgveda<sup>1012</sup> III. 31.2 'the son of the body does not give to his sister the ancestral wealth, but makes her the receptacle for the son of her husband'. The word dāyāda (meaning a co-sharer, one who takes a share) occurs frequently in the Vedic Literature. In the Tai. S VI. 5.8.2<sup>1013</sup> it is said 'Therefore women being destitute of strength take no portion (of Soma)

II. 5.2.7 आयं धं दू (II. 6.14.11-12) quotes both these texts when combating the view that the eldest son gets the entire ancestral wealth. For the story of Nābhānedīstha with slight variation, vide Art. Br. 22.9, which is an attempt to explain the obscure hymns Rg. X. 61-62.

and speak more weakly than even a wretched (low) man'. In the Atharvaveda V 18 6 Soma is said<sup>1014</sup> to be the dāyāda of the brāhmanas. Viśvāmitra invites Sunahśepa to share in the spiritual wealth (dāya) belonging to him (Ait Br 33 5), calls upon his sons to follow him and states that he (Sunahśepa) would accept them, his wealth (dāya) and his learning<sup>1015</sup>. The Nir III 4 quotes or summarizes other Vedic passages in which the words dāya and dāyāda occur. In Pāṇini II, 3 39 and VI, 2. 5 the word dāyāda occurs.

The principal heads discussed under the vyavahārapada called dāyabhāga are two, viz partition and inheritance. For at least a thousand years there have been two schools that widely differ on these two heads, they are respectively known as the school of the Mitākṣarā and that of the Dāyabhāga on account of the pre-eminent position of these works in the respective schools. The latter school is predominant in Bengal while the former prevails in the whole of India excepting Bengal. But even in Bengal there are in modern times families governed by the law of the Mitākṣarā. This work in intention and scope does not profess to be a treatise on modern Hindu Law. It concerns itself with pointing out what the law of the Smṛtis and writers of medieval digests was and has to eschew an exhaustive discussion of the modern case-law and legislative enactments that have made the Hindu Law appear in many respects to be entirely different from the law of the commentaries and digests. Generally speaking, only very important divergences made by legislation and case law in the ancient and medieval Hindu Law can and may be pointed out here.

The principal Sanskrit works of the Dāyabhāga school are three viz. the Dāyabhāga of Jimūtavāhana, the Dāyatattva of Raghunandana and the Dāyakramasangraha of Śrīkrṣṇa Tarkāṅkara. The Mitākṣarā school is subdivided into four sub-schools in which besides the Mitākṣarā, the supreme authority, other works are referred to as supplementary to it and as modifying some of its doctrines viz the Benares school (which regards the Vīramitrodaya as of high authority), the Mithilā school (which relies on the Vivādaratnākara, the Vivāda-candra and the Vivādacintāmaṇi), the Mahārāstra or Bombay school (where the Vyavahāramayūkha is of the highest authority in Gujērāt, Bombay Island and Northern Konkan even superseding the Mitākṣarā in some matters and the Viramirodaya and the Nirñayasindhu are also relied upon), the Dravida or Madras school (where the Smṛticandrikā, the Vyavahāranirnaya of Varadarāja, the Parāśara-mādhaviya and the Sarasvativilāsa are also works of authority) In spite of some differences in the rules accepted in different provinces in all of which the Mitākṣarā is of high authority, all the provinces except Bengal are held to be governed by one school. Vide Ambabai v. Keshav I. L. R. (1941) Bom. 250.

The words dāya and vibhāga have been variously defined in the digests. Nār. (dāyabhāga, verse 1) defines the vyavahāra-pada dāyabhāga as one in which sons arrange for the partition of their father's wealth. The Madanaratna as noted by the V. Mayūkha (text p. 94) reads 'arthasya pitryādeh' (wealth of the father and others) for 'pitryasya' in Nārada's verse. The Smṛtisangraha quoted in the Sm. C. and other works states that the word dāya applies to wealth that comes to a man through the father or the mother and the Nighantu defines dāya as the paternal wealth that is to be divided.<sup>1016</sup> The Dāyabhāga, the Mit. and others explain that the words 'pitryasya' (father's) and 'putraih' (by the sons) in Nār. are only illustrative, the real meaning being that the word 'dāyabhāga' applies wherever the wealth of a relative (father, grand-father &c) is distributed among his relatives (sons, grandsons &c) simply on account of their relation to the deceased<sup>1017</sup> owner. This is borne out by the fact that Manu and Nārada both speak of the distribution of the mother's wealth also under dāyabhāga. The Mit while introducing Yāj II. 114 says that the word dāya means the wealth which becomes another's property simply by reason of the fact of his relation to the owner. The V. Mayūkha (p. 93) defines dāya as that wealth which is to be divided and which is not the wealth of re-united members.

The word 'dāya' though derived from the root 'dā' (to give) does not apply to 'heritable wealth' in the literal sense (of gift).<sup>1018</sup> The word dāya is rather conventionally used, though derived from the root 'dā'. In a gift (as stated in H. of Dh. vol II p. 841) there are two chief ingredients viz. 'abandoning one's ownership over a thing' and 'bringing about the ownership of another in that thing'. But in the case of dāya the decedent does not of his own accord abandon his ownership with the idea of creating ownership in another. The two (dāna and dāya) are analogous, in this that in both there is cessation of the ownership of a man in a thing.

The Mit., the Par. M., the Madanaratna, the V. Mayūkha, the V. P. and other works that follow the doctrines of the Mit. divide dāya into two varieties viz. aprahbandha (unobstructible)<sup>1019</sup> and 'saprahbandha' (obstructible). The first occurs in the case of sons, grandsons and great-grandsons, who, by the very fact of their being the sons or grandsons, obtain ownership in the (ancestral) wealth held by the father or the grandfather. In this case the existence of the father or grandfather presents no obstacle (prahbandha) to the son's or grandson's taking an interest by the very fact of his birth in the family property that is in the hands of the father or grandfather. Therefore this is called aprahbandha dāya. But when a man takes the wealth of his paternal uncle or a father succeeds to the wealth of his son because the uncle or the son dies issueless, it is saprahbandha dāya, as in these cases the nephew or the father has no right in the uncle's or son's property as long as the uncle or the son is alive or as long as the uncle or son has a son or grandson. That is, the life of the owner or the existence of a son presents an obstacle to the nephew's or father's succession. Hence it is saprahbandha dāya.

It is to be noted that the Dāyabhāga, the Dāyatattva and a few other works do not divide dāya into two kinds. According to them, all dāya is sapratibandha i. e. ownership arises in another only on the death of the previous owner<sup>1020</sup> or on the cessation of the latter's ownership owing to his becoming patita or a sannyāsin (ascetic).<sup>1021</sup> The doctrine of this school is called uparamasvatavāda (ownership arising on death), while the school of the Mit. holds the view of janmasvatavāda. This is the great difference between the school of the Dāyabhāga and that of the Mitākṣarā. The former does not recognise that the son, grandson or great-grandson acquires by birth any right of ownership in the ancestral property held by the father or other ancestor.

The two words 'suk' and 'svāmin' are correlative, the idea underlying both is the same and they are two aspects of the same question. 'Sva' means 'what belongs to a person' i. e. 'property'. It has direct reference to a thing and indirect reference to the owner of the thing. 'Svāmin' means 'master or owner' and directly refers to the person owning and indirectly to the thing. Vide Salmond's Jurisprudence, chap. XII, pp. 339-340 (9th ed. of 1937) for the idea of ownership. According to Śiromanibhāṭṭācārya svatva is a separate padārtha (category) by itself, while others say that it is a capacity.<sup>1022</sup>

1021. It is to be noted that becoming patita entailed loss of the ownership of wealth, even according to Iodiao writers, only if the proper prāyaścittas were not performed. For example, the V P. (p. 429) states 'पातित्ये त मायश्चित्ताना-चरण एव स्वत्वनाशो विभागावर्हता च । अन्यथा दृश्यसाध्यं मायश्चित्तमपि पित्रोः स्वद्वयेण न स्यात् ।' Ancient and medieval Hindu jurists were very considerate if one compares their prescriptions with the harsh laws against Non-conformists and Roman Catholics prevalent only about a hundred years ago in England and Ireland as briefly disclosed in Pollard's work 'Customs and Liberty' pp. 46-48. The Caste Disabilities Removal Act (XXI of 1850) provides that so much of any law or usage in force in British India, which inflicts on any person forfeiture of rights of property or may be held to impair or affect any right of inheritance by reason of his religion or having been excluded from the communion of any religion or being deprived of caste, shall cease to be enforced as law in British India. This act, therefore, did away with the effects of being patita without undergoing prāyaścitta or of being excommunicated by a caste for some grave lapse.

Since in defining dāya the idea of svatva (ownership) was brought in, many of the digests enter upon a learned disquisition on the question whether svatva is to be understood from the śāstra alone or is a matter of popular understanding. There is also an ulterior purpose in the minds of some writers in this discussion, viz that of denying that svatva can arise by mere birth. The reasoning of those who say that svatva is to be understood from śāstra alone is as follows Gaut (X. 39-42) lays<sup>1022</sup> down five sources of ownership common to all viz rikta (inheritance), purchase, partition, seizure, finding (of treasure and the like) and further states that in the case of brāhmanas acceptance of gifts is an additional source of ownership, conquest in the case of ksatriyas, gain by agriculture and service in the cases of vaiśyas and śūdras respectively. If ownership were to be apprehended from means other than śāstras, then this text of Gautama laying down sources of ownership that are common to all varnas and that are peculiar to each of the several varnas would serve no useful purpose and would be superfluous. Further Manu (VIII. 340) states that if a brāhmana seeks wealth even by teaching or officiating as a priest for a man whom he knows to be a thief, he would be punishable like a thief. If svatva is a matter of popular understanding then this is not proper, since the priest or teacher who obtains the wealth from one who is in possession of stolen things would have to be regarded as guilty of no offence as he merely pursues the methods of earning wealth specially prescribed for him by the smṛti texts. Further, if svatva is not to be apprehended from śāstra, such complaints as 'a thing that belongs to me has been stolen by this man' would not be possible, as svatva being a purely secular matter the thief would himself be (or would have to be deemed to be) the owner of the thing, because the latter is in possession of it. Thieving is forbidden by śāstra and so on the view of svatva being apprehended from śāstra alone, such a complaint is understandable<sup>1023</sup>. Besides eminent works and writers like the Smṛtisangraha and Dhāreśvara<sup>1024</sup> support the view. Those who hold that svatva is known only from śāstra explain that riktha in Gautama's sūtra means simply dāya and saṁvibhāga means partition of dāya which establishes the separate ownership of a person on a portion of dāya (vide V. P. p. 415)<sup>1025</sup>. They further urge that Gautama's text does not specifically mention birth as a source of ownership.

Others headed by the Mit. hold that svatva is apprehended from worldly usage and not from śāstra. Their reasoning is: (1) just as rice effects an ordinary worldly purpose, so svatva brings about worldly transactions such as sale. What is not owned by a man does not enable him to effect such worldly objects and transactions as sale or mortgage. Such matters as the Āhavanīya fire that are prescribed by the śāstras are not useful in effecting secular purposes, but only śāstric ones. The Āhavanīya fire may be used in cooking rice, but that is in virtue of its ordinary nature as fire and not in its śāstric nature of being the Āhavanīya fire.<sup>1026</sup> (2) Even among Mlecchas and lowest peoples who are quite innocent of the knowledge of śāstras, the ideas of ownership arising from transactions of sale and the like do exist. Further (3) learned men well-versed in

It is somewhat strange that Dhāreśvara who is no other than the celebrated king Bhoja of Dhārā should be styled bhatta by the Madanaratna and ācārya by the Mit. (on Yāj. III 24) and the V. Mayūkha (p. 89).

1025 When a man dies his wealth is the dāya which several persons may inherit. In their case, it becomes their joint property. So their ownership, being joint, is denoted by the word 'riktha'. The joint owners become exclusive owners of definite parts of the dāya by partition, thus partition is a source of ownership (in this case exclusive ownership of distinct parts by several). But if there is a single heir then there can be no saṁvibhāga (partition) and so the source of his ownership is riktha and not saṁvibhāga. When there are several heirs riktha is on this view a source of joint ownership only. It must be said that on the hypothesis of jīmūta-vāhana, riktha and saṁvibhāga rather coalesce with one another and cannot be distinguished so well as on the theory of the Mit.

1026. Vide the Mit. (on Yāj II 114), V P pp 419-422, V. Mayūkha pp 89-90, Par. M. III, pp 482-483 for elaboration of this view. The S. V. p 396 ff while accepting the view that svatva is laukika does not accept the reasoning of the Mit., particularly with regard to the Āhavanīya fire.

the Mīmāṃsā such as Prabhākara<sup>1027</sup> (on Jaimini IV. 1. 2) and

1027. The Mīl (on Yāj. II 114) quotes a passage of Prabhākara on the lipsāsūtra and explains it. Jaimini's sūtra (IV. 1. 2) is चत्विर्विधः पुण्यस्य नम्य विष्णुस्यैकपात्रविभक्त्यान् । In this sūtra the word lipsā occurs. Therefore this is called lipsāsūtra. The words अर्जनं नम्यं नापाद्यतीति वि- निविद्धं occur in the Dāyabhāga also (II. 67 p 49) and in Medhātithi on Manu VIII 417. These words are quoted in the Mīl. as taken from Prabhākara (called Guru) and so it follows that even Medhātithi quotes from Prabhāiara. The earliest extant commentary of Sabara offers three explanations of this sūtra, which deals with the question of what is kratvartha and what is puruṣārtha. The third explanation concerns itself with the rules about acquiring wealth (which is necessary for performing every sacrifice) such as acceptance of gifts in the case of brāhmaṇas. The question is whether these rules about the means of acquiring wealth are kratvartha or puruṣārtha. If they are the former (i. e., if they are meant to be directly connected with the sacrifice) then a sacrifice performed with wealth not acquired according to the rules of śāstra will be defective or a nullity. But if the rules are puruṣārtha (i. e. addressed to the sacrificer only or to his conscience and sense of dharma) then even if the sacrifice is performed with wealth not acquired in accordance with śāstra there will be no defect in the sacrifice itself, only the acquirer will be at fault and may have to perform prājāpatti. Says Sabara. त्वं वा द्रव्यार्जनमुदाहरणम् । इह द्रव्यार्जनं तेषामनियमं. श्रूयते । ब्राह्मणस्य नवियदादिना राज्ञस्य च जपादिना वैश्यस्य कृष्णादिना । तत्र सन्देहः किं कथं द्रव्यपतिरह एतं पुनर्यत् इति ।

The Mīl. points out that in the plausible view (pūrvapakṣa) and the established conclusion (siddhānta) it is assumed that acquisition of wealth by acceptance of gift is a matter known from worldly usage (lokasiddha). The comment of Prabhākara (called Guru) on this sūtra is not yet available in print. The Sm. C. II pp 257-258, the Madanaratna, and V. P. p 420 quote a passage from the Nayavivēka of Bhavarūpa on the same subject and explain it. The Madanaratna says 'उक्तं चैतद्व्यवहारे नामाकरणान्मुञ्चनमाकर्षणं भवनायेन । लोकसिद्धे वा अर्जनं जन्मादि । अत एवानिर्मुञ्चनलोकधीविषयतया स्थिते निवन्धनार्था (विषयतया व्यवस्थितनिवन्धनार्था) । रक्षुतिर्वाकरणमिदं श्रूयते ।' The passage as printed in V. P. p 420 (अन एवानिन्धं भवनलोकधीविषयस्य विषयं तन्निवन्धनार्था श्रूयते) is corrupt and hardly makes any sense. The V. Mayūkha simply refers to Bhavarūpa without quoting him. The Vi śā (folio 96) remarks 'मीमांसकस्यैकमनियमादित्यनानां यदुपायं तेन विना अर्जनद्रव्ये ह्युपत्यैव दोषः ऋतुतिदिमनस्येव ।' Vide H. of Dh vol II pp 129-130 for quotations from several smṛitis laying down various means of livelihood. Manu X. 115 enumerates seven sources of wealth as sanctioned by śāstra viz. finding (of treasure), dāya (inheritance), purchase, conquest lending for interest, work (agriculture and trade), acceptance of a gift from a worthy person and in X. 116 mentions ten means of maintaining oneself (in distress). The Mahābhāṣya (vol I. p 483) on Pāṇ. II 3 30 states that a thing becomes one's own in four ways viz. by purchase, by seizure, by begging or by exchange 'यदेतत्त्वं नान चतुर्विधमिति कार्यमिति क्रयणादुपहरणाद्याख्याय विनिर्वादिभिः । It must be remembered that the enumeration of the means of acquiring property in the dharma-śāstra works is not exhaustive but only illustrative.

Bhavanātha, author of the Nayaviveka, hold that ownership which springs from certain fixed sources only (such as purchase) is a matter of worldly usage or experience. Bhavanātha says: the sources of acquisition such as birth and purchase &c. are known from the world. The conception about the sources of ownership was not started for the first time by the śāstra, but such sources have been known from times immemorial (long before the smṛtis). That is, the recognition of the sources of ownership is prior and śāstra only systematises them subsequently. Therefore the smṛti of Gautama (X. 39) only assigns their proper spheres to the several sources of ownership that are already well-known (viz. five are common to all, acceptance of gifts is peculiar to brāhmanas and so on). In this respect it is like the grammar of Pāṇini. Pāṇini does not create or lay down new words but he takes the words already current in the language and introduces a system about their formation. Similarly Gautama only voices a certain fixed system among the several sources of ownership. The Mit. and its followers say that Gautama simply repeats the several sources of ownership known in ordinary worldly life (as the V. Mayūkha says 'lokasiddha-kāranānuvādakam'). The Mit., Par. M. III p. 481, S V. p. 402 and others hold that rikṭha and samyibhāga in Gautama's sūtra stand for apratibandha dāya and sapratibandha dāya respectively.<sup>1028</sup> The Mit. meets the other arguments of its opponents by replying that in the first place that even ordinary popular usage does not recognise that the thief becomes the rightful owner by simply possessing the thing stolen and that in the case where a person says 'this man has stolen my property' there is doubt and dispute whether the man charged has got ownership by purchase or the like.

The purpose of this discussion of the topic whether ownership is only known from śāstra or is a secular matter is, according to the Mit., as follows:—Manu XI. 193 (= Visnu Dh. S 54. 28) states that when brāhmanas acquire wealth by reprehensible actions (such as accepting a gift from an unworthy person or engaging in the sale of articles which he should not sell) 1028. The word rikṭha is often used in the sense of sapratibandha dāya also as in Gaut. XII. 37 (rikṭhabhāja nam pratikuryuḥ) and Yāj. II. 51 (rikṭha-grāha nam dāpyaḥ), Baud. (rikṭham mṛtāyāḥ kanyāyāḥ) q. by the Mit. on Yāj. II. 146. Vide Bar. Parson v. Bar. Somt. 36 Bom. 424 at pp. 428-434 for an exhaustive exposition of the basic principles underlying the two kinds of dāya in the Mit. and the Vyavahāra-mayūkha.

they are purified from the sin by abandoning that wealth, by repeating the sacred texts (like the Gayatri) and by austerities. If ownership springs from śāstra alone, what is earned by a person in ways condemned by śāstra cannot become the property of that man and so his sons cannot divide what is not his property. But if ownership is deemed to be a secular matter (laukika) then even what is obtained by condemned means becomes the property of that man, his sons incur no blame (though the acquirer may have to perform penance) and can divide that wealth (which is dāya), since Manu X. 115 enumerates dāya among the seven approved sources of wealth. The Madanaratna does not approve of this. Its reason briefly is that Manu XI. 193 simply lays down a penance, but does not say that wealth so obtained does not become the acquirer's property, that it is on account of this that Manu does not prescribe any special fine or punishment for one who acquires wealth by means of a bad gift, as he prescribes for a thief and that what is acquired by theft does not become the property of the thief and his sons cannot divide it and would incur punishment if they do so. V. P. (pp. 423-424) refers to the views of the Mit. and the Madanaratna and approves of the views of the former.

This discussion leads on to the next question, viz. whether ownership arises from partition or whether partition takes place of what already belongs to oneself (by birth). This subject has exercised the minds of writers on Dharmaśāstra from very ancient times. It should be noted that the difference of opinion relates only to the case of sons, grandsons and great-grandsons. All writers are agreed that persons other than these have no rights by birth in the wealth of their relatives. Those who oppose the view that sons acquire right by birth argue as follows:—

If sons have ownership by birth in ancestral property, then, on the birth of a son, the father cannot enter upon such religious duties as consecrating Vedic fires (which entail the expenditure of ancestral wealth) without the consent of the son. This would be opposed to the Vedic injunction "a man, whose hair is yet dark and who has had a son, should consecrate the sacred Vedic fires." Further, Smṛti passages stating that a gift made by the father to one out of several sons as a favour (Nār. dāyabhāga 6) or by the husband to his wife out of affection is not liable to partition would be meaningless, since such gifts cannot be made without the consent of the sons (on the theory that sons acquire property by birth). Besides, there are smṛti texts like those of Devala<sup>1029</sup> which expressly negative the son's ownership during the father's lifetime. Manu IX. 104 and Nār. (dāyabhāga 2) enjoining that sons should divide wealth after the father goes to heaven (because the sons are not masters when the parents are alive, as Manu says) indicate that sons have no ownership by birth. Moreover svatva is apprehended only from śāstras (like Gautama), which do not expressly enumerate birth as a source of ownership along with purchase and the like. Therefore the ownership of the son or sons arises on the cessation of the ownership of the previous owner (by his death or by his becoming patita or becoming an ascetic). When there is a single son, he inherits on the death of the father and there is no necessity of a partition. But when there are several sons, they jointly inherit paternal wealth and can become exclusive owners of separate parts of the paternal wealth by partition alone. As this last is the most usual case, it is said that svatva arises from partition (vibhūgāt svatvam). If this doctrine that ownership arises by partition alone were literally interpreted, then an only son inheriting his father's property will have no ownership as urged by the Vyavahāra-nirṇaya, since there can be no partition in his case<sup>1030</sup>.

The arguments advanced by those who hold that ownership in ancestral wealth arises by birth are as follows.—

It has been established that ownership is a matter of ordinary worldly usage. It cannot be denied that it is quite well-known to all ordinary people that sons acquire ownership by birth. Besides there is the text of Gautama<sup>1031</sup> "the acāryas hold that one acquires ownership by birth itself". Moreover there are numerous smṛti passages like those of Yāj. II 121,

The व्य न p 89 reads लभन्त इत्याचार्याः, while स वि reads 'उत्पत्यैवाय स्वामित्व लभत इत्याचार्या.' (p 402) Both Sm C. and S V. explain 'उत्पत्यैव मातुर्गर्भे शरीरेऽप्यत्यैवत्यर्थः', while the सुबोधिनी and the बालम्भटी on the मित्ताहारा explain उत्पत्यैव as जन्मनैव.

Br (S B E. 33 p 370 verse 3), Kāt. (839), Vyāsa and Visnu Dh.<sup>1032</sup> S. XVII. 2 which expressly state that in the paternal grandfather's wealth, the father and the son have equal ownership (and so the right of the son must be by birth). Those who uphold the son's ownership by birth repel the arguments advanced in favour of the opposite theory as follows:—The Vedic text enjoining consecration of Vedic fires at a certain age indicates that the father has the power to spend for religious rites from ancestral wealth even after the birth of a son. Similarly as head of the family and its manager, the father has independent authority to spend ancestral wealth (except immovable property) for indispensable acts of religious duty expressly enjoined by Vedic and Smṛti texts and for making gifts of affection, for maintenance of the family and for ridding the family of distress. Further the father or the manager of the family can dispose of even immovable property by mortgage or sale in a season of distress or for the benefit of the family and for necessary religious purposes (such as śrāddhas<sup>1033</sup> etc.)

Ownership has to be distinguished from possession and custody. Further ownership is of various kinds, such as corporeal and incorporeal, sole ownership and joint ownership, ownership as trustee and beneficial ownership, vested and contingent. Even Western writers on Jurisprudence like Austin, Pollock and Salmond, find it difficult to define the exact meaning of ownership. Austin (Lecture XLVII) defines

This is the basic passage of the Mit. on which innumerable decisions have been given in the law reports, one of the latest and most authoritative being Brij Narain v Mangla Prasad L. R. 51 I. property or dominion as the right to use or deal with some given subject in a manner or to an extent, which though not unlimited, is indefinite. Pollock defines ownership as the entirety of the powers of use and disposal allowed by law. But the idea of ownership does not require, according to Sanskrit works on Dharmaśāstra, that the owner should always be able to do with his property as he pleases. On the contrary the śāstras lay down restrictions on the owner, enjoining upon him not to make gifts to the detriment of his family (vide Yāj. II. 175 "svam icutumbāṁ odhena deyam" and the verse of the Smṛti-saṅgraha "na ca svamucyate" quoted in note 963 above). Therefore property does not comprise only what one can dispose of at one's sweet will, but what is capable (in appropriate circumstances only) of being disposed of as one<sup>1034</sup> likes. A person may be prevented from dealing with his property as he likes by the king or by the rules of śāstra, by public opinion, by his own inclinations and by the pressure of those around him. But what he owns is theoretically capable of being disposed off by him as he likes. The Maṇanarāṭna puts forth the illustration that seeds kept dry in a granary do not sprout, yet they have the capacity of sprouting and so are as well denominated seeds as others that sprout. There are various grades of the limitations on property, such as the father's power, the widow's power and so on. What a person earns should belong to him, should be his property. But there are passages like Manu VIII. 416 and Nār. (abhyupetyaśusrūṣā, verse 41) that state<sup>1035</sup> "three are declared to be without wealth viz. the wife, the son and the slave; whatever they earn is for him to whom they (wife, son and slave) belong". It has been stated by such an ancient writer as Śābara-svāmin<sup>1036</sup> that this passage does not deny the ownership of the wife or son in what she or he earns, but is only intended to lay down that the wife or son cannot independently (without the consent of the husband or father) dispose of what she or he earns. This view of the text of Manu is accepted by the Dāyabhāga as well as by the Mitakṣarā School. The latter holds on the analogy of the interpretation of Manu VIII 416 that the texts of Devala, Nār and Manu IX. 104 which apparently deny ownership (svāmya)<sup>1037</sup> to the son during the father's lifetime over property in the hands of the father are to be interpreted only as denying the son's power of independent dealing with such property during the father's lifetime or as referring to the self-acquisitions of the father. On the other hand the Dāyabhāga and the Dāyatattva try to explain away such passages as those of Yāj II 121, Viṣṇu and others (quoted above) that speak of the son's ownership by birth. The Dāyabhāga offers two explanations of Yāj II 121.<sup>1038</sup> The first explanation offered by it and taken from Udyota is — If A has two sons B and C of whom C dies first, leaving a son D and then A dies, then Yāj says that both B (son of A) and D (grandson of A) will be equally entitled to the wealth left by A and not B alone, though he is nearer to A than D, because both B and D offer pindas of the same efficacy to A in the pārvana-srāddha and so there should be no difference between the two. The words “sadrām svāmyam” refer to this equality of the son and grandson. The 2nd explanation is that of Dhāreśvara viz. that when the father desires to make a partition, he may distribute his self-acquired property as he likes among his sons, but as to the property he got from his own father (i. e. the grandfather of his sons) he has the same ownership that sons have and he cannot make an unequal division at his sweet will. The Dāyabhāga<sup>1039</sup> rejects the view that Yāj. II. 121 enables the son to demand partition of the grand-father's property from the father even against the will of the latter or that father and son have equal shares in the grandfather's property. The same remarks apply to the texts of Visnu and others viz. that in the grandfather's property father and son are equally owners and that the words "tulyam svāmyam" or "samamamśitvam" do not mean that father and son take the same share therein.

From the above discussion it will be clear that the two schools of the Dāyabhāga and of the Mitāksarā were not started by them for the first time, but each had respectable antiquity behind it. Smrtis like those of Manu, Nārada and Devala and eminent authors like Udyota and Dhāreśvara had put forward the doctrine of uparāma-svatavāda, while the Smrtis of Yāj., Visnu, Br. espoused the doctrine of janmasvatavāda. Viśvarūpa who commented on Yāj. (in the first half of the 9th century) holds that ownership arises by birth<sup>1040</sup>. The Mitāksarā further supports that theory by citing a sūtra of Gautama (utpattyaiva etc.) which is not found in the extant Gautama-dharma-sūtra. This sūtra does not occur in Aparārka and several other works and is stated by Śrīkr̥ṣṇa Tarkālakāra (on Dāyabhāga I. 21 p. 14) to be not authoritative (amūla). These facts emboldened Dr. Jolly to go so far as to make the facile suggestion that it was fabricated by Viññāneśvara or his predecessors (Tagore Law Lectures p. 110). We have seen that so early a writer as Viśvarūpa was excited over the question whether ownership arises on partition or by birth. The learned Doctor has failed to note that the ancient commentator Medhātithi (about 900 A. D.) favoured the view of ownership by birth and quotes (without name) the sūtra in a slightly different form (on Manu

IX. 156).<sup>1041</sup> So it was not necessary for Viṇāśesvara to fabricate a sūtra nor for any one else, for even in the absence of Gautama's sūtra the texts of Yāj and others were quite capable of the interpretation put on them by the Mitākṣarā. It has to be noted that the Dāyabhāga<sup>1042</sup> does admit that in some (texts?) ownership is stated to arise by birth itself (svacit janmanaveś) and it explains that the words are not to be taken literally but that birth is said to be the source in an indirect way, as the relation of father and son is based upon birth and on the death of the father the son's ownership arises (therefore though ownership directly arises on death, birth may be said to be the source of it as the son is the first heir because of his being born as a son to the father). The Dāyatattva does not say that the sūtra of Gautama is not authoritative, but explains it away on lines similar to those of the Dāyabhāga. It may be stated here briefly that the Dāyabhāga differs from the Mitākṣarā in four main points:—(1) The Dāyabhāga denies the theory that property is by birth, while the Mit. accepts it; (2) the Dāyabhāga lays down that the right to inherit and the order of heirs is determined by the principle of religious efficacy, while the Mit. school holds that blood relationship is the governing factor in this matter; (3) the Dāyabhāga holds that members of a joint family (such as brothers or cousins) hold their shares in quasi-severalty and can dispose of them even when there is no partition by metes and bounds; (4) the Dāyabhāga holds that even in an undivided family the widow succeeds

Various attempts have been made to explain why in Bengal alone the laws of succession and inheritance should diverge materially from the laws prevailing in the rest of India. In two learned papers 'on the origin and development of the Bengal school of Hindu Law' contributed to the Law Quarterly Review (vol. XXI for 1905 pp. 380-392 and vol. XXII for 1906 pp 50-63) Mr. Justice Saradaacharan Mitra tries at some length to advance a theory of his own: 'The commercial spirit of the newly formed nation in the eastern corner of the Indian peninsula with its deltaic character and nearness to the sea, the new ideas which other nations trading with it were bringing in every day, the necessary admixture of races in some parts of the country, the religion of Buddha which for centuries was here the religion of the sovereign as well as of the people and the influence of the Buddhistic tantras combined to bring about a law of property dissimilar in material respects from the rules propounded by Brahmanical sages of old and explained and commented upon in the Mitākṣarā and the books based on the same'. His idea is that, as Buddhism profoundly affected the position of women and as tantras like the Mahānirvāṇa subscribed to the exaltation of the feminine element in nature, the ancient law of property, particularly in relation to women, came to be affected and conceptions of individual ownership, of freedom from restrictions on alienation and of the rights of females arose in Bengal which were incorporated by Jīmūta-vāhana in his Dāyabhāga. With the greatest respect to the learned writer, it must be said that the grounds he urges are far from convincing. A thorough examination of his thesis cannot be undertaken here for want of space. But a few remarks must be made. As regards maritime activity the West coast of India was far more in touch with seafaring and commerce with the West than even Bengal, as the mention of the ports of Barugaza (Broach) and Kalliéné (modern Kalyan) by Greek writers, the finding of hoards of Roman coins and the existence of Syrians on the West Coast clearly establish. Buddhism had spread to central and western India as early (if not earlier than) the period when it could have spread to Eastern Bengal and Assam. Sanchi, Bhilsa, Bharhut, the Nasik and Karla caves bear eloquent testimony to the influence of Buddhism in central and western India for centuries before and after the Christian era. Besides as Mr. Justice Mitra himself admits 'Buddhism had not its own law of property' (Law Quarterly Review vol. XXI p. 388) Buddhist countries like Burma themselves borrowed their laws of succession and inheritance from the Manusmṛti. Viṇāśeśvara is far more liberal to women than Jimūtavāhana, who does not allow any woman to succeed as heir unless she is expressly mentioned as an heir in the smṛti texts. The Mahānirvāna-tantra treats a sister and stepmother as near heirs and allows even a paternal uncle's widow and son's daughter to succeed, but under the Dāyabhāga these are not at all heirs. One branch of the Mitākṣarā school, viz that of the V. Mayūkha in Western India is far more liberal about the claims of women than any school. The Marumakkattayam and Aliyasantan law in force in some districts of South India and among certain communities like the Nambudri brāhmanas and Nairs go to the other extreme in their regard for women but no one has so far traced that law to Buddhist or Tantric influence. The peculiarity of the Dāyabhāga, viz the principle of religious efficacy is far more remote from rules of affinity given in the Mahānirvāna-tantra than the principle of consanguinity espoused by the Mitākṣarā school. Mr. Justice Mitra is wrong in his estimate of the age of Jimūtavāhana. As stated above (on p. 557) Jimūtavāhana relies on authors like Udyota and the smṛtis of Devaḥ and others. It is best to admit that no satisfactory explanation can be given of the peculiar doctrines of the Dāyabhāga. They have an indigenous and independent origin and growth.

Vibhāga (partition) is defined by the Mib. 1043 as the allotment to individuals of definite portions of aggregates of wealth over which many persons have joint ownership. The Dāyabhāga found several faults with this definition, the principal criticism being that it is cumbrous and farfetched to assume that the (joint) ownership of several (sons and the like) is first produced in the entire wealth of the father and then to hold that this joint ownership is subsequently destroyed. Its own definition is: "Vibhāga means the indication of the ownership (of one out of many) by the casting of a ball or pebble (on a definite part of the land or cash), which (ownership) arises with reference to a portion only (of the heritage of land and cash), but which is indefinite because it is not possible (for one man) to deal specifically with a particular portion (of the heritage) since there is nothing to show for certain what portion belongs to whom". The Dāyabhāga denies that ownership jointly arises in all co-sharers (before partition) over every portion of the heritage and states that it arises in portions of it but there is no certain indication to show which part belongs to whom and that the portion of each is made definite and ascertained by partition effected by casting a ball or pebble on a portion (saying 'this is A's exclusive portion' etc.). The Dāyatattva<sup>1044</sup> (p. 163) criticizes this definition. If before partition each of the co-heirs has ownership in part only of the entire heritage, what assurance is there that the allotment of a part to one co-heir by means of casting a ball will be as to the same portion over which his ownership arose before the partition? The Dāyatattva, though differing<sup>1045</sup> from the Mit. as to the doctrine of ownership by birth, agrees with it as to the definition of vibhāga. The differing definitions of vibhāga given by the Mit. and the Dāyabhāga lead to different results. Under the Mit. when there is a joint family of father and sons or grandsons, all these are coparceners and the ownership of the coparcenary property is in the whole body of coparceners i. e. there is unity of ownership while the family remains joint, no coparcener can say that he is owner of a definite share, one fourth or one fifth etc. A coparcener's interest is fluctuating, is capable of being enlarged by deaths and is liable to be diminished by births. It is only on partition that a coparcener becomes entitled to a definite share. On the other hand according to the Dāyabhāga there is no ownership by birth, the sons on the father's death constitute a coparcenary but the ownership of the family property is not in all the sons as a body. Every son takes a defined share, the moment the ownership of the father ceases (owing to death etc.). The share so taken does not fluctuate with births and deaths. The sons are coparceners in the sense that their possession of the property inherited from the father is joint i. e. there is unity of possession, though there is no unity of ownership.

According to the Mitākṣarā sons take by birth an interest in ancestral estate. Suppose A is sole owner of an ancestral estate and has no issue. In that case there is no coparcenary. But the moment a son is born to him, a coparcenary is started. That is, under the Mitākṣarā the birth of a son starts a coparcenary. Under the Dāyabhāga there is no coparcenary between father and sons as the latter acquire no rights by birth even in ancestral property but it may subsist between brothers or uncles and nephews. Under the Dāyabhāga, the death of a man may start a coparcenary among his sons (who will be brothers).

Partition has two senses, (1) division by metes and bounds and (2) separation or severance in interest. Under the Mitākṣarā it is possible to have partition in both these senses. The members of a coparcenary may define, at a particular moment, the shares that each would be entitled to; but the actual division of property by metes and bounds may be postponed to a future date and in the intervening period they may enjoy the property in common as before. This is clearly brought out by the Vyavahāramayūkha<sup>1046</sup> when it says "even in the absence of joint (family) property severance (of interest) takes place also by a mere declaration in the form 'I am separate from thee'; for severance is merely a particular mode (or state) of the mind and this declaration merely manifests that (state or mode of the mind)". The S. V. (p. 347) has a similar passage. It is here stated that an unequivocal declaration of intention to separate effects the severance of a member from the joint family and that it is not absolutely necessary that there should be any joint property or that the property be divided by metes and bounds. This last follows as a matter of course when there is a severance of interest. This proposition has been accepted by the Privy Council<sup>1047</sup> and this passage of the Vyavahāra- mayūkha has been quoted in several cases. What constitutes an unequivocal declaration of intention to separate has as usual given rise to a good deal of case law which has to be passed over here. Under the Dāyabhāga heirs succeed on the death of the previous owner in certain definite shares and therefore partition has ordinarily only the first sense viz. assigning to the coparceners specific portions of the property inherited. Another way of separating a member<sup>1048</sup> is also mentioned by Manu IX. 207 and Yāj II. 116, viz. that when a member of the family is able to fare for himself and does not desire to have a share in the family property, he should be separated by giving him some trifle (as a token). The Mit. adds that the trifle is given as a piece of evidence to prevent his sons claiming a share later on.

The principal matters to be discussed under Dāyabhāga or Dāyavibhāga are, as stated by the Sangraha and the Mit., four, viz. the time of partition, the property liable to partition, the mode of partition and the persons entitled to partition<sup>1049</sup>.

Time for partition. The evolution of the son's right to demand a partition has been a process of ages. It would not be out of place to say a few words on this topic here. In most primitive societies where the patriarchal family system prevailed, the father had absolute power over the son, it was the son's duty to obey the father, alienation of family property was not allowed, the father had power over the acquisitions of all persons including the son and women were incompetent to hold property. Faint traces of these can be detected in the Vedic literature. The legend of Sunahsepa narrated in the Ait. Br. (33 1 ff), where we are told that Ajigarta sold his son for being offered as a victim to Varuna, that Viśvāmitra adopted Sunahsepa as his son, though he had already a hundred and one sons, and that he cursed and disinherited his fifty sons for their disobedience to his order, indicates that in the days of the Ait Br. it was believed that in hoary ages long before it, the father's power over his sons was absolute. But a caution is necessary. It is possible to over-emphasize the legend of Śunahśepa; it has to be remembered that it is a mere legend and that the Ait Br. itself shows that the conduct of Ajigarta was condemned as most unworthy of a decent man even according to the legend.<sup>1050</sup> In modern times there are rare instances where parents insure their children and then poison them or maim them for earning the insurance money. But no one says that this is usual or that modern law allows it. In Rg. I. 117. 17 it is stated that the eyes of Rjṛāśva were put out by his father because the former gave a hundred rams to a she-wolf. This is a solitary instance and it is probable that the verse has some esoteric meaning or refers to some terrestrial or celestial phenomenon. In the Kathaka Samhitā XI. 4 it is said "the father rules over the son" (pitā putrasye). But it must be said that ideas about the father's absolute power over the sons lingered on in historic times. The Nir. (in III 4) puts forward the argument of some predecessors that daughters did not succeed to the father's wealth because women could be donated, sold or abandoned and not men, while others said that males also were liable to the same treatment as evidenced by the story of Śunahśepa.<sup>1051</sup> Vasistha (XV. 2) states that<sup>1052</sup> father and mother have power to make a gift or sale of the son or to abandon him. We saw above (n 1035) that Manu stated that a son's earnings belonged to his father. The Āp. Dh. S. (II. 6. 13. 10-11) emphatically says that the right to give away or sell one's child is not recognized and that the word "sale" used in connection with a bride is used only metaphorically. About the word "sale" in relation to marriage vide H. of Dh. vol. II pp. 503-506.

On the other hand even in the Rg. we find that sons divided the father's property during his lifetime when the father grew old, "O Agni! men worship you in many places in various ways; they take (from you) wealth as from an aged father"

(Rg. I. 70. 5).<sup>1053</sup> In the Ait Br. (22. 9) the story of Nābhānedistha<sup>1054</sup>, the youngest son of Manu, shows that the elder brothers divided all the father's property among themselves, and excluded Nābhānedistha during the father's lifetime apparently without any protest from him or in spite of it. In the Tai S. III. 1. 9. 4-5<sup>1055</sup> the version of the same story is different, since it is there said that Manu himself divided his wealth among his sons and did not give any share of the paternal wealth to Nābhānedistha who was away at a teacher's house as a vedic student. In the Gopatha Brāhmana (IV. 17) it is said "therefore in their childhood sons subsist on their father, while in his advancing years the father subsists on the son". In the Śat.<sup>1056</sup> Br (S. B. E. vol. 44, p. 157) we read "whence in early life the sons subsist on the father...whence in later life, the father subsists on his sons". In the Kausitaki Br. Upanisad (II. 15) after describing the symbolical handing over to the son of all his physical and mental powers by a father who is expecting death it is said that if after this rite the father recovers he has either to remain under the son's dominion or go out as a wanderer (a sannyāsin)<sup>1057</sup> From some of the above passages, it appears that in rare cases sons divided paternal wealth even during the lifetime of the father and against his will. The remark of Dr Jolly that "it may be unhesitatingly set down as a fact that in the earliest period of Indian Law, partition of property was an entirely unknown proceeding" (Tagore Law Lectures p. 90) goes too far and is not fully warranted by Vedic texts. Just as the Tai. S. (III. 1. 9. 4)<sup>1058</sup> narrates that Manu distributed his wealth among his sons, it also speaks of the eldest son being established with ancestral wealth. The Āp. Dh. S. (II. 6. 14. 6 and 10-12) refers to both these passages of the Tai. S. but concludes that equal division among sons is the proper mode and that giving a major part of the estate to the eldest alone is forbidden by the śāstras<sup>1059</sup>. These lead to the conclusion that equal distribution among all sons was believed to be the rule and giving the major portion to the eldest son was an exception (and a rare case) even in the Vedic age. The Ait. Br. (19.3) speaks of the right<sup>1060</sup> of Indra to primogeniture (jyaisthya) and pre-eminence (śraisthya). This right of the eldest son to special treatment at the time of partition persisted in the times of Manu (IX. 112 ff) and Yāj (II. 114) also and even in modern times it is recognized to some extent in the case of impartible estates and even in ordinary families on the ground of custom or from the nature of the grants made by the former Governments or the British Government (such as Jaghirs and Saranjams). Both Kauṭ. and Kāt. declare that customs of countries, castes, villages and groups varying rules of partition and inheritance should be enforced by the king<sup>1061</sup>. Dr. Jolly (ibid. p. 98) further relies on the fact that the Āpastambadharmaśūtra mentions no other kind of partition than that made by the father. But this is far from conclusive. Āpastamba was a great purist and idealist. He ignores several matters which are wellknown to have existed long before his time. For example, he takes no notice of the several kinds of secondary sons and he does not allow a brāhmana to take up a weapon even for examining it except when he is murderously attacked (I. 10. 29 7-8), while Manu (VIII 345-349), Gautama VII 6 and 25 and others allow a brāhmana much greater latitude. Therefore Āpastamba's silence cannot lead to the positive conclusion of the absence of any other method of partition. As a matter of fact, Gautama (15. 19) who is generally regarded as prior to Āpastamba states that brāhmanas that had separated from their fathers against the latter's will were not fit to be invited for dinner at a śrāddha <sup>1062</sup> That shows that partition of sons from the father against the father's will was wellknown long before Gautama. Dr. Jolly also (ibid p. 90) relies on an anonymous smṛti text (quoted by the Mit in its introduction to Yāj. II 114) which absolutely prohibits the sale of land. But this is irrelevant. The text could not be taken literally when we have seen that sales of land have been taking place for at least two thousand years. All that the text means is that a sale should be clothed in the form of a gift <sup>1063</sup>. Similarly the few smṛti passages that include lands and houses among indivisible properties are to be explained as having in view the fragmentation of a field into small uneconomic plots or holdings or the division of a single small house among numerous co-sharers. It is impossible to believe that the texts meant that houses could never be partitioned among co-heirs. All that we can reasonably infer is that as a general rule such partitions were looked upon with disfavour by society. One may concede that this sentiment continued long after even Gautama and Āpastamba and even in the 20th century a Hindu son suing his father for partition incurs great opprobrium.

Apart from the inference to be drawn from some of the Vedic passages quoted above, it follows that partition did take place, though probably rarely, during the father's lifetime and even against his will, as indicated by Gautama's dictum. It is now to be seen what the smṛtis and the medieval writers say about the time of partition. One time was when the father divided the property among his sons during his lifetime as evidenced by the Tai. S. III. 1 9. 4, Āp Dh. S. II. 6. 14. 1, Gaut. 28 2, Baud Dh. S. II. 2.8, Yāj II 114, Nār. dāyabhāga 4. Another time was after the death of the father (Gaut 28. 1, Manu IX. 104, Yāj II 117, Nār. dāyabhāga 2). The Dāyabhāga <sup>1064</sup> admits only these two times for partition viz. on the cessation of the father's ownership (by death or renunciation of the world as an ascetic or because he has lost all desires) and during the father's lifetime at his own desire. The V. P. (pp. 429 and 434, 435) strongly criticizes the Dāyabhāga as to these two. Some writers like Jimūtavāhana went so far as to hold that even though the father be dead there should be no partition among the sons during their mother's life<sup>1065</sup>. The Mit (following Gaut. 28. 1-2) indicates three principal times for partition,<sup>1066</sup> viz (1) at the father's desire during his lifetime, (2) when the father has lost all desire for worldly goods, desists from sexual intercourse and the mother is past the age of child-bearing, partition may take place at the desire of the sons even against the wish of the father (Gaut. 28. 2, Nār. dāyabhāga 3, Br S B E. 33 p 369 verse 1); (3) after the death of the father. The Mit relying on Śankha's<sup>1067</sup> text adds that even though the mother may not be past child-bearing, yet the sons can partition at their desire, even against the father's will if the father pursues an immoral or irreligious mode of life or is afflicted with a chronic disease or is very old. Nār. (dāyabhāga 16) is similar. It should not be supposed that the Mit. holds that there are only three times for partition; according to it there are other times also (as in the text of Śankha quoted by it). This is made clear by the V. P. p. 434. The Dāyabhāga reads the text of Śankha-Likhita differently and takes it to mean that as long as the father is alive there can be no partition against his will even if he be very old or suffering from a chronic disease or has not all his wits about him, and that in such a contingency the eldest son or with his consent the next younger brother who is capable may manage the family affairs. The Dāyabhāga quotes a similar passage of Hārita (which is also quoted by the Madanaratna, the Vyavahāramayūkha and other digests). On account of the remarks of the Mit. some works like the Madanapārijāta (pp. 645 ff) speak of four times for partition, viz. during the father's lifetime at his choice (Yāj. II. 114), even against his will when the mother is past child-bearing and the father is free from all sexual desires and does not care for wealth (Nār. dāyabhāga 3), when the father is old or follows the path of adharma or suffers from an incurable disease then even against his will (relying on Śankha as quoted in the Mit.), and after the father's death. The V. Nir. (p. 408) is almost of the same view.

It will thus be seen that the two schools read the passage of Śankha-Likhita differently. The न्य. मद्रस (p 90) omits the words काम दीने &c. The मदनरत्न has the words काम दीने चिन्तयेत्. The V. R. (p 460) has the same passage of हारीत (as in the Dāyabhāga) with slight variations, viz. जीवति पितरि पुत्राणामर्थदानविसर्गविभागक्षेपेष्वातन्त्र्यं काम दीने प्रोक्षिते आर्तिं गते वा ज्येष्ठोर्थाधिक्यतयेत् । हारीत q. by दायभाग I. 42 p 23. .

The Mitākṣarā is quite clear on the point that the son has an absolute right of partition of ancestral property during his father's lifetime even against the father's wish. The discussion in the Mitākṣarā may be briefly set out here. In Yāj. II. 120 (latter half) it is stated that in the case of grandsons the partition is according to (or through) the fathers i. e. it is per stirpes and not per capita. The text of Yāj. (anekapitrkūṇām<sup>1068</sup> tu pitro bhāgakaḥpanā) is explained by the Mitākṣarā in this way that although sons and grandsons have rights of ownership by birth in the grandfather's property, yet when each of several sons dies leaving a differing number of sons (one leaves two, another three and so on) or when some sons are alive and others die leaving their own sons, then partition takes place per stirpes i. e. the grandsons born of a particular deceased son 1068 It may be noted that the Bālabhāṭṭī (p. 150) and V. P. (p. 449) support the reading अनेकपितृकाणां तु instead of अनेकपितृकाणां तु in Yāj. II. 120.

get among themselves the share which their deceased father would have got if living i. e. grandsons appear to get partition of property through the son (their father) and not directly by themselves. On this a doubt arises as follows:—if the father of several sons is separated from his brothers as to the grandfather's property or if the father has no brother and is joint with his father (i. e. the grandfather of the grandson) the grandson cannot demand a share in the grandfather's wealth (since Yāj II. 120 has been explained as meaning that when the father is dead then the assignment of shares among grandsons is according to the share of the father). Another doubt is — even if a partition can be had by the grandsons in these cases it will be only if the father so desires. To this the Mit. replies emphatically<sup>1069</sup> that in the grandfather's property the ownership of father and son is wellknown in the world and therefore partition (in the above two cases of doubt) does take place. The Mit. further on expressly says that even when the mother is not past child-bearing and the father still cares for wealth and worldly affairs, partition of grandfather's wealth does take place at the desire of the son even if the father is unwilling. The Mit. makes it clear that the rule of division per stirpes is a special rule laid down by the texts (vācamiki vyavasthā) for a special case and that in other cases the primary rule of ownership by birth applies. From Manu IX. 209 the Mitākṣarā further draws the inference that even against the father's wish a son can demand partition of property acquired by the grandfather. This is the modern Hindu Law in the Mitākṣarā school generally recognised by the Courts in British India. In Apar Narhar<sup>1070</sup> v. Ramchandra a majority of the Full Bench of the 1070. Vide 16 Bom 29, where Telang J., who was great as a Sanskrit scholar as well as a judge, differed from three learned judges. On pp. 43-51 Telang J. gives a very lucid explanation of the words of the Mit.

Bombay High Court held that a son cannot in the lifetime of his father sue his father and uncles for a partition of the family property and for possession of his share therein, when the father does not assent to such a suit, although the son has a right by birth in ancestral property. The other High Courts have dissented from this view of the majority of the Bombay Full Bench and have followed the dissenting judgment of Telang J.<sup>1071</sup>

When the son's right of ownership by birth in ancestral property came to be recognised by such smṛtis as that of Yāj., it followed as a logical consequence that any person who acquires a right by birth can demand partition and separate possession of his share at any time. It has been already seen that even before Gautama sons separated from their father against his will, but this was condemned by the sages and obloquy and infamy attached to such conduct. Some of the smṛtis recognised the son's right to partition even in the father's lifetime under great restrictions. More than fifteen centuries passed (from Gautama to the Mitākṣarā) before the son's right to separate from his father during the latter's lifetime and against his desire was clearly, ungrudgingly and emphatically recognized. The Viramitrodaya also clearly recognizes this right of the son. But even among writers that generally follow the Mit., there were some that could not bring themselves to admit this right of the son. For example, the Madanapārijāta (p. 662) asserts that merely at the will of the son there can be no partition. Under the Dāyabhāga, these questions cannot arise, as the son has no right by birth in ancestral property.

This evolution of the son's right to demand partition even during the father's lifetime received a filip from certain religious sentiments entertained in ancient times. Gaut. (28 4) remarks that if, instead of remaining united, brothers separate there is increase of spiritual merit (vibhāge tu dharmavṛddhiḥ). Manu IX. 111 states "they (the brothers) may stay united or may stay separate if they desire an increase of dharmā; by living separate dharmā increases; therefore separation is meritorious".<sup>1072</sup>

1071. Vide Jagui Kishore v Shyb Sahas 5 All 430 (F. B.), Rameswar v Lachms 31 Cal 111, Subba v Ganas, 18 Mad. 179, Disambar v. Dhanraj 1 Patna 361.

1072. मनु IX. 111 is quoted as प्रजापति's by बृह. नि. p 408. The मदनमल्ल regards मनु and प्रजापति as different 'बृहस्पतिविरचितकर्मकरणम् (बृहस्पति-पेशमाणा विभजेतिरप्याहमनुमनुप्रजापति एव सह वसेयुरा' etc.).

This shows that there was an option either to remain joint after the father's death or to become separate. Śāṅkha-Likhita say that brothers may stay together since being united they will prosper (materially).<sup>1073</sup> Br. provides that in the case of members of a joint family that live together and have a common kitchen the worship of gods, Manes and brāhmanas is single for all, while when they become separate such worship will be separately carried on in each house.<sup>1074</sup> Nār. (dāyabhāga 37) lays down that when brothers are undivided the performance of religious acts is single for all of them but when there is a partition, the religious acts are separately performed by each. Dharma means here mainly such religious acts as the performance<sup>1075</sup> of the five great daily sacrifices (pañca mahāyajñas). When the family is joint, worship of gods, Vaiśvadeva, honouring of family guests are only single for the whole family and all participate in the spiritual benefits derived from such acts, but when the members become separate, each performs these religious acts separately. Manu III. 67 lays down that each householder has to perform with the grhya fire kindled at the time of marriage all grhya rites such as morning and evening offerings, the five great sacrifices and the daily cooking of food. The Sangraha seems to have held that dharma refers to the performance of agnihotra, but the Sm. C. II. p. 259 and V. P. (437-438) do not accept this and hold that even when joint any coparcener can perform all śrauta and smārta rites like agnihotra with the help of the undivided joint estate and so dharma means only the worship of gods and Manes and the honouring of guests. Vyāsa<sup>1076</sup> also has a verse similar to Nār. and Br.

Partition was generally made when all the coparceners were major,<sup>1077</sup> but from Kaut (III 5), Baud Dh. S. (II 2 42) and Kāt. (844-45) it appears that the minority of a coparcener did not operate as a bar to partition. Kaut. (III 5) says 'partition takes place when the persons separating have attained majority; but (the separating coparceners) should keep in the custody of the mother's relatives of those coparceners who are minors or of the elders of the village the share of the minors after all debts of the family are paid off, till the minor coparceners attain majority. The same rule applies to a member (of a joint family) that has gone abroad'. Baud. employs almost the same words. Kāt. provides "partition is ordained among coparceners who have attained (years of) understanding of worldly affairs and in the case of males they attain this understanding at the 16th year. The property (share in joint family estate) of those who have not attained years of discretion, being made free from expenses (debts etc.), should be kept (by the other major coparceners) with the relatives or friends of the minor members. The same should be done to the share of those who have gone abroad." This shows that partition could take place even when some members of the family were minors and even a single member could demand at his will a partition of his share as expressly stated by the Dayabhāga (III 16-17), the V P. and other works<sup>1078</sup>. There is a controversy among commentators whether minority terminated at the beginning or end of the 16th year. Nār. IV. 35 states<sup>1079</sup> that a person is a minor (bāla) till the 16th year. From a verse (attributed to Angīras by Mit. on Yāj III 243 and quoted without name by Haradatta on Gaut. II 6) it appears that one was to be regarded as a bāla till the beginning of the 16th year.<sup>1080</sup> A verse of Kāt appears to hold that minority ends at the beginning of the 16th year; many commentators also hold this view, but several such as Haradatta (on Gaut X. 48), V. R. p. 599, V. P. p. 263 expressly state that minority ends at the end of the 16th year.<sup>1081</sup> It may be stated that according to Gaut X. 48-49, Manu VIII 27, Vas. 16. 8, Visnu Dh. S. III. 65 the king was to guard the property of minors, women and helpless people. In modern times under the Indian Majority Act (Act IX of 1875) the age of majority is 18 (or 21 in certain cases only) except in matters of marriage, dower, divorce and adoption. In these last matters the ancient Hindu Law will apply to Hindus<sup>1081a</sup>. Similarly a partition could be made even though the wife of a coparcener was pregnant. It was therefore that Vas. 17. 41 advised postponing partition till the delivery of the pregnant wives of coparceners, or Yāj. II. 122 and Manu IX. 216 provide for a son born after partition between father and sons.

The next question is what property is liable to be partitioned. A few preliminary remarks on property must be made here. Property is generally divided by most smrtis into two kinds, sthāvāra (immovable, such as lands and houses) and janāma (movable). For example, Br. (S. B. E. vol. 33 p. 323 verse 17) and Kāt (516) speak of both kinds of property as subjects of pledges or mortgages. There is another classification in Yāj. II. 121 and a few other smrtis viz. property is of three kinds.

1081a In Bengal minority was held to terminate at the end of the 15th year, vide Cally Churn v Bhugobutty 10 Bengal L. R. 231 (F. B.) at p. 240 and Mothoormohun v Sourenadro 1 Cal 108 (F. B.) In Bombay and Madras it has been held to terminate at the end of the 16th year, vide Shivaji v Datu 12 Bom. H. C. R. 281, Reade v. Krishna 9 Mad. 391, 397. But see 40 Mad 925, 929. As the Indian Majority Act does not apply to adoption, it was held in Basappa, v Sidramappa 43 Bom. 481 that a Hindu widow who was about 15 years old could validly adopt a son, even though a contract by her would have been void on the ground of minority.

bhū (land including houses), nibandha<sup>1082</sup> (inaccurately rendered as 'corrody') and dravya (gold, silver and other movables). Sometimes however the word "dravya" is employed in the sense of all property, whether movable or immovable, as in Br. (dravye pitāmahopātīle jagame śhātāre tāhā) quoted in note 1032 above. Property, according to ancient Hindu Law,

The word "nibandha" means a periodic payment or allowance in cash or kind permanently granted by a king, a corporation or a village or a caste to a person, a family, a math or a temple. The Mit (on Yā) I 318 and II 121 explains it as a delivery or payment of so many leaves (of betel or the like) on each bundle of leaves or so many rupees on each load of merchandise or so many betelnuts on each load of betelnuts; the Sm C. explains it as the wealth to be obtained under the order or direction of a king or other authority that dealers in commodities should pay every year or month a certain amount to a certain brāhmaṇa or shrine, the V. Mayūkhā (p 28) explains "what is granted by a king or the like, to be obtained at fixed times from mines and the like" and on p 131 paraphrases it as "vrtti". Nibandha is rendered as corrody by Colebrooke in his Digest, but as observed by the Privy Council in Fattehsangh v. Desai Kallianrao L. R. 11 A. 34 at p 51 it is not a very happy rendering. In Ghelasbai v. Hargovan 36 Bom 94 (at p. 101) the explanation of nibandha by the V. Mayūkhā is construed as conveying that it is not the king alone who can make a grant of a nibandha and it is held that the office of a hereditary priest (yajamāna-vrtti) is a nibandha and ranks as immovable property. Bombay Regulation V of 1827, section 1, clause 1 includes hereditary offices among immovable property. Vide Collector of Thana v. Krishnanath 5 Bom 322 at pp 331-32 (for a discussion of what is included in nibandha), Collector of Thana v. Hari 6 Bom 546 (F. B.) at pp 555-559, Lakshmandas v. Manohar 10 Bom 149, Jatindra Mohan v. Ghanashyama 50 Cal 266 at p 271 (for various definitions of nibandha and for the view that an account in favour of the settlor's daughter for her life and then to her son charged on and payable out of the settlor's estate was a nibandha). With Vijñāneśvara's examples of nibandha one may compare an inscription of śaka 1058 (1167 A. D.) from the Ron Taluka of Dharwar District 10 E. I. vol. 20 p. 109 at p. 121 ('the income granted by the dealers in betel leaves, a hundred leaves for one cart load, a hundred for a bullock load, fifty for a man's load') may be divided into two classes, (1) joint family property, (2) separate property. Joint family property is either ancestral property or property jointly acquired<sup>1083</sup> with or without the aid of ancestral property or property acquired separately but thrown into the common stock (Manu IX. 204) The Mit on Yāj 1 120 states 'among unseparated brothers, if the common stock be improved or augmented by one of them through agriculture, trade or similar means, an equal distribution nevertheless takes place and a double share is not allotted to the acquirer.' This contains the doctrine of merger of estate by blinding. Vide Shubuprasad v Prayag Kumari L. R. 59 I. A. 331 = 34 Bom. L. R. 1567. Ancestral property (aprabandha dāya) is all property inherited by a male from his father, paternal grandfather or paternal great-grandfather, in which according to the Mit. School, the sons, grandsons and great-grandsons<sup>1084</sup> of the person who inherits it acquire an interest by birth. Separate property also includes what is called self-acquired property (svārjita), which will be discussed a little later on. If a person obtains a share of ancestral property on partition, it has been held that it is his separate property if he has no son, grandson or great-grandson, but if there be any of these then it is ancestral property in his hands so far as he and any of his male descendants are concerned. Under the Dāyabhāga, as the son does not acquire ownership by birth in ancestral property, there is hardly any distinction between ancestral property and separate property so far as the father's powers of alienation are concerned. A few of the outstanding features of the Dāyabhāga system have already been set out above and some may be discussed later 1084. The Mit. speaks only of the son's and grandson's right by birth in ancestral property and does not expressly mention the great-grandson. But other writers like the author of the Viramitrodaya quoted above in note 1069 mention the great-grandson as having a right by birth and this has been accepted by the courts. The words 'ancestral property' have a technical sense viz it is patāmaha i e. paternal grandfather's or great-grandfather's property. Vide Muhammad Husain v Kishwa Nandan 64 I A 250 where this is made clear. In a recent case from Patna, 23 Patna 599 (F B), it has been held that, where a grandfather makes a gift of his self-acquired property to his son (the father), the son or sons of the latter can treat it as ancestral property and take an interest in it by birth unless the gift makes it clear that it was made exclusively for the donee's benefit only.

A person while he is a member of a joint Hindu family under the Mit and has an interest in joint family property may have separate property of his own acquired in various ways. The different sources of ownership have been already mentioned above (pp. 317 and 548). The different kinds of separate property are mainly these: (1) property taken as obstructed heritage, that is, property inherited from any person other than the father, father's father or father's father's father (such as a brother, uncle etc.)<sup>1085</sup>; (2) a gift of a small portion of ancestral movable property made through affection by the father to his issue (smṛti quoted by Mit.)<sup>1086</sup>, (3) gift or bequest of separate property made by the father<sup>1087</sup> to his sons; (4) gifts and bequests made by other relations and friends and gifts at the time of marriage; (5) ancestral property lost to the family and recovered from a stranger by a member of a joint family with his own efforts without assistance from joint family property; (6) separate earnings and gains of learning or science (vidyādhana). A few remarks will be made on some of these in the sequel.

It is a remarkable fact that the smṛti texts on separate property do not expressly mention gifts received from strangers by a member of a joint family as the separate property of that particular member. The only gifts mentioned are those from friends, or those received at the time of marriage (called audvāḥuka in Yāj. II. 118 and Manu IX 206) or at a madhuparka in 1085 A decision of the P. C. from Madras held that property inherited by two brothers living as members of a joint family from their maternal grandfather became joint property in their hands with rights of survivorship. Vide Venkayamma v. Venkataramanayamma L. R. 29 I A 156. See 27 Mad 300 (F. B.) and 29 All 667 for the difficulties caused by L. R. 29 I A. 156. But it may be taken that even in Madras such property inherited from the maternal grandfather will now be held to be the separate property of the two brothers. Vide Muhammad Husain Khan v. Kishwa Nandan Sahai L. R. 64 I A 250 which explains away (on pp 264-265) the case of L. R. 29 I. A. 156.

1087. In Bombay, Allahabad and Ondh such gifts by the father of his separate property are held to be separate property of the son or sons. Vide Jugmohandas v. Sir Mangaldas 10 Bom 528, 579. But in Calcutta they are held to be ancestral (Hazari Mall v. Abaninath 17 C. W. N. 280) and in Madras it is a question of intention (Nagalingam v. Ramchandra 24 Mad. 429.)

honour of a learned man, a priest etc. It is probable that gifts from strangers to a member of the joint family that did not fall within the several classes of separate property mentioned above belonged to the whole family. The concept of the separate property of a member of a joint family was of slow growth. Originally all property however acquired by any member might have been held to belong to the whole family. This is indicated to some extent by Manu VIII. 416, which was (as shown above on pp. 555-556) however interpreted by Śābara, Medhatithi, the Dāyabhāga and others in subsequent times, as meaning that the acquirer (son or wife) had no independent power of disposal though he or she was owner of what was earned by him or her. It is noticeable that so late a writer as Haradatta<sup>1088</sup> relies on this verse of Manu and remarks that while the father is alive whatever is earned by a member, whether learned or not, belongs to the father (on Gaut 28 29). The Dāyabhāga<sup>1089</sup> (II. 66-72) quotes a text of Kāt. (851) "the father gets two shares or half of the wealth acquired by the son" and explains it in two ways. If the son acquires wealth with the help of ancestral funds, the father takes half of it, the acquirer gets two shares and the other sons one share each. If the son acquires wealth without using ancestral funds, the father and acquirer take two shares each and the others take nothing. Another meaning is that if the father is learned he takes half, but if he is not so, he takes only two shares. The V P. (pp 444-45) severely criticizes the Dāyabhāga for these remarks. The first inroad on the conception that the earnings of all in the family belonged to the head of the family was made in the times of the sūtras by the recognition of udyaūdhanā as separate property. Manu<sup>1090</sup> IX. 208 (= Viṣṇu Dh. 8. 18. 42) states that what one (member of a joint family, a brother etc.) may acquire by his own labour without using (or without detriment to) paternal estate he shall not share with others if he does not desire to do so, because that acquisition was made by his own activity. Manu IX. 206 mentions besides vidyādhana, gifts from friends, gifts at the time of marriage and at madhuparka as the separate property of a person Yāj. (II. 118-119) prescribes: 'whatever is acquired by a person himself without detriment to or expenditure of paternal wealth, gifts from friends, gifts at marriage, these are not liable to be divided among a man's coparceners; similarly he who recovers ancestral property lost to the family (and not recovered by the father and others) would not have to share it at a partition with his coparceners nor his gains of learning'. The construction to be put on these words was a bone of contention even before Viśvarūpa. The Mit. understands that the words 'whatever is acquired without detriment to the paternal wealth' are to be understood as qualifying each of the following four kinds of property.<sup>1091</sup> The result is that if a gift is acquired by a member from a grateful person who was placed under obligation by spending family wealth, if property was acquired by gift from a father-in-law who was paid from the family property some wealth for securing the bride for that member (as in an āsura marriage) or if the property lost to the family was recovered with the help of paternal estate or if a man learnt at the expense of the family and made gains from that learning, then these kinds of properties were liable to be partitioned among all members. The result of taking the first half of Yāj II 118 as a qualification of the subsequent four kinds of property (as done by the Mit.) is that if a man receives a gift from a stranger even without detriment to the paternal estate the gift was liable to be divided among all members. The reason of the Mit. is that, if the first half of Yāj II 118 is not a qualifying clause of the four kinds of property, then the following four kinds need not be expressly mentioned at all. If whatever is acquired by a member himself without detriment to paternal or joint estate is by itself separate property then the following four will only be particular illustrations of the proposition contained in the first half of Yāj II 118. It would be opposed to the usage of sistas to say that gifts from friends or gifts at the time of marriage or gains of learning acquired at the expense of the family estate become the separate property of a person and, as to vidyādhana acquired from learning at the expense of the family, opposed to the express text of Nār. (dāyabhāga 10) "when one brother maintains the family of another brother who is engaged in studying the śāstras, he shall receive a share of the wealth gained by that study, though he (the supporting brother) be ignorant himself". Further, if the first half of Yāj II 118 were taken as a separate and independent clause by itself then it would follow that what is acquired by prati-graha (as a gift to a learned brāhmana) without detriment to the paternal estate would be indivisible but the usage of the sistas is the opposite of this. That there was such a usage about prati-graha is admitted by the Dāyabhāga (VI. 1 54 p 121). It must be stated however that this view of the Mit. about the first half of Yāj II 118 is not shared by several writers and works such as the Dāyabhāga VI. 1. 8 p. 106, Dipakalikā, Viśvarūpa, V. R. p 501, Aparārka p. 723.

As regards family property lost to the family by the adverse acts of a stranger but recovered by a member with his own efforts without using ancestral estate, certain provisions deserve notice. Manu IX. 209 (= Visnu Dh. S. 18 43), Br. (S. B. E 33 p 371 verse 12) and Kāt<sup>1092</sup> (866) lay down the special rule that if the father recovers property lost to the family, whether movable or immovable, with his own effort without using joint family funds, he may retain the whole of it as his self-acquisition. The rule of Yāj. II 119 applies only where the property lost and recovered by one member (not the father) with his own effort and without assistance from joint estate is movable (which then becomes wholly his self-acquisition), but if the property so recovered by one member (who is not the father) is land, then the recoverer gets one fourth of it as his reward (according to Śāṅkha)<sup>1093</sup> and the remainder is divided equally among all members of the family including the recoverer. These rules have been followed in modern times by the British Indian Courts<sup>1094</sup>.

Vidyādhana (gains of learning) has undergone the greatest changes of fortune since the earliest times to modern days. It was probably the first kind of self-acquisition recognised in very early times. Though the Āp. Dh S and Baud. Dh S. say nothing about it, yet Gaut<sup>1094a</sup> (28. 28-29) lays down that all members (of a joint family), if not learned, should divide equally whatever is earned by them (by agriculture etc.) but what a learned man himself acquires by his learning he may not share with his unlearned brothers if he so desires. Hara-datta says that this applies only between brothers that are joint. Vasistha 17. 51 appears<sup>1095</sup> to give two shares to the acquirer of wealth at a partition among brothers and his rule probably represents a very early stage when the acquirer could not retain the whole of his self-acquisition but got only two shares

This remark of vi. r. is quoted by the वायतत्त्वं (p. 177) and dissented from, as the *mita*akara and वायभाग cite this verse. As the verse is stated by the vi. r. to be not found in the पारिजात and as it is quoted in the मदनपारिजात it follows that the पारिजात is a different work from the मद्. पा.

in it and the rest of the joint family members took one share each in it. Manu IX. 206, Yāj. II. 119, Nār (dāyabhāga 11), Kāt<sup>1096</sup> (868) and Vyāsa say generally that vidyādhana is not liable to be divided at a partition. Among writers of smṛtis Kāt contains the most elaborate treatment of vidyādhana and of self-acquisitions in general. It will be set out in the sequel. But some of the smṛtis point out that even vidyādhana is partible, if learning was acquired at the expense of the family funds (as in Nār dāyabhāga 10 referred to above) or when the learning was acquired in the family house itself from the father or an elder brother (Kāt<sup>1097</sup> 874). The Dāyabhāga (VI 1 42-49) discusses at great length the views of Śrīkara on Yāj. II. 118 and Manu IX. 208 and dissents from them and states his conclusion as follows. A man since his birth depends upon his family for food and maintenance and so if the words "without expending ancestral estate" were literally and widely interpreted, hardly any man can say that no paternal wealth was expended on him and so earnings of whatever kind would have to be deemed to be partible and there would be no propriety or purpose in the words of Manu IX. 208. Therefore it must be understood as done by Viśvarūpa that the detriment meant is not the expenditure of food in maintaining a person in the house from infancy, but that when a member acquires estate by his learning or in any other way without giving or spending paternal wealth for acquiring that, then only it becomes his self-acquisition<sup>1098</sup>.

Kāt. (867-873) defines<sup>1099</sup> and illustrates vidyādhana as follows:—

That wealth is said to be the gains of vidyā which is acquired by means of learning received from another while subsisting on food furnished by others, when a matter (a doubt or difficult point) has been placed (before an assembly of learned men) with a wager, whatever is gained by (the display of) one's learning is known as vidyādhana, which is not divided at a partition. What is acquired from a pupil (i. e. by following the profession of teaching), by performing the work of a priest at a sacrifice, by propounding a question, by solving a doubtful point, by exhibiting one's knowledge, by disputation with a rival, what is gained by deep learning—all these are declared to be vidyādhana, which is not divided at a partition. The same is the rule in the case of artisans and as to whatever is obtained (as a reward) over and above the proper price of an article (which surplus becomes the self-acquisition of the member selling it) After vanquishing a rival in a wager whatever is obtained by (superior) knowledge should be known as vidyādhana and it is not liable to be partitioned. This is the view of Brhaspati. What is earned by an assertion of one's learning, what is obtained from a pupil (i. e. by teaching) and what is acquired on the analogy of priests officiating at a sacrifice—all these are known as vidyādhana, according to Bhṛgu. What is obtained by the superiority of one's learning and from a sacrificer and from a pupil—all this is declared to be vidyādhana; acquisitions other than these are common (i. e. jointly owned) with others.

Kāt distinguishes between sauyadhaṇa (reward given by the king or a master when pleased with a soldier or servant who putting his life in danger did an act of valour) and dhvajāhṛta (what is recovered in a battle after putting one's life in danger of death and after putting to flight the army of the adversary) Nār (dāyabhāga 6) and Br (S B E vol. 33 p. 381 verse 78) appear to put both under saṃyādhanā. Kāt divides the bhūryādhanā of Nār and Br into two, viz lanyāgata (what is obtained at the time of marriage with a maiden of the same caste) and raṇāhika (wealth that comes with one's wife) So it is the same as the raṇāhika (of Manu IX 206) and the audāhika (of Yāj II 118). Vyāsa mentions<sup>1100</sup> a limitation that even wealth acquired by valour does not become the exclusive property of the acquirer if he used a horse and weapons belonging to the joint family; in such a case the acquirer gets two shares and the other members of the family one share each

In modern times vidyādhanā has been a fruitful source of litigation. The first verse of Kāt quoted above has been cited in several cases such as Durga Dal v. Ganesh Dal 32 All. 305 at p. 312, where it is said that Kātyāyana's definition of vidyādhanā is not exhaustive, but only illustrative (the same is the view of the Dāyabhāga)

The leading cases that discuss the texts and lay down propositions are noted below<sup>1101</sup>.

Two propositions were well established by the cases, viz (1) that money earned by a member of a joint Hindu family by the practice of a profession requiring special training was joint family property, provided such training was imparted at the expense of joint family property; (2) that gains made by personal labour and without the use or help of joint family funds by a member of a joint Hindu family, who was maintained out of joint family funds and received no more than an elementary or ordinary education suitable to his position as a member of that particular family were the self-acquisitions of such member. But all doubts and disputes are now set at rest by the Hindu

Gains of Learning Act (Act XXX of 1930) which provides that, notwithstanding any custom, rule or interpretation of Hindu Law, no gains of learning (i. e. education whether elementary, technical, scientific, special or general and training of every kind which enables a person to pursue any trade, industry or avocation), whether made before or after the commencement of the Act, shall be held not to be the exclusive and separate property of the acquirer merely by reason of his learning having been wholly or in part imparted to him by any member, living or deceased, of his family or with the aid of the funds of the joint family or of any member thereof or by reason of himself or his family having, while he was acquiring his learning, been supported wholly or in part by the joint funds of the family or the funds of any member thereof. This Act is thus retrospective

All property of a joint family other than the separate property of individual members is liable to partition, i. e. as stated by Kat., property of the grandfather, of the father and whatever is acquired by each member (by the use of joint funds<sup>1102</sup> is so liable). Separate property is said to be impartible (avibhāgya) on account of the source from which or the manner in which it is acquired. But there are certain kinds of property which from their very nature are not allowed to be partitioned and have to be enjoyed in common or by turns.

The oldest provision on this point is contained in Gautama<sup>1103</sup> (28. 44-45) that water (well), (property set apart or destined for) pious uses or sacrifices and food prepared (for festivals etc.) shall not be divided nor women connected with individual

Śāṅkha-Likhita<sup>1104</sup> forbid the partition of a building,<sup>1104a</sup> water vessels, ornaments and clothes that are daily worn by the respective members. Similarly Uśanas says<sup>1105</sup> "there is no partition among agnates even up to the thousandth generation of what is acquired by officiating as priests, of a field, of vehicles, prepared food, water and women". Prajāpati (quoted by Sm. C. II p 277) asserts that there is no partition of houses, fields and temples (1/ājya), gifts made through favour by the father or mother. The prohibition against dividing a house or a field is explained in three ways. The Mit. on Yāj. II. 119 explains that it has in view a brāhmana's son from a wife of the ksatriya or vaiśya class, when the brāhmana acquired it as a religious gift made to him for his learning, since Br. (S. B. E. 33 p. 374 verse 30) states "land bestowed<sup>1106</sup> as a gift on a brāhmana should not be given to the son (of the brāhmana) from a wife of the ksatriya caste; even if the father gives it to the son of the ksatriya wife, after the father's death, the son of the wife of the brāhmana class may take it away". Another explanation is that the prohibition refers to a site or dwelling for religious purposes and to a field that is meant for grazing cows. The third explanation is that the prohibition implies that when the house or field is of small value it should not be partitioned by metes and bounds, but there should be partitioning of the price only. The Dayabhāga gives yet another explanation (VI 2. 30 p. 128) that if during the father's lifetime any of the sons builds a house or lays out a garden on a family site, then it should not be divided at a partition but assigned to him only.

The basic verse on things impartible from their very nature is Manu IX. 219<sup>1107</sup> (=Visnu Dh. S. 18. 44) which says "clothes, vehicles, ornaments, cooked food, water (well etc.), women, yogakṣema and ways—these are declared to be impartible". All commentators explain that clothes ordinarily worn by the several members are impartible; provided they are more or less equal in value but not costly ones nor new ones. The same remark applies to vehicles and ornaments. Pracāra means either "ways leading to the house, garden and the like" (Mit, Aparārka, and V. P.) and also 'ways and pasture lands for cows and the like' (Sm. C. II. p. 277, Kullūka). The Mit. (on Yaj II. 118-119) states a special rule from Br. that<sup>1108</sup> the clothes and ornaments worn by the father, the bed and the vehicle used by him should on his death be donated to the brāhmaṇa invited at the father's śrāddha. As to ornaments, the Mit. following Manu IX. 200 says that those ornaments that are ordinarily worn by the respective members or their wives should not be divided, but those that are not so used everyday should be divided. A well is to be enjoyed by turns and not to be partitioned by valuing it.<sup>1109</sup> If there be a single female slave (not a concubine) she was to be made to work for the divided members by turns, but if there be several slaves they could be assigned to each or their price could be divided. The expression "yogakṣema" has been variously explained from very ancient times. Laugākṣi (quoted by the Mit.) states "those who know the truth say that 'yoga' means 'sacrifices' and kṣema means pūrta (i. e. works of charity like wells). They both (i. e. the money set apart for these or the merit derived from these) are impartible, as are also the bed and the (wooden) seat (used by the father or other member)." From this verse the Mit. concludes that yogakṣema means sacrificial acts performed with śrauta or smārta fire and charitable gifts such as constructing a tank or park etc. For ista and pūrta vide H of Dh. vol. II pp. 147, 843-844 and pp. 914-915 n. 2112 for the Mit. on yogakṣema. The words "yoga" and "kṣema" occur even in the Rgveda VII. 86. 8, X. 89. 10, X. 166. 5 and in Tai Br III. 9. 19. 3 and Ait. Br. 37. 2. Even though joint family funds are spent for these still they are impartible. The Mit. further states that according to some yogakṣema means<sup>1110</sup> "royal ministers and purohita" who bring about the welfare of people, while others hold that the word means "umbrella, chourie, weapons, shoes, and the like". From Gaut IX. 63 and XI. 16 it appears that yogakṣema came to mean even before Gautama's time "comfortable life" or "easy and happy way of maintenance" (particularly for a learned brāhmana). The V. R. p 504 tells<sup>1111</sup> us that, according to Prakāśa, yogaksema means "maintenance or annuity descending from the father (to the son) at a royal 'palace' and that Halāyudha explained yoga as meaning a ship or the like and ksema as fort. The Sm. C. II p. 277 after quoting Laugākṣi gives an alternative explanation that yogaksema means the wealth gained by a learned brāhmaṇa resorting to a rich man for his maintenance.<sup>1112</sup>

The express mention of books in Visnu Dh S is an indication of its posteriority to Manu. Several meanings are assigned to पत्र, योगक्षेम and प्रचार by different writers. All commentators of Manu except Nandana explain पत्र as vehicle (i. e. a horse, cart &c.), while नन्दन reads पात्र (water vessel) and अपरांक p. 725, वि. र. 504, मद्. पा. p. 685 explain पत्र as document evidencing a debt.

Kauṭ. (III. 5) states<sup>1113</sup> the view of the ācāryas that those who are poor may divide even their water vessels and Kauṭ. adds that this dictum is fallacious or contradictory. Kāṭ. (882-884) brings together several things that are impartible<sup>1114</sup> "money that is entered in a document and is set apart for a religious purpose, water, women, a subandha (periodic gain) that descends hereditarily, clothes worn (on the body every day), ornaments, whatever else that is not fit to be divided—these should be so employed by co-sharers that they may be enjoyed (in common by all) at the proper time. A pasture for cattle, ways, clothes worn on the body (every day), money lent and what is set apart for religious purposes—these should not be divided This is the view of Brhaspati."

Brhaspati (S B. E. 33 p. 382 verses 79-84) has a good deal to say about things impartible. He finds fault with Manu IX. 219 for his somewhat wide proposition that clothes, ornaments and the like are impartible. He says<sup>1115</sup> "those who declared that clothes and the like are impartible have not given proper thought. In the case of the rich, their wealth may consist of (valuable) clothes and ornaments. If these (clothes and ornaments) be kept joint (i. e. undivided) they cannot yield subsistence nor can they be assigned to one alone (out of many co-sharers). They should therefore be distributed with skill, otherwise they will become useless. Clothes and ornaments may be divided by selling them (i. e. by dividing the proceeds of sale), debt consigned to writing is divided after recovering it (i. e. the bond itself is not divided), cooked food (may be divided) by exchanging it for uncooked food. The waters of wells that have flights of steps and of other wells is to be enjoyed by drawing it out according to the needs (of the co-sharers); in the same way a field or a water course is to be enjoyed according to respective shares; a single female slave is to be made to work in the houses of the co-sharers according to their shares; if there be several female slaves, they are to be allotted in equal shares (to the sharers); this very rule applies to male slaves also; the income derived from a yogaksema grant is to be equally divided and pasture lands (or ways) are to be used by the co-sharers according to their respective shares."

The next points to be dealt with are what persons are entitled to partition and what is the mode of partition. But before doing so some preliminary remarks must be made on the expressions coparcenary and 'joint family', which occur at every step in modern works on Hindu Law. In the smṛtis and commentaries we come across the words kutumba (Nār., dattāpradānika 6 or Yāj II 175), or ambhakta-kutumba (Yāj. II. 45). A joint Hindu family consists of all males lineally descended from a common male ancestor and includes their wives and unmarried daughters. A daughter on marriage ceases to be a member of her father's family and becomes a member of her husband's family. Under the Mitākṣarā a Hindu coparcenary strictly so called is a much narrower group than the joint family. It comprises only those males who take by birth an interest in the joint or coparcenary property i. e. a person himself and his sons, son's sons and son's grandsons form for the time being a coparcenary. The diagram and the note below<sup>1116</sup> will explain the limits of a coparcenary.

A coparcenary is purely a creation of law; it cannot be created by act of parties, except by adoption. In order to be able to claim a partition, it does not matter how remote from the common ancestor a person may be, provided he is not more than four degrees removed from the last male owner who has himself taken an interest by birth.<sup>1117</sup>

Some characteristic features of the Mitākṣarā coparcenary may be briefly stated. There is in the first place unity of ownership i. e. the whole body of coparceners is the owner and no individual member can say, while the family is undivided, that he has a definite share, as his interest is always fluctuating, being liable to be enlarged by deaths and diminished by births in the family. There is also unity of possession and enjoyment i. e. all are entitled to possession and enjoyment of the family

Here all are to be assumed to be males A and his sons B and C may form a coparcenary. So also, if B and C have each a son, then A, B, C, D, E, will form a coparcenary. If D and E have respectively F and G as sons, all persons from A to G will form a coparcenary. But here the limit is reached. If X is born during the lifetime of A, he being the son of the great-grandson of A takes no interest by birth and is outside the coparcenary during A's lifetime. But if X is born after the death of A, then he forms a coparcenary with B, D, F. Suppose that B dies before A. That will not however introduce X into the coparcenary of which A is the head, as X being the son of A's great-grandson F takes no interest by birth in ancestral property held by A. Suppose that B, C, D, E, F and G all die in the lifetime of A, then A becomes the sole surviving coparcener and X is not a coparcener along with A, because he is 5th in descent (counting both A and X) from A. Suppose A the only surviving coparcener dies. Then X will take A's property as an heir and not by survivorship as a coparcener.

1117. Vide Moro v. Ganesk 10 Bom. H. C. R. p 444, pp 461-468 where Mr Justice Nanabhay Haridas very lucidly explains by several diagrams the limits of a coparcenary and what persons are entitled to demand a partition and from whom.

property and the possession of one is ordinarily possession on behalf of all. Further, while the family is joint and some coparceners have many children and others have few or none or some are absent, they cannot complain at the time of partition about some coparceners having exhausted the whole income and cannot ask for an account of past income and expenditure. Kāt. (889) expressly states so.<sup>1118</sup> Moreover, the joint family property devolves by survivorship i.e. on the death of a coparcener his interest lapses and goes to the other coparceners, subject to this that if the deceased has left a son, grandson, or great-grandson, the latter represents and occupies the place of the deceased coparcener when a partition takes place. A female cannot be a coparcener (even if she be the wife or the mother). Another characteristic is that each coparcener has a right to enforce a partition. The affairs of the family are managed by the father and if he be very old or dead, by the senior brother or member or by any other member with the consent of the senior member (Nār., dāyabhāga 5 and Śankha quoted above in note 1067). The manager is called kartā in modern times though the smṛtis and digests employ words like lutumbin (Yāj II 45), grhṇ, grhapak, prabhu (Kāt 543) and not kartā. He has special powers of disposition (by mortgage, sale or gift) of family property in a season of distress (for debts), for the purposes and benefit of the family (maintenance, education and marriages of members and other dependents) and particularly for religious purposes (śrāddhas and the like).<sup>1119</sup> The father has the same powers as manager and certain other special powers, which no other coparcener has. The father can separate his sons from himself and also among themselves if he so desires, even if they do not desire to separate.<sup>1120</sup> (Yāj. II. 114); while an ordinary coparcener can only separate himself from the family. The father can make within reasonable limits gifts of ancestral movable property without<sup>1121</sup> the consent of his sons for performing indispensable acts of duty and for purposes laid down by the texts, such as gifts through affection (to wife, daughter, son or the like), the support of the family and relief from distress. The father can make a gift of even immovable property within<sup>1122</sup> reasonable limits for pious purposes only (such as to a family idol or to an idol in a temple at the time of obsequies). The father can sell or mortgage the joint family property to pay off an antecedent debt contracted by him for his own personal benefit, provided it is not illegal or immoral (vide p. 448 above). No coparcener (except the father or manager as stated above) can dispose of his undivided interest by gift, sale or mortgage according to the strict theory of the Mitākṣarā except with the consent of the other coparceners. This right to object to alienations made without consent or made without legal necessity is another characteristic of the joint Hindu family under the Mitākṣarā. Br. (S. B. E. 33 p. 384 verse 93) says<sup>1123</sup> "whether kinsmen are joint or separate they are alike as regards immovable property, since a single one from among them has no power in any case to make a gift, sale or mortgage of it." But in modern times the courts in Bombay, Madras and the Central Provinces have loosened this strict rule by holding that a coparcener may sell, mortgage or alienate for value his undivided interest in coparcenary property without the consent of the other coparceners<sup>1124</sup> and the courts have allowed the undivided interest of a coparcener in joint family property to be attached at the instance of a creditor for the individual debts of a coparcener. This is one of the most serious departures from ancient and medieval Hindu Law made by the Courts on the ground of equity. One more right of all members of the joint Hindu family is the right to be maintained from the property and income of the joint family. Such matters as the remedies of the purchaser or mortgagee from an individual coparcener are here left out of consideration as appropriate only in a treatise on modern Hindu Law.

The conception of a coparcenary under the Dāyabhāga system is entirely different from that of the Mitākṣarā. Under the Dāyabhāga, sons do not acquire any interest by birth in ancestral property, but the son's rights arise for the first time on the father's death and the sons take as heirs and not by survivorship. There is hence no coparcenary in the sense of the Mitākṣarā between a father and his sons. The father has absolute power to dispose of all kinds of ancestral property by sale, mortgage, gift, will or otherwise in the same way as he can dispose of his separate property. The son has no right to demand a partition during his father's lifetime. A coparcenary starts on the death of the father between the latter's sons or grandsons i. e. between brothers, uncles and nephews, or between cousins. If a coparcener dies without male issue, there is no right of survivorship in the other coparceners but the deceased member's widow or daughter may succeed to his share and thus even females may become members of a coparcenary under the Dāyabhāga. Each coparcener takes a defined share under the Dāyabhāga (not an indefinite one as under the Mitākṣarā). Any coparcener under the Dāyabhāga can sell, mortgage, or dispose off by gift or will his share (Dāyabhāga II 28-31)<sup>1125</sup>

1124. Numerous cases lay down this proposition, vide, for example, Vasudeva v Venkatesh 10 Bom. H C R p 139 which was approved of by the Full Bench in Fakirappa v. Chanappa 10 Bom H C R. p. 162, Villa Butten v. Yamenamma 8 Mad. H C. R 6

Every coparcener is entitled to a share on partition. It has been already stated (on pp. 570-571) how in Bombay a son is not entitled to a partition if the father is joint with his own father, brothers or other coparceners and does not assent to the son's claim. There is a volume of case-law about a suit for partition brought on behalf of a minor, but it has to be passed over here, as there is hardly anything corresponding to this in the works on dharmaśāstra. The texts provide for the case of a son who was in the mother's womb at the time of partition but was born after it. If A and his sons B and C, who are members of a joint family, come to a partition and take one third each of the family property and six months later A's wife gives birth to a son D, then the partition has to be reopened and D will get  $\frac{1}{4}$  ( $\frac{1}{3}$  if the mother is given a share) of the family property that will remain after meeting all proper charges since the first partition and taking into account all income and accretions during the interval. The same rule applies to a partition among brothers, when the widow of a predeceased brother gives birth to a posthumous son conceived before the partition but born after it. Vide Yāj. <sup>1126</sup> II. 122 and Viṣṇu Dh. S. 17. 3. Vasistha (17. 40-41) therefore recommends that when it is known that the wives of some brothers (predeceased) are pregnant the other brothers should postpone partition till the delivery of those women. Where a son is born as well as conceived after partition between a father and his sons the rights of the afterborn son are declared by Gaut. <sup>1127</sup> 28. 27, Manu IX. 216, Yāj II. 122, <sup>1128</sup> Nār (dāyabhāga 44), Br. acquisitions of the father made after the partition.<sup>1129</sup> The Mit. understands that the first half ( of Yāj. II. 122 ) refers to a partition during the father's lifetime and provides that if a son was conceived and born to the father after partition he took the share allotted to the father and all the self-acquisitions of the father made after partition (īthā vibhāgottarakūlam pītvā yat lañcat aryam tat sarvam vibhaktanasyauva) and the Mit. relies on Manu IX. 216 and Br. for this. The Mit. takes the 2nd half of Yāj. II 122 as referring to a partition made after the father's death and states that, if a son was in the mother's womb when the brothers separated after the father's death and was born subsequently, the posthumous son would be entitled to reopen the partition and would get a share out of the property ( not as it stood at the date of partition ) that would be there after allowing for proper expenditure ( e. g. payment of debts etc. ) and accretions. The Mit. extends the same rule to a posthumous son born after partition to the widow of a brother who died before the partition and 1129. In Nawal Singh v. Bhagwan Singh 4 All. 427, where after the father separated from his three sons he married a second wife, had a son from her and died leaving certain property inherited by him from a third person, it was held, relying on Manu, the Mit., Br. and the Viramītrodaya, that the son born after partition was entitled to the whole of the property acquired by the father to the exclusion of the three sons that had separated from him. In Chengama v. Munisami 20 Mad 75 (where a father partitioned his ancestral property half and half between his two sons, reserved no share for himself and subsequently another son was born to him) it was held that the subsequently born son was entitled to one-third by partition not only in the property as it stood at the date of partition, but also in the property acquired by the two sons by means of the produce of that property (relying on the words of Yāj. II 122 "āyavyayavīśodhitāt") The dates of the partition and of the birth of the son are not clear from the report. In Ganpat v. Gopalrao 23 Bom 636 (where in 1875 a father separated his son born of his first wife by giving him one third of the estate and gave two thirds to his two minor sons from the second wife and lived with them and another son was born to him in 1880, who sued in 1894 claiming one-fourth of all property) it was held that the one third given to the son by the first wife could not be affected and the plaintiff was only entitled to claim a share in the property given to the other two sons, and further that the texts of Visnu and Yājñavalkya are somewhat vague and are applicable only to the case of posthumous sons who have no provision made for them. Vide also Shivayirao v. Vasantirao 33 Bom 267 for further limitations on this rule in favour of the after-born son.

when the fact of the pregnancy was not known to the separating brothers. Viśvarūpa regards the whole verse as laying down one proposition, the first half declaring that if a son (who had been already conceived) were born to the father after partition with the sons, he would be entitled to the share taken by the father, while the 2nd half declares that if the father took no share then the son so born would be entitled to reopen the partition and take a share of the property remaining after taking into account accretions and expenses. The Dipakalikā seems to be of the same opinion as Viśvarūpa, but it adds that Manu IX. 216 provides for the case where the son is both conceived and born after partition. The Sm. C. (II. pp. 306-307) holds that when in the father's lifetime partition takes place the sons separating should give a share to the after-born son, but the father should retain his, while the whole of Yāj. II. 122 applies to the case where partition is made after the father's death and a posthumous son is born to the mother or to the widow of a brother dying before partition. In such a case the partition should be reopened and a share given out of the property as it stood at the first partition or out of the property as found to exist at the reopened partition after allowing for accretions and proper expenses (for payment of debts, for saṃskāras of brothers and sisters); vide V. P. p. 463 for explanation of 'drśyād' etc. The Vyavahāra-mayūkha (p. 105) follows the Sm. C. and V. R. (p. 539) in explaining the whole of Yāj. II. 122 as referring to the case of a posthumous son conceived before partition made on the father's death but born after partition from the mother or step-mother of the separating brothers or from the wife of a brother dying before partition.

An adopted son, if adopted by a coparcener in a joint family or by a sole surviving coparcener, becomes under the Mitākṣarā law a member of the coparcenary from the moment of his adoption and has the same rights to demand a partition as an aurasa son has. Under the Dāyabhāga even an aurasa son cannot claim partition during his father's life and so an adopted son would be in no better position. If after a person adopts he has an aurasa son, the adopted son's share becomes reduced according to most commentators, but this subject will be dealt with later on under adoption.

The smṛtis and some of the medieval and later digests ever enter into elaborate discussions about the rights of a son or sons born from wives of classes lower than that of the father. Vid

Gaut 28. 33-37, Baud. Dh. S. II 2. 10, Kaut. III 6, Vas 17. 48-50, Manu IX. 149-155, Yāj. II. 125, Visnu Dh. S. 18. 1-33, Nār. (dāyabhāga 14), Br. (S. B. E. 33 p. 374 verses 27-29), Śankha (quoted in V. R. p. 531) It is not necessary to deal in detail with the varying provisions made in these works, as marriages with women of a lower class have not been in vogue for several centuries; but a few remarks will have to be made. Manu IX. 153 and Yāj. II. 125, Br. (S. B. E. 33 p. 374 v. 27) clearly state that if a brāhmana has sons from wives of the four classes, the whole property should be divided into ten parts which should be distributed as follows:—four for the son of the wife of the brāhmana caste, three for the son of the ksatriya caste wife, two for the son of the vaiśya caste wife and one for the son of the śūdra class wife Manu IX. 154 (almost the same as Anuśāsana 47 21) further provides that whether a brāhmana leaves sons or no sons born (of wives of the three twice-born classes) the heir shall give, according to the law, to the son of a śūdra class wife no more than a tenth part of his estate. V. P. p. 487 and the Mit (on Yāj. II. 133) after quoting Manu, make this quite clear. But as remarked by the Mit on Yāj. II. 125 the son of a brāhmana from a wife of the ksatriya or other lower class was not to share in land obtained by the brāhmana by way of gift (vide Br. quoted in note 1106 above) though he could share land acquired by purchase or the like. A verse (attributed to Br. by Day IX 22 and V. R. p. 534 and to Devala by V. P. p. 466) denies altogether a share in land to a śūdra class wife's son of a brāhmana, while Manu IX. 155 (the son of a person of the three higher classes from a śūdra woman gets no share in the paternal wealth) is variously explained, the Mit saying that it applies only where the son has already got some property from his father while the Mayūkha and some others say that it applies to the son of a śūdra woman who is not married to the person of higher caste but is only a mistress Kaut III 6 and Br (quoted by V. R. p. 534) provide that the pūtraśava son gets  $\frac{1}{2}$  of his father's estate and the nearest sapinda gets the remaining two thirds. Śankha-Likhita (quoted by Medhātithi on Manu IX. 155) have the same rule as in Manu IX. 155 It is remarkable that early medieval writers like Vijñānesvara (about 1100 A. D.) or even later ones like Mitrāmisra (first half of 17th century) in V. P. pp 464-466 enter with zest into elaborate explanations of Manu IX. 153 and Yāj. II. 125 and never expressly state that these v. r. had ceased to be applicable in their days, though there are a few other medieval works like the Sm. C. II. pp. 288-289 and the Madanaratna<sup>1130</sup> that either do not explain these verses at all or say that these verses are applicable to a different age. According to Manu (IX. 178, 160) the son of a brāhmana from a śūdra class wife is called śāudra or pāraśava, while according to Yāj I. 91 he is called both nisāda and pāraśava (vide H. of Dh. vol. II. pp 86-87 for nisāda and pāraśava). But he is one of the secondary sons (gauna-putra) according to Manu (IX. 180), Vas. 17. 38 and others. Writers from Aparārka downwards quote certain<sup>1131</sup> verses from Śaunaka on matters forbidden in the Kali age (kali-varjya) one of which is the acceptance of sons other than aśura and dattaka.<sup>1132</sup>

1132 In Natha v. Chotalal 55 Bom. 1 the son of a brāhmana from a śūdra wife was held entitled to a tenth share in the estate of his father and uncle and that the remaining nine-tenths would go to the nearest agnate, and Manu and Yāj are relied upon. But this would be opposed to the view of the Ma-yūlba that secondary sons are not allowed now and is also against the spirit of the warning given by the Privy Council to Judges of modern times over 75 years ago in Collector of Madura v Mootoo Ramlinga 12 Moo. I. A 397 at p 436 "the duty of an European Judge who is under an obligation to administer Hindu Law is not so much to inquire whether a disputed doctrine is fairly deducible from the earliest authorities, as to ascertain whether it has been received by the particular school which governs the district with which he has to deal and has there been sanctioned by usage For under the Hindu system of law, clear proof of usage will outweigh the written text of the law" This passage (omitting the word "European") is quoted by the P. An illegitimate son has in certain circumstances rights of partition in the property of his putative father. An illegitimate son may be a son by a concubine who is a dāsī (i.e. who is in exclusive and continuous keeping) or he may be the son of a woman who is not a dāsī. The first is called dāsīputra<sup>1133</sup> and the second is hardly ever dealt with in dharmasāstra works<sup>1131</sup>

Gujarat where the Vyavahāramayūkha is of paramount authority. In both cases not a word is said about the proof of the usage of marriages between a brāhmana and a śūdra woman taking place in Gujarat but reliance is placed solely on the recognition of anuloma marriages by Manu and Yājñavalkya, the strong condemnation of pratiloma marriages by both and the inference drawn from the comment of Viṣṇūśeṣvara and the remarks of Nīlakantha that anuloma marriages are not prohibited. With the most profound respect for the learned Judges who decided those two cases, it has to be said that they took up the position of legislators and did not merely interpret the Hindu Law in accordance with usage and ignored the text of the Mayūkha itself stating that all secondary soos (among which the son of a brāhmana from a śūdra caste wife is included by Manu) except aurasa son (who is defined by Yāj. II, 128 himself and the Mit. as the son of a wife of the same class) and dattaka are forbidden in the present age. The decision in Bai Gulab v Jivanlal was opposed to the considered view expressed by Chandavarkar J. in Bai Kash v Jannadas, 14 Bom. L. R. 547 at p. 552. From this gloss of the Mitākṣarā from which Nīlakantha expressed nowhere any dissent it is reasonable to infer that, according to the leading authorities on Hindu Law as recognised in this Presidency, a śūdra wife is not permitted to a brāhmin, a kṣatriya or a vaiśya "and to the decisions of some other High Courts in India (vide 28 All. 458 for example). It should not be supposed that the present writer is entirely against such marriages. What he is coerced to emphasize is that the Legislature should deal with these matters, that Judges should not assume the role of legislators and give rise to conflict of laws which are inevitable if the same kind of marriage is held valid by the Bombay High Court and invalid by the Allahabad or Madras High Court.

1134. Yāj. II 290 appears to distinguish between a dāsī in general and one who is avaruddhā (i.e. the exclusive and continuous keeping of a man). 'अवरुद्धाश्च दासीश्च शुचिभ्यामु सधैव च । गम्यान्वापि पुमान्दाप्यः सञ्जाशत्यपि न वन्द' For the com. of the Mit. vide p. 1595 below

From ancient times it had been settled that the *dāsi*putra of a person belonging to the twice-born classes is not entitled to a share on partition or to inherit, but is entitled to maintenance only. Gaut 28 37 provides<sup>1135</sup> that even the son of a brāhmana who is issueless from a śūdra woman (a concubine) should receive the means of maintenance provided he is obedient in the manner of a pupil. Br. (S B. E. vol. 33 p. 374 verse 31) contains a similar rule for the maintenance of an illegitimate son born of a śūdra woman after the father's death. But as regards the son of a śūdra from a dāsi Manu IX. 179 provides that such an illegitimate son may take a share in the father's property if the father allows him to do so. The classical passage on the rights of the illegitimate son of a śūdra from a dāsi is Yāj II. 133-134 which verses are introduced by the V. Mayūkha<sup>1136</sup> with the words "Yāj declares a special rule as regards one begotten by a śūdra on a woman (of the same caste) not married to him" and which may be rendered thus "even a son begotten by a śūdra on a dāsi may partake of a share at the choice (of his father). But, when the father is dead, the brothers should make him the recipient of a half share". This passage and the comments of the Mit., the V. Mayūkha, the Dāyabhāga have been cited and explained in numerous cases. The following propositions as deduced from the texts and the case-law may be set out here:—(1) the illegitimate son of a śūdra even under the Mit. does not acquire by birth any interest in the estate held by the father and so cannot enforce a partition in his father's lifetime, but the father may give him a share in his lifetime, which may even be equal to that of a legitimate son (4 Bom. 37, 44-45, 23 Mad 16); (2) on the father's death an illegitimate son of a deceased śūdra becomes a coparcener along with the legitimate sons and the former is entitled to seek partition (4 Bom. 37 F. 1137. The decisions establish that dāsī is not to be taken in the strict literal sense (a female slave), but means a woman kept as a concubine, the connection being continuous, exclusive and lawful. In order that the illegitimate son of a śūdra may take a share or inherit, it must be shown that the connection between the śūdra man and the woman was not incestuous or adulterous or though adulterous at the beginning had ceased to be so when the illegitimate son was born. Vide Rahi v Govind 1 Bom. 97 at p 110, Sadu v. Baisa 4 Bom. 37 (F. B.) at p 44, Vithabai v. Pandu 28 Bom. L. R. 595, Soundararajan v. Arunachalam 39 Mad. 136 (F. B.) pp. 152-159, *Tukaram v. The earlier cases in Calcutta (as in 1 Cal. 1, 19 Cal. 91, 28 Cal. 194), held that dāsī meant only a female slave and as slavery was abolished in India, there could be no dāsīputra strictly so called. But in Rajannath v. Natar 48 Cal. 643 (F. B.) the former Calcutta decisions were overruled and the Bombay High Court's interpretation of dāsīputra has been accepted. The passage of the Dāyabhāga (IX. 29 p. 143) which was to be correctly interpreted in the Calcutta cases runs "शूद्रस्य पुत्रपरिणीतादास्यादिशूद्राशुत्रं विदुश्चमर्या पुत्रान्तरतुल्योऽहर् । तदाह मनुः । दास्या वा० (मनु IX. 179) । अनुमतिमन्तरेण स्वर्धोऽहर् । तदाह याज्ञवल्क्यः । जातोपि० (या. son cannot demand a partition of the joint family property though he is entitled to maintenance as a member of the family provided the father left no separate estate (L. R. 58 I. A. 402). It has been held that if a śūdra keeps a woman of the brāhmana caste as his exclusive mistress and has a son from her, he is not a dāsiputra (but acc. ancient works a cāndāla) and is not entitled to inherit the estate the śūdra father as an illegitimate son. Vide Ramchandra v. Hanannai 37 Bom L. R. 920 followed in 18 Lucknow 585. Further rules about the inheritance of the illegitimate son when in competition with the widow, legitimate daughter or legitimate daughter's son will be dealt with later on (vide n. 1356 below).

An absent coparcener stood on the same footing as a minor (vide note 1077 above); in modern times he would be subject to the law of Limitation (Articles 127 and 144 of the Indian Limitation Act of 1908)

The wife cannot herself demand a partition, but if the husband himself separates his sons during his lifetime or if the sons claim a partition during the father's lifetime, the wife was entitled to a share equal to that of a son, according to Yāj II. 115. If there be several wives each gets a share equal to that of a son. There is a proviso that the wife or wives must not be in possession of strīdhana property given by the husband or by the father-in-law and that if there is strīdhana, then only as much more will be allotted to her as will make her share equal to that of a son (as stated in Yāj II. 148). The Mit. on Yāj. II. 52 states that at the husband's will the wife also gets a share of the family wealth but not by her own will<sup>1139</sup>. The Madanaratna explains that the meaning<sup>1140</sup> is simply this that the father when separating from the sons should take for each of his wives a share equal to that of each son, but it is not meant that the husband is to carve out separate portions of the joint property and hand them over to his wives, since such a procedure would be opposed to the dictum "there is no partition between husband and wife". The V P (pp 441-42) after quoting this view of the Madanaratna refutes it by saying that Yāj is not here speaking of the partition between husband and wife but between the father and sons and that the husband assigns to the wife a share as he may give a gift of affection to his wife. It deserves to be noted that the ancient commentator Viśvarūpa (on Yāj II 119 of Trī edition) anticipates modern legislation as he states that the widows of pre-deceased sons and grandsons also should be given the shares that would have been taken by their husbands if living along with his own wives by the father at the time of partition with his sons. Recently by the Hindu Women's Rights to Property Act (Act XVIII of 1937 as amended by Act XI of 1938), it is provided that when after the Act comes into force a Hindu governed by the Dāyabhāga School dies intestate or where a Hindu governed by any other school dies living separate property, his widow will be entitled to the same share as that of a son and the widow of a pre-deceased son or grandson shall inherit in the same manner as a son or grandson and further where a Hindu governed by any school other than the Dāyabhāga dies having an interest in joint family property his widow will succeed to a Hindu widow's estate as regards the interest he himself had. This last provision brings the law of the Mitākṣarā into line with that of the Dāyabhāga and makes the widow of a deceased coparcener a member of the coparcenary and at one stroke does away with the fundamental doctrine of the Mit about male coparceners alone taking by survivorship joint family property.<sup>1141</sup>

The mother (or step-mother) also, when the sons come to a partition after the father's death, is entitled to a share equal to that of a son in the coparcenary property.<sup>1141a</sup> But she cannot compel a partition so long as the sons choose to remain joint. But her share is liable to be reduced on account of her possession of stridhana as in the case of the wife. Vide Yāj II. 123, Visnu Dh. S. 18. 34 and Nār. (dāyabhāga, 12). The Mit. (on Yāj II 135) combats the view of some predecessors that the mother does not take a share but only as much wealth as would be necessary for her maintenance, by relying on the words "equal share" occurring in Yāj, Visnu, and Nār which would be meaningless on that view. It also refutes another view that the mother takes an equal share with the sons when the ancestral property is small, while she takes only as much as would be necessary for her maintenance when the property is large, by stating that this view is liable to the fault of vidhvan āpya according to the conclusion established in the Pūrvamīmāṃsā, that is, here the same sentence will be interpreted as laying down two different propositions in different sets of circumstances, which is not a legitimate or reasonable way of interpretation. The Sm C (II p 268) held the same view about the mother having no right to a share and was criticized by the Madanaratna (by name). Several works like the Vyavahārasāra (p 225) and the Vivādacandra (p 67)<sup>1142</sup> hold the

The स्मृतिश्च (II p 267) also relies on बौधा-यन. The शौ ध. सू after the verse पिता रक्षति .. न स्त्री स्वातन्त्र्यमर्हति has the sūtra निरिन्दिद्या ददायाश्च स्त्रियो मता इति श्रुतिः (II. 2. 53). view that no woman (whether wife or mother) should get a share of the ancestral wealth but only as much wealth as is necessary for maintenance and rely on the words of Baudhāyana "there is a Vedic text that women are devoid of strength and take no share", which refers to a passage in the Tai S. VI 5 8 2, occurring in the context of the ritual of the Soma sacrifice "therefore women being destitute of strength take no portion (of Soma drink) and speak more weakly than even a wretched (low) man". Manu IX 18 also contains an echo of this passage of the Tai S and of Baud Dh. S. There was an intermediate stage in the evolution of the rights of the wife or mother. The highest she could get in the husband's wealth was two thousand panas, according to Vyāsa,<sup>1143</sup> which is variously read and explained, the Sm. C. (II p 281) saying that it means as much wealth as would every year yield an income of 2000 panas

In modern times some High Courts such as those at Bombay<sup>1144</sup> and Calcutta allow wives and mothers to have a share when the husband or the sons divide ancestral estate by metes and bounds, while in Southern India the practice of allotting shares to them has gone out of vogue long since and the Madras High Court does not allow a share to the mother but only maintenance. The Dayabhāga seems to have<sup>1145</sup> held that a step-mother who was herself sonless was not entitled to a share when her step-sons came to a partition, but was only entitled to maintenance (vide *Srimati Hemangini v. If a person had several wives and several sons from each wife, some of the texts prescribed from very ancient times that the sons should divide according to the wives or mothers (i. e. patnibhāga, or which is practically the same thing, mātrbhāga was recommended), though the generally recognized rule formerly as well as now is to divide according to the number of sons i. e. putrabhāga (ignoring the fact of their being born from <sup>1146</sup> different mothers). For example, Gaut 28 15 recommends that partition should be made by grouping the sons according to their mothers and then allowing a special share to the eldest among each group of sons. Both Br. (S. B. E. 33 p 372 verse 15) and Vyāsa <sup>1147</sup> lay down that if there be many sons sprung from the same father, who are equal in caste and number but who are the sons of different mothers, a division according to mothers may be legally made. Such a partition on the basis of mothers is recognized in rare cases even now on <sup>1148</sup> the ground of custom in certain places and among certain castes.

A paternal grandmother or step-grandmother cannot herself demand a partition, but when a partition takes place between her son's sons, her own son being dead or when it takes place between her son and the sons of a deceased son she is entitled to a share. A text of Vyāsa says <sup>1149</sup> "the childless wives of the father are declared to be entitled to a share equal (to that of a son) and all grandmothers are declared equal to the mother". The Allahabad and Bombay High Courts hold that the grandmother is not entitled to a share when a partition takes place between her son and his sons, while the High Courts

On account of certain bodily, mental or other defects and certain conduct also persons were excluded in ancient India from demanding a share on partition and also from taking by inheritance Gaut 28 41, Āp Dh. S. II 6 14 1, Vas. 17 52-53, Visnu Dh S 15 32-39, Baud Dh S II 2. 43-46, Kaut III 5 speak <sup>1151</sup> of various grounds of exclusion from partition (and inheritance) such as lunacy, idiocy, impotence, excommunication for grave sins or lapses of conduct, blindness, incurable disease, entering a different āsrama (viz that of forest hermit or sannyāsa). These grounds of exclusion probably arose from the fact of the persons labouring under them being regarded as incompetent to perform religious acts and from the close connection between property and its use for religious purposes Jaimini <sup>1152</sup> (VI 1. 41-42) lays down two propositions, viz that one who is suffering from an incurable or irremediable bodily defect is not entitled to undertake vedic rites, such as Āgrihotra, but that one who has some defect which is remediable may engage in them and Sabara gives a blind man, a deaf man and a cripple as persons who are incompetent to engage in Vedic rites The story of the brothers Devāpi and Śantanu ( vide

II. p. 109) as narrated in the Bṛhad-devatā<sup>1153</sup> states that the elder brother Devāpi suffered from a skin disease and so refused the kingdom which went to his younger brother Śāntanu. We know from the Mahābhārata that Dhṛtarāstra who was blind from birth, though elder, had to give up the kingdom in favour of his younger brother Pāṇdu<sup>1154</sup>. The Mit. (on Yāj. II. 135) energetically combats the view put forward by some predecessors that all wealth is meant for sacrifices. They relied on two smṛti passages<sup>1155</sup> "all draviṇa (all kinds of wealth or movable property) has been created for the sake of sacrifice; therefore all those who are not competent to perform sacrifices are not entitled to share ancestral wealth but are only entitled to food and raiment. Wealth has been created for sacrifices; therefore one should employ it (or spend it) on purposes of dharma and not on women, fools and irreligious people". Kāt. (852) and Br. (S. B. E. 33 p. 371 verse 10) contain similar remarks. The Mit. does not accept this proposition, which argues that on that hypothesis no gifts (apart from sacrifices) that are recommended by the śāstras will be possible, nor can one accomplish two of the puruṣārthas<sup>1156</sup> viz. artha and kāma (as required by Gaut. IX. 46, Yāj. I. 115) and that the verses quoted above only mean that whatever wealth is collected for sacrifices should be spent only for that purpose even by the sons of the man who collected it, since a smṛti text condemns generally everyone who does not spend wealth collected for a sacrifice for that purpose to becoming a crow or a bhāsa (a cock or water fowl) in the next life. The Mit. further argues that the view would be opposed to the conclusion of Jaimini III 4. 20-24 that the Vedic injunction "one should wear gold on one's person" is merely puruṣārtha and not 'kṛatvārtha'. Aparārka entitled to no share". Yāj II. 140 declares that the impotent, the outcast and his son, a lame man, a mad man, an idiot, a blind man and one afflicted with an incurable disease are not entitled to a share. It will be noticed that Yāj. expressly excludes the son of an outcast, as do also Baud. and Devala. Nār. (dāyabhāga 21-22) says 'one hostile to his father, an outcast (patita), an impotent person, one who goes to another continent by sea (from India)—these even though they be anamsa sons shall not get a share; how can a ksetraja (a son of the wife raised by another person by appointment) get a share (if he has these defects) and persons afflicted with long standing (like phthisis) and severe diseases (like leprosy), persons who are either idiots, insane or lame—these must be maintained by the family, but their sons are entitled to a share'. These verses of Manu, Yāj and Nār. have been quoted and explained in numerous decisions of the courts in India, but all such cases are mostly of academic interest now since the passing of the Hindu Inheritance (Disabilities Removal) Act of 1928 and hence need not be dwelt upon here. The Act (XII of 1928) applies to the whole of British India except to persons governed by the Dāyabhāga school and provides that no person governed by the Hindu Law, other than a person who is and has been from birth a lunatic or idiot, shall be excluded from inheritance or from any right or share in joint family property by reason only of any disease, deformity or physical or mental defect. This Act is not retrospective and does not confer on any person any right in respect of any religious office or service or any right to the management of any religious or charitable trust which he would not have had before the Act. Therefore under the Act the only defects that would disqualify a person governed by the Mitākṣarā school from claiming partition or inheritance are congenital lunacy and congenital idiocy. Under the Dāyabhāga school the grounds of exclusion will still remain as before except as modified by judicial decisions and by other Acts. An important question under the Mit school arises in this way. What is the exact position of a son that is congenitally idiotic or insane Both Manu (IX. 201 and 203) and Yāj (II 140, 141) declare that they are anamsa or marasaka (not entitled to a share of the ancestral estate), but must be given maintenance and if maintenance be not given by those who are liable to give it, they would incur sin (as Manu IX. 202 expressly says) and that the sons of disqualified persons take a share, if they are themselves free from defects. If A has a son B who is congenitally idiotic, is B still a copar-

cenor of A (though not entitled to a share or to claim partition) so that A cannot make a gift of the whole or a portion of the property or a bequest thereof to his widow? This question arose in Amurthammal v. Vallinayal I L R (1942) Mad. 807 (F. B.), where it was decided that, when A made a will in the above circumstances bequeathing all family property absolutely to his widow and two sons were born to the disqualified man B after A's death, the father had no power to make a will as the disqualified member B was still a coparcener (though not entitled to a share) and that he transmitted the heritage to his sons. The chief ground of the decision was a passage of the Sarasyativilāsa (explained on pp. 817 and 828-830) which is quoted below<sup>1159</sup>.

The grounds of disqualification apply to males and females alike, as stated by the Mit. on Yāj II. 140<sup>1160</sup>. A few remarks will be made on patita and his son. The commission of every sinful act did not make one patita as the word was technically understood. There were various grades among sins, which will be described in the section on pātakas. The grave sins were differently enumerated by different ancient writers. In explaining<sup>1161</sup>

स वि p 364 The S V does not appear to be laying down any novel proposition. All that this passage appears to mean is that though these disqualified persons cannot themselves enjoy a share, yet they do have a share (in theory) and if they can marry or are eligible for marriage their sons that are free from defects do take a share and that one cannot lay down a sweeping proposition that all congenitally dumb or insane persons or idiots can marry, but that there are degrees in these defects and in certain extreme circumstances these disqualified persons cannot marry. The meaning of this Rgveda verse is doubtful. The Nir distinguishes between ब्रह्महत्या and भ्रूणहत्या. For the various meanings of भ्रूण, vide H. of Dh vol II p. 131 n 290 and p 148 n 334. In the Nir. भ्रूण probably means 'foetus', as it does in Gaut XXI. 9 'भ्रूणहनिं हिनवर्णसैवाया च क्ली पतति'. Vas 20 23 (भ्रूणहनं वदयामो ब्राह्मणं हत्वा भ्रणहा भवत्यविज्ञात च गर्भम्) appears to give two senses to 'भ्रूणहा' (killer of a brāhmana or killer of a foetus when its sex is not known)

Rg. X. 56 "the wise made seven boundaries (restrictions) by transgressing even any one of which a man becomes sinful", the Nirukta VI 27 enumerates the seven sins as "theft, violating the bed (of the guru), murder of a brāhmana, murder of a bhrūna, continual performance of sinful acts, telling a lie as to a sinful matter". In the Tai. S. II. 5 1. I., Śat. Br. XIII. 3 1. 1. and other Brāhmana texts, the murder of a brāhmana seems to have been regarded as the gravest of all sins (vide H of Dh. vol II p 147 and n 333) In the Chāndogya<sup>1162</sup> Up. V. 10. 9 the five great sinners are declared to be the thief of gold, the drinker of liquor, the violator of the guru's bed, the murderer of a brāhmana and one who associates with them. Gaut (XXI. 1-3) declares that the murderer of a brāhmana, the drinker of liquor, one guilty of sexual intercourse with the wife of his guru (elder or teacher) or with women who are the sapindas of his father or mother, a thief (who steals a brāhmana's gold), an atheist, one who continually does forbidden acts, one who does not abandon a patita (son or the like through affection) and one who deserts his relations though they are not patita are patitas and so is one who incites another to commit a grave sin and also one who associates with a patita for a year (as regards a vehicle, a seat and bed). Āp. Dh. S (I 7. 21. 8-11) contains a longer list of grave sins (pataniya). Vas (I 19-21) states that there are five grave sins (mahāpātakas) viz. violating the bed of the guru, drinking liquor, murder of a learned brāhmana, robbing a brāhmana of gold and contact with a patita by being his teacher or pupil or priest or by contracting a matrimonial alliance with him. The Baud. Dh. S II. 1. 50-56 has a somewhat different list of pataniya actions viz. sea voyage, robbing a brāhmana of his wealth and misappropriating a deposit, perjury for land, trading in (forbidden) articles, service under a sūdra and having a child from a sūdra woman. Manu XI 54, Yāj III. 227 and Visnu Dh. S 35 1 enumerate the five well-known mahāpātakas, viz. murder of a brāhmana, drinking of liquor, theft, incest and continuous association for a year with these. Association with any sinner of any sort for one year made the associater guilty of the same sin (Yāj. III. 261). Samśarga or samyoga (contact or association) was of various kinds. Manu XI 180 (= Śānti 165.37 = Baud. Dh. S. II. 1. 88 = Vas. 1. 22) states that a person who associates with a patita for a year as regards using the same vehicle or seat or taking food with him in the same row becomes patita; but he becomes patita at once by being his sacrificial priest or by being his teacher of the Veda or by entering into<sup>1163</sup> a matrimonial alliance with him. Vṛddha-Bṛhaspati<sup>1164</sup> (quoted by Mitākṣarā on Yāj. III. 261) states that association (sankāra) with a patita is of nine kinds viz. occupying the same seat or bed, taking dinner in the same row with him, cooking food in his cooking pots, partaking of cooked food prepared by him, being a sacrificial priest or employing him as a priest, being his teacher of the Veda or making him one's teacher of the Veda, giving him one's daughter in marriage or taking his daughter in marriage, taking food with him in the same pot. Devala<sup>1165</sup> declares that sin is passed on from one man to another by conversation (with a sinner), by touching him, by his breath (coming in close contact with one's nose), by occupying the same vehicle (horse) or seat, by eating (in his company), by being a priest for him or by making him one's priest, by being his teacher of Veda or making him one's teacher or by matrimonial alliance. The same causes that led to a male being patita operated in the case of a woman to make her patita; there was one additional cause viz. a woman became patita by sexual connection with a male of a lower class than herself (Gaut 21 9, Yāj. III. 297 and Śaunaka<sup>1166</sup>). The ancient sages were very considerate even to fallen women. They provide that even women that are patita and have not yet performed the proper penance were not to be cast on the streets, but they were to be given a hut (near the house) for residence and bare maintenance that would keep body and soul together and were to be guarded against further lapses (Yāj. III. 296). Vide H. of Dh. vol. II pp. 571-573.

How far unchastity will debar a female from inheritance will be discussed a little later on. Adultery in general was an upapātaka only according to Manu XI. 59 and the ordinary penance for it was cāndrāyana or govrata (Manu XI. 117). But if the adultery was with a person of low caste, the woman became patita and would not have been entitled to a share on partition (as a wife or mother) under the old Hindu Law.

In the case of those guilty of grave sins who did not perform the prāyaścittas prescribed for such sins there was a peculiar procedure called ghatasphota prescribed for excommunicating them and severing all connection with them and treating them as dead, which has been described in H. of Dh. vol. II p. 388. Vide Gaut. 20. 2-7, Manu XI. 182-184, Yāj. III. 294. But when the sinner performed the appropriate prāyaścitta (penance), the smrtis declare that he became fit to be associated with (vyavahārya), he was to be welcomed by his relatives who were to take a bath along with him in a holy river or the like and who were to throw in the water an unused jar filled with water, he should offer grass to cows in the midst of his relations, they were not to find fault with him later on. Vide Manu XI. 186-187, Yāj. III. 295, 299, Vas. 15. 20, Gaut. 20. 10-14 (which prescribes the recital of certain Vedic mantras and the offering of clarified butter into fire). Ap Dh. S. I. 9. 24. 24-25 and I. 10. 29. 1-2 prescribe for the sinner who kills a guru or a śrotriya that has performed soma sacrifice or a bhrūna certain observances till death, but declare that such a person can never get rid of the loss of the right of association with all people, that there is no return for him to his relatives.<sup>1167</sup> In the Nirṇaya-sindhu (III Uttarārdha pp. 567-68) and in the Dharmasindhu (III Uttarārdha pp. 453-54) the rite of ghatasphota for a patita and the rite for taking him back are concisely described.<sup>1168</sup>

sequences of the sin altogether but the sinner became fit to be associated with (Yāj. III. 226). In the case of the patita, even his son born after he committed a grave sin was held to be patita by most writers of smṛtis (Yāj. II. 140, Viṣṇu Dh. S. 15. 35-36, Kaut. III. 5)<sup>1169</sup>. But in the case of the daughter a difference was mercifully made. Vas. (13 51-53)<sup>1170</sup> states "the sages say that one born of a patita becomes a patita, except a female child, since she is to go to another (person as his wife); one may marry her without accepting any wealth (of her patita father) along with her". Yāj. III. 261 also says that the daughter of a patita may be married after making her fast and after making her leave everything (belonging to the patita father) in her father's house. Viśvarūpa (on Yāj. III. 257) quotes a prose passage from Hārīta to the following effect: the daughter of a patita should have fasted one day and night, should take a bath without clothes, should put on white and new garments in the morning, should loudly repeat thrice 'I do not belong to him (my patita father) nor is he anyone to me' and then she may be married at a sacred place (river etc.) or in one's (the bridegroom's) house.

These rules about a patita led to this result that if a Hindu changed his religion or was excommunicated or was made an outcast for some lapse that his caste looked upon with great disfavour, he was deemed to have lost his rights of partition or inheritance. The Caste Disabilities Removal Act (XXI of 1850) abrogates these rules of the ancient<sup>1171</sup> Hindu Law

A. p. 87 where A and B, being father and son and forming a joint family and A becoming a convert to the Moslem religion, it was held that A did not forfeit his interest in the joint family property and that the only effect of the conversion was that it operated as a severance of A from the family and that one half of the property immediately vested in A and the other half in B. Vide p. 101 where the P. C. say that the Legislature virtually set aside the provisions of the Hindu Law. The Act of 1850 is felt by many Hindus as a great hardship and should be removed from the statute book. In England the Blasphemy Act of 1698 is still in force.

All the smrtis say that those who are deprived of their rights to partition on account of the several defects mentioned are entitled to maintenance out of the family property as long as they are alive (Gaut. 28. 41, Vas. 17. 54, Visnu Dh. S. 15. 33, Manu IX. 202, Yaj. II. 140 etc.). If the disqualified persons want to marry or are married, then their sonless wives that are chaste should be maintained (Yaj. II. 142), but those that are unchaste should be driven out and so also those wives that are hostile to the family; but the Mit. adds that even hostile wives of disqualified heirs must be maintained provided they are chaste. If the disqualified person has an aurasa son or ksetraja son<sup>1171a</sup> who is free from the defects mentioned above (such as impotence) he becomes entitled to a share of the joint family property and the daughters of disqualified persons are entitled to be maintained in the family and provision must be made for their marriages (Manu IX. 203, Yaj. II. 141). It follows that disqualified heirs could not adopt, since Yaj. II. 141 mentions only aurasa and ksetraja sons. Many of the smrtis did not allow even maintenance to the pakta and his son (vide Baud. Dh. S. II. 2. 46, Kant. III. 5, Devala, Visnu Dh. S. 15. 35-36). Coparceners were prevented from claiming a share at a partition if at the time of the partition they were labouring under the defects mentioned above. But if after partition<sup>1172</sup> the defect which disqualified a member be removed by medical treatment or the like then the disqualified member was entitled to reopen the partition on the analogy of a posthumous son born after partition. So also if a person is quite free from defect when he takes at a partition a share in joint family property or inherits, subsequently supervening defect does not divest the property once vested in him.

Some of the smrtis contain rules that appear to be only recommendatory. Āp. Dh.<sup>1173</sup> S. II. 6. 14. 15 says that if even the eldest son or brother were to waste joint wealth in immoral or improper ways he should be given no share (by the father or brothers at a partition). To the same effect are Gaut. 28. 38 and Manu IX. 214.

Gaut. 28. 43 and Visnu Dh. S. 15. 37 provide<sup>1174</sup> that the sons of pratiloma unions (i.e. of a man with a woman of a higher class) are to be dealt with like the sons of a brāhmaṇa from a śūdra woman i.e. they would be entitled to maintenance from their father, though pratiloma unions were condemned. Kāt. (862-864) provides that the son of a woman married out of her order, one who is born of a sagotra union and one who is an apostate from the order of ascetics do not obtain ancestral wealth; but the son of a woman married in the wrong order takes the ancestral wealth if he is of the same class as his father, and the son of a woman who is not of the same caste as the husband (but of a lower caste) and is married in the proper order takes the wealth of the father. But the son of a woman

The word अक्रमोदास्तु is interpreted in two ways: (1) If a brāhmaṇa married a ksatriya girl first and then married a brāhmaṇa girl, both women became अक्रमोदा (as the procedure was against Manu III. 12) The son of the ksatriya woman in such a case did not take the wealth of his father but only the son of the other woman took it. The other interpretation (given by the व्यवहारनयसूत्र) is based upon the doctrine of परिवेदन, for which vide H. of Dh vol. II, pp 546-549 and Manu. III. 172. The son of a younger sister married before her elder sister and of the latter married after a younger one were both excluded from inheritance to their father. Kāt. (862) is quoted in *Nātha v. united with a man in the reverse order of castes does not take the ancestral estate; but the approved view is that he should be given food and raiment till his death by the kinsmen. In case there are no kinsmen such a son takes the whole wealth of his father and if the father left no wealth kinsmen are not bound to maintain him.

Provision must also be made before ordering partition in a suit for partition by a brother for the marriage expenses of the unmarried sister or sisters of the brothers. Here there has been a great divergence of views among the writers of digests and commentaries. Kaut. III.5 (quoted below in n 1181), Visnu Dh. 8.18, 35 and 15, 31 and Br. simply state that wealth for the marriage expenses of the unmarried sisters must be set apart. But Manu IX. 118, Yaj. II. 124 and Kāt. (858)<sup>1175</sup> state that the brothers should get their unmarried sisters married by giving them one fourth share. The Mit. explains<sup>1176</sup> that this does not mean that each brother is to give one fourth of his share to the sister (for in that case if there are five brothers and one unmarried sister she may get more than each brother) but that the unmarried sister is to get one fourth of what she would have got if she were a male and that if a person has sons and daughters from wives of different classes then the unmarried daughter of the wife of each class will take one fourth of what her brother from the same mother would have taken. The Mit. further adds that one should not explain that the word "one fourth" is not to be taken literally and that the unmarried sister gets only as much as is necessary for her marriage, since such an explanation is opposed to the express words of Manu IX. 118 and since Manu declares sinfulness as the consequence of not giving one fourth share. The Mit. informs us that its explanation was the same as that of Asahāya and Medhātithi and that Bhārucci gave another explanation (viz. that an unmarried sister was entitled to as much wealth as would be necessary for her marriage and not to a definite share). The Dayabhāga held the opinion<sup>1177</sup> that if ancestral wealth was small, the provision for the marriage of the unmarried daughter should be made by giving her a fourth share but if the wealth was ample then she should get only as much as was necessary for her marriage. The Sm. C., V. R. p. 494, V. C. p. 134 follow the view of Bhāruṇi, while the V. M. (p. 106), Madanaratna and V. P. (p. 456 ff) follow the Mit. The former group particularly relies on the texts of Devala<sup>1178</sup> (wealth necessary for marriage should be given to unmarried daughters from the paternal estate), Sankha (when partition of heritage takes place the unmarried daughter takes the maidenly trinkets, wealth for her marriage expenses and strīdhana) and Visnu Dh. S. 15. 31. In modern times the Courts allow no share to unmarried daughters but only provision for marriage expenses and this too is restricted to the unmarried sister of a person who requires or sues for partition and does not hold good as to the daughters of brothers or other collaterals<sup>1179</sup>. In Bhagavati Shukul v. Ram Jatan 45 All. 297 it was held (at p. 299) that "quarter share" in the text means as much money as will suffice for marriage expenses and that where the daughter was a cripple and blind and all the property was worth Rs 500 an alienation of the whole of it by the widowed mother for raising a dowry for the daughter was justifiable.

1179. Vide Subbbayya v. Anant 53 Mad. 84, where A had a son S by one wife and a son S1 and three daughters D1, D2, and D3 by another wife and S sued A and S1 for partition and D1 was married after the institution of the suit, one-third of the marriage expenses of D1 were deducted from the one-third share of S1 and as regards one-third of the marriage expenses of D2 and D3 (which were yet to be incurred) his share (one-third) was charged with one-third expenses of marriage, but it was held that he was not liable for the marriage expenses of the daughter of his brother S1.

Before allotting shares provision must be made out of the joint family property for the payment of joint family debts<sup>1179a</sup>, for the personal debts of the father that are not immoral or illegal, for small gifts of affection made by the father, the maintenance of disqualified coparceners and female dependent members and for marriage expenses. Vide Manu VIII. 166 (as to family debts), Yāj II. 117, Nār. (dāyabhāga 32) and Kat. 850 (for payment of father's debts and gifts of affection) and 542-43 (for the various legal necessities<sup>1180</sup>). If brothers want to separate and some of them are already married and others are unmarried then provision must be made for the samskāras (such as marriages) of the latter from the joint family property. Even Kautilya makes provision for the marriage of unmarried brothers and sisters<sup>1181</sup>. Yāj II 124, Nār. (dāyabhāga 33), Br. (S. B. E. 33 p. 373 verse 21) lay down that the samskāras (upanayana, marriage &c) of younger brothers must be provided for out of paternal wealth<sup>1182</sup>.

1182. This rule, according to Yāj. II 124, was restricted to brothers only and was not to be extended. If, for example, there is a joint family consisting of several cousins with their sons and the marriages of some of the sons of the cousins are performed at the expense of the joint family, then when a suit is filed for partition no provision can be made for the marriages of other sons of the cousins. Vide Ramlinga v. Narayan L. R. 49 I. A. 168 In Jairam v. Nathu 31 Bom. 54, it was held that in a partition suit

It has already been seen that a father could during his life time separate his sons from himself and also among themselves<sup>1182a</sup> and that he could assign shares of property to his sons. This power of the father is indicated even in the Tai. S. III. 1. 9. 4 (quoted above in note 1055) which refers to the story of Manu having distributed his wealth among his sons. It is argued by Āp. Dh. S. II 6. 14. 11 that, as this Vedic text (Tai. S.) does not expressly state that any difference was made by Manu as to the shares of his sons, the division must have been equal, that therefore the preference of the eldest son is forbidden by the śāstras and that when the Tai. S. II. 5. 2. 7 states that "they distinguish the eldest by (a larger share of) the wealth" that is not a rule, but a mere anuśāda (a statement of fact) and the Vedic passage only recites what some people do in spite of the rule of the śāstras. The general rule, in the absence of express provision to the contrary, is equal distribution, as stated in Jai. X. 3. 53 (samam syād-āśruhitvāt) which is relied upon by the prima facie view in Mit on Yāj. II. 265. From the Tai. S. it appears that both practices viz, equal division of property among all sons and giving a larger share to the eldest were wellknown in those far-off ages. Āp II. 6.

between father and sons, a minor son is entitled to have provision made for his thread, betrothal and marriage ceremonies out of the joint family property before the property is partitioned. In Sundrabai v Shiv Narayan 32 Bom. 81 it was held that marriage is one of the samskāras which both Yāj and Nārada refer to. In 38 Mad. 556 the same principle was established. But in Venkatarayudu v Sivaramkrishnayya 58 Mad. 120 and in Pranjivan v Motiram 29 Bom L R 1412 it has been held that the decisions in 38 Mad. 556 and in 31 Bom. 54 must be regarded as overruled by the P. C. decision in L R 49 I A. 168, and in 58 Mad. 126 it was held that an unmarried brother is not entitled to have provision made for his marriage in a decree for partition. It is submitted with great respect that these Madras and Bombay decisions are wrong so far as unmarried brothers are concerned, that they go against the express texts of several writers like Kautilya, Nārada, Br., Viśvarūpa, Maṇanapārjāla (p. 648) and that the Privy Council in 49 I. A. 168 was dealing with the provision for marriages of the children of coparceners and not of brothers.

1182a. It has been held in Ekallu Subharani v. Ekallu Chenchura ghavan (1945) 1 M L J. p. 151 that the paternal grandfather has no power to separate his grandsons among themselves and that it is only the father who has this power.

14. 7 clearly<sup>1183</sup> states that in some countries gold or black corn or black produce of the earth is the ('special') share of the eldest. Almost all the sūtras and smṛtis prescribe the rule of equal division among the sons of wives of the same class as the father (vide Āp. Dh. S. II. 6. 14. 1, Baud. Dh. S. II. 2. 2-3, Manu IX. 156, Yāj. II. 117, Viṣṇu Dh. S. 18. 36, Kauṭ. III. 5, Br. S. B. E. 33 p. 371 v. 10, Kāt. 838). Some of these no doubt refer to the special share or provision given to the eldest (called uddhāna). Kauṭ. says "the father in a partition during his own life should not give a special share to one out of several sons, nor should he deprive a son of a share without any cause"<sup>1184</sup> (such as blindness etc.). Kāt. 843 says the same thing in almost the same words. But from certain passages when construed literally (such as Yāj. II. 116, Nār. dāyabhāga 15) it appears that the early Indian father often distributed the ancestral wealth among his sons just as he pleased. Nār. (dāyabhāga 15)<sup>1185</sup> says: "When a father has distributed his property amongst his sons that is a lawful distribution for them (and cannot be set aside), whether the share of one be less or greater than or equal to the shares of the rest; for the father is the lord of all". To the same effect is Br. (S. B. E. vol. 33 p. 370 v. 4) who adds that if they try to alter the arrangement (made by the father) they shall be punished. But later on these passages were either held to apply to former ages (V. Mayūkha p. 99 says so) or to the self-acquired property of the father (Mit. on Yāj. II. 114) or were so interpreted as to mean that the partition made by the father could not be annulled if it was legal, but if illegal it could be set aside (Mit. on Yāj. II. 116, Madanaratna, Madanapārijāta p. 646). Nār. (dāyabhāga 16) himself denies authority to the father to give shares to the sons as he pleases when he is suffering from diseases, is angry (with a son or sons), or is engrossed in pleasures or pursues paths opposed to śāstras.

The eldest son has received special treatment in all ages down to modern times (vide p 566 above). That treatment took various forms. Sometimes the texts say that the eldest son took the whole estate. Āp. II. 6. 14. 6, Manu IX. 105-107, Nār. (dāyabhāga 5) refer to this view. Manu (IX 105-107) allows the eldest son to take the entire paternal estate, provides that the other sons should depend for their maintenance on the eldest son as on the father, remarks that the eldest by the mere fact of his birth enables the father to free himself from the debt to the ancestors and that therefore he (the eldest) deserves to get from the father the entire estate.<sup>1186</sup>

Another mode of dealing with the privileges of the eldest son was to give him some excellent or valuable article and then to distribute the rest equally. The Tai S. II. 2. 2. 7 seems to have been understood by Āp. Dh. S. II. 6. 14. 1 and Baud. Dh. S. II. 2. 2-5<sup>1187</sup> in this sense. Manu IX 114 says that the eldest may get the best of all the items of wealth, whatever is the most eminent and the best of a group of ten cattle. Br. (S. B. E. 33 p. 371 verse 8) is to the same effect. Kaut. III. 6 points out that according to Uśanas among the sons born of the same mother, goats shall be the special share of the eldest among brāhmanas, horses among ksatriyas, cows among vaiśyas and sheep among śūdras, that if there be no quadrupeds the eldest was to take an additional share of one-tenth of the whole property excepting precious stones, since he releases his father from fetters (of Hell) by offering śrāddha. Kaut. himself holds that the eldest should get the vehicle and ornaments of his father (after the latter's death); the middle-most his bed, seat and the bronze plate from which the father took his meals; and the youngest should get black grain (like sesame), iron, domestic utensils and the bullock cart. Hārīta<sup>1188</sup> says : "at a partition the eldest should get a bull, the most precious wealth, the images for worship and the ancestral house, the other brothers should go out and build new houses or if there be a single house the eldest should get the southern (or best) portion". This special allotment to the eldest is called uddhāra (lit. what is first taken out) in Manu IX. 115-116 and Visnu Dh. S. 18. 37, and Baud. employs the form "uddharet". There were other methods also prescribed for special distribution of wealth. Gaut. 28. 5 says that the eldest should get one-twentieth of the whole as a special share, a bull and a cow, a cow, a chariot to which horses, asses or mules are yoked and a bull. Manu IX. 112 provides that the special share of the eldest was one-twentieth of the whole property and whatever was the most valuable out of the ancestral property, the middlemost son should get half of this (i. e. one-fortieth part) and the youngest one-fourth of this (one-eightieth of the whole). Manu IX. 117 states that when no valuable items are taken out for the eldest the latter should get two shares, the son next to him one share and a half and the other sons one share each. Vas. 17. 42, Nār. (dāyabhāga 13), Br. (S. B. E. vol. 33 p. 371 verse 9) also give two shares to the eldest, the latter<sup>1189</sup> making it to depend on the possession of learning and good qualities by the eldest. Similarly Nār (dāyabhāga 12), Br. (S. B. E. vol. 33 p. 370 verse 5) provide<sup>1190</sup> that when the father makes a division during his lifetime he may retain two shares for himself. Śāṅkha-Likhita allowed this right to the father only when he had an only son<sup>1191</sup>

In course of time there was a revulsion of popular feeling against allowing a special share to the eldest son and even to the father. Kāt. (838)<sup>1192</sup> states that where the parents and brothers divide the whole joint property in equal shares that is a just (or legal) division. Br. (S. B. E. 33)<sup>1193</sup> p. 370 verse 2) declares that the father and sons are entitled to equal shares in lands and houses that are ancestral, but in property acquired by the father the sons cannot claim a share against the will of the father. The V. M. (p. 95) remarks on this that it follows impliedly that in the wealth acquired by the grand-father or other (remoter) ancestor, the sons can demand a partition even against the father's desire.

According to Manu IX. 125,<sup>1194</sup> if all wives of a person are of the same caste, then the son who is born first (even from a wife who is junior i.e. married later) is the eldest son and that among twins the one that is born first is the eldest (verse 126), just as in the Subrahmanya<sup>1195</sup> texts the invocation of Indra is made by the name of the first-born. But if he has wives of different castes then the son of the wife of his own caste is the eldest (though born later) and the son of a wife of a lower caste though born first would be postponed. Devala<sup>1195a</sup> quoted in V. R. p. 477 and V. C. p. 128 says the same as Manu IX. 125. Manu IX. 123 and Gaut. 28. 16 appear to conflict with Manu IX. 125 and probably refer to some other ancient text or opinion. The V. Mayūkha (pp. 97-98) notes that in some medical works and in the (commentary on the) Bhāgavata Purāṇa III 17. 18, it is said that among twins the one born later is deemed to be the elder, but that this, being opposed to the indications contained in the Vedic Subrahmanyā formula and in Manu IX. 126, has no bearing here (but only in medical matters). The Nirṇayasindhu (III Pūrvārtha p. 251) makes a reference to the Bhāgavata.

General feeling went so much against allowing a special share to the eldest or allowing the father to make an unequal division among his sons, that such action was condemned in the same breath with niyoga,<sup>1196</sup> or the sacrifice of the cow called Anubandhyā. It is very instructive to follow the arguments of the Mit. and other writers on this point. The oldest extant commentator, Medhātithi, on Manu IX. 112 shows that even before his time there were writers that held that the texts of Manu on niyoga and on the special share to the eldest at a partition were in vogue only in bygone days and not in their days, that the rules of the smṛtis were conditioned by time and country, just as śāstras of long duration, though declared in the Vedic texts committed to memory by Vedic students, were not being performed and just as Manu (I. 85) declares that the dharmas were different in different yugas. But Medhātithi<sup>1197</sup> does not accept this reasoning, denies that different dharmas are prescribed for different yugas and holds that there is no restriction as to the dharmas to be performed in a country. Though śāstras may not be performed now still it is possible to perform them. The argument of the Mit. on Yāj.

Even in the times of the sūtras (such as Āp. Śrauta XIII 24 10 and Kāt. Śrauta X. 9. 14-15) āmīksā (curds mixed in heated milk) was optionally offered. Vide, H. of Dh vol. II pp. 1200-1201.

II. 117 is briefly as follows<sup>1193</sup>.—Unequal division though found in the śāstras (e.g. Manu IX. 105, 112, 116, 117, Yāj. II. 114) should not be practised because it has come to be condemned (or has become hateful to) by the people, since there is the prohibition (in Yāj. I. 156) that an action, though prescribed in the śāstras, should not be performed when it has come to be condemned by the people, since such an action does not lead to the attainment of Heaven. For example, though Yāj. I. 109 prescribes the offering of a big ox or a goat to a learned brāhmana guest, it is not now practised because people have come to hate it; or just as, although there is a Vedic text laying down the sacrificing of a cow "one should sacrifice a barren cow called anubandhyā for Mitra and Varuna", still it is not done because people condemn it. And it has been said "just as the practice of nyoga or the killing of the anubandhyā cow is not now in vogue, so also division after giving a special share (to the eldest son) does not now exist". Āpastamba also (II. 6. 14. 1-14) prescribes equal division, refers to the view of some that the eldest takes the whole estate, shows that allotting a special share to the eldest is the view of some and refutes it as opposed to the śāstras by quoting the Vedic text "Manu divided his wealth among his sons". Therefore unequal division though found in the śāstra should not be practised as it is opposed to popular sentiments and to the Veda and so Yāj. (II. 117) gives the restrictive rule that in partitioning there must be equal division. The Sm. C. (II. p. 266) tells us that Dhāreśvara also did not discuss passages like Manu IX. 112 since he said that the practice (of uddhāravibhāga) had been altogether given up by the people<sup>1199</sup>.

The Sm. C. finds fault with Viśvarūpa for saying that just as the offering of an ox or a goat to a learned brāhmaṇa is not practised because the practice of the śistas is against it, so uddhāra is not practised. It says that when there is a conflict between a smṛti text and śistācāra, the latter is the weaker (of the two) and cannot refute the smṛti text as laid down by Vas. I. 4-5. Further not offering a bull cannot be said to be śistācāra, but it is really the absence of śistācāra. The Sm. C. finds fault with the Mit. for saying that people have come to condemn a special share for the eldest. It says that, on the contrary, if a special share is given to the eldest who is endowed with learning, good qualities or holy actions then people commend such a procedure. The Madanaratna<sup>1200</sup> quotes the verse "yathā niyoga &c.," and a verse from the Ādipurāṇa. The V. P. 1201 (pp 442-443) generally follows the Mit., but criticizes it by saying that there is no real śruti-virodha (opposition to a Vedic text). If that were so, as śruti (the Veda) is promulgated for all ages, unequal division would be forbidden in all ages and it would follow that the particular śruti passages speaking of meant the vyākhyāna of Varadraj which quotes the verse यथा नियोगधर्मो नो from the Mit. on Yāj. II. 117, the Mitākṣarā being one of the authorities quoted in the V. Nir. Therefore the स्मृतिसंग्रह from which the verse is said to have been taken is the work of that name also called संग्रह.

unequal division are without authority, since it (unequal division) could not have been practised in other ages also (but as a matter of fact it was); besides Baud. sets out another Vedic text which mentions unequal division. The V. P. desiring to guard against the rather wide statement that whatever is condemned by the people should not be practised holds that the word "loka" in Yāj. I. 156 means "yuga"; otherwise there would be confusion about what is proper conduct and what does not lead to Heaven. The condemnation by low or ordinary people who are quite innocent of śāstras cannot make an action incapable of leading to Heaven, since such people might condemn the humsā (slaughter) of the animal offered to Agni and Soma. The above discussion illustrates how practices once recognized by Vedic passages and by the people gradually fell into disuetude and how reason and the common sense of ordinary people asserted themselves even against Vedic and smṛti texts. The Mit. is very clear in its statement that whatever comes to be hated by the people in general should not be practised, even though it was once practised and has the support and authority of Vedic and smṛti texts behind it. Those who desire change in social customs and the practices of the people in various directions rely on this text of Yāj. and on similar texts<sup>1202</sup> of Manu IV. 176 and Viṣṇu Dh. S. 71. 85 and on the Mit. for authority. Orthodox writers like Mitrāmīśra therefore have to twist plain words like "loka", since they cannot tolerate the idea that common people can have anything to say in what these writers believe to be the injunctions of the śāstra. Instead of candidly saying that ancient practices came to be modified by common people, writers like Mitrāmīśra say that common people should not be listened to in these matters, that each yuga has its own peculiar practices and that common people have no authority to change śāstric practices prescribed by the texts for a particular age. It is sheer quibbling to say that not offering a bull is not śistācāra, but absence of śistācāra; what is clear is that common people abhorred the practice of niyoga and the killing of a cow in a sacrifice and writers of sūtras and smṛtis fell into line with them and prohibited such practices in the

Though the assignment of a larger share to the eldest son or giving him the whole property ceased to be generally prevalent, vestiges of it are still found. There are certain estates in the nature of zamindaries or a rāj that are impartible and descend by the rule of primogeniture to a single heir. Vide Baboo Gunesh Dutta v. Maharaja Moheshwari 6 Moo. I A. 164, Neelkanto v. Beer Chunder 12 Moo. I A. 523, Mohesh v. Sahrughan 29 I. A. 62, Ram Nundun v. Maharam Janka 29 I. A. 178 for examples of impartible estates. Sometimes by custom certain estates such as Deshmukh and Deshpande wats have been held to be impartible. Vide Ramrao v. Yeshwantrao 10 Bom. 327 and Gopalrao v. Trimbakrao 10 Bom. 598. In certain other cases a larger share ( called jyēsthāmsa or motap ) has been allowed by custom to the eldest son at a partition. Vide Mamkchand v. Huralal 20 Cal. 45 ( P. C. ), *Prithisingh v. The following propositions may be laid down about the allotment of shares on a partition: (1) When there is a partition between a father and his sons each son takes a share equal to that of the father ; (2) where the partition is only between brothers all of them share equally ; (3) on the death of a member leaving male issue his right to a share on partition passes to and is represented by his male issue ; (4) when there is a partition among members who are uncles and nephews or cousins, the allotment is per stirpes ( according to the stock ) as regards each branch and per capita among the members of the same branch. This rule is expressly laid down<sup>1203</sup> by Kaut-

III. 5., Yaj. II. 120, Br. (S. B. E. 33 p. 372 v. 14) and Kāt. (855-56). This last rule requires to be explained and illustrated. Yaj. II. 120 concisely states: "in the case of those who claim through different fathers, the assignment of shares is according to the fathers". Kāt. says: "if an undivided younger brother dies, he (the elder brother or the other brother) should make the son of the former a partaker of the ancestral wealth, when he has not obtained from his grandfather livelihood (i. e. share of heritage); he should obtain from his paternal uncle or the uncle's son the share which his father would have got (if alive); that very share would be the share according to law of all the brothers (who are the sons of the deceased brother). Or even a son (of that son of the brother dying) would obtain that share; beyond this (i. e. beyond the grandson of the deceased brother) there is cessation (of the right to demand a share)". It was stated that in the ancestral property (pūtāmaha dravya) sons and grandsons equally have rights by birth, but in the case of the grandsons assignment of shares is made to them through their lucidly explained in Moro v. Ganesh 10 Bom H. C R. 444 (at pp 461, 466-67) and are quoted in Debi Parshad v. Thakur Dal 1 All 105 (F B.) at p 111. On these verses of कात्यायन the व्य मयूख (p. 101) says that they do not refer to undivided coparceners, but rather to those who are re-unioned. Why it says so is not clear. The first verse of Kāt. starts with the words अविभक्तैश्च and therefore the topic is that of undivided family and there is no express indication that it has changed to reunion in the following verse. The reason appears to be that नीलकण्ठ takes the verse of देवल 'अविभक्तविभक्तानां कुल्याना वसता सह । भूयो दायविभाग' स्वादाचतुर्थ्यदिति स्थितिः' as referring to re-union on account of the word भूयः in it. The words आचतुर्थ्यात् (in देवल) and निवृत्तिं परतो भवेद् (in कात्यायन) mean the same thing and so नीलकण्ठ probably thought that they referred to the same subject. The interpretation of देवल (by नील०) is forced and is opposed to the explanation of most works like the विवादरत्नाकर (p 482) and व्य म. p. 449, रद्विच. II p. 279. They take अविभक्तविभक्तानां as a dvandva compound meaning 'those who are undivided' and 'those who are divided', while नील० takes that word to mean 'those who being once undivided are divided' (i. e. as a कर्मधारय) सह वसता—acc to the other digests means either 'who dwell together' (in the case of the undivided) and 'who reunite' (in the case of the divided) 'अविभक्तानामेव वा विभक्तानां सह वसतां संघटानां वा पुनर्विभागो भ्रातृतत्सुतवत्सुतपर्यन्तमेव तत्सुताचतुर्थ्याज्जिवर्तत इति' नि र p 482, वीजि-चतुर्थ्यभिधाय्य दायभाग इत्यर्थः । विभक्तानामपि संसर्गादिना सहवासे सति द्वयव्यवस्था । वसता सहति वचनात् । व्य. म. p 449. fathers and not in their separate individual capacity. This may be illustrated by some examples.

Suppose A, B, C, D, E, F, G, H, J, K formed a joint family and that A, B, C, D all die without making a partition, leaving two sons F, G, and D dying leaving three sons H, J, K. If E, F, G, H, J, K want to partition, then these six will not take one-sixth each, but the partition will be through their fathers i. e. E the only son of B will take one-third, F and G (the two sons of C) will take one-third (i. e. each will take one-sixth) and H, J, K will together take one-third (i. e. one-ninth each) The same will be the result if only A, B, C die, leaving D to K. Here D, the uncle of E, F, G, along with his three sons H, J, K will take one-third only.

To take another example.

Suppose A the head of the joint family dies leaving a son B, two grandsons C1 and C2, three great-grandsons F1, F2, F3, and one great-great-grandson K. Here K cannot demand a share, as he is beyond 4th from A the common ancestor A that died last. Therefore the joint property will be divided per stirpes into three parts, B taking one-third, C1 and C2 together taking one-third and F1, F2, F3 together taking one-third

One more illustration may be given.

Suppose A, the head of a Hindu joint family, dies leaving four sons, B, C, D, E and five grand-sons, B 1, B 2, B 3, C 1, D 1 and then B dies. Then B 3 receives his share, which is one-third of one-fourth (=one-twelfth), goes out of the family and the rest continue joint. Then C dies, then D, then E, and then B 2. Then B 1 sues C 1 and D 1 for his share. Here if we again apply the rule of per stirpes division, the property that remained at the date of the suit of B 1 will be divided into three parts and B 1, C 1 and D 1 (who represent three stocks, B, C, D) will each get one third of that property. This was so decided in Priyanandas v Ichhanam 39 Bom. 734. The Madras High Court, however, holds that the rule of per stirpes applies only when all the coparceners desire a partition at the same time and that if only some members separate at one time and others on a later occasion, regard should be had to the share allotted at the first partition in computing the share to be allotted at the second partition. That is, according to the Madras High Court in the above case B 1 will be entitled to one-third minus one-twelfth (which latter was allotted to B 3 when he left the family). The Madras High Court says that its views are based not on strict principles of Hindu Law, but on necessary considerations of equity. Vide Manyanatha v Narayana 5 Mad. 362 and Narayana v Shankar 53 Mad. 1 (F B at p. 6).

Manu (IX. 47) emphatically states:<sup>1203a</sup> "once is a partition made, once is a maiden given in marriage, once does a man say 'I shall make a gift of this or that'; these three are done only once by the good". This means that a partition once made is final and cannot ordinarily be reopened. But there are exceptions to this rule. One viz. about the posthumous son born after partition has already been mentioned above (pp. 595-597). Br.<sup>1204</sup> (S. B. E. 33 pp. 373-74 verses 24-26) says, "If a man leaving the country common to himself and his co-sharers goes to another country, his share must undoubtedly be given to his descendant when the latter comes back to the original country. Whether he (the descendant) be the third or fifth or even seventh in descent (from the man who left the country) he would get the share that descends hereditarily provided his birth and family name are ascertained. The gotrajas (agnatic members of the family) should allow (a share in the ancestral) lands to the descendant of a man whom the maulas and neighbours know to be a co-owner (in the lands) by descent, when he comes (after a partition) to demand his share". The V. R. explains<sup>1205</sup> that the rule of Devala (given above) about a claim to a share being allowed up to the fourth applies when all the members stay together in the same place or country, while the above rule of Br. allowing even the seventh in descent to claim his share after a partition has taken place applies where such descendant and his forefathers had migrated to a distant land. These rules of Br. indicate that, even after a long time, a descendant could claim his share in a joint family estate and no bar of limitation was allowed.

Another rule is that where some property of the joint family had been fraudulently concealed by one member and was discovered afterwards, or where some property was left out from partition either through mistake or accident, such property should be divided according to their shares among the persons who made the first partition. In this case there is no reopening of the partition once made, but there is another partition. Manu IX. 218, Yāj II. 126, Kauṭ. III. 5 and Kat 885-86 lay down<sup>1206</sup> this. Kat. says: 'If (joint) wealth was concealed, but is afterwards discovered, the sons should divide it equally with their brothers in the absence of the father (i. e. even after his death). Whatever is concealed from each other (by the co-sharers) or what was divided in an unjust manner and whatever was recovered (such as debts) after (partition) should be partitioned in equal shares. This is the view of Bhrgu'.

In the Ait Br. (VI. 7)<sup>1207</sup> it is said 'He who deprives a person entitled to a share of his share, him he (who is deprived) punishes (or destroys). If he does not punish (or destroy) him (the depriver), then he punishes his son or grandson; but he does punish him'. Manu IX. 213 declares that even the eldest brother who through greed deprives his younger brothers (of their shares) ceases to be the eldest (i. e. forfeits his position as the eldest), is deprived of his (special) share (as eldest) and should be punished by the king. From these passages it follows that fraudulently concealing joint property or depriving a person of his share is condemned. This leads on to a divergence of views among commentators and digests. If a man conceals joint property at a partition, is he a wrongdoer or not? What he conceals is partly his own. Therefore the Dayabhāga<sup>1208</sup> (XIII. 8) holds that there is no theft in this case, since a thief is commonly understood to be one who knowing that some thing belongs to another, makes it his own without any ground for so doing; while a co-sharer cannot be said to be no owner at all of the joint property. The Dayabhāga (XIII. 11-12) says that Visvarūpa and Jitendriya both held the same opinion that even if technically it may be called theft, still there is no sin attaching to it as smṛtis allow him also who conceals joint property to share in it at the subsequent partition. The Vivādaratnākara (p. 526) states that Halāyudha also held the opinion that in suppressing some joint property the co-sharer did not incur the sin of theft. On the other hand the Mit., Aparārka (p. 732), V. P. p. 555 hold that in view of Manu IX. 213

(which declares even the eldest as punishable by the king if he deprives his younger brothers of their due share) and the Ait. Br. there is the fault of theft in case a co-sharer fraudulently conceals joint property. The Mit. and V. P. further rely upon an example derived from the Pūrvamīmāṃsā in support of their view. When a caru (boiled food) of mudga pulse is prescribed and mudgas are not available, some substitute must be employed just as when rice is not available nivāra grain may be employed. The parts of māsa resemble those of mudga and some one may plausibly say that in the absence of mudgas, a caru of māsas may be used. To this Jai. VI 3 20<sup>1209</sup> replies that, since māsas, vaśakas and kodravās are forbidden as being unfit for use in sacrifices, one cannot take parts of māsas as substitute for parts of mudgas though both may be so similar as not to be easily distinguishable. So the general prohibition against depriving another of his wealth holds good even in the case of goods that belong jointly to oneself and to others. The Dāyabhāga (XIII. 16 pp 227-228) tells us that a predecessor of it named Bālaka relied on this very nyāya of Jaimini and finds fault with him. It should be noted however that Kāt. (888) recommends that the king<sup>1210</sup> even if a complaint be lodged about fraudulent suppression by a co-sharer should not use force against the fraudulent suppressor but should make him give up the concealed property by persuasion or trick. Br. and Kāt.<sup>1211</sup> declare that if there is a suspicion that some joint wealth has been concealed by a co-sharer, the kośa ordeal may be resorted to.

If there was a dispute whether a partition had already taken place, Yāj. II 149 mentions some of the indications that lead to the inference or proof of partition viz. 'the determination of the dispute follows from the testimony of kinsmen, cognates (like maternal uncle), other witnesses, a deed (of partition) and by (the fact of) houses and fields being separately held' Nār. (dāyabhāga 36-41) gives more<sup>1212</sup> elaborate rules on the subject viz. that the status of division can be determined from the fact of their transactions (agriculture &c) being separate, that the separate performance of religious rites is another indication of separation 'Receiving and returning a debt, the beasts (kine &c), food, houses and fields and servants must be separate in the case of those who are divided, as also cooking food, performance of religious rites, income and expenditure. It is only divided persons (and not undivided ones) that can become in respect of each other witnesses, sureties or debtors and creditors. People should regard them to be divided even though there be no deed of partition, in whose case these transactions are entered into openly with their co-sharers' Yāj. II. 52 also declares that between brothers, husband and wife, father and son there cannot be, as long as they are undivided, the relationship of being sureties or witnesses for each other or of being debtor and creditor. Nār. (dāyabhāga 41) and Kāt. (893) state that when for ten years brothers (and other members of a family) reside (separately) doing religious observances separately and have separate transactions, they should be known as separate so far as the ancestral estate is concerned<sup>1213</sup> It is on account of these passages that the courts say that presumably every Hindu family is joint in food, worship<sup>1214</sup> and estate and 'that cesser of commensality is an element which may properly be considered in determining the question whether there has been a partition of joint family property, but it is not conclusive.<sup>1215</sup> Br. says that where there are no witnesses nor a document to prove partition, a conclusion may be arrived at by inference.

A few words may be said about the self-acquired property of the father or grand-father. According to the strict theory of the Mit the son<sup>1216</sup> acquires by birth an interest even in the self-acquired property of the father, but the Mit. makes it clear that the son has no power to prevent his father from disposing of his own self-acquisitions, but has to give his approval to his father's alienations of his self-acquisitions. The Mit sets out two smṛti texts viz. 'though immovable property and bipeds may have been acquired by the father himself, there can be no gift nor sale of them without (calling together or) consulting all the sons. Those that are born, those that are unborn and those that are in (their mother's) womb expect maintenance (and therefore) there can be no gift nor sale'. But these have been treated by the Mit. and the Dāyabhāga also as more or less recommendatory. If the father alienates his self-acquisitions without his son's consent he may be held guilty of transgressing a smṛti precept but the transaction does hold good and is valid,<sup>1217</sup> since a fact cannot be altered by even a hundred texts (as the Dāyabhāga puts it). It should not be supposed that the Mit. was the first to propound this right as to self-acquisitions. Centuries before, the Viṣṇu Dh. S. 17.1 expressly declared that as regards self-acquired property the father has absolute discretion to divide it as he pleases.

Kāt. (839) also says that the son has no ownership in the father's self-acquisition.<sup>1218</sup> When Yāj. II. 114 allows the father either to give the best share to the eldest son or to make an equal division among all sons, the Mit. explains that this unequal division holds good only as to the self-acquisitions of the father. Similarly when Nār. (dāyabhāga 12) or Śankha-Likhita say that the father may take two shares for himself, that is with reference to self-acquisitions, acc. to the Mit. Manu IX. 104 stating that sons have no power over property during the life of the parents refers to the self-acquisitions of the parents. In modern times courts have followed the view that a Hindu father (or any Hindu person whatever) may give, sell or bequeath by will his self acquired property (whether movable or immovable) to any body he likes (vide Rao Bahwant Singh v Rani Kishori 25 I. A. p. 54 at pp. 67-68 where the two verses cited by the Mit. were held to contain only a moral precept and not a rule of law capable of being enforced).

Mr Kishori Lal Sarkar in his Tagore Law Lectures on the Mimāṃsā rules of interpretation states (p. 21) that 'Mitākṣarā bears the impress of Buddhistic influence'. For this proposition he advances hardly any substantial evidence that will bear scrutiny. His reasons are mostly subjective and he refers to no ancient or medieval Buddhistic texts that elaborate the principle of taking property by birth or the rule of propinquity in deciding questions of inheritance, which two are the most fundamental tenets of the Mitākṣarā system. It appears that the evolution of the son's right to partition, of his equality with his father, of the absolute rights of a person to his self-acquisitions was a gradual indigenous growth and had nothing to do with Buddhistic thought. Buddhists had hardly any independent set of juristic ideas or works different from those of the Brahmanical jurists and in medieval times countries like Burma professing Buddhism turned to Brahmanic codes like that of Manu for regulating succession, inheritance and allied

In the preceding pages reference has been frequently made to sons, to their rights in ancestral property by birth and to their shares on partition. It is now time to refer to the various kinds of sons, principal (mukhya) and gauṇa (subsidiary or secondary).

In H. of Dh. vol. II. pp. 560-561 passages from the R̥gveda, the Tai. S., Śat. Br., Ait. Br., the sūtras and smrtis emphasizing the importance of a son for the spiritual welfare of a man have been cited. The principal purposes served by the birth of a son are succinctly stated in the Ait. Br. 33. 1. viz. the son enables the father to pay off the debt he owes to his ancestors, to secure immortality (amṛtva) and heavenly worlds. These were the main purposes deemed to be served by a son in most remote times. Manu (IX. 106-107) and Yāj. I. 78 also mention these benefits. The desire was to continue and perpetuate the family (vaṁśasya avicchēdā as the Mīt. has it) and to provide for the performance and preservation of religious sacra and offerings. This desire was common in ancient societies almost everywhere. The Śat. Br. XII. 4. 3. 1 (S. B. E. vol. 44 p. 157) states 'the father in later life subsists on the son and the son in early life subsists on the father'. The Nirukta<sup>1220</sup> (III. 4) quotes a rk verse, 'thou

VI. 4. 9 in another connection and the whole of it in आदिपर्व 74. 63.

art born from each of the limbs, from the heart (of the father), thou art indeed one's own self called son; mayst thou live for a hundred autumns!'. Gradually the idea arose (probably suggested by etymologists) that the son saved the father from the Hell called put,<sup>1221</sup> as stated by Manu IX. 138 (= Ādiparva 229. 14 = Visnu Dh. S. 15. 44). The son's close connection with the offering of pindas to the ancestors is not much emphasized in the oldest works. But in the sūtras, in Manu and the other smrtis this aspect of the benefits derived from the son is far more prominent than the others. In speaking of the putrikā-putra Manu (IX 136) declares 'he should offer pinda' (to his maternal grandfather) and take the latter's wealth. As three descendants (son, grandson and great-grandson) presented pindas to the ancestor, all three had extravagant praises bestowed on them. Manu IX. 137 says: 'a man secures the (higher) worlds through (the birth of) a son, he obtains permanence (in those worlds) through a grandson, through the son of a grandson he wins the world of the Sun'<sup>1222</sup>. The Viṣṇudharma-sūtra 85. 67 declares<sup>1223</sup> 'A man should desire to have many sons (with the thought) that some one out of them may go to Gayā or offer the Āsvamedha sacrifice or let loose (in honour of the deceased father) a dark bull'. Br (q. in Par M. I. 2 p. 305) states: 'the pītrā afraid of falling into Hell desire to have sons; (they think) one of them may go to Gayā and that one will save us; he will set at liberty a bull, he may perform sacrifices and execute works of public utility (like tanks, temples and parks), he will take care of us in our old age, he will offer śrāddha day by day'. The Matsyapurāṇa 204 (3-17) contains verses (that are called putr-gāthās, verses sung by pītrā) which breathe the hankerings of deceased ancestors after what they expect their descendants to do such as offering water in holy rivers, śrāddhas, going to Gayā, gifts of various kinds, construction of tanks, &c.

It is not, however, to be supposed that purely secular benefits to be derived from sons were not thought of at all. People were alive to them but those benefits were submerged under the flood of extravagant ideas about the spiritual benefits derived from sons. For example, the Br.<sup>1224</sup> Up. I. 5. 16, after mentioning the three worlds of men, pitṛs and gods, declares that the world of men can be won only through the son ( while in I. 5. 17 there is eulogy of the son and instruction to him that he is Brahma, he is yajña, he is the heavenly world). Nār. IV 5 says<sup>1225</sup> " fathers wish to have sons on their own account thinking in their hearts 'He will free me from low and high debts' ". Kāt. (551) has a similar verse and makes the meaning of Nār. clear<sup>1226</sup>. Vide above ( under ṛnādāna pp. 416-417 ).

Besides the aurasa, eleven or twelve kinds of subsidiary sons are mentioned by most ancient smṛti writers. Āp. Dh. S. does not recognize any son except the aurasa. Āp. quotes certain verses which express the view of an ancient sage called Aupajanghani and which are also quoted by the Baud. Dh. S. according to which the aurasa was to be recognized as the only son ( vide H. of Dh. Vol. II. p. 602 n 1417 for the quotation ) Āp. II. 5. 13 10 emphasizes that there can be no real gift or sale of one's child ( dānam krayadhaḥ maścāpatyasya na vidyate ). But Āp. Dh. S. clearly shows that it knew that ksetraja sons were raised and forbids that practice. In II. 10. 27. 2-6 Āp. condemns the practice of nyoga 'a husband (or his elders) shall not appoint a wife who occupies the position of a sagotra to others (who are not sagotra), for they declare that a bride is given to the family (of the husband and not to the husband alone). 1228. The औरस is called स्वयंजात in आदिपर्व 120 33 I understand प्रणीत, परिकीत and सैरिणीपुत्र in the आदिपर्व to be the same as पुत्रिकापुत्र, क्षेत्रज and गृहज respectively. स्वयंजातः प्रणीतश्च परिकीतश्च यः सुतः । पौनर्भवश्च कानिनी. सैरिण्यां यश्च जायते । दत्तः क्रीतः कृत्रिमश्च उपगच्छेत्स्वयं च यः । सहोदो ज्ञातिरेताश्च हीनयोनिधृतश्च यः । पूर्वपूर्वतमाभावं मत्वा लिप्तेतैः सुतम् । उच्चमाद्विवरायुंसः काङ्क्षन्ते पुत्रमापदि । आदिपर्व 120. 33-35. I take ज्ञातिरेता as an adjective of सहोद and हीनयोनिधृतः as शौद्र It has to be noted that the अनुशासनपर्व (49 3-11) mentions 20 sons in all and employs a peculiar terminology in several cases, viz औरस (also called अनन्तरज), निवक्तन (for क्षेत्रज), पञ्चनज (meaning अनियोगोत्पन्न), पतितात्त्वभार्यायां जात, and speaks of दत्त, क्रीत, अध्वृद (=सहोद), 6 अपध्वंसज (i.e. प्रद्युतोत्स), कानिनी and 6 अपसदृस (चाण्डाल, ब्राह्म, वैद्य, मागध, शानक and दूत). The Anuśāsana (49. 11) expressly states that it is not possible to deny altogether the status of sonship to these sons (पुत्रा ह्येते न शक्यन्ते मिथ्या कर्तुं नराधिप). It then says (49. 20-21) that when a boy is abandoned by his parents and he is brought up by another and his natural parents are not known, he belongs to the caste of the man who brings him up and that even for कानिनी and अध्वृद (सहोद) sons saṃskāras are to be performed as if they were one's sons (49 25-26)

Viṣṇu Dh. S. (15. 27) mentions 'yatra-kvacanotpādita' (procreated anywhere) as the 12th and last. The com. Vaijayaṅṭi explains it in two ways: (1) procreated by a person on a woman, regardless of whether she is his own or another's wife or whether she is of the same caste or not, whether she is married or unmarried, whether her marriage has been consummated or not; (2) the son of a man from a śūdra woman not married to him. Even in the last sense he cannot be called śaudra (whom Manu IX. 178 and Yāj. I. 91 define as the son of a śūdra wife from a brāhmana). Hārīta as quoted in the V R p 549 mentions a son called 'sahasā drsta' (seen by chance), who seems to be probably the same as krtrima. The śaudra is omitted by several writers (even ancient ones) like Gautama, Kauṭilya and Hārīta. Manu speaks of only twelve sons (IX. 158) and does not enumerate the putrikāputra among them, though he speaks of the putrikā (IX. 127 and 134 and elsewhere) as equal to the son. It is therefore that Br. (S. B. E. 33 p 375 verse 33) states that of the thirteen sons mentioned in succession by Manu the legitimate son of the body (aurasa) and the putrikā (the daughter appointed as a son) continue the family. Vas. 17. 12 emphatically declares (dvādaśa ityeva putrāḥ putrinadrśtāḥ) that only twelve sons have been noticed by the ancient (sages) and it is no doubt true that most writers generally enumerate twelve. A smṛti text quoted by Haradatta on Gautama and by the Dattaka-mīmāṃsā mentions 15 kinds of sons. Vide note below<sup>1229</sup>. The number is arrived at by counting the putrikā 1229 औरसः पुत्रिका बीजिशेवजौ पुत्रिकाद्वतः । पौनर्भवश्च कानीन सद्योदो गृहसंभवः । दत्तः क्रीतः स्वयदत्तः कृत्रिमश्चापविद्धकः । यत्र कचोत्पादितश्च पुत्राख्या दश पञ्च च ॥ इति q by हरदत्त on गौ. 28 32, दत्त मी. p 68. The compound बीजिशेवजौ is to be taken as बीजिज and शेवज. The word bijū is the epithet of the man who is appointed to beget issue in the practice of nyoga, the बीजिज being the son begotten by such a man, who (the son) is deemed by some to be the son of both (of the begetter and of the husband of the wife). Dr Jolly in Tagore Law Lectures on partition &c. p 146 is wrong in taking 'bijū' as 'the son procreated with another man's wife'. 'Bijū' is employed by Gant. IV 3 and Manu IX 51-53 in the sense given above. Vide H. of Dh II p 599 n. 1409 for bijū, ksetra (meaning wife) and krtrima तद्वत्परस्मिन्पाः पुत्रौ द्वौ सुतौ कुण्डगोलकौ । परयो जीवति कुण्ड. रघुसुते भर्तरे गोलक ॥ औरसः शेवजश्चैव दत्तः कृत्रिमकः सुतः । दद्यान्माता पिता बापि स पुत्रो दत्तको भवेत् ॥ पराशर IV. 23-24. Laghu-Āśvalāyana (21 14-15) says that though certain sages provide that the Kunda and Golaka sons should have the samkīrtas performed on them, that was the practice in other ages and that it is prohibited in the Kali age.

(daughter appointed as a son) and the putrikāputra (the son of the appointed daughter) as two, dividing the ksetraja into two viz. as the son of the begetter (bījīn) and as the son of the wife (i. e. of the husband of the wife) and the son produced anywhere (as mentioned by Viṣṇu Dh. S.) is 15th and the last. The Parāśarasmr̥ti (IV. 23-24) mentions, besides Kunda and Golaka, only five kinds of sons.

It is necessary, before proceeding further, to give brief definitions of the twelve or thirteen kinds of sons from Manu and other writers. The legitimate son (aurasa) is one begotten by a man on his own wedded wife of the same caste. The putrikāputra<sup>1230</sup> is of two kinds; (1) a sonless man may appoint his daughter as his son (she is then called putrikā and treated as a son); (2) or she may be given to a person in marriage with the stipulation 'I give you in marriage this brotherless girl decked with ornaments; the son born of her will be my son'. In this case the son born of the daughter so given becomes the son of his maternal grandfather. The ksetraja (the son of the wife) is one who is begotten on a man's wife (or widow) by a sagotra (agnatic kinsman) or by one not of the same gotra, according to the rules of nuyoga, when the man himself is either dead or impotent or suffering from (an incurable) disease. That is the son given (dattaka or dātṛma) whom his father or mother gives as a son affectionately in a time of distress with water and who is of the same caste (as the adopter). He is the son called kr̥tr̥ma (made) whom a man makes his son, the latter being of the same caste, being clever in distinguishing between right and wrong and being endowed with the qualities a son should possess. He is the son born secretly (gūḍhotpanna or gūḍhaja) as he is called by Baud. and Yāj, who is born in a man's house, it being not known who is his begetter; and he belongs to him of whose wife he is born. He is the son called apaviddha (cast off) whom a man receives as his son after he has been abandoned by his parents or by one of them. The kānina (maiden's son) is one whom a maiden bears secretly in the house of her father and he belongs to him who marries her afterwards.

1230 पुत्रिकापुत्रो द्वेधा । तत्राद्यमाह वसिष्ठः (१७. १७) —अभातृकं प्रदास्यामि पुत्र्यं कन्यामलङ्कृतान् । अस्यां यो जायते पुत्रः स मे पुत्रो भविष्यति ॥ इति । अन्वयमाह स एव — पुत्रीयः पुत्रिकैव — इति । अस्मिन्पक्षे कन्ययैव पितरौर्बद्धेदिकादि कार्यम् । पृथ. मयूख p. 107 In the first sense mentioned above in the text the word पुत्रिकापुत्र is dissolved as पुत्रिका एव पुत्रः (a कर्मधारय) and in the 2nd as पुत्रिकायाः पुत्रः (a तत्पुत्र्य compound). The मिता. on पा II. 128 gives the same explanation.

The sahodha (received together with the bride) is the son born of a woman who was pregnant at the time of marriage, whether that fact was known or unknown (to the person marrying her) and he belongs to the person who weds the (pregnant) woman. The kṛita (son bought) is one who is bought by a person from his father and mother for making the boy his son, whether the boy be equal or unequal (in qualities). The paunarbhava (the son of a remarried woman) is one to whom a woman, being abandoned by her husband or being a widow, gives birth after she contracts a second marriage of her own accord. He, who, having lost his parents or being abandoned by them without proper cause, gives himself to a man (as a son) is called svayāmdatta (a son self-given). The son whom a brāhmana begets through lust from a śūdra wife is called pāraśava (or śaudra), since he, though living, is (like a) corpse.

The list of twelve or thirteen kinds of sons looks rather formidable, has puzzled and misled even great scholars into making all sorts of sweeping assertions and putting forward untenable theories about the origin and necessity of so many sons. For example, Dr. Jolly in his 'Recht und Sitte' (English tr. p. 156) observes 'The twelve kinds of sonship, which to some extent are based on the illicit connection of the mother and for the greater part have nothing to do with the blood-relationship of the son with the father, are probably the most striking feature of Indian family law. The cause of this abnormal importance being attached to male issue is to be sought, according to the smṛtis, in the offering of sacrifices to the manes which depends upon the male issue; yet, however, originally an economic motive was perhaps a more important factor in it—to get for the family as many powerful workers as possible'. The learned writer appears to hold that the smṛtis regarded all the secondary sons as equally competent to confer spiritual benefit and that at one and the same time a man could have all or most of them as sons. But he is mistaken in both these respects. The very definition of putrikāputra, kṣetrāja<sup>1231</sup> and dattaka given by many of the smṛtis show that one who has already an aurasa son, grandson or great-grandson could not have a putrikāputra, a ksetraja or an adopted son. If the definitions of all the 12 or 13 kinds of sons are carefully analysed, it will be quite apparent that the long list is due to the ancient writers' great penchant for divisions and sub-divisions based upon very slight differences of circumstances. The several kinds can be classified into three or four groups as done by Devala.<sup>1232</sup> All the five sons called dattaka, kṛita, kṛtrima, svayamdattu and apaviddha are sons who are affiliated by a person under various circumstances. There is no tinge of any illicit connection of the mother in any one of these, the one thing common to all of them being that they are the sons of one man and are treated by another as his. Similarly the paunarbhava and śūdra are the legal sons of the man himself, but there is opprobrium attaching to them, because in the first case the mother contracted a re-marriage (which was very much condemned by the smṛtis) and in the other a brāhmana married a śūdra woman (which also was looked down upon, if not absolutely forbidden as done by Yāj. I. 56). The paunarbhava son of a dṛya is still called a dvija by Manu III. 181, but Manu only provides that he is not fit to be invited at a śrāddha. The putrikā (the daughter appointed as a son) is the man's own child and the putrikāputra also is the man's own grandchild and both these are special cases of adoption and no question of mother's illicit connection arises in these. So out of 13 kinds of sons, nine were entirely free from any taint of illicit connection. There remain only the four viz. ksetraja, gūdhotpanna, kānina, sahodha. The ksetraja was in a class by himself and was a survival of an ancient practice prevalent in many countries all the world over, which had been condemned in India by Āp. (as shown above on p 644) and his predecessors several centuries before the Christian era. It may, however, be pointed out that some medieval writers held the view that several secondary sons like the dattaka, kṛita &c. could be had by a man having no aurasa son.<sup>1232a</sup>

The chief concern of the smṛtis as shown clearly by the Anuśāsanaparva (chap. 49 quoted above on p. 645) and the com. of Nīlakanṭha was to provide for the maintenance and the performance of the samskāras of those children that may be either abandoned by their parents or may be under the cloud of illegitimacy.

There is great confusion and contradiction among the sūtras and smṛtis about the place of the several kinds of sons and about their rights. For example, Gautama (probably the most ancient among extant sūtrakāras) assigns the 10th place to the putrikāputra, while Baud., Kauṭ., Yāj., Br. and Devala give him the 2nd place and Vasistha, Śaṅkha-Likhita, Nār., and Visṇu put him 3rd. The dattaka is placed very low in the list by most works except by Manu, Gaut., Baud., Br. and Brahmapurāṇa (which put him 3rd or 4th). The 12 kinds are put in two groups by some works. Gaut. (28. 30-31) provides that the aurasa, ksetraja, datta, krtrima, gūḍhotpanna and apaviddha are rikthabhājah (take the wealth) and also belong to the gotra of the man whose sons they are, while the other six take only the gotra but not the wealth. Baud. Dh. S. (II. 2. 36-37) employs the same words rikthabhājah and gotrabhājah but differs from Gaut. in including putrikāputra among 'rikthabhājah' and omitting him from the group of 'gotrabhājah'.<sup>1233</sup> Another division (each having six kinds) is into bandhu-dāyāda or dāyādabāndhava (Manu IX. 158-159 and Nār. dāyabhāga 47) and adāyādabāndhava (Manu IX. 160, Vas. 17. 38, Nār. dāyabhāga. 47). The first group, acc. to Manu, comprises aurasa (also putrikā), ksetraja, datta, krtrima, gūḍhotpanna and apaviddha. They are so called because they take the wealth of their father and also of his kinsmen (in the absence of nearer heirs), while the members of the 2nd group (which acc. to Manu IX. 160 comprises kāṇina, sahodha, kṛita, paunarbhava, svayamdatta and śaudra) are only bāndhavas (i. e. belong to the gotra of their father), but cannot succeed to the wealth of their father's kinsmen. Here also there is no agreement among the smṛtis. Vas. (17. 5-25), Śankha-Likhita (q. in V R p 247), Nār. dayabhāga 47 and Hārīta include in the first group aurasa, ksetraja, putrikāputra, paunarbhava, kānina and gūdhaja and the rest in the 2nd group. Kaut asserts that only the aurasa son succeeds as heir to the kinsmen of his father while the others (that are not procreated by him) succeed only to the father who brings them up, but not to his kinsmen Yāj II. 132 states that each of the twelve kinds mentioned by him takes the wealth of the father and offers pṛṇḍ to him in default of the preceding one and further requires that this is so only if it is certain that the sons are of the same caste as that of the father. Gaut. 28. 32 states that<sup>1234</sup> the kānina and the other sons called gotrabhājah (in 28. 31) take only one fourth of the estate of the father if no aurasa nor any of the other sons called rikthabhājah exists (and the rest of the estate is taken by the sapindas), while Kaut, Devala and Kāt. (857) state that the dattaka, ksetraja and other kinds of sons are entitled to one third share only if an aurasa is born provided they are of the same varṇa and that if they are of a different caste, they are only entitled to food and raiment. If a man, having no son, made his daughter a putrikā or thinking himself to be impotent had a ksetraja son or adopted a son and then an aurasa son was born, difficult questions of the distribution of his property arose on which there was no unanimity. Manu IX. 163 says that only the aurasa son is entitled to all the paternal wealth and all the other kinds should be given maintenance in order to avoid the fault of being cruel. But as regards the case where a putrikā is first made and then an aurasa is born Manu (IX. 134) prescribes that these two should divide the paternal estate equally,<sup>1235</sup> while

Manu IX. 164 asks the aurasa to give 1/5 or 1/6 of the paternal wealth to the ksetraja. This confusion and contradiction about the places and the shares of the several sons leads one to infer that the institution of several kinds of sons was not very common or generally recognized, was rather confined to some localities or communities and was dying out even in the times of the ancient smrtis, if it ever existed in full force at all at any time.

As regards gūdhaja, kānina and sahodha there is this to be said. They were the result of illicit connection; but some one had to maintain them, to bring them up and be their guardian. The smrtis when they assign these as the sons of the husbands of the women of whom they are born are really providing for these matters of maintenance and guardianship. Br. says that dattaka, apaviddha, kṛita, kṛta, and śaudra, if of pure caste and pure actions, are middling, while the ksetraja, paunarbhava, kānina, sahodha and gūdhaja are condemned by the good (S B. E. 33 p. 376 verses 40-41).<sup>1236</sup> The kānina was to be under the guardianship of the father of the girl (Yaj. II. 129) till she remained unmarried, but when she married the damsel's son came under the dominion of the person who married her (Manu IX. 172). The very fact that the kānina was assigned to the husband who married the girl shows that this was done because it was deemed that by marrying such a girl the husband condoned her past lapses. Similarly in the case of sahodha, it was deemed that either the child must have been procreated by the husband himself before marriage or that he condoned the conduct of the wife. It appears to have been thought that when the husband (the party most concerned) did not openly object it was not open or allowable for any one else even by proof that the child was kānina or sahodha to call for the abandonment of the child. Similar remarks apply to the gūḍhaja. As shown in H. of Dh vol. II pp. 571-573 if the wife was guilty of adultery the husband had certain powers of correction over the wife, but if he chose to be complaisant, then the smṛtis did not compel him to disown or abandon the child. These very smṛtis (like Gautama, Vas, Nār.) that are very harsh on women for adultery allow the gūḍhaja, kānina and sahoḍha to be secondary sons. So the only way in which these two attitudes can be reconciled is by holding that when the husband condones moral lapses on the part of the woman whom he had accepted as his wife the smṛtis provide for the maintenance, guardianship and succession of such offspring of illicit connection. Even among medieval commentators there was divergence about paunarbhava, kānina, sahoḍha and gūḍhaja; Medhatithi on Manu IX. 181 holds that they are entitled to nothing but food and raiment in any case, while the Mit. (on Yāj. II. 132) holds that even the kānina and the rest take the father's wealth in default of aurasa and the other kinds of sons. The Mit. (on Yāj. I. 90) however holds that kānina, sahoḍha and gūḍhaja being the outcome of adultery cannot be savarna with the husband of their mother, are really different from savarna sons and even anuloma and pratiloma sons.

A good deal can be said about the spiritual benefit supposed to be derived from secondary sons.

The high eulogy bestowed on the son in the Vedic and smṛti literature has reference only to the aurasa son. Manu IX. 180 asserts that the eleven kinds of sons viz. ksetraja and the rest (except aurasa and putrikā) are merely substitutes for the real son, admitted to prevent the cessation of religious rites and in IX. 181 Manu states the final conclusion that such sons as the ksetraja that are procreated from the seed of others really belong to him from whose seed they spring and not to the other man (who takes them up). Br 1237 (S B E. 33 p. 375 verses 35-36) declares: 'thirteen sons were enumerated in order by Manu, out of whom only the aurasa and putrikā are the cause of propagating the line. Just as oil is declared by the good to be a substitute (in sacrifices) in the absence of clarified butter, so the eleven kinds of sons in the absence of aurasa and putrikā<sup>1238</sup> (are admitted merely as substitutes and not the real thing). Although Yāj. II. 132 declares that each succeeding one out of the twelve kinds of sons takes the estate in the absence of each preceding one and offers pinda to the deceased owner, yet the efficacy of the pindas offered by the several sons was deemed to differ very much. Manu leaves no room for doubt on this point when he says (IX. 161) 'a man desiring to cross beyond the gloom (of bad worlds, hells) through (or with the help of) bad sons (such as the ksetraja) secures a result similar to what a person crossing (a sheet of) water in a leaking boat secures'. The idea is that secondary sons cannot confer the same spiritual benefit as the aurasa son can. Medhātithi on Manu IX. 166 and the D. M. explain this very clearly. An aurasa son confers the highest spiritual benefit. The substitute sons (as indicated by the very use of the word pratimūhi) confer a much less benefit. Even a man's widow can perform his śrāddha if he be sonless, but as she could not offer the pūrvana śrāddha her act was not deemed to be as efficacious as a śrāddha performed by a son.<sup>1239</sup> Jaimini devotes several sūtras to the subject of pratimūhi (a substitute) in VI. 3. 13-41. The main conclusion established is that generally speaking there can be no substitute as regards the devatā (the deity to which a particular offering is directed by the Veda to be offered in a particular sacrifice), the fire (āhavanīya and other consecrated fires), the mantra (which is to accompany a particular offering) and certain rites specifically prescribed to be done in a sacrifice (such as 'samidho yajati' in Darśa-pūrnāmāsa) and the svāmīn (the sacrificer) On Jaimini VI.

passage quoted from मेधा occurs in his भाष्य on मनु IX. 166 (with slight variations)

3. 35 Śābara makes<sup>1240</sup> it clear that in employing a pratnuidhi the vedic rite becomes deficient and does not yield the full reward of the religious act. The Satyāsādha Śr S. III. 1. asserts<sup>1241</sup> that there can be no substitute for the sacrificer, the wife, the son, the place, time &c. (prescribed by the Vedic texts for any rite). Therefore it is clear that there was difference of view among very ancient writers about the spiritual benefit to be derived from substitute sons. The natural human tendency to simplify matters and water down strict injunctions prevailed and it began to be thought that even subsidiary sons conferred some spiritual benefit (though not as much as the aurasa son). For about two thousand years the ksetraja and other sons have been prohibited by the smrtis. For example, Br states that Manu first describes the procedure of nyoga and then forbids it, that it is impossible to practise nyoga in the dvāpara and kali ages owing to the deterioration in man's knowledge and tapas (vide H. of Dh vol. II. p. 603 n. 1418 for the quotation). The passage from Śaunaka forbidding sons other than aurasa and dattaka in the Kali age quoted by Aparārka and others has been cited above (n. 1131).

A few remarks will be made on each of the several sons.

Aurasa. Baud. Dh. S. II. 2. 14, Manu IX. 166, Vas 17. 13, Visnu Dh. S. 15 2, Kaut. III. 7 and others define the aurasa as the son procreated by a man himself from his wife married acc. to sacramental forms prescribed by the śāstra. From Āp. (quoted above in n. 1227) and Baud it follows that the aurasa is only the son procreated on a wife of the same varna as that of the husband; but this was the purists' view. Others including (pp 33-34) explains this sūtra about there being no प्रतिनिधि in place of a son by saying that it is restricted to certain śrauta matters only such as the 'Pitāputriya sāmān', or the uttering of a benediction in the words 'tantave jyotismatim &c' and that if the sūtra were taken as forbidding a substitute for a son everywhere, it would be opposed to Manu (IX. 180 पुत्रप्रतिनिधिनाहु) and Atti: यदपि 'न स्वानित्वस्य .. प्रतिनिधिः' इति सत्याषाढवचनेन पुत्रप्रतिनिधिनिराकरणं तत् 'तन्त्वे ज्योतिष्मती सामाशिवमाशासते' इत्यादौ अपुत्रस्य पुत्रप्रतिनिधिं कृत्वा आशीर्वाको-समनिवृत्त्यर्थम्। अत एव श्रुतिः यस्य पुत्रो जातः स्यात् तन्त्वे ज्योतिष्मतीमिति ब्रूयात्। ... न पुन सर्वथैव पुत्रप्रतिनिधिनिराकरणार्थम्। पुत्रप्रतिनिधिं कर्तव्यं पुत्रप्रतिनिधिनाहुदित्यादि-स्मृतिविरोधात्। दृष्ट. मी. pp. 33-34. such medieval works as the Mit. (on Yāj II. 133), the Pārijāta and Aparārka hold that even the son procreated on a wife married in the anuloma order<sup>1242</sup> (e. g. the son of a brāhmana from a ksatriya wife or of a ksatriya from a vaiśya caste wife) was also aurasa. The exception was the son of a brāhmana from a śūdra wife, who was called śaudra or pāraśava and distinguished from the technical aurasa. From the definition of aurasa given by all smṛti writers (and the dicta of such commentaries as the Mit.) it follows that in order to be an aurasa the procreation and the birth of the son must both be after the marriage. But the Privy Council held long ago in Peedda Amani v Zenundar of Marungpur (1 L. A. 282, 293) that procreation after marriage is not distinctly necessary for legitimacy as a son even according to the ancient texts, that to hold so would be an inconvenient doctrine and that the Hindu Law is the same in that respect as the English Law.<sup>1243</sup>

From the times of the R̥gveda people prayed for the birth of an aurasa son and did not like to adopt the son of another. A R̥gvedic poet exclaims (VII. 4. 7-8) 'As the wealth (son) somewhat remarkable The Mit. admits that nyoga is not allowed in the present Kali age (vide above p 628) and it quotes a smṛti text to that effect, but it allows the sons of anuloma marriages to be aurasa and to succeed before every other kinds of sons Therefore it follows that the Mit. either did not know the passages of Saunaka and of the Nāradyāpurāṇa (pūrvārtha 24 13) which forbade marriage with asavarna girls for the twice-horn classes in the Kali age or did not hold

A stranger, born of another's loins, though very pleasing, should not be taken, should not be even thought of in the mind (as one's son). Then he goes back to the same house (from which he came); may a vigorous, victorious, newly born son come to us! "1244

In modern times the courts generally recognize only two kinds of sons, viz aurasa and dattaka, the other kinds of sons being held to be long since obsolete. Vide Nagindas v. Bachoo 43 I. A. 56, 67. But two more kinds of sons have been recognized in modern times in certain provinces only, viz. the krtrima in Mithila (modern Tirhoot) and the putrikāputra among the Nambudri brāhmaṇas of Malabar, both of which will be dealt with below.

Putrikāputra. The two meanings of this word given by the Mit. and others relying on Vas. have been stated above (p. 647) Kaut. III. 7, Yaj. II. 128, Manu IX. 134 declare the putrikā or putrikāputra to be equal to the aurasa son. The conception underlying the putrikā has a hoary antiquity. There are traces of the putrikā in the R̥gveda itself. Vas 1245 XVII. 16 refers to rather obscure, particularly the first one. The meaning given above is that of such an ancient writer as Yāska in Nir. III 1-3. He says that these two the adopter): 'तद्यथा जनयितुं प्रजा एवमर्थेयि क्रत्वापुदाहरिष्याम । परिवर्धं १.'

Rg. I. 124. 7 in connection with putrikā. That verse contains four similes in describing the advent of Uṣas (Dawn) 'As a woman that has no brother comes back to (her) male relations,... like a smiling damsel the Dawn unmasks objects (or her beauty)'. The Nirukta (III. 5) explains the first quarter as meaning that a brotherless maiden (after marriage) comes back to her paternal line for continuing that line and for offering *pinda*s (to her paternal ancestors) and does not go to her husband's line. The Rg. in several places refers to the difficulty of getting brotherless maidens married and to the fact of their remaining in their father's house as old maidens; vide Rg. II. 17. 7 'amūjūṣa pītroḥ sūcū satī' and IV. 5. 5. The Atharvaveda I. 17. 1 states 'like brotherless sisters let these stand still with their splendours gone'. Yāska explains that, as brotherless maidens, when married, bar the way to the continuance of the family of their husbands and to offering of *pinda*s (through their son), so are these red arteries &c. Yāska (Nirukta III. 4) relies for the appointment of a brotherless daughter as a son upon another very obscure verse of the Rg. (III. 31. 1)<sup>1246</sup> 'the husband declares (or promises) that the father may regard (the daughter's son) as his son's son'. The Nirukta<sup>1247</sup> (III. 5) quotes a Vedic text 'one should not marry a brotherless (girl), for she becomes (her father's) son' and holds that it expressly prohibits marriage with a brotherless maiden and also declares that such a girl becomes a son to her father. The brotherless maiden is appointed as a son by express agreement, but according to Gautama 28. 17 the opinion of one school (which he does not approve) was that a brotherless girl became a putrikā by the mere unilateral intention of the father and therefore one should not marry a brotherless maiden for fear that the father (without expressly stipulating so) might intend her to be putrikā. Manu III. 11 contains a similar caution. This recommendation not to marry a brotherless maiden continued down to the days of Yāj. (I. 53 'aroginīm bhrātṛmatīm'), though in modern times many would prefer to marry such a girl, provided the father was well-off. Manu IX. 140 states that the three pindas that the putrikāputra offered were respectively to his mother, to the mother's father and to the mother's paternal grand-father.

The putrikāputra is no longer recognised anywhere in India except among the Nambudri brāhmanas of Malabar. Vide Tnakoor Jeebath v. Court of Wards 2 I. A. 163, 167, Babus Rila v. Babu Puran 1 Pat. L. J. 581, Kumaran v. Narayanan 9 Mad. 260, Chemnauth v. Patakuzhu 25 Mad. 662, 31 Mad. 310. It appears that even a Madras authority like the Smrticandrikā<sup>1248</sup> was not aware of the prevalence of the putrikāputra in Malabar.

Ksetraja This kind of son arose from the practice of niyoga. The origin of this practice and the limitations under which it was allowed have been dealt with at length in H. of Dh. vol. II pp 599-607. One matter not mentioned therein is this that the Brahmapurāṇa states that ksetraja sons were very common among ksatriyas since they had no progeny either because they were cursed (by sages for their misdeeds) or because they were constantly engaged in war.<sup>1249</sup> The Baud. Dh. S. II. 2. 21-23 and Kauṭ. III. 7 declare the ksetraja to be the son of two fathers, to have two gotras and to offer pindas to both fathers (provided there is no aurasa son born subsequently) and to take tasir wealth and that in offering each pinda they have to associate it with two names<sup>1250</sup> It is to be noted that the Mit. on Yaj. II. 127 introduces the ksetraja as dvyāmusyāyana, although that word, as will be seen later on, has another significance also. The Madanapārijāta (p. 651) also regards ksetraja and dvyāmusyāyana as synonyms. The Vivādata-dava (folio 122) states that the dvyāmusyāyana and sons of intercaste marriages being forbidden in Kali it does not enter into any discussion about the rules of allotting shares to them.

Dattaka. This will be dealt with separately later on.

Kṛtrima—(or krta, as in Nār. dāyabhāga 46). According to Manu IX 169, Yāj. II. 131, Baud. Dh. S II. 2 25 and the Mit. and other works a krtrima is a person (of the same caste as the adopter) who has no parents and who is adopted with his own consent by the tempting offer of wealth. He is distinguished from the dattaka by the fact that he is not given by the father or mother and by the fact that his own consent is necessary (so that he must be major according to the ancient Hindu Law). Such a son is recognized in modern times only in Mithilā (Tirhoot) and the adjoining districts and among the Nambudri brāhmanas of Malabar (as held in Vasudevan v Secretary of State 11 Mad. 157). Considerable case law exists about the krtrima adoption, for which Mulla's Hindu Law pp 563-564 (9th ed.) and Mayne's Hindu law (10th ed.) pp 293-294 may be consulted.

Gūḍhaja. There is probably a reference to such a son in the Rg. II 29, 1<sup>251</sup> 'O! Ādityas, that uphold the moral law, that are always active, keep away from me sin as a woman giving birth to a child in secret (removes it)'.

Kānina. This word is derived from the word 'kanyā' (a maiden). Pāṇini IV. 1 116 (kanyāyāḥ kanīna ca) derives the word in the sense of "child of a maiden" and the Kaśika gives Karna and Vyāsa as instances of kānina sons. The word kānina occurs in the Atharvaveda V. 5. 8 and kumūriputra occurs in the Vājasaneyasamhitā 30. 6. Nār. (dāyabhāga 17)<sup>1252</sup> says that the kānina, sahodha and gūḍhaja are the sons of the man who marries the mother of these and they take the wealth of the husband of their mother. The Pārijāta (q by V. R. p. 565) states that the kānina and sahodha become the sons of their mother's father if the latter is sonless, but if he has a son then they become the sons of the husband of their mother and if both have no sons then they become the sons of both.

Kṛita—(the son bought). Vas. (17. 30-32) states that Hāriscandra purchased Śunabśepa from Ajigarta and that Śunahśepa was a kṛita son. Svayāmdatta—Vas. (17. 33–35) says that Śunahśepa became the svayāmdatta son of Viśvāmitra as stated in the Ait. Br. (referred to above in n. 1244). Paunarbhava (the son of a punarbhū)—vide H. of Dh. vol. II. pp. 608–610 for the meaning of punarbhū and the remarriage of widows (pp. 611–621).

CHAPTER XXVIII

DATTAKA (adopted son)

No branch of Hindu Law in modern times has been so fruitful in litigation as adoption. There are instances, where, fifty years after a point in the law of adoption was deemed to have been settled by a Full Bench decision, the Privy Council intervened and overruled the Full Bench decision in spite of its usual practice to follow the rule of stare decisis. The medieval digests are full of varying interpretations of the same smṛti texts and the law of adoption differs from province to province according to the authoritative medieval works and modern case law. Voluminous works like those of Shastri Golapchandra Sarkar and of Mr. Kapur have been written on the subject of adoption in all its details. There is so much bewildering confusion and so much case law on the several aspects of adoption that it is only legislation that can resolve the tangled skein of the modern law of adoption. In this section an attempt will be made to present the law of adoption as evolved by the smṛtis and medieval works and only some important cases bearing in various ways on the ancient law will be cited.

It has been shown above (pp. 641,657) how even in the times of the R̥gveda the son of the body was eagerly sought for and how the adoption of another man's son was declared to be not worthy of being thought of. Even so late an author as Śukra (II. 31) says that the adopted and other secondary sons should never be thought as one's sons, since on seeing a rich man they desire to be adopted<sup>1252a</sup>. Yet Vedic Literature contains some references to adopted sons. In the Tai S. VII. 1. 8. 1 we come across the story of Atri,<sup>1252b</sup> who gave an only son in adoption to Aurva in these words: 'Atri gave his son in adoption to Aurva who desired to have a son. He (Atri), having become empty (as it were, by giving away his only son), thought himself to be destitute of strength, to be weak and worn out (lit. stale). He (Atri) saw this catūrātra (a sacrifice of that name lasting for four days). He made preparations for it and performed that sacrifice. Then he had four valiant sons born to him, a good Hotr, a good Udgātr, a good Adhvaryu and a good sabheya (skilful speaker in an assembly)'. The story of Sunaṣṣepa in the Ait. Br. (33) shows that Viśvāmītra, though he had already one hundred and one sons, adopted Sunaṣṣepa under the name Devarāta, with the consent of his fifty-one sons (with Madhucchandas<sup>1253</sup> at their head), though the elder 50 sons disobeyed their father. It must be supposed that the later rule allowing only a sonless man to adopt did not apply to Viśvāmītra.

The sūtras and smṛtis contain hardly anything about the dattaka except his name (among the 12 kinds of sons) or the definition, as in Baud. Dh. S. II 2. 24, Manu IX 168, Yaj. II. 130, Visnu Dh. S 15 18-19, Nār. (dāyabhāga 46) The Vas Dh. S is an exception. It not only gives a definition (in 17 28-29), but is one of the earliest smṛti texts to dilate on the rules about adoption (in 15. 1-9). What it says may be set forth in one place. "Man produced from seed and blood owes his birth to his mother and father. (Hence) the mother and father have power to give, to sell or to abandon him. But one should not give or accept an only son, for, he is required to continue the line of his ancestors. A woman should neither give nor receive a son (in adoption) except with the permission of her husband. One about to take a son in adoption should, after having invited his kinsmen, having informed the ruler (of the intended adoption) and having performed in the middle part of his house a homa with the vyāhritis, take only him who is closely related and who is a kinsman not remote (in habitation and speech) If a doubt arises (as to the family of the person to be adopted) he (the person desiring to adopt) should treat one whose kinsmen are in a remote place as if he were a śūdra; for it is declared (in the Brāhmaṇa or Vedic works) 'by means of one (son, aurasa or adopted) he (the adopter) saves many.' If, after a son is taken (in adoption), an aurasa is born (to the adopter) the adopted son shall be the recipient of a fourth share" 1254. Manu IX. 141 refers to the adoption of a son who is not of the same gotra as the adopter and IX. 142 sets out the results of adoption. The other principal ancient texts quoted by the D. M. and V. Mayūkhā are those of Atri, Śaunaka, 1255 Śākala and the Kālikapurāṇa. The Mit. does not contain more than a few lines on the dattaka. It is only in such late works (belonging to the 17th century and later times) like the V. Mayūkhā, the Dattakamīmāṃsā, the Samskāra-kaustubha, the Dattakacandrikā, that the dattaka receives an elaborate treatment. In modern times the D. M. and D C (which is branded as a forgery by some Bengal writers) 1256 have been regarded by

 candrikā was fabricated by a pandit called Raghumani to support the claim of an adopted son to a Rāj, vide Golapchandra Sarkar's Tagore Law Lectures on adoption (2nd. ed. of 1916 pp. 122-126) It may, however, be noted that in Bhagwan v. Bhagwan 17 All. 294, 313 Mr. Justice Banerji refused to place any reliance on the tradition.

the Privy Council as of the highest authority in matters of adoption. In Collector of Madura v. Mootoo 12 Moo. L. A. 397 at p. 437 the P. C. observe: 'Of the Dattakamimāmsā of Nanda Pandita and the Dattaka. Candrikā of Devanna Bhatta, two treatises on the particular subject of adoption, Sir William Macnaghten says that they are respected all over India; but that when they differ the doctrine of the latter is adhered to in Bengal and by the southern Jurists, while the former is said to be the infallible guide in the provinces of Mithila and Benares'. But Jolly (T. L. L. p. 166) gives a far more correct estimate of the value of the D. M. when he says 'It is simply a misfortune that so much authority should have been attributed in the courts all over India to such a treatise as Nanda Pandita's Mimāmsā which abounds more in fanciful distinctions than perhaps any other work on adoption and it is high time that the numerous other treatises on adoption should be thoroughly examined and given their due weight'. In Bhagwan v. Bhagwan 26 L. A. 153 at p. 161 the P. C. observe 'To call it (the Dattakamimāmsā) infallible is too strong an expression and the estimates of Sutherland and of West and Buhler seem nearer the true mark; but it is clear that both works must be accepted as bearing high authority for so long a time that they have become embedded in the general law'. Yet even these works have been set at naught and departed from by Courts in India on many points as will appear in the sequel.

The principal matters to be discussed under adoption are: object of adoption, persons that may legally take in adoption, persons that may give in adoption, persons that may be taken in adoption, the requisites and ceremonies of adoption and the results of adoption.

The objects of adoption—Atri (verse 52) quoted above in note 1231 declares that that man alone who has no son should always secure a substitute for a son with all possible effort for the sake of securing the offering of pindas (funeral and śrāddha cakes) and water. The D. C. quotes this verse and also another ascribed by it to Manu<sup>1257</sup> in which the object of adoption is said to be twofold, viz securing spiritual benefit from the pindas and water (offered by him) and perpetuating the name and family of the adopter. In one of the latest cases on adoption that revolutionized the law the Privy Council] <sup>1258</sup> emphasize the peculiar religious significance that has attached to the son among all classes of Hindus, refer to the 9th chapter of Manu verses 106, 107, 137, 138 of which are instinct with this doctrine, hold that the foundation of the Brahminical doctrine of adoption is the duty which every Hindu owes to his ancestors to provide for the continuance of the line and the solemnization of the necessary rites and that in this doctrine the devolution of property, though recognized as the inherent right of the son, is altogether a secondary consideration.

Persons who can give in adoption—The primary right to give in adoption is that of the father, who can do so without consulting the mother. <sup>1259</sup> The mother cannot without the husband's permission give her son in adoption while the father is alive and capable of consenting. But the mother alone can (as said by Manu IX. 168, Yaj. II. 130) give her son in adoption if the father be dead or if he is incapable of giving consent or has entered the order of ascetics, provided he has not expressly or impliedly prohibited her to do so. If both parents are dead no one else, not even the paternal grand-father or the step-mother or a brother, can give a man in adoption. If A has a son B and is then given in adoption by his mother into another family, it was held in Martand v. Narayan that A still retained his power as father to give away B in adoption (1 L. R. 1939 Bom. 586 F. B.). This decision has been dissented from by the Nagpur High Court in Sharadachandra v. Shantabai (1 L. R. 1944 Nag. p. 544, F. B.). But the reasons given by the Nagpur High Court are not convincing and the judges seem to be influenced by the dictum of the P. C. that the adopted son is just like an aurasa son except in a few well defined cases. It cannot be supposed that the P. C. knew all the texts of the nibandhas dealing with adoption. Though the Bombay High Court held in Putalabai v. Mahadu 33 Bom. 107 that a mother did not by her remarriage forfeit her right to give in adoption her son by the first husband, that decision was subsequently overruled in Fakirappa v. Savitreva 23 Bom. L. R. 482 (F B.) which decided that after remarriage a widow has no power to give in adoption her son by the first husband. The same High Court held in Shamsing v. Shantabai (25 Bom. 551) that a Hindu father, who, after the birth of a son, became a convert to the Moslem faith, did not by reason of his conversion lose his power of giving his son, who remained a Hindu, in adoption though the physical act of giving in adoption, being accompanied by religious ceremonies, may have to be delegated by him to a Hindu. This decision was based on the Caste Disabilities Removal Act of 1851 (for which see above p. 547, n. 1021). This decision is against the spirit of the ancient Hindu Law.

1258. Vide Anarendra Man Singh v. Sanatan 60 I A. p. 242. Though it may be conceded that in the majority of cases the object of the adopter is religious, the object of the giver and of the person adopted (if he is grown up) is far from religious. The main object of the latter two at least in modern times is to secure wealth without effort and hardly any religious motives enter into their minds. No one gives a son in adoption to a poor man, though a poor man has a soul to save as much as a rich man. Besides in adoption by widows, their motive is very often far from religious. They often adopt out of pique against their husband's brothers or nephews and for benefiting themselves monetarily by making agreements with the adopted sons to share the property with them.

What persons may adopt a son.—Every male Hindu, who is of sound mind and has attained the age of discretion though he may be a minor according to the Indian Majority Act (III of 1875), can take a son in adoption provided he has no son, grandson or great-grandson, natural or adopted, living at the time of adoption. The word 'aputrena' in the verse of Atri (quoted above in n. 1231) is explained by the D. M. as meaning<sup>1260</sup> one who had no son at all or whose son is dead and as including the grandson and great-grandson. It would appear from a Bombay decision that even if a Hindu has a son, grandson or great-grandson disqualified from inheriting on the grounds mentioned above he cannot adopt (vide Bharmappa v. Ujjangauda 46 Bom. 455). In the Dattasiddhāntamañjari of Bālakṛṣṇa (folio 11b) it is stated that if the aurasa son of a person is congenitally blind, dumb or deaf he can take a boy in adoption. In Krishnaji v. Raghavendra I. L. R. (1942) Bom. 492 it has been held, relying upon 46 Bom. 455, that a widow idea is that the permission (anujñāna) of the husband is not required to be given just at the time of the adoption and that it may be given long before the actual adoption. (3) In Madras a widow may also adopt without<sup>1263</sup> her husband's authority, provided she secures the consent of the father-in-law or (if the latter be dead) of all the co-parceners of the husband, if her husband died as a member of a joint family, and if the husband was separate at the time of his death, then the consent of the father-in-law or (if he were dead) of a substantial majority of her husband's nearest sapindas. In this view the word 'of the husband' (in Vasistha) is taken as only illustrative and not literally. (4) The Vyavahāramayūkha,<sup>1264</sup> the Nirnaya-sindhu, the Samskāra-kaustubha, the Dharmasindhu, that are regarded as authoritative in Bombay and Western India, hold that the passage of Vasistha refers only to a wife whose husband is alive and that a widow may adopt without the husband's authority. According to this school the husband's authority to adopt is always to be presumed, unless he has prohibited his widow expressly or by necessary implication from adopting. The D. C. appeals to the general maxim 'another's (or the opponent's) view if not dissented from may be taken as having been approved'.

1263 In Balsubramanya v M Subbaya L. R 65 I. A. 93 at p. 99 the Privy Council say, 'their Lordships are not laying down that the requisite authority must necessarily be express but they agree with the District Judge that in order to constitute an implied authority there must be circumstantial evidence of a cogent character'. Vide The Collector of Madura v. Mootoo 12 Moo. I. A. 397 pp. 435-36 where three of these four interpretations are pointed out.

The D. M p. 3 notices the reading वन्ध्या सुतपुत्रो वापि in Saunaka's text. For the maxim अमतिविद्ध &c. vide साङ्करभाष्य on वेदान्तसूत्र II. 4. 12.

There is a large volume of case law about the construction of the authority to adopt, about the rights of co-widows in the matter of adoption, about the limits of a widow's power, which are deemed to be outside the purview of this work.

As regards the power of a widow to adopt in the Bombay school, when her husband was joint at the time of his death, the case law has fluctuated from time to time. Only a few cases may be referred to here. In Ramji v. Ghamau 6 Bom. 498 (F. B.) a Full Bench of the Bombay High Court held that a widow, whose husband was a member of a joint family at the time of his death, could not adopt when she has not the authority of her husband or the consent of the husband's undivided coparceners. After this decision had stood for 50 years the Privy Council held in Bhimabai v. Gurunathgouda<sup>1265</sup> L. R. 60 I. A. p. 25 that the Full Bench decision had already been overruled in Yadao v. Namdeo (48 I. A. 513) and that a Hindu widow can adopt without the consent of her husband's 1265. In Bhimabai's case the Privy Council purport to follow the case of Rakhmabai v. Radhabai 5 Bom H. C. R (A. C. J) p 181. But in that case the husband was separate at the time of his death. The P. C. however point out that in Yadao v. Namdeo (48 I. A. 513 at p. 529) it was said that the decision in Rakhmabai's case was not based on the fact that the husband was separate at his death or on the fact that the widow when she made the adoption had the estate vested in her and it was held that that decision was equally applicable where the husband was joint. Apart from the fact that the decision of the P. C. is opposed to the general sentiment of Hindu society at present, with the greatest respect two criticisms have to be offered against the decision in Bhimabai's case. The passage of the Vyavahāramayūkha relied upon in Rakhmabai's case and in Bhimabai's case has not been correctly understood. The Mayūkha was combating the view of others that a widow cannot adopt at all. Therefore he tried to establish that a widow can adopt without her husband's authority. But the Mayūkha did not say expressly that she can adopt without any body's authority or that she can adopt even in a joint family without the consent of the coparceners or even against their wishes. On the contrary if we look at the whole context where he quotes Yāj. I. 85 and a verse of Śrī. (930) it would appear that he meant to convey that the consent of the father of the husband or of his kinsmen would be necessary. Further, no one drew the attention of the P. C. to another passage of the V. Mayūkha where it summarizes the rite of adoption and states 'Women whose husbands are alive are entitled to adopt with the permission of their husbands; failing the husband, a woman can adopt with the permission of the (husband's) father and the rest': 'स्त्रीणां सधर्मानां भर्तृपुत्रया भर्तृभते पित्रादीनाम्' इत्य. मयूख P. 120.

co-parceners, when the husband was a member of a joint family at the time of his death. This decision was carried further by Amarendra's case (60 I. A. 242) by holding that when a widow, who had authority to adopt, adopted even after the estate had devolved on a male collateral heir such adopted son would take the estate and deprive the heir of it. As any widow was held to be able to adopt in Bombay without anybody's consent, hundreds of adoptions have taken place, which came and are coming before the courts. Another Full Bench case held that when a Hindu coparcenary came to an end on the death of the last surviving coparcener and the family property became vested in his heir, a subsequent adoption by the widow of a predeceased coparcener was valid, but it did not revive the coparcenary nor did it vest the property of the former coparcenary in the adopted son (Balu v. Lahoo I. L. R. 1937 Bom. 508). When a co-parcenary was broken up by partition among the members, it was held<sup>1266</sup> that the widow of a coparcener who died long before the partition cannot make a valid adoption and reliance was placed on a passage of the Viramitrodaya (quoted below).<sup>1267</sup>

But these decisions have been dissented from in Bajrao v. Ramkrishna I. L. R. (1941) Nagpur 707 and in K. R. Sankarlingam Pillai v. Veluchami Pillai I. L. R. (1943) Mad. 309 (F. B.), where it has been laid down that when the surviving coparceners of a joint Hindu family were in possession of the joint family properties which they obtained in a partition among themselves after the death of a coparcener and subsequent to the partition a valid adoption was made to the deceased coparcener by his widow the adopted son was entitled to reopen the partition. They rely by way of analogy on the provisions of Yaj that the posthumous son can reopen a partition already made and also on that of the disqualified heir when the disqualification is removed and on the dicta in some cases that an adoption dates back to the date of the death of the adoptive father. But no smṛti text and no digest has extended the exceptional rules about the posthumous son and the disqualified heir to a son adopted after partition. Their reasoning as regards the Bombay cases is not satisfactory. It amounts to this that as between the separating co-parceners the coparcenary may be extinct but as to the subsequently adopted son it exists i. e. a coparcenary is extinct and existing at the same time, which, to use no stronger expression, appears rather strange. Besides the general rule is that partition is made only once (Manu IX. 47). The cases of the posthumous son and of the disqualified heir are expressly provided by way of exceptions. The usual rule is that exceptions are to be strictly limited to the matters expressly stated and are not to be extended by analogy to cases not covered by the words of the exception and that other cases are governed by the general rule. It is a canon of interpretation in Hindu Law that a special text forming an exception to a general text should be construed strictly and applied only to the cases clearly falling within it (Ganqu v. Chandrabhagabai 32 Bom. 275, 283, Hanmant v. Ganesh 43 Bom. 612, 624). Further, a Hindu widow is not compelled to adopt at any particular time; she may adopt at any time during her life. In Raje Vyankatrao v. Jayavantrao 4 Bom. H. C. R. (A. O. J.) 191 it is noticed that the widow in that case adopted 71 years after her husband's death. If the reasoning of the learned Judges of Nagpur and Madras is correct then when three or four generations have succeeded to the separating coparceners, an adopted son can reopen the partition after three quarters of a century. This result, to say the least, would be most unreasonable. The Nagpur High Court observes that every Hindu widow is a potential mother. This is a fiction which has been carried too far by that court and by the Privy Council. A woman in the order of nature can hardly ever have an ausasa son beyond the age of fifty or so, but when a fiction is employed a woman can bring into existence a son even when she is 80 or 90. The Privy Council have approved of the Nagpur and Madras decisions recently in Anant v. Shankar 46 Bom. L. R. 1. They hold that a Hindu family cannot be brought to an end while it is possible in nature or law to add a male member to it or while there is still a potential mother if that mother in the way of nature or law brings in a new member. In Ramchandra v. Shankar 47 Bom. L. R. 121 (F. B.) the Privy Council decision in Anant v. Shankar has been followed and it is held that the decision in Balu v. Lahoo has been expressly overruled by the Privy Council. The consequences of these latest decisions will be most disastrous for Hindus. In Amarendra's case the P. C. state that there must be some limit to the power of a widow to adopt or some conditions in which it would be contrary to the spirit of the doctrine to admit its continuance or inequitable in the face of other rights to allow it to take effect (L. R. 60 I. A. 242 at p. 249). In Madana Mohana v. Purshothama L. R. 45 I. A. 156 the P. C. approving of Ramkrishna v. Shamrao 26 Bom. 526 (F. B.) held that, when a man dies leaving a widow and a son and that son dies leaving his own son or a widow to continue the line by adoption, the power of the former widow comes to an end and cannot be revived; that is, they were prepared to hold that the grandmother succeeding to her grandson who died unmarried could not make a valid adoption and allowed the grandfather and his ancestors to remain without the religious benefits that a son adopted by the grandmother would have conferred (in spite of the 9th chapter of Manu on which they rely in Amarendra's case). According to the recent rulings any widow whose husband died a member of a joint Hindu family may adopt at any time even when the other members become separate and may remain separate for 50 years or more and yet a large slice of the estate may be taken away after several generations have succeeded, laboured and acquired a vast estate. Further, it is not clear how far the P. C. will go in their solicitude for the adopted son. Suppose three brothers separate and one of them sells the property that came to his share. If the partition is to be opened for the benefit of a son subsequently adopted by a predeceased member's widow, will the purchaser be affected or not (supposing the sale is within 12 years of the adoption)? Supposing that the last surviving member of a family dies leaving a married daughter and a predeceased son's widow and the daughter inherits an absolute estate (as she does in Bombay) and remains in possession for 30 years, is it meant that a son thereafter adopted by the widowed daughter-in-law can divest an estate vested for thirty years in a married daughter who is not a member of the family at all after her marriage? The recent P. C. decision in Anant v. Shankar appears to indicate that whatever the length of time the adopted son will oust a collateral to whom the estate may have gone by inheritance. Intending purchasers have become afraid that there is no knowing how far the P. C. may go. These decisions will lead on to hurried sales of joint family property at whatever price may be fetched immediately a coparcener dies leaving a widow. The result of the several decisions of the P. C. has been that properties of

Hindu families in which widows of predeceased coparceners exist are not easily saleable and do not yield their proper market value. The inroads on the ancient joint family system of the Mitākṣarā have been so many that only the shell remains; the burdens are there, but the soul is gone, what with the right of each coparcener to alienate his share for consideration, the Gains of Learning Act, Act 18 of 1937, the decisions of the P. C. about adoption, sec 39 of the Transfer of Property Act. It would be better if the Legislature declared that the joint family system of the Mitākṣarā type has been abrogated, if all the innovations introduced by legislation and judicial decisions are to be kept intact.

A widow who has attained years of discretion may adopt although she is a minor according to the Indian Majority Act (of 1875) It has been held in Bengal that an unchaste<sup>1268</sup> widow cannot adopt, but in the Bombay Presidency it has been held that a sūdra widow, though unchaste, may make a valid adoption.<sup>1269</sup> If a man dies leaving a widow D and two sons A and B, who form a joint Hindu family, and subsequently A dies leaving a widow C and his brother B, and if B dies unmarried and the mother D succeeds as heir to her unmarried son B, she has still the power to adopt a son. The duty of continuing the line was cast upon both A and B and not on A alone and therefore when A dies that duty is cast on the surviving coparcener B. Therefore the proposition laid down in Ramkrishna v Shamao cannot apply and the mother of B can adopt (vide Anant v. Dnyaneshwar 46 Bom. L. R. 353)

Who may be adopted.

The person to be adopted must be a male according to the Vyavahāramayūkha<sup>1270</sup> which relies on the analogy of upanayana (that only a male undergoes, as stated in the ancient text 'astavarsam brāhmanam-upanayita'). This has been followed by

(p. 188) and Dharmasindhu<sup>1272</sup> relying upon such instances as that of Śāntā, the daughter of king Dasaratha (who was adopted by king Lomapāda) and of Prithā, who was the daughter of Śūra and was adopted by Kuntibhoja, say that even a girl may be adopted. Pannalal in 'Kumaun local customs' states that a girl may be adopted as a daughter in Kumaun by custom. The person to be adopted must be of the same caste as the adopting father. Yāj. II. 133, providing that the twelve kinds of sons that offer the pinda and take the wealth one after another in order, applies only to sons of the same caste. Śaunaka also requires sameness of caste. Manu IX 168 employs the word 'sadṛśam', which was interpreted by Medhātithi as meaning 'similar to the adopter in qualities and not in caste'. Medhātithi<sup>1273</sup> expressly states that a brāhmana may adopt a ksatriya boy. But Kullūka and the other commentators of Manu, the V. Mayūkha and other works hold that the boy must be of the same caste. The Sam. K. p 150 and Dharmasindhu go a step further by saying that even a brāhmana should adopt another of the same country. The Vāyupurāṇa (99 137-139) narrates that Bharata, son of Dusyanta, adopted Bharadvāja, son of Brhaspati and a brāhmana, who then became a ksatriya.<sup>1274</sup> The courts accept the view of Kullūka and the rest. It is likely that courts may allow a boy from a subcaste of each of the four principal varnas to be adopted by a man belonging to another subcaste of the same varna.<sup>1274a</sup> Śaunaka and Vṛddha-Yāj q by D. that the dattaka may be of a different caste, but that such a son will not take the wealth<sup>1275</sup> In spite of the words of Vas. 15. 3 and of Śaunaka (that one having an only son should not give him) the courts have held that even an only son may be given or taken in adoption and that the words of Vasistha are merely recommendatory. Vide Sri Balusu Gurulingaswami v. Sri Balusu Ramalakshimamma 26 I. A. p. 113 and Vyas Chimanlal v. Vyas Ramchandra 24 Bom. 367 (F. B.) In connection with the force of the words of Vas. 15. 3-4 stating why an only son should not be given or taken, Jaimini's rule contained in what is called the 'hetuvan-nigadadhikarana'<sup>1276</sup> (Jai. I. 2. 26-30) came in for very exhaustive discussion in Beni Prasad v. Harda Bibi 14 All. 67 (F. B.) and Radha Mohun v. Harda Bibi 26 I. A. pp. 113, 146. There are several Vedic passages like this, 'he offers the grains into the fire with a winnowing basket, for food is prepared with the help of it' (Tai Br. I. 6. 5). The question is whether such sentences put forward a reason for what is enjoined in the preceding portion or whether they are intended merely as arthavādas (i. e. for the praise of what is stated in the preceding part of the passage). Jaimini concludes that they are for the purpose of praise<sup>1277</sup> alone.

1277. Nigada means 'a sentence or sacrificial formula' and 'hetuvat' means containing a word or words (like 'hi') which are generally used to indicate a reason for a statement already made. In preparing food from grains, the śūrpa is required for winnowing them to free them from husk &c. as also are required the pan or pot for boiling the grains and a ladle for stirring the grains when they are being boiled. The Śruti passage provides that with the help of a śūrpa the homa is made of Karambhapātras (pots full of husked grains of yava slightly fried on the Dakṣiṇa fire, ground and mixed with curds) in the Varunapraghāsa, one of the *cāturmāsya*s. Vide
H. of Dh. vol. II. pp. 1095-96 and 1098 for the śūrpa used as a juhū ladle.
If the latter part of the passage contains a reason for the first part, then it would follow that the pot or ladle (both of which are useful in getting food

The eldest son also should not be taken in adoption, since, as the Mit. (on Yaj. II, 130) puts it, it is the eldest son alone who is the foremost in serving the purposes of a son as regards his genetive father acc. to Manu IX. 106 which says 'a man becomes one having a son (a father) by the mere fact of the birth of his (first) son and becomes free from the debt owed to prepared) may equally be used instead of the śūrpa. But the object of the latter half is not to assign a reason, but rather to praise and recommend the śūrpa as the means of making the homa and so nothing but the śūrpa can be employed in making the offering. The Veda is the final authority in all matters pertaining to sacrifice; it does not stand in need of giving reasons for its prescriptions but it may enlogise an act to induce people to perform it. Therefore in the hetuvan-nigadādhikarana Jaimini does not lay down (as thought by Mandlik and by the High Court in 14 All. 67, pp 73, 84, 125) that when a text is supported by a clause containing words of reason, it should be regarded as merely recommendatory (and not obligatory), but what Jaimini lays down is that clauses containing words generally meaning 'reason' are to be construed as arthavādas (praises) of the obligatory rule contained in a previous clause. Mr. Mandlik says (p 499 of his 'Hindu Law') 'It is a rule of the Pūrvamīmāṃsā that all texts supported by the assigning of a reason are to be deemed not as vidhi but simply as arthavāda (recommendatory). When a text is treated as an arthavāda it follows that it has no obligatory force whatever. Śābarasvāmī constructs an adhi-karana on this head which he calls 'hetuman-nigadādhikarana' (quoted in 14 All. 67 at p. 73). This is entirely wrong as shown above and the adhi-karana is not called 'hetuman etc.' but 'hetnvan etc.'. Acc. to Jaimini's rule the words of Vas 15. 3 'nākam putram' contain a vidhi (an obligatory rule), while the following clause containing the word 'hi' (indicative of a reason) 'sa hi santānāya pūrvosam' is merely an arthavāda, which praises the vidhi by emphasizing the importance of a son. Sarkar in his 'Mīmāṃsā Rules' (pp. 175-176) correctly represents the meaning of Jaimini, though in somewhat obscure language. The decisions in 14 All. 67 and 26 I A. 113 are correct so far as the Mit. and the Mayūkha are concerned, though the judgments in the former case are wrong in what is regarded to be the meaning of Jaimini's aphorisms constituting 'hetuvan-nigadādhikarana'. The Privy Council in 26 I A. 113 at p. 146 refer to the supposed rule of Jaimini that all precepts supported by the assignment of a reason are to be taken as recommendations only, but they express themselves guardedly and say that the rule is rather startling and they would not admit it to be true unless they made an intimate study of the smṛtis. The commentaries will make the Pūrvamīmāṃsā position clear. अस्मत्पक्षे पुनः श्रुयै स्तुयते । तेन शब्दं कियत् इति दृष्टान्तान्धारणाय न च दृष्टान्तज्ञापनाय किं तद्वि मरोचनायैव । तस्माद्धेतुवर्जितस्यापि इतिरेव कार्यमिति । शबर on जै. I. 2. 30. The शास्त्रदीपिका states 'न च वेदेनोच्यमानं श्रुतस्य होमसाधनत्वं हेतुमपेक्षते वेदस्त्वैव तत्र प्रमाणत्वाद् । अर्थवादस्त्वपेक्षितः मरोचनायैवेन । तस्मादर्थवादत्वम् ॥'.

the pitr̥s. But, in modern times this rule is taken to be only recommendatory and the adoption of the eldest son is held valid as also that of an only son<sup>1278</sup>. The V. Mayūkha (p. 108) states: acc. to the Mit. the prohibition to give the eldest son affects only the giver but not the adopter and he criticizes the Mit. that Manu IX. 106 does not forbid the giving of the eldest son, but only provides that by the birth of the first son a man becomes free from debt (to pitr̥s). So the V. Mayūkha goes a step further and holds that there is no prohibition at all either to give or take in adoption the eldest son, while the Mit., though it does not hold the adoption bad, seems to hold that the giver incurred blame. The Sam. K. p. 150 also does not allow the adoption of the eldest son. Two or more persons cannot adopt the same boy and if they do so the adoption by each is invalid<sup>1279</sup>. The Dvyāmusyāyana adoption, to be described later on, is an exception.

The texts contain rules about preference in selecting a boy for adoption, when several are eligible. The Mit.<sup>1280</sup> on Yāj. II. 132 declares that the verse of Manu IX. 182 stating that 'when out of several brothers who are sons of the same father one has a son all of them become through that son persons having a son' does not provide that he becomes really the son of all but it indicates that when a brother's son is available for adoption another boy should not be adopted. A similar explanation had been given by an ancient commentator Deva-svāmin. The D. M., D. C. (pp. 5-6) and Sam. K. p. 150 quote passages of Śaunaka<sup>1281</sup> and Śākala that a man should prefer a sapinda or a sagotra to one who is not a sapinda or of the same gotra. The D. M., D. C., the Sam. K. p. 150, the Dharma-sindhu recommend the following order: the full brother's son, then a sagotra sapinda, then a sapinda though not of the same gotra (such as a boy from one's maternal uncle's line or a paternal aunt's descendant), then one not a sapinda though of the same gotra, then one who is neither a sapinda nor a sagotra. This order is purely recommendatory and an adoption in breach of it is quite valid. It has been recently held that an adoption is invalid if the boy adopted be congenitally and incurably deaf and dumb though not an idiot. Vide Surendra v Bhōlanath I L. R. (1944) 1 Cal. 139

As to the age of the boy to be adopted there is great divergence among the medieval writers which is also reflected in the case law. In this connection certain verses of the Kalikāpurāṇa assume<sup>1282</sup> great importance. The V. Mayūkha and the D. C

VII 4. 7-8 and the above passages of Śaunaka and Śākala states the following conclusion (D C College Ms No 133 of 1886-92 folio 16 b) 'यथा ... दाक्षिणात्यैः समर्पितं मानुलकन्यापरिणयनं ... तथा अस्तपिण्डासगोत्रपरिग्रहोऽपि यस्मिन् देशे येषां कुलेऽनादिसिद्धस्तेषामेव नाप्येषामिति व्यवतिष्ठते'.

Vide H. of Dh. vol. II pp. 260-265 for cūḍāraṇa. So if a boy (who was अस्तगोत्र) was adopted after cūḍā, his position would be this that some संस्कारा would have been performed with one gotra, while others would be performed with another gotra i. e. he would thus belong to two gotras. To prevent this and to complete his affiliation into the adoptive family the putrestī had to be performed.

hold that the passage is of doubtful authenticity (as the verses are not found in several mss.), while the D. M. and the Nirṇaya-siṃdhu hold them to be genuine and the Saṃ K. pp. (169-172) after referring to these views states that those verses are opposed to what is stated in the Ait. Br. about Śunahśepa who was adopted by Viśvāmitra as a son even after upanayana. The verses are. 'O King! that son, whose samskāras up to (including) the cūḍā (tonsure) ceremony are performed with the gotra of his (natural) father, does not (i. e. cannot) attain the status of the adopted son of another. When the ceremonies of cūḍā and upanayana are performed under his own gotra (by the adoptive father) the dattaka and the other kinds become (recognised as) sons (in the adoptive family); otherwise they are called dāsa (slave). After the fifth year the adopted son and the rest cannot be (recognised as) sons. Having taken one who is five years old, one (the adopter) should first perform the putrestī'. These verses state four propositions: (1) If all samskāras from jātakarma to cūḍā (i. e. including it) have been performed in the family of birth that boy cannot be adopted in another family; (2) if a boy's cūḍā and other later ceremonies are performed in the family of adoption he is fully an adopted son; (3) a boy over five years of age cannot be adopted at all, (4) a boy whose cūḍā has been performed in the family of birth may be adopted up to five years, provided the rite called putrestī<sup>1283</sup> is first performed in the adoptive family before any other ceremony is performed on the adopted boy. The D. M. says that the best time for adoption is up to three years, then from three years to five is the next best (gauṇa) and that after five no boy can be adopted. The D. C. (p. 36) holds that a boy of the three higher classes can be adopted up to upanayana and that a śūdra boy can be adopted till his marriage. The Nirṇaya-siṃdhu seems to be of the same opinion. The V. Mayūkha<sup>1284</sup>

and Sam. K. both hold that even a boy not of the same gotra may be taken in adoption after upanayana or after marriage and even when the person to be adopted has himself had a son. In Bengal, Benares<sup>1285</sup> and Bihar the courts hold that the boy must be adopted before upanayana. The same rule holds good in Madras<sup>1286</sup>; but there it is further held that if the boy to be adopted is of the same gotra as the adopter, the adoption may be made after upanayana but before marriage. In Bombay a person may be adopted at any age, even after marriage and even after he has had children and he may be even older than the adopter.<sup>1287</sup> In the whole of India, a sūdra may be adopted only before his marriage, but in the Bombay Presidency the adoption of a married man and of one having even a child is allowed also among sūdras<sup>1288</sup>.

1287. Vide Dharma v. Ramkrishna 10 Bom 80, 84 (where it is said that though Nīlakantha's explanation that the Kālikāpurāṇa verses refer to an asagotra causes a difficulty, yet it does not follow that he adopts that interpretation as his own) in which the adoption of a married asagotra brāhmana was upheld; Kalgavda v. Somappa 33 Bom. 669 where the adoption of a married man having a son was upheld, but it was decided that the son born before adoption remained for purposes of inheritance in the natural family; Balabai v. Mahadu 48 Bom 387 (where the adopted man was older than the adopter)

1288. Lingayya v. Chengalammal 48 Mad. 407 where it was held that even a sūdra cannot be adopted after his marriage, (which decision follows the D. C.)

Śaunaka required that the boy to be adopted must be putracchāyāvaha<sup>1289</sup> (one who bears resemblance to or is a reflection of the aurasa son). This has led to differing explanations by the commentators and contradictory decisions in the several Indian High Courts. The D. M. and D. C ( p 21 ) both explain that the resemblance consists in the possibility of being procreated by the adopter himself by niyoga and the like. The meaning of the D. M. is: A brother's son or a sapinda's son or a sagotra's son can be adopted because the adopter could have procreated a son by the practice of niyoga on the wife of a brother or a sapinda or a sagotra ( according to the rules of niyoga ); but he could not have done so as regards his mother, or grandmother, daughter or sister or his mother's sister. Therefore a man cannot adopt his own brother, paternal or maternal uncle, a daughter's son or a sister's son and the like. One strange thing is that, though niyoga had been forbidden for many centuries before the D. M., the author of it brings in the rules of the long obsolete practice of niyoga<sup>1290</sup> to find out who could or could not be adopted. But stranger things were to happen. Sutherland who translated both the D.M. and the D.C explained in his notes the word 'niyogādīnā' as 'by such an appointment or marriage and the like'. Vide Stoke's Hindu Law Texts p. 590 ( Dattakamīmāmsa, sec. V. placitum 16.note ). There was no warrant for introducing the word 'marriage' after 'niyoga'. The rules of niyoga are different from those of marriage. The judges most of whom were generally ignorant of Sanskrit and had yet to decide cases among Hindus according to Hindu Law as understood by them ( vide 26 I A. 113 at page 128 about the ignorance of Sanskrit among judges ) seized upon this explanation and evolved the curious rule that no one could be adopted whose mother the adopter could not have married in her maiden state ( i. e. the relationship has reference to a time prior to marriage). This is still the law in all Presidencies<sup>1291</sup> except Bombay. Although the D. M. stated that the boy to be adopted must be capable of being procreated by niyoga, at another place it remarks, after quoting verses of Śaunaka<sup>1292</sup> and Śākala, that a boy of another gotra may be adopted except a daughter's son, a sister's son and a mother's sister's son. The Bombay High Court holds that any one may be adopted except these three (vide Ramchandra v Gopal 32 Bom 619, Walba v. Heerba 34 Bom. 491 holding that a man cannot adopt his mother's sister's son, Ramkrishna v Chinnaji 15 Bom. L. R. 824 holding the adoption of father's sister's son valid). Very strange results have followed from this viz. the Bombay High Court has upheld the validity of the adoption as a son by a man of his own half-brother (vide Gajanan v Kashinath 39 Bom. 410), of his own maternal uncle's son, and the adoption by a widow of her deceased husband's son-in-law (vide Sitaba v. Parvatiba 47 Bom 35). It should be noted that the Dvaitanirṇaya or Dharmadvaitanirṇaya<sup>1293</sup> (of Śankarabhatta, father of Nīlakantha) and the V. Mayūkha both hold after a very abstruse reasoning based on several Mīmāṃsā rules, that men of the three higher classes may notes that in that part of India a daughter's or a sister's son may be adopted (p. 14 para 56). It has been recently held that the adoption of the illegitimate son of a woman even among sūdras is invalid. Vide Apja v. Ramakka I L. R. (1941) Bom. 350. This was relied upon for holding that a woman cannot give in adoption an illegitimate son among Lingayats in Tirkangauda v. Shirappa A. I. R. (1944) Bom. 40.

It is now necessary to say a few words about the dvyāmusyāyana. A dattak is of two kinds<sup>1296</sup>, kevala (simple or ordinary) and dvyāmusyāyana (the son of two fathers). When a man gives his only son in adoption to another under an agreement that he is to be considered as the son of both the natural father (janaka or janaka-pitr) and of the adoptive father (pālaka), the son so given is called dvyāmusyāyana. The Bombay High Court has held that in order to constitute a dvyāmusyāyana an express agreement as stated above must be proved even when one brother adopts the only son of another<sup>1297</sup>. A dvyāmusyāyana inherits both in the natural and adoptive families. The word dvyāmusyāyana was employed in some of

The दत्त. च (pp 61,66) employs the word शुद्धदत्तक for केवलदत्तक Vide Laxmipatirao v. Venkatesh 41 Bom 315, Huchrao v. Bhimarao 42 Bom 277 It has already been seen (p. 659) that the Mit employs the words dvyāmusyāyana and kṣetrāja as synonyms. Nār. (dāyabhāga 23) appears to use it in the same sense, 'हिरानुस्यूयणा दसुहर्षा पिण्डोदके पृथक् । रिक्तावर्ष समादसुर्भीजिकेयोरस्तथा ॥ In this verse Nār. does not employ the form dvyāmusyāyana, but the word āmusyāyana with the adverb 'dvi' meaning 'twice'. The word dvyāmusyāyana is made up of 'dvi' (two) and 'āmsyāyana' (issue of this man, issue of so and so) The word āmusyāyana occurs in the Tai Br. II 7 7 7 (अपि य ऊर्ध्वे रसस्तमहमस्मा अनुस्यूयणाय ओजसा वीर्याय वृह्णानि) and in the Atharvaveda IV 16 9, X. 5. 36 and 44, XVI. 7 8 in the form 'āmusyāyana amsyāh putra'. In the Hīr gr. I, 9 19 we have इदमहमानुस्यूयणस्य पात्मानमवगृह्णानि, where Mātrdatta explains: अनुस्यूयणं अनुस्यूयण इति. Similar words occur in the Bhāradvāja gr II. 19. Kātyāyana has vārtika 2 'अनुस्यूयणाऽनुस्यूयणिकेत्युपसख्यानम्' on Pān. VI. 3 21. 'Āmusyāyana' is formed from 'amsya' (of this or that man) in the sense of 'apatya' acc to Pānini IV. 1. 99 (naḍḍāśibhyaḥ phak) In the Āśv. Sr. S (Uttarasatka 6 13) the word 'dvipravācana' is employed for dvyāmusyāyana, 'अथ य एते द्विप्रवाचना यथैतच्छ्रौतैश्चैश्वर्य' on which Nārāyaṇa explains, य एते द्विप्रवाचना क्रिषिद्वयपदेभ्यः यथैते श्रौतैश्चैश्वरा ह्यनुस्यूयणाः श्रौतैर्यस्य क्षेत्रे शैश्वर्येणोत्पन्ना नं वंशाः.

the smrtis as applicable to all such sons as the dattaka, kṛta<sup>1298</sup>. The V. Mayūkha quotes a prose passage from Kātyāyana (which is attributed to Pāithīnasi in D. C.) and the V. Mayūkha, D. M. and D. C. all quote a verse (which is ascribed to Pravarādhyāya by the first and to Pārjāta by the D. M.) that supports this. The D. M. and D. C. both quote two sūtras of Satyāsādha and Śābara's gloss (bhūṣya) thereon in which the ksetraja is called mitya dvyāmusyāyana and the dattaka and others are called amitya dvyāmusyāyana. Yāj II. 127 and Baud. Dh. S. II. 2. 21 provide that a ksetraja is the son of both the begetter and of the husband of the wife on whom the son is procreated. Therefore such a son is called mitya dvyāmusyāyana (because he is always the son of two fathers). When the ksetraja became obsolete and forbidden, the only dvyāmusyāyana was an only son taken in adoption with a stipulation as described above. About the dattaka Manu IX. 142 states the general rule that the dattaka loses the gotra of his genitive father and assumes that of the adopter. But a dattaka belonged to two gotras according to some, if his samskāras up to caula were performed in his natural family and the samskāra of upanayana and those that follow were performed in the adoptive family. Therefore it was not a general proposition that a dattaka always belonged to two gotras. If all the samskāras from jātakarma were performed by the adopter, then the dattaka would take the gotra of the adopter alone. Hence the sons called dattaka and 'the bought' were styled amitya dvyāmusyāyanas (who were not in all cases dvyāmusyāyanas). The D. M. states this<sup>1299</sup> twofold division of dvyāmusyāyanas and employs the words mityarat or mitya and amityarat or amitya

to denote the two varieties and restricts the former only to a son adopted with a stipulation as stated above. The ksetraja became quite obsolete many centuries ago and the courts have held that the anitya dvyāmusyāyana is also now obsolete.<sup>1300</sup> It is now held that every adoption is presumed to be in the simple (kevala) form, unless a stipulation that the boy will be the son of both is proved (when it will be a dvyāmusyāyana adoption).

When a man is adopted in the dvyāmusyāyana form, his son born after such adoption has been held to inherit as grandson to the adoptive father, if the dvyāmusyāyana son died before the adoptive father.<sup>1300a</sup>

Ceremonies of Adoption.—The most essential ingredient in adoption is the giving of the boy by the natural father and the taking of the boy by the adopter with the intention to transfer the boy to the family of the adopter. Another requisite (in some cases) is the homa called dattahoma<sup>1301</sup> which as described by Śaunaka and Baud. is given<sup>1302</sup> in the Appendix. It is not necessary that the dattahoma must be performed immediately after the giving and taking, but it may be performed later and its performance may be delegated to others when the giver or taker is a widow or a sūdra or is ill &c. Although in Vedic times women composed hymns and although Hārīta and Yama stated that women had the upanayana performed on them and could study the Veda (H. Dh. vol. II pp. 293-295), in later times it was held that women could not study the Veda, could not repeat Vedic mantras and therefore could not perform any homa (including dattahoma). Therefore some writers said that a widow could not adopt at all, while others like the V. Mayūkha said that women are to be assimilated to sūdras and so just as a sūdra can get the dattahoma performed through a brāhmana, so a widow, though she cannot herself engage in homa, may employ a brāhmana to perform the dattahoma. Vide H. Dh. vol. II. pp. 365-368 (for deterioration in the position of women), and note 1262 above and V. Mayūka quoted below.<sup>1303</sup> It has been held that the dattahoma is not<sup>1304</sup> necessary among twice-born classes if the boy to be adopted belongs to the same gotra as that of the adoptive father. Jolly (in T. L. L. p. 160) states that the Dattakadarpana refers to a text of Yama from the Sarasvativilāsa to the effect that homa is not absolutely essential in all cases. From Colebrooke's Digest V. 4 COLXXIII it appears that Jagannātha held the same view. The Dharmasindhu remarks that in certain countries an adoption of a sagotra sapinda boy can be validly effected with the mere assent of the giver and adopter without Vedic ceremonies. There is a good deal of conflict in the case law on this point, which is passed over. Among sūdras no homa is necessary. The ceremony of adoption as described by Baud. gr. sasasūtra II. 6 4-9 (which is probably the oldest on record and which was the one to be followed by the Taittirīyas or followers of the Black Yajurveda, according to D. M., Sam. K. p. 177 and the Dharmasindhu p. 161) is as follows. When about to take (in adoption) the adopter makes ready (or collects) the following viz two pieces of cloth, two ear-rings, a finger ring, an ācārya (officiating priest) who is well versed in the Veda, a bundle of kuśa grass, fuel sticks of palāśa (Butea Frondosa). Then in the midst of invited relatives, after informing the ruler, he serves food to brāhmaṇas in the assembly hall or in the middle of the house. He (the adopter) makes (the brāhmaṇas) pronounce the benedictions 'May the day be auspicious! May you fare well! May there be prosperity!' and performs the acts (usual in all homas) from drawing lines on the altar up to carrying forward the Pranīta water. Vide H of Dh. vol II pp 209-212 for the procedure common to all homas. Then he goes into the presence of the giver and begs of him 'give me your son'. The other one (the giver) says 'I give'. He (adopter) then takes hold of the boy with the words 'I accept thee for the continuity (of my family)'. Then he decks (the boy) with the pieces of cloth, the ear-rings, the finger ring and performs the acts from laying fuel sticks round the altar up to the offering of oblations into fire; he offers boiled rice into fire with the mantra 'yastvā hrđā' (Rg. V. 4. 10 or Tai. S. I. 4. 46. 1) as a pūṇuvākya<sup>1305</sup> (prayer of invitation) and with the mantra 'yasmai tvam sukrte' (Rg. V. 4. 11, Tai. S. I. 4. 46. 1) as a yājyā (prayer of worship or offering). Then having offered oblations of clarified butter with the vyāhrtis<sup>1306</sup> he performs the acts from the offering to Agni Svistakṛt down to the giving of the cow and presents. He (the adopter) gives as dakṣiṇā (fee) to the priest these very pieces of cloth and rings (with which the boy was decked).

The procedure laid down by Saunaka, who appears to be much later than Baud., is somewhat different (though there is a good deal common to both) and is meant for the students of the R̥gveda (acc. to Sam. K. p. 175). A few salient points may be noted. The adopter should fast the previous day, he should offer madhuparka to the officiating priest, should perform all the details from the placing of fuel sticks on the fire up to the purification of clarified butter with the blades of kusa grass. The giver recites (when begged) the five verses beginning with 'ye yañṇena' (Rg. X. 62. 1-5) and the adopter holds the boy with both hands while repeating the mantra 'devasya tvā' (Āśv. gr. I. 20. 4), mutters the rk 'angād-angād' (quoted above on p. 641 n. 1202) and smells the boy on his head. The adopter offers boiled rice with Rg. V. 4. 10, X. 85. 38, X. 85. 41-46. A much more elaborate procedure is set out in the V. Mayūkha (pp. 120-123 text) and the Dharmasindhu (III pūrvārtha pp. 160-161).

The results of adoption—Adoption has the effect of transferring the adopted person from his natural family into the adoptive family. Adoption confers upon the adopted person the same rights and privileges in the family of adoption as the son of the body (aurasa) except in a few well defined cases. The basic text on this point is that of Manu<sup>1307</sup> IX. 142 which may be literally rendered as follows: 'The son given should not take the gotra (the family name) and the wealth of his natural father; the pinda (the cake of boiled rice offered to deceased ancestors in śrāddhas) follows the gotra and the wealth (i. e. is invariably concomitant with them); of him who gives (his son in adoption) the svadhū (obsequial rites) ceases (so far as that son is concerned)'. The preceding verse (Manu IX. 141) states that the adopted son takes the wealth of his adoptive father and all that this verse says is that, after adoption, the son given in adoption does not take the name of his natural father and has no right in the wealth that then is the natural father's and that he does not perform the obsequial and śrāddha rites for his natural father. But from this verse a learned Hindu Judge derived the sweeping proposition that 'the theory of adoption depends upon the principle of a complete severance of the child adopted from the family in which he is born, both in respect to the paternal and maternal line, and his complete substitution into the adopter's family as if he were born in it'. There is no warrant for the idea of complete severance emphasized here. This dictum was followed in many cases and was accepted by the Privy Council<sup>1308</sup>. Another great Judge went so far as to say that 'an absolute adoption appears to operate as birth of the boy in the family of adoption and as civil death in the family of birth, having regard to the legal consequences that are incidents of such adoption'<sup>1309</sup>. But then the P. C felt that matters were being carried too far and administered the warning<sup>1310</sup> that "As has been more than once observed the expressions 'civilly dead or as if he had never been born in the family' are not for all purposes correct or logically applicable but they are complimentary to the term 'new birth'." We have to see what construction was put upon the verse of Manu by authoritative digests. The V. Mayūkha explains Manu IX. 142 and arrives at the conclusion that the four words gotra, rikha, pinda and svadhā are not to be taken literally but they are only used to indicate all those consequences only in relation to the natural father and the like that are brought about by their connection with the pinda and the verse of Manu conveys the cessation of all those consequences only. It further adds that the son on being given away in adoption ceases to have similar relationship to his brother, paternal uncle (in the family of birth). It should be noted that the V. Mayūkha does not say that the son given away is dead to the family of birth or ceases to have any connection whatever with the members of the family of birth, but restricts the cessation of relation to the offering of pinda and the taking of the estate after he is adopted. The D. M. quotes<sup>1311</sup> the Sm. C. (II. 289) and holds that by the gift the adopted son ceases to have the same gotra as the giver. The D. C. (pp 23-24) states<sup>1312</sup> the same proposition, without naming the Sm. C. The learned Judges who had to decide cases of adoption, even if they knew Sanskrit, do not generally appear to have consulted authoritative works other than the few that had been translated and were quite unaware as to whether even the cessation of the pinda and gotra and of the right to wealth when a son was given away was so universally accepted by the leading Dharmaśāstra works as they thought. The Sarasvativilāsa (p. 394) quotes a text of Viṣṇu <sup>1313</sup> that even the adopted son should perform the obsequial rites of the natural father and explains that Manu IX. 142 applies when the natural father has no issue at the time of his death. Rudraskanda on Khādīra gr. III. 5. 16 says the same. Kamalākara, the author of the Nirnayasindhu <sup>1314</sup> and a first cousin and contemporary of Nilakantha expressly states that Manu IX. 142 only applies when the natural father has a son or sons (other than the one given away) and quotes Kātyāyana and Laugākṣi cited in the Pravaramaṇjarī (p. 146) in support. The Dharmasindhu <sup>1315</sup> also says that when a boy of another gotra is adopted after his upanayana is performed in the family of birth or when only the upanayana is performed by the adoptive father, the adopted boy should repeat both gotras at the time of bowing at the feet of elders or in śrāddha and other rites; but when all the ceremonies including the cūḍa are performed by the adoptive father then the adopted boy has only one gotra (viz. that of the adopter).

The plain meaning of the verse of Manu (IX 142) is that when a man gives away his son in adoption, then that son is transferred into another family, does not perform the śrāddha and similar rites for the giver and cannot claim to take the wealth of his natural father as a son on the father's death or demand a partition from his father. The other son or sons of the giver are to perform the śrāddhas for the father and to succeed to the family wealth. But this verse has been twisted by some High Court decisions to yield another rule. Suppose A, a Hindu, has an only son B. On A's death B takes the whole ancestral property as the only surviving co-parcener and then B is given in adoption by his mother to X. Suppose B has a daughter C born to him before his adoption to X. Does B forfeit the estate taken by him as the last surviving male with the result that on B's adoption to X his daughter C takes the estate (which had already vested absolutely in B) as if he was dead in the family of A. The Bombay High Court has held in two decisions that on B's<sup>1316</sup> adoption to X in the above illustration he loses or forfeits the property he took as the last surviving co-parcener in the family of A and his daughter C would take the estate of B as if he were then dead (though he is actually living). The result of these decisions is that the verse of Manu is construed as laying down that though a man may have been absolutely entitled to certain property as a member of one family, on his adoption into another family he loses that estate which then passes on to his heir as if he had died on the day of adoption. This construction of the verse of Manu has not been accepted by the Madras and Calcutta High Courts,<sup>1317</sup> which hold that an adoption does not divest any property which has vested in a man previous to his adoption into another family. It may be noted that the Bombay High Court itself gave a decision<sup>1318</sup> which is inconsistent in principle with the two decisions

1318. Vide Mahableshwar v Subramanya 47 Bom 542. In Manikbai v Gokuldas 49 Bom 520 (at p 525) both the cases viz 40 Bom 429 and 47 Bom. 542 are apparently quoted with approval, but it is extremely difficult to reconcile the last two cases. If on adoption a separated coparcener is not divested of the estate already taken by him at a partition because the share taken by him cannot be said to be the estate of his natural father within the meaning of Manu IX 142, the estate taken by a sole surviving co-parcener also cannot be divested by his subsequent adoption, because at the adoption it had ceased to be the estate of his natural father long before the adoption, because when a co-parcener dies his rights lapse to the other co-parceners and because the root cause of being entitled to partition and taking as surviving coparcener is the same viz the birth right of a son under the Mitākṣarā

cited above, when it held that where a father and his four sons partitioned ancestral family property and one of the sons was subsequently given in adoption into another family, the son so adopted was not divested by the subsequent adoption of the property already taken by the son on partition. In a still later case the Bombay High Court approves of its first decision in 40 Bom 429 and observes: <sup>1319</sup> 'the verse of Manu refers not only to the riktha of the natural father but also to the gotra of the natural father. It is quite clear that the gotra of the natural father is vested in the son by his birth. The gotra so vested in the son ceases after the son is given in adoption. It is difficult to understand why the riktha which is spoken of in the same manner as gotra in the verse should not cease by the entire cessation of connection with the natural family. The gotra and riktha are inextricably joined together in a dvandva compound and it would follow logically as well as grammatically that the adopted son must lose both together and cannot lose the former and keep the latter.' In this passage the premises that there is entire cessation of connection with the natural family is entirely wrong as has already been shown and will be shown a little later on. The adoptee's connection with the gotra of the natural family does not cease for all purposes at all. Therefore the reasoning of the passage quoted above is entirely misconceived and is further opposed to two well known rules of the Mīmāṃsā evolved for the construction of texts. On the interpretation given to Manu IX. 142 by the Bombay decisions that verse lays down two rules (vidhis), viz. (1) a person adopted into another family will not take the wealth of his natural father or any one in that family after adoption; (2) that a person adopted into another family loses or forfeits on adoption wealth that he may have already taken absolutely in the natural family as a member of that family before adoption. These are two entirely different propositions and the rule of mīmāṃsā is that one and the same sentence <sup>1320</sup> should not be construed as laying down two rules (vidhis) applicable to different sets of circumstances. To so construe a text is to be guilty of the fault of vākya-bheda (splitting up of a sentence so as to yield two distinct rules). The V. Mayūka construed Manu IX 142 so as to indicate only one sense and avoid the fault of vākya-bheda on the analogy of two examples discussed in the Pūrvamīmāṃsā<sup>1321</sup> works, but if the reasoning of the Bombay High Court were followed the same fault to avoid which Nīlakantha strives hard would be committed. There is another mīmāṃsā rule<sup>1322</sup> which will be violated by the Bombay High Court's interpretation of Manu IX. 142 viz. when an already existing thing or entity and something to be accomplished or brought about in future are spoken of together in a sentence the thing already existing or accomplished is mentioned simply for the sake of the thing to be accomplished. The accomplished fact is adoption itself. Manu who mentions adoption or the adopted son which is an accomplished entity also mentions along with it the taking of property (rikthaharana); hence that taking must have reference to the future bringing about and not the undoing of rikthaharana which had already taken place long before.

1319 Vide Bai Kesarba v Shivsangji 34 Bom. L. R. 1332 which accepts 'na haret' as meaning 'shall not take', and quotes on pp 1341-42 the D. M., D. C. and V. Mayūkhā on this verse. The P. C. decision in Raghu Ray Chandra v Subhadra L. R. 55 I A 139 does not approve of 40 Bom 429 as regards the exact point of decision viz the forfeiture of property already vested before adoption.

That the gotra of the natural family persists in some matters even after a person is adopted is made clear by the digesters. The Sam<sup>1323</sup> K. (p. 182) says that every dattaka must, when entering on marriage, avoid the gotra of his natural as also of his adoptive father. The Dharmasindhu (III. p. 161) says the same and states that the prohibition against marriage with a girl of the gotras of the natural and adoptive fathers is absolute and not restricted to seven or five degrees. Thus if there is no total or absolute cessation of gotra relation with the natural family for all purposes there is no reason why in the case of wealth already taken before adoption there should be a cessation or forfeiture or why the cessation of relation as to riktha, should not be restricted to the future. As regards sapinda relationship there is some conflict among the digests. The D. M.<sup>1234</sup> states that the dvyāmuṣyāyana has to observe the prohibitions against marrying a sapinda girl up to three degrees in the families of the natural father and of the adoptive father, while the simple dattaka has to observe sapinda relationship based upon the presentation of rice balls in the adoptive father's family for three generations (since the adopted son can generally have no particles of the body in common with the adoptive father) and in the natural family sapinda relationship based upon particles of the same body for seven generations. The Nirṇayasindhu (III pp. 290-291) sets out the various conflicting views and gives it as its own opinion that the sapinda relationship must be looked to in marriage up to seven generations in the natural as well as in the adoptive family (in the latter it being based on the offering of balls of rice). According to the V. Mayūkha (p. 119) the simple adopted son has sapinda relationship in the adoptive father's family for seven generations and in the adoptive mother's family for five generations and it seems to hold that there is no sapinda relationship in the natural family (owing to Manu IX. 142). The D. C. (pp. 61-66) appears to hold that the dvyāmuṣyāyana has to observe sapinda relationship (as stated in the D. M.), while as to the simple dattaka there is sapinda relationship only in the adoptive family for seven generations (as indicated by Manu IX. 142). The Dharmasindhu (III p. 161) states that sapinda relationship depends in its degrees on the question whether the adoption is made after upanayana in the natural family or before upanayana or whether all samskāras from jūlakarma are performed in the adoptive family.

The Bombay High Court<sup>1325</sup> has held that the adopted son cannot marry within prohibited degrees in the natural family, that to that extent an adopted son cannot be considered as not to have been born in his natural family and that the sapinda relationship is recognized in both the families for the purpose of prohibition of marriage.

The Nir. S., the Dharmasindhu<sup>1326</sup> and the D. C pp. 48-49 declare that the adopted son can perform the śrāddha of his natural father if the latter has at his death no son or other qualified person to perform it. The Nir S. and the Sam<sup>1327</sup> K. (pp. 185-186) both say that the adopted son has to observe three days' mourning on the death of the natural father and vice versa; but the D M. and D. C (p. 68) differ and state that the simple adopted son has to observe no mourning for his natural father or other relatives in the natural family. If a married man having a son is given in adoption (which is possible in the Bombay Presidency) the son (born before the adoption) remains in the natural family and does not acquire the gotra and rights to property of the family into which his father is adopted. Yet the father who has gone into another family by adoption has been held to retain his right to give in adoption his son who was born before his own adoption and who remains in the natural family<sup>1328</sup>.

From the above discussion it follows that the person adopted retains the tie of blood with his natural family (so that he cannot marry a girl within the prohibited degrees from that family), the saṁskāras already performed in the natural family are not repeated on him after adoption, he still retains the gotra so far that he cannot marry a girl having the same gotra as his natural father and further he has according to most writers to observe mourning for his natural father. Therefore it is clear that the severance from the natural family brought about by adoption is only partial and restricted to pinda and rikṭha and connected matters and not complete as stated or assumed in some decided cases.

The adopted son is entitled to inherit in the adoptive family as fully as if he were a natural born son i. e. he may inherit not only to his adoptive father, but also to that father's brother or cousin if the latter have no son or no other nearer heir. The adopted son also inherits to the adoptive mother and her relations<sup>1329</sup>, viz. her father and brother. Conversely, the adoptive mother and her relations in her father's family are entitled to inherit to him.

Vas. and Baud. both laid down that if after a son is taken in adoption an aurasa son is born to the adoptive father the former takes a fourth share. There is conflict among the smṛtis and the digests about the share of the adopted son when an aurasa is subsequently born, and about the meaning of 'a fourth share'. The Dāyabhāga (X. 13 p. 148) and V. C. p. 150 quote a verse of Kātyāyana<sup>1330</sup> that when an aurasa son is born, other kinds of sons, if of the same caste as the father, take only a third of the estate. It has been held in Bengal that in these circumstances the adopted son takes one third of his adoptive father's estate. In Benares and among Jains<sup>1331</sup> the adopted son gets one fourth of the estate. The S. V. p. 393 holds that he gets<sup>1332</sup>  $\frac{1}{4}$ th. In Bombay it<sup>1333</sup> has been held that the adopted son takes not  $\frac{1}{4}$ th of the whole estate, but  $\frac{1}{4}$ th of the share of the aurasa son i. e.  $\frac{1}{4}$ th (the aurasa son taking  $\frac{1}{4}$ ths). In Bombay the same rule applies among sūdras<sup>1334</sup>. But in Bengal and Madras it has been decided, relying on a passage in the 1338a It appears to me that the V. Mayūkha went far beyond the spirit of the ancient smṛti texts and of most of the medieval digests when it allowed the adoption of a married man or even of one who had already had a son. The son to be adopted, it was declared by Śaunaka and others, should be a reflection of an aurasa son. Therefore he must be adopted at an age when by proper training and environment he will come to entertain towards the adoptive parents the same feeling that an aurasa son has. Hence it appears to me that the Legislature should intervene and provide that no one can be adopted after his upanayana, or at all events after his marriage, in the natural family. It is natural for a sonless man or a widow to feel, apart from religious considerations, the necessity of a young person as a solace, security and help in old age, and to adopt a person. Even in England by the Adoption of Children Act (16 and 17 Geo V chap. 29) the adoption of a minor is now allowed after observing certain formalities. Further, no adoption by a widow who has not become major according to the Indian Majority Act should be held valid. An agreement or a transfer of the smallest property by a person who is a minor according to that Act is held to be absolutely null and void. There is no reason why an adoption by a widow of 15 or 16 should be upheld when that adoption divests her of all (or now half of) the property of the husband held by her.

CHAPTER XXIX

ORDER OF SUCCESSION AFTER THE SON

It has been stated above that dāya is either apratibandha or sapratibandha and that sons, grandsons and great-grandsons take the first kind of dāya. If a man has no son either aurasa or secondary (viz. the dattaka, the other kinds of sons being now forbidden or obsolete), then his property devolves in a certain order. When a man dies sonless and is a member of a joint Hindu family then on the surviving coparceners the whole estate devolves except that after 1937 (by Act XVIII of 1937) his widow takes his place as to the joint family property. But if he dies separated and has male issue (from whom also he is separate) then his male issue will succeed to him in a body viz. his son, grandson (son of a predeceased son) and great-grandson (son of a predeceased son's predeceased son) will together take his separate property per stirpes. From Manu IX. 137 (which is the same as Vas. 17.5 and Visnu Dh. S. 15. 46) and 186 and Yāj. I 78 it follows that the son, grandson and great-grandson equally confer great spiritual benefit and so are the principal group of heirs. According to the strict theory of the Mitākṣarā as stated above, son, grandson and great-grandson take by birth an interest even in property acquired by a man himself, but they have no power to prevent him from alienating it. If one or more out of a man's sons, grand-sons or great-grandsons are separate from him then on his death his self-acquired property will first be taken by those sons, grandsons and great-grandsons that are joint with him and if none of these is joint with him, the separated son, grandson and great-grandson will succeed per stirpes to his estate.<sup>1339</sup>

This view is at least as old as the Baud.<sup>1310</sup> Dh. S. I. 5. 113-115 which speak of the three ascendants of a man, of himself, of his full brothers and of his son, grandson and great-grandson from a savarna wife as one group called ambhakta-dāya sapindas and that in the absence of these only, the wealth of a man goes to his sakulyas.

On the succession to the property of a man dying without male issue (i. e. without son, grandson or great-grandson) the basic texts are two verses of Yājñavalkya<sup>1341</sup> (II. 135-136): 'The lawfully wedded wife, the daughters and (the daughter's son), the parents, the brothers, their sons, gotrajas (agnatic kinsmen), bandhu (cognatic relation), a pupil, a fellow student—on failure of each preceding one out of these each succeeding one is entitled to take the wealth of a man who is dead (lit. who has gone to heaven) and who leaves no male issue. This rule applies to all varnas'. The Visnu Dh. S. (17. 4-15) is almost to the same effect. The word 'aputrasya' in Yāj. is taken to mean one having no son, grandson or great-grandson (at the time of death) by V. C., Raghunandana and Mitramisra<sup>1342</sup>. The Mit. explains the words 'to all varnas' as applying even to all that are the offspring of anuloma or matiloma unions

We have separate rules for inheritance to the property of males and to that of females. Then there is great difference as to the rights of women as heirs. First, inheritance to the property of males will be taken up. Here again the fundamental principles are different acc. to the Mit and the Dāyabhāga

Among the heirs (apart from male issue) of a man as regards his separate property the first is the widow. The wife's right to succeed to her deceased husband's estate, when he died separated and un-reunited, was acknowledged only after a long struggle extending over centuries. The passage of the Tai. S. VI. 5. 8. 2 speaking of women as 'adāyādīḥ' has already been quoted (on p. 606). The meaning of that word is somewhat dubious, as will be shown later on. The Āp. Dh. S. II. 6. 14. 2 states generally<sup>1343</sup> that in default of a son the nearest sapinda succeeds but does not expressly mention the wife as an heir, though it mentions (in II 6. 14 4) the daughter as a possible heir. Baud also omits the wife as an heir Vas mentions no woman as heir. Gaut 28. 19 appears to state that the wealth of one who dies without issue should be taken by his sapindas, sagotras and sapravaras or his wife (i. e. according to Haradatta, the wife takes a share only along with the nearest sapinda or sagotra and not exclusively). Haradatta himself was of this view. Manu does not declare that the wife is the heir of a sonless man and there are certain passages which impliedly exclude her, as e. g. Manu IX. 185 (the father takes the wealth of a man dying sonless or his brothers take it), IX. 217 (the mother should take the wealth of a sonless man). Śāṅkha (q. by the Mit., Dāyabhāga XI 1. 15) prescribes that the wealth of a man dying without issue goes to his brothers, failing them the parents take it or the eldest wife.<sup>1344</sup> Devala (q. by the Dāyabhāga XI. 1. 17-18 and V. R. p 593) arranges the heirs in order as full brothers, daughters, father, half brothers, mother and wife. It may be noticed that in the days of Kālidāsa the sonless widow did not succeed to the wealth of her deceased husband, but was only entitled to maintenance and that the estate escheated to the king. This is clear from the letter written by the minister to king Dusyanta about the wealth of a merchant who perished in a ship-wreck (Act VI) Yāj. and Visnu among smṛti writers were probably the first to clearly enunciate the rule that the wife was the foremost heir of a man dying without male issue. Br. makes the wife the first heir of a sonless man and supports his opinion with reasons. He says:<sup>1345</sup> 'In the Veda and in the doctrines of the smrtis and in popular usage the wife is declared to be half the body of the husband, equally sharing the consequences of good and evil acts. Of him whose wife is not dead half the body survives. How can another obtain the property, while half the body (of the deceased) lives? Although kinsmen, although his father, mother or his relatives may be alive, the wife of a man dying without issue succeeds to his share. A wife dying before her husband takes away his sacred fires (i. e. she is cremated with the sacred Vedic fires, if he be an Agnihotrin); but when the husband dies before the wife, she takes his property, if she be chaste'. Even when Yāj. proclaimed the paramount right of succession in the case of widows there were other smrtis and some early commentators who did not subscribe to that view. Nār. (dāyabhāga, 25-26) provides that if among several brothers one who is childless dies or becomes an ascetic the others should divide the property excepting stridhana, that they should make provision for his women till their death in case they remain faithful but if they are otherwise (i. e. unfaithful) they may cut off the allowance'. Nār. (dāyabhāga, 50-51) provides that on failure of sons, the daughter, sakulyas, bandhus, a man of the same caste, the king succeed in order and thus omits the wife altogether. Vyāsa<sup>1346</sup> (quoted by Haradatta on Gaut. 28-19 and by Sm. C. II. p. 281) holds that a wife may take the whole of the husband's property if it does not exceed 2000 panas in value. The Mit. tells us that Śrīkara espoused this position that the wife takes the whole if the property is small, but only maintenance if the property is large and refutes it by saying that it is opposed to the spirit of Yāj. who allows a share to the wife and the mother even along with sons when even joint family property is being partitioned and that the view is also liable to the fault of udhvaśamyā on the analogy of the Mīmāṃsā rule stated above on p. 605.<sup>1347</sup> The same text of Yāj. will have to be held as laying down only maintenance when the husband left great wealth, and also laying down a share equal to that of a son when the husband leaves inconsiderable wealth.<sup>1347a</sup> Another view was maintained

1347 पिण्डगो ..... नपत्यस्य । बीजं वा लिप्सेत । गौ 28. 19-20 This is explained by धर्तेश्वर as 'बीजं वा लिप्येत् भजेत यदि बीजं लिप्सेत्'. The Mit. says that this really means that there are two courses open to the widow, viz. she may remain chaste and succeed along with the sapindas or she may resort to niyoga.

1347a Jai. VII. 3 19-25 as understood by the Mit. may be briefly explained as follows: The Cāturmāsyaś (seasonal sacrifices) are four, Vaiśvadeva, Varunapraghāsa, Sākamedha, Sunnāsiriya (vide H of Dh vol II. pp 1091-1105 for description). In regard to these the following texts occur in the Veda and are cited by Sabara and others: द्वयोः मणयन्ति । तस्माद् द्वौ यन्ति ऊरु वा एते यज्ञस्य यद्गुणमवाप्तश्च साकमेधश्च । तस्माद् द्वौ यन्ति । .. उपात्र वपन्ति । न वैश्वदेवे उत्तरवेदिषुपकिरन्ति न शुनासीरीये । (They carry forward the fire in these two; therefore they march on two, indeed the Varunapraghāsa and Sākamedha are the two thighs of yajña; therefore they (are said to) march on two; they fill with earth (the uttaravedi) here, but not so in Vaiśvadeva nor in Sunnāsiriya). Sabara reads 'उत्तरवेदिषुपक्वपन्ति' while Mit. reads as above. Pranayana means 'carrying towards the east fire from the Gārhapatya fire to the Āhavanīya'. There is pranayana in the Darsapūrnamāsa which is simple (and without details) and there is also pranayana in Agnistoma which is full of details (and not simple). An uttaravedi (vide H of Dh vol. II pp. 1096-1097 for description) is not required in Darsapūrnamāsa, but it is required in a Soma sacrifice. The cāturmāsyaś are modifications (vikṛti) of the Darsapūrnamāsa, so that whatever is prescribed in the latter follows in the absence of express directions as a matter of course in the former. In the texts quoted above the words 'dvayoh pranayanti' lay down a vidhi and the words 'tasmād . sākamedhaśca' contain an arthavāda which forms a syntactical whole with the vidhi and which only eulogizes it. The pūrvapakṣa argues: As cāturmāsyaś are modifications of Darsapūrnamāsa, it is unnecessary to lay down expressly a simple pranayana in them, therefore, the pranayana prescribed in 'dvayoh pranayanti' must be the pranayana as described in a Soma sacrifice. Further the prohibition of an uttaravedi in Vaiśvadeva and Sunnāsiriya indicates the same, since a prohibition implies that there was a fear that what is prohibited would have otherwise followed and since an uttaravedi is required only in a Soma sacrifice. Therefore the pranayana prescribed in 'dvayoh pranayanti' is of the Somapranayana type. To this a partisan of the siddhāntin (siddhāntakadeśin) replies as follows:—The real view is that in dvayoh pranayanti the pranayana is of the simple darśapūrnāmāsa type and the prohibition about Vaiśvadeva and Sunāsīriya is not to be explained as you do; in the words 'upātra vapanti' an uttaravedi is generally (without exception) prescribed for all *cāturmāsya*s, but in the following two sentences 'na vaiśvadeve &c.' the preparation of uttaravedi is forbidden in the case of Vaiśvadeva and Sunāsīriya, therefore the partisan says that the idea is that, though the pranayana is of the simple darśapūrnāmāsa type, yet an uttaravedi is prepared in the 2nd and 3rd but not in the first and fourth of the *cāturmāsya*s. The pūrvapakṣin retorts that even on this construction vidhivaisamya would still be there as follows: as there is prescription of uttaravedi in all four and prohibition in two (viz. the first and fourth of the four *cāturmāsya*s), there is an option of uttaravedi in these latter two (as the rule is 'tulyabala-virodhe vikalpah') and there is no option as to the other two and there will arise the fault of vidhivaisamya, the same sentence viz. 'upātra vapanti' being taken as an unqualified and independent rule about the 2nd and 3rd of the *cāturmāsya*s and taken as an optional rule as to the 1st and 4th.

The proper siddhānta view is as follows: Though the words 'dvayoh pranayanti' are very general, they are to be narrowed down so as to refer to only two (viz. 2nd and 3rd of the *cāturmāsya*s) on account of the recommendatory passage that follows (speaking of Varunapraghāsa and Sākamedha as the thighs of cāturmāsya yajña). The vidhi and the following arthavāda form one syntactical whole (ekavākya), as laid down by Jai I, 2, 7. The arthavāda passage means that just as a man marches on in strength if his thighs are strong, so the cāturmāsya sacrifice reaches a successful close by means of Varunapraghāsa and Sākamedha in which an uttaravedi is specially prepared and fire is laid thereon (being taken from the āhavanīya fire by the adhvaryu and pratiprasthātr). Therefore the meaning is that there is pranayana in the 2nd and 3rd out of the four *cāturmāsya*s and uttaravedi is prescribed in those two alone and the words 'there is no uttaravedi in Vaiśvadeva and Sunāsīriya' are a mere anuvāda (repetition of what is already known) and not a prohibition, as in the words 'fire should be kindled on the earth and not in the sky nor in heaven'. On this interpretation there is no vidhivaisamya. Sabara makes two *adhyakarana*s of Jai VII. 3. 19–25, while Kumārila makes one adhyakarana of these seven *sūtra*s. He further differs as to the siddhānta, which, according to him, is that in 'dvayoh pranayanti' there is a special (apūrva) kind of pranayana prescribed, brāhṛta (of darśapūrnāmāsa type) and saumika pranayana being the two other views which he rejects. The Subodhinī on the Mit. very lucidly explains this discussion and concludes. यथा तत्रैकदेशिमतं विधिर्वैयर्थ्यं द्वापस्तथा पक्षः कार्यो समाश्रितः, 'मातात्पुत्रं समं हरेत्' इत्यत्र च सकृदाज्ञातौ अंशसमशब्दावपि भर्तृवद्व्ययनत्वपक्षे 'भरणं चारय कुर्वीत्य' इत्यादिवाक्यपर्यालोचनया जीवनोपयुक्तपक्षपरौ स्वरूपधनत्वे तु वाक्यान्तरनिरपेक्षेण नित्यवस्तुनां शसमांशपराविति श्रीकराद्युक्तत्वात्पराविति विधिवैयर्थ्यदोषो दुर्बल इति । The Bālamhṛti repeats the Subodhinī almost word for word. This njāṇa occurs in Dvayabhāga XI, 5. 16 also.

take the estate of her sonless deceased husband if she submitted to niyoga and procured a son for the husband. This view derived support from Gautama 28.19-20, Vas. 17 65 (who prohibits niyoga if resorted to through greed of wealth), and Manu IX. 146 and 190 (which call upon the surviving brother to procreate a son on the widow of his brother and to hand over the deceased's share to that son). This view is refuted by the Mit.,<sup>1348</sup> Sm. C. II p. 294, V. P. pp 495-497.

Even Medhātithi,<sup>1349</sup> generally a liberal writer, holds that the widow is prohibited from inheriting her husband's wealth.

The Mit. after an elaborate statement and refutation of the views of Śrīkara, Dhāreśvara and others due to the conflict among smṛti texts on the question of the widow's right of succession, establishes the proposition that the widow, if chaste, is entitled to the whole of her deceased sonless husband's wealth.<sup>1350</sup> Almost all writers since the time of the Mit. accept the widow's right to succeed to her husband's wealth. Many writers note that the smṛti texts on the heirship of the widow are in conflict.<sup>1351</sup> They explain verses like those of Nār. (dāyabhāga 25-26) providing only maintenance for women either as

It may, however, be noted that in a small treatise called स्वश्रुतुवाधनसंवाद् of which there are three Mss. in the Maharaja's Sarasvatī Mahal Library at Tanjore (Nos. 19003-5 described in vol. XVIII of their new Descriptive and his mother, both take equal shares in the estate. The mainstay of the argument is a verse of Kāt. quoted in the व्य मयूख 'भो कुमहंति कलसां शुक्ल-वणे रता । न कुयोषादि शुक्लां चैलं पिण्डं नियोजयेत्' from which the conclusion referring to exclusively kept concubines of the deceased or to the wives of re-united coparceners.

Patni means a woman who is married to the deceased, the word being formed from 'pati' with an affix in the sense of 'being fit to join with the husband in the performance of sacrifice' (Pāṇini IV. 1. 33). The Sm. C. II. p. 290 quotes a verse that a woman who is procured for sexual intercourse in exchange for money is only a dāsi and is not a patni and therefore is not entitled to inherit to a sonless paramour.<sup>1352</sup> The Band. Dh. S. I 11. 20 quotes a similar verse. Several texts require that the widow must be chaste before she can claim the inheritance of the deceased. A text attributed to Vṛddha-Manu<sup>1353</sup> says, 'The wife alone, being sonless and keeping the bed of her lord unsullied and leading a life of religious observances, may offer pinda to her deceased husband and take his entire estate'. Kāt. (926) also declares that 'the wife who is chaste takes the wealth of her husband'. The widow must be chaste at the time the inheritance opens. The courts have held that once the husband's estate is vested in the widow, it will not be divested or forfeited by reason of unchastity subsequent to the death of the husband.<sup>1354</sup> If the widow remarries after inheriting, then, though the remarriage of a widow is legalized by the Hindu Widows' Remarriage Act (XV of 1856), she forfeits the estate of the husband taken by her or the estate which she took as a widowed mother of her deceased son and it passes to the other heirs of the husband or son as if she were then dead and this applies to widows of all castes according to almost all High Courts (even when remarriage

According to the Dāyabhāga there being no apratibandha dāya, the widow of a sonless member even in a joint family succeeds to his share in the family property and there is no difference between joint family property and separate property.

In the case of sūdras, if the owner dies leaving a widow or a daughter or a daughter's son and an illegitimate son, it has been held by the courts following Yāj. II. 134, the Mit. and Dāyabhāga IX. 31 that the widow or daughter or daughter's son takes one half and the illegitimate son takes the other half.<sup>1356</sup>

The rights of the widow in property inherited by her from her husband are limited. Kaut. III. 2 was<sup>1357</sup> probably the first to propound clearly the characteristics of the Hindu widow's estate and the verse of Kāṭ quoted below is remarkably close to the words of Kaut. The Mahābhārata (Anuśāsana 47. 24) states that women have only the right to enjoy the estate of their husbands and that they should not waste or destroy the husband's estate (by gift, sale &c.). Br.<sup>1338</sup> (S. B. E. vol. 33 pp. 377-78 verses 50-51 and 53) states: 'when the husband is separate his widow takes all his various kinds of property such as a pledge, except immovable property. After having received movable and immovable property, gold, inferior metals, grain, liquids and clothes the widow shall cause (her husband's) monthly, six-monthly and annual śrāddhas to be performed. Let her honour with funeral offerings and pious charity her husband's paternal uncle, gurus (elders), daughter's son, sister's son and maternal uncle as also aged or helpless persons, guests and women'. Mādhava (Par M. III. p. 536) explains that 'except immovable property' means that she is prohibited from making a sale of immovable property without the consent of the male kinsmen. The V. Mayūkha (p. 138) accepts this interpretation and modern courts have done the same. In Damodardas v. Purmanandas 7 Bom. 155 it was held that a widow to whom movable property was bequeathed by the will of her husband takes it absolutely. But here the movable property was not inherited by her and as it was a bequest by will it became her strīdhana according to Nār (q. by V. M. on p. 155). Besides, this was a case from Bombay Island and was governed by the law of V. Mayūkha. In some early cases in Bombay it had been held that a widow in Western India under the Mitāksarā had absolute power over the movable property inherited by her from her husband. In Gadadhar v. Chandabhagabai 17 Bom. 690 (F. B.) it was held that under the law of the Mitāksarā a widow has no power to bequeath movable property inherited by her from her husband and that to that extent the decision in Damodar v. Purmanandas must be treated as of no authority if it be interpreted to have decided the point in that way. In Sha Chamanlal v. Doshi Ganesh 28 Bom. 453 it was decided that even under the Mayūkha a widow inheriting movable property from her husband has no power to dispose of it by will. Lastly in Pandharinath v. Govind 32 Bom. 59 it was held, after an elaborate examination of authorities, that a widow is not under the Mitaksarā competent to make a gift of the movables inherited by her from her husband and it was said, (on p. 75) that possibly with the spread of education amongst, and the general emancipation of, their women Hindus may be led to call in aid the relief of Legislature. In cases arising under the Mayūkhā a widow may dispose of movable property inherited by her from her husband by gift inter vivos but not by will. Kāt. 1359 (921, 924-925) propounds the limitations of the widow's rights as follows: 'A sonless widow, preserving the bed of her husband (unsullied) and residing with her elders and being self-controlled, should enjoy (her husband's property) till her death; after her the (other) heirs (of the husband) would get it. A wife who preserves (the honour of) the family would get the share of her husband when he is dead till her death, but she has no power to make a gift, sale or mortgage. A widow engrossed in religious observances and fasts, fixed in the vow of celibacy, always intent on restraining her senses and making gifts goes to heaven even though sonless'.<sup>1360</sup> These verses show that the widow was to enjoy the income of her husband's property till her death; that she could not sell or mortgage or give away immovable property without the consent of the heirs that would come after her and that for religious and charitable purposes or those that conduce to the spiritual welfare of her husband a widow had large powers of disposition. These rules have been accepted by modern decisions; vide Collector of Masulipatam v. Cuvady Vencuta 8 Moo. I. A. 500 at p. 551 for an oftquoted passage about the widow's powers of disposal. There is a large volume of case law on the widow's powers of alienation, on what are religious and charitable purposes and about the consent of the kinsmen, which have to be passed over here. The heir or heirs expectant on the death of a widow are called reversioners or reversionary heirs in the decided cases. There is no exact Sanskrit word to convey the same idea except 'dāyāda' that occurs in Kāt quoted above and in D. B., which makes it clear that the reversioners take the estate after the widow's estate ends (by death, remarriage, surrender &c.). The doctrine of the surrender by the widow of her estate in favour of the next heirs (the reversioners) whose estate is said to be accelerated is based on meagre foundations viz. the words of Kāt. and the D. B. quoted in n. 1359. Judicial decisions, however, have raised a stupendous structure on these slight foundations; but they are passed over here.

If a man dies leaving several widows then they may partition the property equally among themselves, as stated by the Mit.<sup>1361</sup>

If after partitioning among themselves, one of the widows dies, the portion given to her comes to the other widow or widows i. e. there is survivorship among them and no one else can succeed to the husband's property as long as there is any widow alive and not remarried. Hindu Law does not favour the distribution of a deceased man's estate among his several relatives, as some other systems (like that of the Moslems) do. It gives the whole estate to one heir or one class of heirs to the exclusion of all others. It is greatly to the credit of the ancient Hindu Law that it holdly gave all the separate property of a deceased male to women, viz. to the widow and after her to the daughter in preference to the man's own father or brother or nephew. Attempts are now being made through the Legislature that even when there are sons, the widow and daughters of the deceased should be given shares. Though these efforts spring from the laudable motive of enlarging the rights of women, they do not deserve unqualified encouragement. They will produce friction, cause fragmentation of lands, make holdings uneconomic and it is extremely doubtful whether they are in the best interests of society or nation as a whole and whether the vast mass of Hindus want them. Prajāpati<sup>1362</sup> says that the king should punish as thieves those sapindas and relatives that oppose or obstruct a widow in succeeding to her husband's estate.

The words of the Tai S. quoted above (p. 606) about women being without strength and not entitled to dāya (adāyādīh) really occur in the ritual of Soma offerings and should mean that women are not allowed to share in the drinking of Soma. But the Baud. Dh. S. (S. B. E. vol. 14 p. 231) appears to have taken them as excluding women from inheritance. Manu IX. 18 also relies on it and declares that the samśkṛtas on women (except marriage) are not to be performed with Vedic mantras, as the Veda declares them to be 'nirindriya' and 'anṛta'. Later writers like Haradatta (on Gaut. 28. 19, Āp. Dh. S. II. 6. 14. 1) and V. P. pp. 517 and 554 base the exclusion of women from inheritance on this passage of the Veda. They say that, though the Vedic text is very sweeping and general, it is meant to exclude only women other than those expressly mentioned in the smṛtis as entitled to inherit. For example, the Dāyabhāga XI. 6. 11 quotes Baud. and remarks that the wife is entitled to inherit because of special texts (like those of Yāj and Viṣṇu) in her favour. The Sm. C II. p. 294<sup>1363</sup> says that the Vedic passage is only an arthavāda (meant for praise) and not an absolute rule and it must be taken as not referring to those women that are expressly mentioned (lit. by being seized by the horn). The V. P. says the same. Aparārka (p. 743) holds that the Vedic passage is merely an anuvāda and excludes women only when there is a son. It should be noted that the Par. M. (III. p. 536) holds that the Tai S. passage merely means that the wife of the sacrificer is not entitled to partake of Soma taken in the Pātnivata cup and that 'indriya' means 'Soma drink'.<sup>1364</sup> But Mādhavācārya in his comment on the Tai. S. I. 4. 27 quotes Tai. S. VI. 5. 8. 2 and explains it somewhat differently as meaning that women being without strength do not take the heritage when there are children. It is very remarkable that both the Mit. and the V. Mayūkha do not at all refer to the Tai. S. or Baud. Dh. S. in speaking of the rights of women to inheritance. It cannot be said that they were unaware of them, but probably they took the Tai. S. text in the sense in which the Par. M. explains it. The result of the reliance on the Tai. S. and on Baud. by most medieval digestists has been that in the whole of India except in the Madras and Bombay provinces only five females are recognized as heirs viz. the widow, the daughter, the mother, the father's mother and paternal grand-father's mother, because they were expressly mentioned as heirs in the smṛtis or early commentaries. This subject will be pursued further a little later on.

The right of the wife to maintenance during her husband's life time has already been dealt with in H. of Dh. II. pp. 568-569. If the wife was guilty of unchastity but repented of her lapse, she was still entitled to be maintained by the husband (vide H. of Dh. II. pp. 571-573). As regards the rights of maintenance of the widows of deceased members of a joint Hindu family there is a good deal of case law which is passed over here. One or two points may be noted. The right of the widows in a joint Hindu family are conditional upon their leading a life of chastity. Male members are often unwilling to maintain widows who are often compelled to go to court. In the 'Selections from Peshwa Daftar', vol. 43, there is an order (letter No. 142) of Rāmasāstri, the chief justice of the Peshwa's court, calling upon one Bapuji Tambavekar under threat of penalties to restore the ornaments of the widow of his elder brother (that had died only seven days after marriage) and to give her a yearly maintenance of Rs. 125.

Daughters.—Daughters do not inherit as long as any widow of the deceased owner is alive. The daughter also had to struggle hard for recognition as heir just as the widow had. Gaut., Baud and Vas omit the daughter as an heir. Ap Dh. S. II. 6. 143 recognizes the daughter as an optional heir (probably with sapindas). When Manu IX. 130 declares, 'one's son is like one's self and one's daughter is equal to one's son; how can another person take the wealth (of the deceased) when she who is the very self (of the deceased) lives', it appears from the context (IX. 128-129) that it is the putrikā (the daughter appointed as a son) that is intended to be referred to therein. Medhātithi, Nārāyaṇa and Kullūka interpret the word 'duhita' in Manu IX. 130 as applicable to the putrikā only. In the Nirukta,<sup>1365</sup> Yāska cites Rg. III. 31. 1 as relied upon by those who support the claims of the daughter to inheritance and also derives the word 'duhita' in various ways, but from his explanation of Rg. III. 31. 1 it appears that he is referring to the putrikā's right of inheritance. As the usage of appointing a daughter as a son became gradually obsolete, the ordinary daughter came to be recognized by analogy as the heir of a sonless man after the widow. Yāj. and Viṣṇu both recognize the daughter as an heir after the widow. Nār. (dāyabhāga, 50) recognizes<sup>1366</sup> the daughter as an heir after the son on the ground that she continues the lineage (of the deceased father) just like a son. When Nār. (dāyabhāga, 27) speaks of the daughter being entitled to maintenance till marriage, the context shows (as remarked by the Sm. C II. p. 296) that he is referring to the daughter of a person who was re-united at the time of his death. Br. declares<sup>1367</sup> (S. B. E. 33 p. 378 verses 55-56), 'the wife is declared to be the inheritor of the husband's wealth and, in default of her, the daughter; the daughter, like a son, springs from the limbs of a man: how can another man inherit her father's property while she lives?'. mentators were not prepared to accept them in their literal sense. Viśvarūpa holds that Yāj. means only the putrikā and employs the plural in order to convey that several daughters may be appointed as sons. The Sm C. II. p. 295 informs us that the same opinion was held by Dhāreśvara, Devaśvāmin and Devarāta.<sup>1368</sup> The Mit. rightly refutes these views by saying that the word 'duhitarah' in Yāj. cannot refer to 'putrikā', since Yāj. has himself stated the putrikā as equal to the aurasa son (in II. 128), as the putrikā is included among the sons by Vas and as the widow and the daughters are declared by him as heirs in the absence of all the sons, principal and secondary Yāj., Viśnu, Br. are silent as to whether any discrimination was made between daughters as heirs. Kāt. (926) gives<sup>1369</sup> a preference to the unmarried daughter and the Mit. and the subsequent digests follow Kāt. The Dāyabhāga<sup>1370</sup> (XI. 2. 4 p. 175) quotes a prose passage of Parāśara preferring an unmarried daughter as an heir to a married daughter. Among married daughters the Mit., pressing into service a text of Gaut. on succession to stridhana, holds by analogy that among married daughters the indigent (or unprovided for) one is to be preferred to one who is well-placed.<sup>1371</sup> Herein the Mit. follows common sense and the natural inclination of a father to feel more concern for a poor daughter. The Dāyabhāga prefers the unmarried daughter to the married daughter as is done by the Mit., but among married daughters Jimūtavāhana, following an author called Dikṣita, prefers one who has had a son or who is likely to have a son to a widowed or barren daughter or to one who has given birth only to daughters. This preference is due to the principle of the Dayabhāga<sup>1372</sup> that spiritual benefit is the governing factor in succession. The barren daughter or widowed daughter is unable to confer spiritual benefit on her father since she will have no son that will offer pindas to the deceased owner (who will be the maternal grand-father). The Mitā on the other hand relies on nearness of blood (pratyāsatti) as the guiding principle. But, as pointed out by the V.P. p. 519, the Dayabhāga is inconsistent. There is no reason on its own principle why the unmarried daughter should be preferred to a married daughter who has a son. The latter is then and there capable of conferring spiritual benefit while it is problematical whether the unmarried daughter will confer spiritual benefit (since she may after all be blessed with no son after marriage). Aparārka (p. 721) and V. R. (p. 517) give three meanings of the word 'apratisthita' viz. 'childless, poor, widowed'. In deciding whether a particular married daughter is indigent as compared with another, the Courts refuse<sup>1373</sup> to go into nice or minute questions of the respective monetary positions of their husbands and prefer one to the other only if there is great disparity or marked difference between their positions.

According to all High Courts in India except that of Bombay a daughter's estate is similar to that of the widow. She takes only a limited interest, can only enjoy the usufruct of the property and cannot alienate it. On her death the estate passes not to her heirs, but to the next heir of her father. In Bombay,<sup>1374</sup> however, the daughter takes an absolute interest in her father's estate when she succeeds as heir and on her death the estate will go to her own heirs.

A daughter is entitled to succeed, according to the decided cases, to her father's estate even if she be unchaste at the time of his death (except in cases governed by the Dayabhāga).<sup>1375</sup> The reason assigned is that Kat. and other smṛti writers do not expressly mention the requirement of chastity in the case of the daughter or mother as they do as regards the widow. According to the<sup>1376</sup> Dayabhāga (XI. 2. 8) Br. declares: 'a daughter equal in caste to the father and married to a husband of the same caste as her own, who is virtuous and intent on serving her husband, inherits her father's property'. Therefore a daughter who is unchaste cannot inherit. Further a daughter succeeds not because she is the daughter, but because she satisfies all conditions laid down by Br. The Dayabhāga (XI. 2. 31) further says that the word 'wife' (in XI. 1. 56) is merely illustrative and whatever restrictions are imposed on the wife apply to all women as heirs. The illegitimate daughter, even of a sūdra, has no right of inheritance to her father.<sup>1377</sup>

By virtue of local or family custom daughters have in some cases been held to be excluded from inheritance.<sup>1378</sup>

It may be noted that in his Vaijāyanti (on Vismu Dh. S. XVII. 5-6) Nāṇḍapandita appears to have preferred a daughter-in-law to a daughter; but he stands practically alone in this. Vide Jolly's T. L. L. p. 199 and p. 286 for quotation which however is not found in the D. O. Ms. No. 69 of the Vaijāyanti. The daughter-in-law is not an heir at all in the whole of India, except in Bombay (where she inherits as the widow of a gotraja sapinda) The Bālabhāṭṭi criticizes Nandapandita without naming him and holds that a daughter-in-law inherits only as a gotraja and not before a daughter.

Raghunandana in his comment on the Dāyabhāga makes the position about unchaste daughters quite clear<sup>1379</sup>. The smṛtis give preference among daughters to an unmarried daughter i. e. to a daughter who is a virgin (kumārī). It has been held by the Indian High Courts that though chastity is not required in the case of daughters to entitle them to inherit, yet in a competition between a married daughter and a daughter who was never married, but became a concubine or prostitute, the latter would be postponed to the former as the latter is not a virgin though unmarried. Some smṛtis like Parāśara<sup>1380</sup> employ the word kumārī in speaking of daughters' succession, while others employ the word 'kanyā', but both words are synonymous. In Gound v. Bhuku 46 Bom. L. R. 699, where a man died leaving as heirs a married daughter and another daughter who never married, but was living as the permanent concubine of another man, it was held that the latter cannot inherit the property of her sonless father to the exclusion of or along with his married daughter. The old texts speak of only unmarried daughters and married daughters and prefer the former to the latter. Medhātithi on Manu IX 132 says that kanyā means a girl who has had no sexual intercourse with any man. The Mit. makes three classes of daughters succeed one after another viz (1) unmarried daughter, (2) indigent married daughter, (3) well-to-do married daughter. Judicial decisions have added a fourth variety viz unmarried daughter who has become a prostitute. This fourth class being a new one must be placed after the other three classes expressly mentioned by the texts and commentaries on the basis of the maxim (intruders or uninvited persons must be seated at the end of or after those that are specially invited) noted by Śabara on Jai. V. 2. 19 and X. 5. 1 and by Śankara on Vedāntasūtra IV. 3. 3 and employed by the V. Mayūkha (text p. 143) for settling the place of the paternal grandmother after the brother's son.

The daughter's son (dauhitra). On failure of daughters the daughter's son inherits. Gaut., Āp., Vas., are all silent about the daughter's son and so are Yāj. and Visnu. But it has been plausibly urged by Viśvarūpa that, since<sup>1381</sup> Yāj. himself has (in II. 134) stated that the illegitimate son of a śūdra takes the whole estate if there be no legitimate son provided there exists no heir up to the daughter's son, the latter must have been intended to be an heir by Yāj. taking after the daughters. The Madanapārijāta (p. 672) relies on the word 'ca' in Yāj. to bring in the daughter's son. Though the printed text of Visnu Dh. S. is silent about the daughter's son, the Mit., the Dāyabhāga and others quote a verse of Visnu,<sup>1382</sup> 'when there is no continuance of lineage through sons and son's son the daughter's sons take the wealth (of the deceased owner); in offering śrāddha to the ancestors, daughter's sons are regarded as son's sons'. The V. Mayūkha (p. 142) includes a sūtra about the dauhitra in Visnu Dh. S. Govindarāja, a commentator of Manu, is said by the Dāyabhāga, to have held, relying on this verse of Viṣṇu, that the daughter's son inherited the estate even before a married daughter of the deceased. But the Dāyabhāga did not approve of this view. The Dāyabhāga (XI. 2. 27) notes that Bālaśāstra held that as the daughter's son was not expressly named by Yāj. he came in as an heir after all those that were expressly mentioned as heirs. Baud. Dh. S. II. 2. 17 distinguished<sup>1383</sup> between the putrikāputra and daughter but it is not clear whether Baud. intended to lay down that the dauhitra was an heir. In IX. 131-133 Manu expressly says that the dauhitra should inherit the entire wealth of a sonless man, that he should offer one pinda to his father and another to the maternal grandfather and that in religious matters there is no difference between a son's son and a daughter's son, since their father and mother (respectively) spring from the body of the deceased owner. The context and the wording of these verses show, as held by Kullūka and other commentators, that the daughter's son here referred to is the son of the appointed daughter. But Manu IX. 136 is somewhat clearer. It says, 'through a son born to a daughter from a husband of the same class, whether she be appointed (as a son) or not, the maternal grandfather becomes one having a son's son; that son should offer pinda and take the wealth of the maternal grandfather'. The Mit takes the word 'akṛtā' in this verse as referring to the ordinary daughter, while Medhatithi and Kullūka hold that this verse also only refers to the son of the putrikā and that kṛtā means an appointed daughter with regard to whom an express agreement was made with her husband, while akṛtā means one (who is intended mentally to be appointed as a son) about whom there is no such express agreement. Br. (S. B. E. '33 p. 379 verse 58) provides: 'just as (the daughter) gets ownership in her father's property (as an heir), though there may be other relatives, so her son also becomes the owner of his mother's and maternal grandfather's property'.<sup>1384</sup>

The daughter's sons inherit per capita and not per stirpes. Suppose that A has two daughters B and C, that B has three sons and C has two sons, that then both B and C die in A's lifetime; on A's death his estate will be divided into five parts, each daughter's son taking one fifth.

A daughter's son is really a bandhu and a bhūnagotra sapinda, but owing to historical causes and the high religious efficacy of the śrāddha offered by him he has been given a very high place among heirs by express texts.

Parents (ptarau) Great divergence prevails among medieval digests on the position of the father and the mother as heirs to their son. Yāj gives no clue as to which among the parents is to be preferred if both are alive when their son dies. The text of the Visnu Dh. 1385 S. as read by most digests places the father before the mother. Manu IX 217 states that when the son dies issueless the mother takes his wealth, while Manu IX. 185 provides that the father takes the wealth of a sonless man and the brothers also. So Manu is not definite about the preference among parents. Kāt. ( 927 ) observes, <sup>1385</sup> ' of a sonless man (the heirs ) are declared to be the wife of good family, the daughters, the father on failure of them, the mother, the brother and ( the brother's ) sons '. Br. ( S. B E. 33 p. 379 v 63 ) says, <sup>1387</sup> ' when a son dies without leaving his own wife or male issue, his mother is to be considered as her son's heir or a brother may succeed with the consent of the mother '. In this conflict it may be stated that the Mit, the Madanapārīyāta, S. V ( p. 416 ), the V. C., the V. P. prefer the mother to the father, while the Dayabhāga, the Sm. C., the Madanaratna, the V. Mayūkha prefer the father to the mother. Śrīkara <sup>1388</sup> held that both parents, if alive, succeed together. But the Dayabhāga, Sm. C and others criticise this view. The reasons why the Mit. prefers the mother before the father are three, out of which two are based on grammar. The word 'pitarau' in Yāj. is what is called an 'ekaśeṣa' dvandva compound and in dissolving it or in the full-fledged dvandva the mother comes first in order and hence she should be preferred. Another reason is.<sup>1389</sup> A father may have several wives and sons from them all, so that a mother is directly related to her own son only and not to the other sons of her husband. So (the Mit. says) the mother has greater nearness (pratyāsatti) to her son than the father has. The Sm. C. (II p 297) refers to Jai V. 1 14 where the Vedic sentence 'sarasvatau bhavataḥ' is interpreted and it is stated that the first oblation is offered to Sarasvatī because the Yājñya and Anuvākya verses as first set out are meant for Sarasvatī (and not on the ground of the method in which the ekaśeṣa is dissolved); therefore as to pitarau also no relaxation should be placed on the dissolution of the compound. Nīlakantha in the V. Mayūkha denies the assumptions based upon grammar, says that Pān. does not direct that in dissolving the compound the word mātā must be employed first and there is no authority for doing so.<sup>1390</sup> But the V. P. says that though Pānini may 1390. The general rule is that several words that would be in the same case when separately used may be compounded together to form a dvandva, when they are employed to convey the sense of 'ca', as said in 'cārthe dvandvah' (Pān. II. 2 29). Such a compound is called dvandva and mātā-pitarau is an example of it. Another sūtra (I 2 64) of Pānini states that when words denoting several individuals of the same kind are to be compounded together, only one of them may be retained and that is called an ekaśeṣa compound, which is of two kinds, saṃyāga (e. g. hamsaśca hamsaśca hamsau) and virūpa (when the two words are of different genders). The latter kind of ekaśeṣa is of restricted use. In such a compound when a male and female are associated together only the word in the masculine gender remains or the word 'pitṛ' when compounded with mātr (vide Pān. I. 2. 67 and I 2 70). Therefore we have two forms to denote the idea of parents viz. mātāpitarau or pitarau. In dissolving this compound (pitarau) we employ the phraseology 'mātā ca pitṛ ca' and in the word 'mātāpitarau' the word for mother comes first. Therefore among parents as heirs mother should come first. Vide pp. 242-244 of my notes to the V. Mayūkha (ed. of text) where both the Mit. passage and its criticism by the V. Mayūkha are explained at length. In Balkrishna v. Lakshman 14 Bom. 605 both the Mit. and Mayūkha's criticism thereof are set out (pp. 608-609).

contain no such direction, all grammatical works like the Kaṣikā dissolve the compound as 'mātā ca pitā ca' and grammatical usage for centuries supports the argument that the word mātā comes first<sup>1391</sup>. The argument about the mother being nearer is quite specious. Looked at from the son (whose inheritance is in question), the mother and father are both equally proximate. The V. P. holds that according to the maxim that even a slight ground of difference leads one to determine (priority) the mother should be preferred to the father (since we dissolve the compound as mātā ca pitā ca). The V. P. (p 525) further tries to get over the text of Visnu (putting the father before the mother) by explaining that if the mother is most worthy as a pātrvatā and the father an ordinary man she should be preferred but if the father is more worthy than the mother he should be preferred. Hardly any one supports V. P. and the courts have not followed this. Owing to the difference of opinion among the digests on the question of the preference between parents as heirs, queer results follow. For example, in the province of Bombay itself the father is preferred as an heir to the mother in Gujerat, the island of Bombay and in Northern Konkan (because in these regions the V. Mayūkhā has been held to be of paramount authority), while in the rest of the Bombay Presidency the mother is preferred to the father as an heir. The mother takes a limited interest as an heir which is the same as the interest taken by a widow as heir to her husband. The father would take an absolute interest. The word mother includes an adoptive mother; that is, if an adopted son dies leaving no son, widow, daughter or daughter's son, the adoptive mother would succeed<sup>1392</sup> to him as an heir (and even in preference to the adoptive father in those provinces where the Mit. is the supreme authority). In the case of a dvyāmusyāyana adoption, if the son adopted in that form dies leaving only his adoptive mother and natural mother, it has been held that both the mothers take his estate as co-heiresses<sup>1373</sup> It has further been held that if, after succeeding as adoptive mother to a dvyāmusyāyana son, the adoptive mother again adopts a son, the latter does not deprive the natural mother of the half share taken by her as heir of the deceased dvyāmusyāyana son.

The word 'mother' in the Mit. does not include a step-mother. The latter is not recognised as an heir of her step-son at all in the whole of India (except in Bombay) on account of the rule of the exclusion of women from inheritance<sup>1394</sup> except where texts expressly mention them as heirs and the property would go to the crown instead of to the step-mother, if the latter alone were left, but she would be entitled to maintenance. In Bombay the step-mother would inherit as the widow of a gotraja sapinda, but she is assigned a remote<sup>1395</sup> place among gotraja sapindas. If a widow remarries and then her son by her first husband dies without leaving a child, a widow, a daughter or daughter's son his remarried mother is allowed to inherit to him by the<sup>1396</sup> Bombay High Court, though if she inherited first as a mother and then remarried, she is held by the same court to forfeit the inheritance taken (on account of section 2 of the Hindu Widows' Remarriage Act of 1856).

The mother succeeding to her son takes only a limited estate i. e. she cannot alienate it except for legal necessity. If Vijñāneśvara's definition of strīdhana be literally interpreted even property inherited from a son would be strīdhana. There is a striking example in E. I. vol. XIV p. 83 (the Śrīrangam plates of Mummadi Nāyaka in śaka 1280) where a mother inheriting a village granted to her son Parāśarabhatta made a gift of it to the god Ranganātha at Śrīrangam.

1395. Vide Kesserbai v. Valab 4 Bom. 188 at p. 208 (for holding that 'step-mother' is not included in the term 'mother' in the Mit., but that she would inherit as the widow of a gotraja sapinda and so as gotraja sapinda herself). In this case numerous authorities are examined at length.

1396. Vide Basappa v. Rayava 29 Bom. 91 (F. B.) for remarried mother inheriting to her son (by the first husband) dying after her remarriage.

Brothers (bhrātarah) and brother's sons. Acc. to both Yāj. and Visnu, on failure of the parents the brothers succeed and on failure of brothers, brother's sons inherit. There were apparently conflicting texts, Śankha, Manu (IX. 185) and others giving the inheritance to the brothers even before the parents. All these are somehow reconciled and almost all digests from the Mit. downwards are agreed that brothers inherit after the parents. But again a conflict of views ensues. The Mit. says that among brothers, those of full blood inherit in preference to half brothers (i. e. sons of the same father but sprung from a different mother). It then says that on failure of both kinds of brothers, the inheritance goes to brother's sons; but even here the sons of full brothers are preferred to sons of half brothers. This view of the Mit. is shared by the Dāyabhāga and almost all eminent writers of digests except the author of the V. Mayūkha. The Mit. prefers the full brother to the half brother on the ground that the full brother has particles of the bodies of both the father and the mother of the deceased, while the half brother has only the particles of the father's body (the mother being different). Therefore the full brother is nearer than the half brother. The Dāyabhāga argues<sup>1397</sup> that the full brother offers pindas to the same three paternal ancestors and the same three maternal ancestors to whom the deceased was bound to offer pindas and is to be preferred to the half brother who offers pindas to the three paternal ancestors of the deceased alone (but not to the maternal ancestors of the deceased). This view of spiritual benefit being the governing principle in preferring the full brother to the half brother is accepted by Aparārka (p. 745)<sup>1398</sup>. The reasons of the V. Mayūkha for preferring even the full brother's son to the half brother are: the word 'brothers' principally stands for 'brothers of the whole blood' (sodara) and only secondarily for brothers of the half blood. The general rule of Mīmāṃsā<sup>1399</sup> is that the same word is not to be understood in the same sentence or rule as used in the primary and also in the secondary sense. Just as the word 'mother' applies only to the natural mother (and not to the step-mother), so bhrātarah should not include both full and half brothers. The V. Mayūkha is however wrong. As pointed out by the Dāyabhāga, when Yāj. wants to speak of the full brother he employs the words 'sodara' (Yāj. II. 138) and when he wants to refer to the half brother he employs the word 'anyodarya' or 'anyamātrja' (Yāj. II. 139). Therefore the word 'bhrātarah' applies to both full and half brothers in the primary sense. There are other smṛti texts such as that of the Smṛti-saṅgraha stating that brothers are of two kinds viz. those of full blood and those of half blood.<sup>1400</sup>

The Sm.<sup>1401</sup> C. II. 300 refutes the view of some that the word 'bhrātarah' in Yāj. is an ekaśeṣa dvandva compound that it means 'brothers and sisters' according to Pān. I. 2. 68' (bhrātr-putrau śvaṣṭ-dukṣtrbhyām) and that on failure of brothers sisters inherit. The V. Mayūkha<sup>1402</sup> also does not accept this interpretation of 'bhrātarah' advanced by some, since there is no reason why 'bhrātarah' should be taken as an ekaśeṣa of the vrūpa kind (which is restricted only to rare cases) and not of the sarūpa kind. The Balambhatti supports the wider interpretation of 'bhrātarah' and at one time the Bombay High Court was inclined to accept this interpretation.<sup>1403</sup> The above shows that some at least of the medieval and later Hindu jurists were more sympathetic and well disposed to the enlargement of the rights of women, though their views failed to secure general acceptance. It has been held that brothers by the same father (though by different mothers) are preferred to brothers by the same mother (though by different fathers), it being pointed out that "there is no provision in the Mitākṣarā or elsewhere for the sons born of the same mother after her remarriage being treated as brothers of the same womb for the purpose of inheritance so as to be included in the meaning of the word 'bhrātaraḥ' used in the texts."<sup>1404</sup> But Nandapandita expressly provides in his Vaijayanti the following order of succession among brothers and sisters of the whole and of the half blood - (1) brothers of the whole blood, (2) sisters of the whole blood, (3) brothers who are sons of the same father, (4) brothers who are sons of the same mother (vide Jolly T. L. L. pp. 208 and 287). Because Manu IX. 217 says that the wealth of a childless man is taken by the mother and that if the mother be dead, the father's mother would take it, the Sm. C. II. p. 299 places the paternal grandmother before the brothers, but it stands almost alone in this and the Mit. observes<sup>1405</sup> that Manu does not lay down the order but only provides that the paternal grand-mother is an heir capable of inheriting. The V. P. (p. 527) expresses its dissatisfaction with this method of the Mit. whereby only Yāj. and Viṣṇu are deemed to lay down the order in which heirs take, while Manu, Śankha and others are deemed to be only concerned with declaring the right of certain persons to inherit.

The V. Mayūkha proposes a special order of inheritance as follows:—(1) full brothers; (2) then full brother's sons, (3) the gotraja sapindas of whom the first is the paternal grandmother, (4) then the sister, (5) then the paternal grandfather and the half brother at the same time, (6) then the paternal great-grandfather, paternal uncle and the half brother's son together. It should be noted that this conjoint inheritance by heirs of different degrees of ascent and descent which is peculiar to the Mayūkha has been regarded by the Bombay High Court as unknown in practice and obsolete <sup>1406</sup> Therefore it is probable that even in districts governed by the Mayūkha the order of heirs after the paternal grandmother and full sister would be half brother, then half sister and then half brother's son and then it will be the same both according to the Mit and the Mayūkha.

The Mit. does not expressly mention the sister at all but the Bombay High Court has held her to be a very near heir even where the Mit. is paramount, placing her after the brothers (whether full or half), brother's sons (whether of the whole blood or half blood) and paternal grandmother, the difference from the Mayūkha being that under the latter the full sister comes only after the full brothers and full brother's sons and paternal grandmother and before half brothers and half brother's sons.

One passage of the Mayūkha, being wrongly translated by Borradaile, has led the courts (including the P. C.) to decide that full brothers succeed along with the sons of a deceased full brother wherever the Mayūkha is supreme. The passage of the Mayūkha as translated by Borradaile (vide Stokes H. L. Books p. 88, IV. 8. 17) runs "the sons of a brother also, if themselves fatherless, at the time of the paternal uncle's death, provided they are capable of understanding (the use of) property, will divide the father's share with their father's other brothers, after the example 'among grandsons by different fathers, the allotment of shares is according to the fathers'".

The text of the Mayūkha is given in the note below. It is<sup>1407</sup> almost the same as a passage of the Mitaksarā, which has not been misunderstood. Both passages contemplate a case like this A dies leaving B, C, D, his brothers, as his nearest heirs, so that A's estate vests in interest in B, C, D. Before the estate of A is actually divided by metes and bounds, B dies leaving three sons E, F, G. The last three had no right to the property of A at their uncle A's death because their father B was living at the time (i. e. pitrujamaṇanukūle jīvatpitṛkatayā asaṅgāta-dhanasambandhā). Yet when the property is later on actually to be divided they (E, F, G) will take the share which their father B would have taken if the property of A had been divided at the moment of A's death. Here a distinction is drawn between vesting of property (dhanasambandha) and its actual partition. But, in order to entitle nephews to take by actual partition, their father should have survived the deceased. This is the real meaning.

The Privy<sup>1408</sup> Council, following a wrong translation, held that, under the law of the V. Mayūkha, brothers and the sons

1408 Vide Chandika v Muna L. R. 29 I A. 70 where this rule was applied to Abhan Thakurs that had migrated from Gujerat to the United Provinces of Agra and Oudh before the V. Mayūkha was composed, on the ground that the Mayūkha only embodied and defined pre-existing customs. There was thus a double error. The Mayūkha was misunderstood and further the Mayūkha had nothing to do with Gujerat usages as it was composed by a Mahārāstra brāhmana whose family had migrated to Benares. It may be true to some extent as a general proposition that commentators and digest writers embody pre-existing customs of the districts where they wrote. But often times this is not so and varying statements of the law are due to individual opinions. For example, the Mayūkha provides for the simultaneous succession of the paternal great-grandfather, the paternal uncle and the half brother's son; but the Bombay High Court has discarded this view of the Mayūkha. The Mayūkha places the father before the mother as an heir, but V. T. composed by Nilalantha's own first cousin of a brother that died before the propositus (the brother inheritance to whom is in question) shared the estate of the latter. This erroneous decision has been persisted in to this day on the principle of stare decisis. The view of the Vijayanti about the sons of the same woman from different husbands being sapindas of each other has already been noted (p. 727). Govindarāja on Manu III 11 says that it is wellknown that children of different fathers but of the same mother are spoken of as brother and sister. Kullūka on Manu III 11 refers to this view of Govindarāja.<sup>1409</sup>

A question arises whether the distinction between full blood and half blood made by the Mit in the case of brothers and nephews was to be carried beyond them. Though a Full Bench<sup>1410</sup> of the Bombay High Court held that the distinction was not to be carried beyond brothers and nephews and that paternal uncles of the half blood inherited along with paternal uncles of the full blood, the Privy Council overruled this decision and held that the preference of the whole blood to the half blood extends to all sapindas of the same degree from the common ancestor (and therefore a paternal uncle of the whole blood excludes one of the half blood). The Madanapārijāta<sup>1411</sup> p. 674 expressly extends the preference of the whole blood to paternal uncles.

places the mother before the father (folios 139-140). Following this case it was held in Haridas v. Ranchodas 5 Bom L R 516 that the son of a predeceased brother inherited along with the brothers of the deceased. This rule is not to be carried beyond brothers and brothers' sons. In Kesarlal v. Jagubhai 49 Bom 232 the differing translations of the Mayūkhya were referred to (at p. 286), it was held that the principle of stare decisis required that the Privy Council decision should be followed and the estate of a deceased brother was allowed to devolve on the sons of a brother that had died before the deceased along with the surviving brother.

It is noteworthy that the Viramitrodaya which generally follows the Mit invokes the principle of spiritual benefit in preferring the full brother's son to the half brother's son <sup>1412</sup>

The heirs from the wife to the brother's sons are spoken of as 'baddhakrama' (lit whose order is fixed) in the Mit., the V. Mayūkha (p. 143) and other works and as 'the compact series (of heirs)' in the case law. For example, in rejecting the view of some that rely on Manu IX. 217 that the father's mother succeeds immediately after the mother, it is said that the heirs from the parents to the brother's son being mentioned in a fixed order (by Yāj.), no place can be found for the father's mother in the fixed series of heirs and that Manu IX. 187 indicates only this that the father's mother is an heir. <sup>1413</sup> The V. Mayūkha relies on the popular maxim that when certain persons are specially invited for a meeting or a dinner they are seated on seats definitely allotted to them but that those who come uninvited are assigned places at the end of the row of those who were specially invited <sup>1414</sup>

The question arises whether the brother's son's son inherits immediately after the brother's son and before any other heir. There is a conflict among Sanskrit writers on this point. The Sm. C. II p. 300, <sup>1415</sup> the Subodhīni, the Madanapārijāta (p. 673) say that the compact series ends with the brother's son, while Aparārka, Varadarāja (V. Nir. p. 453) and the Vaijayanti of Nandapāṇḍita hold that the brother's son's son comes immediately after the brother's son. A Full Bench of the<sup>1416</sup> Bombay High Court holds, basing its decision on the usage of the province, that the compact series ends with the brother's son, while the Privy Council would seem to lend colour to the view that in the Benares school it ends with the brother's son's son. The Dāyabhāga (XI 6. 6 p. 208) places the brother's son's son immediately after the brother's son on the ground of the superior efficacy of the pindas offered by him.

In Mohandas v Krishnabai 5 Bom. 597 this maxim is quoted and it is said that it applies only to the compact series of heirs and that it does not apply to the list of bandhus enumerated by Nīlakantha (p 602) The maxim is also relied on in Govind Bhaushet v Bhiku 46 Bom L R. 699

Gotrajas (lit. 'those born in the same gotra' or agnates). Yāj. says that on failure of the heirs up to brother's sons the gotrajas succeed. Though one's father, brothers and brother's sons also are really gotrajas, they are expressly assigned certain fixed places in the order of heirs and other persons born in the gotra are included in the term gotrajas on the analogy of such an example as 'let the cattle be brought and also the bulls' where the bulls, though really included under 'cattle' (gūṛvāḥ), are separately mentioned in order to emphasize that special attention must be paid to them on account of their intractable nature. Vide p 526 note 966 above. Acc. to the Mit. gotrajas are the father's mother (as the first among them), then other sapindas and samānodakas. The V. Mayūkha (p 143) also says the same thing and places the father's mother as the first among gotraja sapindas. It may be remarked that Yāj. avoids the word sapinda and employs the word gotraja. The Mit. and Mayūkha state that sapindas succeed as heirs and that sapindas are of two kinds, viz. gotrajas (born in or having the same gotra as the propositus) and those that are born in (or are of) a different gotra. These latter (viz. bhūnagotra sapindas) are designated as bandhus by Yāj. Therefore it comes to this that, though Yāj. does not employ the word sapinda, the inheritance goes after the brother's son to the nearest sapinda. Yāj. knew the word 'sapinda' (I. 52) and defines the limits of sapinda relationship for marriage (in I. 53), from which it follows that he does not use the word sapinda in the sense given to the word by Jimūtavāhana. In I 68 Yāj. mentions both sapinda and sagotra (in the matter of nyoga) and thereby indicates two things viz. that the words were not synonymous and that sagotra had the same sense as gotraja.

1416. Vide Appayi v Mohanlal 54 Bom 564 (F B), in which Buddha Singh v. Lattu Singh L. R 42 I. A. 208 was distinguished on the ground that it was not an express decision on the question whether the compact series of heirs ended with the brother's son.

Ap. Dh. S. II. 6. 14. 2 provides<sup>1417</sup> that 'on failure of sons the nearest sapinda' (inherits). Manu<sup>1418</sup> IX. 187 is the classical text on this point, which appears to mean literally, 'whoever is nearest from among the sapindas, to him the estate (of the deceased) shall belong'. This verse has been variously explained by the commentators and digests and variously translated by eminent Judges and writers on Hindu Law. The chief difficulty lies in the expression 'sapindādyah' and the words 'tasya tasya'. Some take the first as equal to two words 'sapindāt yah' and others as one word 'sapindādyah' (sapinda and the like). Some take one 'tasya' (of him) as referring to the deceased and the other to the inheritor; while others take 'tasya tasya' as both referring to the inheritor alone, corresponding to 'yah' (one more 'yah' being suppressed for the sake of metre). Though the printed text and most of the commentaries read the half verse of Manu as in the note below there are several digests that read it differently. For example, the Sm. C II. p. 301 reads it as 'yo yo hyanantarāh pindāt' and quotes Dhāresvara's explanation that 'pindāt' means 'sapindāt'. Kullūka and the Dāyatattva p. 195 explain 'sapindāt' as 'sapindamadyāt' (from among sapindas) and this appears to be the best explanation. Br.<sup>1419</sup> (S. B. E. 33 p. 379 verse 62)

1418. अनन्तर. सपिण्डाद्यस्तस्य तस्य धनं भवेत् । Manu IX. 187. Vide Bühler's note on this in S. B. E. vol. 25 pp. 366-368 for the varying interpretations of commentators. Bühler is not right when he emphatically says- "On philological grounds it seems to me improbable that 'anantarāh sapindāt' can mean anything else than 'nearest to the sapinda' and that this sapinda can be anybody else than the deceased". In the first place the singular 'sapindāt' can be easily interpreted as used in a generic sense (jātāvekaṣaṇṇam) i. e. as meaning 'sapindēbhyah' (from among sapindas). In Āp. Br. and other works wherever inheritance is spoken of, it is the inheritor who is required to be the sapinda or bāndhava or sakulya and the deceased is hardly anywhere spoken of as the sapinda of the inheritor but rather as 'mrta', 'svaryāta', 'dhanin' &c. The verse of Manu is variously read. अनन्तरः सपिण्डो यस्तस्य तस्य धनं भवेत् । न्यस नि. p. 451, मदनरत्न (folio 100 a), यो यो ह्यनन्तरः पिण्डास्तस्य तस्य धनं भवेत् । तदेतत् पारेश्वरी व्याचष्टे यो यो ह्यनन्तरः पिण्डादित्यत्र पिण्डात्सपिण्डादित्यर्थो द्रष्टव्यः । स्मृतित्वे 11 301, व्यवहारसार p. 254 reads as यो यो as in स्मृतित्वे 'अनन्तरः सपिण्डाद्य इत्यनेन यः सपिण्डात्सनिहितः तस्य सपिण्डसनिहितस्य धनं सपिण्डस्य सनिहितस्य धनं भवेदिति निहितत्वात् । सुबोधिनी p. 71.

says, 'when there are several agnates, sakulyas and bāndhavas (cognates), whosoever of them is the nearest shall take the wealth of him that dies without issue'.

The important question is what is the meaning of the word 'sapinda'. The Mitākṣarā and the Dayabhāga propound two different meanings of the word that have been explained at length in II. of Dh vol. II, pp. 452-458 and 472-477. Therefore it is not necessary to repeat those explanations. The word 'sapinda' is employed by Pāṇini (IV. 1. 165) in connection with the technical definition of gotra (Pān. IV. 1. 162) given by him. It appears to have been used in the sense of blood relationship as stated by the Kāśikā. According to the Mit the right to inheritance depends upon blood relationship (connection through particles of the same body, ekasārīrāyavāṇṛaṇa) and the preference among those who are blood relations is determined by nearness or propinquity (pratyūṣaṭi). According to the Dayabhāga, sapinda relationships is based on religious efficacy i. e. on the capacity to offer the cake or ball of rice in śrāddha and it has evolved a peculiar method of determining preference which will be explained immediately below. That there appears to have been a close connection between taking the wealth of the deceased and offering śrāddha to him may be admitted. But the question is whether a person was deemed to be an heir and entitled to take the estate of the deceased because he offered śrāddha to that person or whether the heirship was originally determined on other grounds and whoever took the estate was saddled with the responsibility of performing śrāddhas for the benefit of the soul of the deceased. It is difficult to give a convincing answer to this. It appears, however, that ancient sūtras do not emphasize the religious efficacy of pindas as the determining principle in heirship. Āp., Manu, Br. (particularly the first and last) speak only of nearness (which more naturally means 'nearness of blood'). Yāj omits the word sapinda altogether in mentioning heirs. Manu IX. 142 states that pinda follows the gotra and riktha (wealth). Viṣṇu Dh. S. XV. 40 declares, 'whoever inherits the estate (of the deceased) has to offer pinda to him'. This rule is emphasized even by those works (like V. Mayūkha)<sup>1420</sup> that make blood relationship the test of heirship by saying that whoever even including the king (who takes by escheat on failure of all heirs) that takes the estate of the deceased must perform or arrange for the performance of the funeral ceremonies of the deceased up to 10 days after death and the śrāddhas, as said by the Brahmapurāṇa 220 79 (tadabhāve ca nṛpatih kārayetvakutumbināṇi tajjatiyair-narairh samyak-dāhādyaḥ sakalāḥ kriyāḥ) The Mit. view is upheld by V. R., V. C., Par. M., Madanapārijāta, Sarasvativilāsa, V. Mayūkha, Bālanibhatti and many other works. The theory of the Dāyabhāga is propounded by only a few medieval works and writers like Aparārka (quoted above on p 725), Raghunandana, Nandapandita. The Vīramitrodaya generally follows the Mit. but in certain cases it relies on or refers to the principle of religious efficacy in preferring one heir to another, as for example, in preferring the full brother to the step-brother (compare note 1397 and V. P p 528) or in preferring three male descendants to the widow. It is therefore that the Privy Council remark,<sup>1421</sup> 'now it is absolutely clear that under the Mitākṣarā while the right of inheritance arises from blood relationship or community of blood, in judging of the nearness of blood relationship or propinquity among the gotrajas the test to be applied to discover the preferential heir is the capacity to offer oblations'. Its position is peculiar.<sup>1422</sup> It says that the capacity to offer pindas is not the governing principle as to heirship, but it is only useful in finding out the preferential heir among gotrajas.

Visnu quoted by the Mit (not found in the printed Dharmasūtra) prescribes 'If there be no son or grandson left for continuing the line, the daughter's sons shall take the wealth, for in regard to the obsequies of ancestors daughter's sons are regarded as son's sons'. This is in line with Manu IX. 136 (cited above on p 720) which says that the daughter's son should offer the pinda and take the wealth. Therefore it appears that Manu, Visnu and others relied upon the capacity for the offering of pinda as the reason for being entitled as heir, but that this idea was vague and not elaborated in any way. The idea that blood relationship settled the right to inheritance is implicit in the order of heirs in Yāj Yāj. (II. 127) in speaking of the ksetraja son says that he inherits the wealth of both (the begetter and the husband of the wife on whom he is begotten) and offers pinda to both. He does not state that because he offers pinda to both he inherits the wealth. So this verse also favours the view that offering of pinda was a duty laid upon him who took the wealth (except in the case of male issue). Hence it appears that the theory of the Mit. also has a very respectable antiquity and further it has been followed by most medieval writers throughout India (except in Bengal).

The argument of the Dayabhāga (which was propounded before it by a writer probably named Udyota<sup>1423</sup>) that the taking of a deceased person's estate depends upon the spiritual benefit conferred on him is briefly as follows. It relies principally on Baud Dh. S and Manu. In the section on the partition of wealth (which begins from IX. 103) Manu (IX. 137) declares the super-eminent spiritual benefits conferred by the son, grandson and great-grandson; further (in IX. 106) Manu states that the son gets all wealth from his father because he frees the latter from debt, that (in IX. 139) the daughter's son also is spoken of as saving the grandfather in the next world and as therefore entitled to the grandfather's wealth, that the verse immediately preceding Manu IX. 187 (declaring that the nearest amongst sapindas inherits) speaks of the offering of pinda to three ancestors; and since it is reasonable to presume that the blind and the like are excluded from inheritance (Manu IX. 201) because they are incapable of performing religious rites, it follows that Manu and others regarded the taking of wealth as dependent on the conferring of spiritual benefit. This point of view the Dayabhāga emphasizes at every step. It<sup>1424</sup> says: "There are two purposes for which wealth is acquired, viz. for worldly enjoyment and for the unseen or spiritual benefit derived from making gifts and the like; but when the acquirer is dead, he cannot have enjoyment of the wealth and the only purpose that remains is the unseen purpose or benefit. It is therefore that Br. says, 'from the wealth inherited, the inheritor should carefully set apart half for the benefit of the deceased for defraying the expenses of the monthly, six-monthly and annual śrāddhas". The subject of śrāddhas will be dealt with in another volume. But here it is necessary to say a few words for making the position of the Dāyabhāga clear. Among the several kinds of śrāddhas two deserve notice, viz. Ekoddīṣṭa and Pārvana.<sup>1425</sup> The first (ekoddīṣṭa) is performed for the benefit of a single deceased person. There are sixteen such śrāddhas performed for the benefit of the deceased during the course of one year after his death or on the 11th day of death. And every year on the anniversary of death an ekoddīṣṭa śrāddha may be performed for a deceased person. The pārvana śrāddha is performed on certain specified days, such as the amāvāsyā of a month, or particularly in the dark half or on the amāvāsyā of Bhādrapada or on a saṅkrānti. In this śrāddha the three deceased paternal ancestors of the performer are principally invoked and the three deceased paternal ancestors of his mother are also invoked but their invocation is secondary and is dependent on the principal invocation. There is one more word that must be explained here viz. sapindikāna or sapindikarāna. This is a śrāddha rite performed one year after the death of a person or on the 12th day from his death. By this śrāddha the person recently deceased ceases to be a preta (a departed spirit) and is elevated to the rank of pitrs (Manes). The widow and daughter can perform only the ekoddīṣṭa śrāddha, while sons, grandsons and great-grandsons can perform the pārvana śrāddha also. The Dāyabhāga refers (XI. 1. 34 p. 162) to the fact that the three male descendants, by performing the pārvana śrāddha, confer great spiritual benefit on the owner (compare note 1342 above). Elsewhere (XI. 7. 17 p. 211) it designates the pārvana as 'traipurusika' (i. e. performed for the benefit of three ancestors). When speaking of the right of the widow to inherit it emphasizes (XI. 1. 43 p. 165), by quoting verses from Vyāsa,<sup>1426</sup> that a widow by leading a chaste life, by offering water mixed with sesame every day to her deceased husband, by making gifts and observing fasts saves himself and her husband in the next world. It adds that if the widow misbehaves she makes her husband fall, as husband and wife share in the fruits of each other's good and evil deeds. Therefore the widow takes her husband's wealth for his benefit Brhan-Manu (q. by the Dāyabhāga XI. 1. 7 and by the Mit.) declares that a sonless chaste widow should offer pinda to her husband and take his entire estate. Similarly Prajāpati (cited above on p 709 and quoted by even the V. Mayūkha and other works of the Mitaksarā school) requires the widow who inherits all the movable and immovable property of her deceased husband to perform the monthly, six-monthly and annual śrāddhas of her husband.<sup>1427</sup> Similarly the Dāyabhāga allows the unmarried daughter or a married daughter having a son (or who is likely to have a son) to inherit because her son will offer pinda to the owner who will be the maternal grand-father. It prefers the daughter's son<sup>1428</sup> as an heir even to the father because the former offers a pinda to the owner himself, while the father offers pindas to two of the three paternal ancestors to whom the owner would have been bound to offer pindas. The D. B. winds up by saying<sup>1429</sup> that the order of inheritors must be followed in such a way that the wealth of the deceased may be most beneficial to (the soul of) the deceased. In certain respects the D. B. does not strictly and logically follow its own theory but is compelled to twist it by reason of the places assigned by special texts to certain heirs.<sup>1430</sup> For example, the order of heirs according to the D. B. is; son, grandson and great grandson; widow; daughter; daughter's son; father; mother; full brother; half brother; full brother's son; half brother's son. But the persons entitled to perform the śrāddha of the deceased in order are somewhat different. In fact the order of succession does not strictly follow in any school the order of those that are called śrāddhādhikārins. The order of those who are entitled to offer śrāddha to a deceased separated male (śrāddhādhikārīn) given in most works is as follows; son (aurasa or adopted); grandson; great-grandson; widow; married daughter; unmarried daughter who has succeeded to the deceased's wealth; daughter's son who succeeds to the wealth; full brother; half brother (son of a different mother); full brother's son; half brother's son; father; mother; daughter-in-law; full sister; half sister; full sister's son; half sister's son; paternal uncle; paternal uncle's son; other gotraja sapindas; sodaka; any gotraja; cognates such as maternal grandfather, maternal uncle, maternal uncle's son (i. e. the bandhus of the three kinds in order); pupil; son-in-law; father-in-law; friend; any brāhmana who takes a brāhmana's wealth or king who takes by escheat. Vide Nirnayasindhu III uttarārdha pp. 382-386, Dharmasindhu III uttarārdha pp. 368-369, Śrāddhāviveka p. 48. If the principle of the capacity to offer or of the offering of pindas regulating the right to succeed is to be strictly and logically followed, there is no reason why the mother or the paternal grandmother should succeed immediately after the father or the paternal grandfather respectively. Her recognition in the D. B. school is due to the fact she is expressly mentioned in Manu as an heir. Similarly in the rules about the succession to re-united coparceners, the school of D. B. gives preference to re-united co-parceners and does not apply the theory of spiritual benefit. Further the Dāyatattva says that all that is required is the capacity to receive pinda or the capacity to participate in the pinda offered by others and not the actual offering of pindas. For example, if a man performs śrāddha for his ancestors, then dies, but no one performs his sapindana and therefore he does not participate in the pindas given to his ancestors, still his wealth will be inherited on the principle of religious efficacy<sup>1431</sup>. Owing to considerations of space it is not possible to go into great detail about the several propositions established in relation to the theory of religious benefit as the determining factor in matters of inheritance. But the following propositions may be set out in one place:

(1) Benefits are conferred on the deceased by means of the ekoddista or the pārvana śrāddha. The capacity to perform the pārvana śrāddha is not the sole ground on which rests the right to inheritance to a man. Therefore the widow, the daughter and the pupil were recognized as heirs though they perform only the ekoddista śrāddha. But those who are competent to perform the pārvana śrāddha have a preferable claim to those who are entitled to perform only the ekoddista śrāddha. Therefore the male issue of a deceased person are preferred to a widow or daughter.

(2) Spiritual benefit is conferred on a man by presenting pinda directly to him or by offering pinda to one or more of his paternal ancestors to whom he presents pindas during his own life time and with whom he participates in pindas offered after his death by others or by offering a pinda to one or more of his maternal ancestors (mother's father, mother's father's father and the latter's father) to whom he was bound to offer pindas during his life (but with whom he does not participate in the pinda offered to them<sup>1432</sup>).

(3) The pinda offered to a man himself directly is of greater efficacy than the pinda offered to a paternal ancestor in which he participates after his own death as one of the Manas. Therefore the son, grandson or great-grandson is preferred to every one else. The brother offers a pinda to the father and two more of the deceased, as the owner's father is the former's maternal grandfather and therefore he is connected as sapinda with the owner. A father's sister's son offers a pinda to the paternal grandfather of the owner, who (paternal grandfather) is the maternal grandfather of the father's sister's son. A maternal uncle is not sprung even mediately from the family of the owner, but he offers a pinda to his own father who is the maternal grandfather of the deceased owner. Therefore the maternal uncle or his son or son's son being connected with a pinda that is offered to the maternal grandfather or maternal great-grandfather respectively of the deceased owner is a sapinda of the deceased owner. A maternal aunt's son also offers a pinda to his mother's father, who is also the owner's mother's father and so the maternal aunt's son is a sapinda of the owner. The pindas offered to the maternal ancestors by him are inferior and secondary. Further, one's own mother, the father's mother, father's father's mother were associated with their respective husbands as to the pindas offered to the male ancestors and the same holds good about the wives of the maternal ancestors also.<sup>1435</sup>

The result of this way of defining a sapinda is to obliterate the distinction between a gotraja and a bandhu. Yāj (II. 136) expressly says that a bandhu can succeed only on failure of all gotrajas and so according to him a bandhu is one who is not a gotraja. The Dāyabhāga brings in the sister's son immediately after the brother's son's son and before the paternal grandfather (i. e. even before a near agnatic ancestor) who is literally a gotraja, while the sister's son is literally not a gotraja. When the Dāyabhāga designates one's sister's son as sprung from the kula of the owner though not of the same gotra, he does violence to popular usage prevalent throughout India. An ordinary person in India hardly ever says that his sister's son or father's sister's son is born in his own kula. The Dāyabhāga only quibbles over the word 'gotraja' in Yāj which it reads in the singular (gotrajaḥ) and not in the plural (gotrajāḥ) as the Mit. does. Under the Mit. the sister's son is only a bandhu and cannot succeed before a paternal uncle or his son or a paternal grand-uncle or any other gotraja. The Dāyabhāga thus gives the go-by to the text of Yāj and shuffles in several cognates as very near heirs The D. B. regards Manu IX. 186-187 as the crucial text and Yāj. II. 135-36 as only secondary.

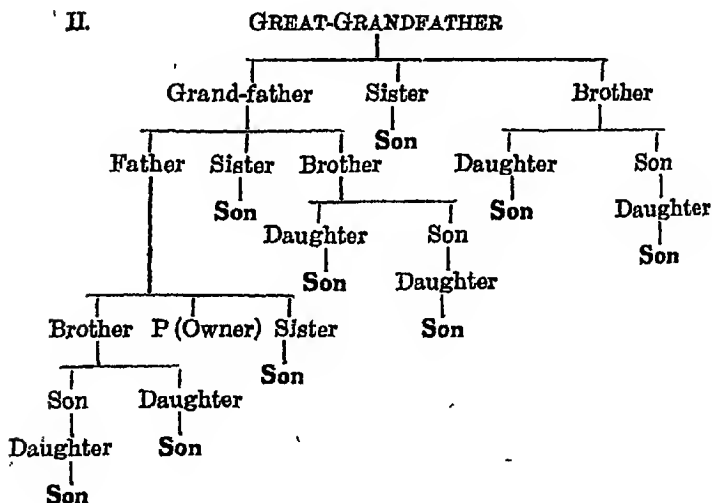

The following diagrams will illustrate the working of the theory of religious efficacy. A person is a sapinda of those to whom he is bound to offer a pinda while he is alive, of those who on his death are bound to offer pinda to him (viz his three male descendants, his daughter's son, his son's daughter's son and his son's son's daughter's son) and of those who are bound to offer a pinda to the ancestors to whom he is bound to offer a pinda viz. to his three paternal ancestors and his three maternal ancestors and all of these are his sapindas. The last of these three groups has four sub-groups.—sub-group No. 1 comprises those who offer pindas to their own paternal ancestors who are also the paternal ancestors of the owner. sub-group II contains those who offer pindas to their three maternal ancestors who are all or some of them the paternal ancestors of the owner, to whom he was bound to offer a pinda; sub-group III comprises those who offer pindas to their paternal ancestors all or some of whom are the maternal ancestors of the owner; sub-group IV exhibits those who offer pindas to their own maternal ancestors who are also the maternal ancestors of the owner. Each of these sub-groups contains 9 persons (as the minimum) who are all shown in thick type. If the owner has several brothers, sisters, uncles and aunts &c. the number of possible sapindas will be much larger. All heirs in the three sub-groups II-IV will be bandhus according to the Mitākṣarā and will be postponed to gotrajas under the Mitākṣarā. It should be noticed that Jimūtavāhana brought in the father's daughter's son immediately after the father's great-grandson, the paternal grandfather's daughter's son after the paternal grandfather's great-grandson and the paternal great-grandfather's daughter's son immediately after that ancestor's great-grandson on the analogy of the rights of the owner's daughter's son and on the basis of Manu IX. 139 that the daulutra (daughter's son) saves an ancestor in the next world just as a son's son does.<sup>1436</sup> daughter's son and that the latter though a sapinda of the owner and an heir was not to be preferred to the great-grand son of the paternal grandfather of the propositus Sarvadhikari (T. L. L. on Inheritance, 2nd ed., of 1922 pp. 701-702) criticizes this decision as wrong, but it does not appear that the Calcutta High Court is prepared to follow him. A similar conflict arises as to several cognate heirs. For example, the son's daughter's son and the son's son's daughter's son offer pindas to the owner himself directly as a maternal ancestor (just as the daughter's son does) and therefore should be placed immediately after the daughter's son as heirs. But the Calcutta High Court would refuse to do so if the reasoning in 15 Cal. 780 be followed. Sarvadhikari (p. 709) however would place them immediately after the daughter's son.

III. MOTHER'S GREAT-GRANDFATHER

IV. MOTHER'S GREAT-GRANDFATHER

The D. B. says<sup>1437</sup> that the word 'gotrajah' (mas. singular) is employed by Yāj. for excluding all sapinda women (except those that are expressly named as heirs by special texts since they are not born or (even mediately) sprung from the family of the owner, as the sister's son or the father's sister's son that is held by it to be so sprung, that the word 'bandhu' employed by Yāj to include a maternal uncle and the like among heritable sapindas, since they are not sprung even mediately from the kulu of the owner and are also not of the same gotra, that the maternal uncle and the like come in only after all descendants in the lines of the paternal ancestor, inclusive of the great-grandfather up to the latter's daughter's son are exhausted,<sup>1438</sup> and that Manu had not to enter into these details as its two verses (IX 186-187) were quite enough to lead to all that has been elaborated by the D. B. about the working of the theory of religious efficacy.

It will have been noticed that no female except the five expressly mentioned can inherit under the Dāyabhāga scheme and the result is that a man's own son's daughter or daughter's daughter does not take as heir, whereas a distant relative like the father's father's sister's son takes it. The same is also the case even under the Mitākṣarā in the whole of India (except in Bombay and to some extent in Madras for which see a little later on)

A man offers only the leavings or remnants of the pindas that stick to his hand (when offering pindas to his three paternal ancestors) and that (leavings) are cast on kṣa grass to three paternal ancestors above the paternal great-grandfather (Manu III. 216). So also the three male descendants beyond the great-grandson offer the leavings (called pindalepa) to the owner; these three remote paternal ancestors and the three remote male descendants (spoken of as 'vibhaktadāyada' in Baud. Dh. S. I. 5 114) are designated sakulya by Baud. and 1438. Vide Kailasha Chandra v. Karuna Nath 18 C. W. N. 477 where the above passages are considered at length and it is held that the paternal grand-uncle's daughter's son (though not expressly mentioned in the D. B.) is entitled to preference over the maternal uncle (who is expressly mentioned as an heir and a sapinda by D. B.), since the former offers a pinda to the paternal great-grandfather of the owner to whom the owner was bound to offer a pinda in which the owner participates after his own death, while the latter offers a pinda to the maternal grandfather of the owner to whom the owner was bound to offer a pinda in which, however, the owner did not participate after his death.

The Mit. states that the gotrajas are the paternal grandmother, the sapindas and samānodakas of the deceased. It then proceeds to say that the paternal grandmother is the first among gotrajas, then comes paternal grandfather. It paraphrases the word gotraja (born in the gotra) as samānagotra (having the same gotra) and then proceeds, 'on failure of the father's line (santāna) the heirs are the paternal grandmother, the paternal grandfather, the paternal uncles and their sons in order; on failure of the paternal grandfather's line the paternal great-grandmother, the paternal great-grandfather, his sons and son's sons inherit. In this manner must be understood the succession of sapindas belonging to the same gotra (as the deceased) up to the 7th degree'. According to the Mit. sapinda relationship extends up to the 7th degree (reckoned from and inclusive of the owner) Therefore the owner's sapindas for purposes of inheritance according to the Mit. are the owner's (1) 6 male descendants in the male line, (2) 6 male ascendants in the male line and the wives of the first three of them (that are expressly so declared, viz. mother, paternal grandmother and paternal great-grandmother) and probably the wives of the next three also, (3) the six male descendants of each of his six male ascendants in the collateral male lines. Besides, a man's wife and daughter are treated as his sapindas and the daughter's son, though a blunnagotra sapinda, is placed high among the gotraja sapinda heirs

Even under the Mitāksarā in the whole of India (except in the Bombay and Madras schoole), no women succeed as gotraja sapindas (except five expressly named and cited above on p. 713). In Bombay the sister (full or half) is brought in as a gotraja by the V Mayūkha (though the Mitāksarā is entirely silent) and placed by it immediately after the paternal grandmother. It relies on the general words of Manu IX. 187 and of Br. (quoted above on p 733) that to the nearest person in blood the inheritance goes and then proceeds.<sup>1442</sup> 'She is also a gotraja as being born in the gotra in which her brother (the deceased owner) was born. She is, however, not a sagotra (of the deceased brother), but being a sagotra is not mentioned here (in Yā.) as the condition that leads on to the taking of the wealth of the deceased'. Here the V Mayūkha plays upon the word gotraja and takes its literal meaning. But that is a specious argument. The widow and mother are not gotrajas (in this sense of being born in the gotra) but on marriage they enter the gotra of their husbands and become sagotra. Further, on the same reasoning, a son's daughter, brother's daughter, father's sister and other women born in the family of the deceased will become his gotrajas (though not sagotras because on marriage they pass into the gotra of their husbands). But these other women are not expressly recognised even by the V. Mayūkha as gotrajas. Even though she was not mentioned in the Mit the sister has been recognised as a gotraja sapinda by the Bombay High Court in parts of the Bombay Presidency where the Mit. is the paramount authority. The order of heirs under the Mit would be as follows:—Full brother, half brother, full brother's son, half brother's son, paternal grandmother, sister (full being preferred to half), paternal grandfather. According to the V. Mayūkha the order is slightly different, viz full brothers along with sons of full brothers that are dead, full brother's son, grandmother, full sister, halfbrother, halvesister, paternal grandfather. The unmarried sister had been recognized as entitled to a share when brothers came to a partition and they had to provide for her marriage expenses. Vide above pp 619-620 and Nār<sup>1443</sup> (dāyabhāga, 13), Visṇu Dh. S. 18. 35, Manu IX. 118, Yaj II. 124. In Madras the sister had been recognized as a bandhu. The Legislature has intervened and laid down (Hindu Law of Inheritance Amendment Act II of 1929) that in territories governed by the law of the Mitākṣarā and in respect of the property of males not held in coparcenary and not disposed by will, a son's daughter, daughter's daughter, sister and sister's son shall be entitled to rank as heirs in the order specified in the Act next after a father's father and before a father's brother. The first three of these were before this Act not at all recognized as heirs in the whole of India except in Bombay (where the sister was recognized as a gotraja sapinda and the first two as bandhus) and except in Madras (where the first three were recognized only as bandhus). The sister's son was given a very high place as a sapinda under the Dāyabhāga and was treated as a bandhu elsewhere in India. This enactment does not affect the Dāyabhāga scheme and so the three females mentioned in the Act are not heirs even now under the Dāyabhāga. The sister's place as settled by Bombay decisions is after the paternal grandmother and before the paternal grandfather, while the above Act places her after the paternal grandfather. In Ba Mahalaxmi v The Deputy Nazir 45 Bom. L. R. 434 it has for this reason been held that the Act does not apply to the Bombay Province. If it be held that the Act does apply to Bombay (except as to the sister), then the same Act will have to be deemed to be laying down two different orders of succession as to the same four heirs in different provinces, which, to say the least, is not a reasonable or desirable way of interpreting statutes (just as in the case of texts).

Some difficulty is caused by the use of the word santānu in the Mit. as regards the father's, grandfather's and great-grandfather's line. It has been seen above (p 731) that the compact series ends with the brother's son (father's son's son i. e. after two descendants of the father) according to the Bombay High Court, while elsewhere in India it is supposed to end with the brother's son's son (i. e. after three descendants of the father). The Mit. expressly mentions only two descendants in the grandfather's and great-grandfather's line. The general rule is that sapinda relationship extends to six descendants of each line (excluding the man or ancestor from whom the counting is made). The further general rule gathered from the meagre words of the Mit. is that the nearer line excludes the more remote (e. g. the grandfather, his son and grandson are expressly mentioned by the Mit. as taking before the great-grandfather, his son and grandson). The question is whether the 3rd, 4th, 5th and 6th descendants of a nearer line would exclude even the 1st or 2nd descendant of a remoter line e. g. whether the great-grandson of the grandfather would take before the son or grandson of the great-grandfather or whether the 6th descendant of the grandfather would take before the son of the great-grandfather. There were three views<sup>1444</sup> on this point.

1444. Vide Buddha Singh v. Lattu Singh L. R. 42 I. A. 208 pp 220-24 for the three views and their exponents. The P. C. overruled the first view and held (p 227) that the descendants in each ascending line up to the fixed limit should be exhausted at any rate to the third degree before making the ascent to the next line in order of succession गोत्रजज्ञानेनैव भ्रातृ-तत्सुतयोर्निर्देशे मध्यमानेपि पुत्रकृत्तयोरभिधानस्य गोत्रजेषु पितामहादिषु तस्य तस्य सन्तानो विदुसन्तानाविव द्वयोरेव पुत्रपौत्रपौर्धनभगित्वज्ञापनार्थत्वात् । स्मृतिश्च II p 300 In Sm. C. II. p. 300 the passage as printed is somewhat corrupt. The Subodhini also says 'विदुसन्तानो भ्रातृतत्सुतपर्यन्तः' p. 74. vide सर्वः पा. p. 674 also for the same view.

The first view, relying upon certain words of the Sm<sup>4</sup> C., held that after two descents in each line, one should ascend into a remoter line and after the two descendants of that line are exhausted, one should revert to the 3rd to 6th descendants of a nearer line. The 2nd view was that in each line three generations were to be first exhausted, because the word putra in several places in the Mit. includes the three male descendants. The 3rd view<sup>1445</sup> was that in each line six descendants were to be exhausted before ascending to the next remoter line (as sapinda relationship extended to six degrees.)

Another question is whether the widows of agnatic relations (such as the son's widow, brother's widow, step-mother or paternal uncle's widow) are included in the term 'gotrajñ' for purposes of inheritance. Under the Dāyabhāga, as well as under the Mitākṣarā throughout India (except in the Bombay School), the widows of gotraja sapindas are not heirs at all, since according to almost all writers, women do not inherit except when expressly mentioned by texts. In the Bombay School the position is different. According to both the Mit and the Mayūkhā, wives enter by marriage the gotra of their husbands and become sapindas of their husbands. The Bālabhāṭṭi declared the son's widow to be an heir, even before the paternal grandmother and includes females also in the word gotrajñ. When gotraja was rendered as saṁvānaputra, the term became wide enough not only to include those born in the gotra but even those who entered the gotra by marriage. Besides, it was argued that if the paternal grandmother or paternal great-grandmother succeeded as a gotraja there was no reason why other widows of other gotrajas should not succeed. From the earliest days of British rule the gotraja sapindas (such as the son's, brother's, paternal uncle's widows) have been recognized as heirs in the Bombay Presidency. They take only a limited estate like the owner's widow or mother or paternal grandmother. They are recognized rather on the ground of 'positive acceptance and usage' by the Privy Council than on the ground of any texts<sup>1446</sup>. They occupy the same place as their husbands, succeed after the compact series, the sister and half-sister and only after all the male gotraja sapindas (up to the 7th degree inclusive of the ancestor) properly belonging to the line to which their husbands belonged; e.g. the son's widow would succeed before the brother's son's<sup>1447</sup> son, the brother's widow or step-mother would succeed after all the six male descendants of the husband's father, but before the father's father, paternal uncle or his son &c. These widows of gotraja sapindas succeed before any bandhu. Since Act XVIII of 1937 a man's own widow, his predeceased son's widow and the widow of a predeceased son's predeceased son succeed along with his son or sons throughout India.

1445 The third view was propounded by Telang J in Rachaya. Kaṭhaṅḍī 16 Bom 716, which is referred to by the P<sup>4</sup> C in 42 I. 1, 208, at pp 220 and 226. The P<sup>4</sup> C do not dissent from Telang J but do not expressly approve of his views as it was not necessary to do so in that case, where the question was whether the great-grandson of the grandfather of the deceased was to be preferred to the grandson of the great-grandfather and it was held by the P<sup>4</sup> C that he was to be preferred. The 2nd view appears to be supported by the words of 1parārka p 745 'एव भ्राता तस्युद्धारार्थं एव पित्रुमन्तर्गते त्रय प्रयासज्ज्ञा समिष्टा । एव पितृमन्तर्गतो प्रपितामहमन्तर्गतो च । एवामभ्यां विद्वादिद्वयस्य च त्रयोऽन्तर्गतो पुत्रादित्रय मापिष्ट्याह्नमश्रादकम् ।'

Samānodakas According to the Mīṭ gotrajas are either sapindas or samānodakas. The word 'samānodaka' has a technical meaning Acc. to Manu V.60, 'the sapinda relationship ceases with the seventh person, the relationship of samānodaka<sup>1448</sup> ends when birth (in the family) and name are no longer known'. This occurs in the chapter on impurity. The Mīṭ declares that the samānodakas comprise males seven generations beyond the sapindas or all males (beyond sapindas) whose birth (in the same family as that of the deceased) and name are known. It quotes a text of Brhan-Manu, 'the sapinda relationship ceases with the seventh person; the relation of samānodaka ceases after the 14th; according to some it extends as far as the memory of name and family (or birth) reach; the gotra is said to extend up to that'. The samānodakas comprise the 7 ascendants of a person after the great-grandfather's great-grandfather, the 13 descendants of these seven ascendants, the 7 descendants after the 6th descendant of his 6 male ancestors from his own father; and descendants of himself from the 7th to the 13th. The Privy Council have ruled<sup>1449</sup> in a recent case that, according to the Mitākṣarā school, samānodaka relationship does not extend beyond the 14th degree (from and inclusive of the common ancestor of the claimant and the propositus).

The word 'samānodaka' literally means 'those who offer to or receive water from the same person'. The word is employed by Vas.<sup>1450</sup> 17. 79. But in the law of inheritance it has a technical meaning as stated above.

1449. Vide Atmaram v. Bajirao L. R. 62 I. A. p. 139 where it was said that in the event of a conflict between the ancient text writers and the commentators the opinion of the latter prevails in the provinces where their authority is recognized on the ground that the commentators only voiced the usage of the time and of the country in which they lived. The case of Bat Devkore v. Amritram 10 Bom. 372 where the word samānodaka was interpreted to include any agnate without any limit of degree was not overruled but was distinguished on the ground that it was governed by the law of the Vyavahāra-mayūkha which quotes only Manu V. 60 and does not quote Brhan-Manu.

1451. The word 'bandhu' is a very ancient one and has been used in various senses throughout the ages. In Rg. I 113. 2 Night and Dawn (Uṣas) are called samānabandhīṃ (bound together or having a common relative). In Rg I. 154. 5 (urukramasya sa hi bandhur-itthā) the word appears to be used in the sense of 'friend'. In Rg I 164. 33 'uābhi' and 'bandhu' are employed one after another. The sage Vasistha tells Aśvins (Rg VII. 72. 2) that their mutual friendship is ancestral and their relation is common (yuvorhi nah sakhyā pūtryāṃ samāno bandhuruta tasya vittam). Vide also Rg. V. 73 4, VIII. 21. 4, VIII 100. 6, IX 14. 2. In the Atharva-veda V 11. 11 Atharvan is said to be the bandhu of the gods and Varuna is said to be both the friend (sakhā) and bandhu (relative) of the sage. In Atharvaveda VI. 15. 2 and VI 54. 3 the same half verse occurs, 'whoever literally so called. According to the Mit bandhus are sapindas of the deceased belonging to a different gotra. Bandhus succeed under the Mit., the V. Mayūkha and all other authorities except those of the Dāyabhāga school only on failure of samānodakas (or sodakas). It will have been noticed from the discussion above that gotrajas, whether sapindas and samānodakas, are all agnates (and in some cases their wives) i. e. persons related to the deceased by unbroken male descent. The bandhus are persons related to the deceased through one or more females. The basic texts on the inheritance of bandhus are three verses attributed to 'Vṛddha-Sātātapa

'whether our relative or not attacks us' 'sabandhuścāsabandhuśca yosmān-abdhūśasati' In the Vāj S IV. 22 (asme ramasvāsme te bandhuh) the poet prays that the god may find delight in them and find in them his bandhu. Among sūtras Gaut. IV. 3 and Vārābhagrya 9 speak of pitrbandhus and mātṛbandhus (persons related through the father and mother). In Yāj. the word bandhu or bāndhava occurs many times and has at least three senses viz relative in general (in I 82, 108, 113, 116, 220; II. 144, 280; III 11, 239), agnate (II 294), cognate (II. 135, 149, 264). Manu IX. 158 and XII. 79 employ the word bandhu in the sense of relative in general. The Āp. Dh. S. I 7 21. 8 and II 5. 11. 16 and Gaut 14 18 employ the word 'yonisambandha' for persons 'connected through a female. On the other hand Pāṇini V. 3. 23 (rto vidyāyonisambandhebhyah) appears to employ the word in a general sense viz 'blood relation' (whether paternal or maternal). Another word frequently used from Vedic times is 'jñāti' which generally means 'agnate' or 'relative'. Vide Rg X 66 14, X 117 9. In the Atharvaveda IV 5 6 a man desirous of a clandestine intercourse with a woman prays 'svapantvāsyat jñātayah svaptoyanti-abhito janah'. In I. 1. 35 Pāṇini appears to use the word jñāti in the sense of agnates 'समजातिधनारूपायाम्'. In Gaut II. 43, Āp Dh S. I. 3 10 3 'jñāti' occurs and is explained by Haradatta as agnatic relations. In Manu III 31 (jñātībhyo dravinam dattvā) jñāti appears to mean paternal relations. In Manu III. 264, IV 179, Yāj II. 149 jñāti is distinguished from bāndhava or bandhu and so means 'agnates'. Two other words are 'sajāta' and 'sanābhi'. The first occurs in the Tai S I 6 2 1 and I 6 10. 1 (ugrohaṁ sajātesu bhūyāsam) and in the Atharvaveda I 9 3, III. 8. 2, VI 5. 2 and means 'agnates or kinsmen'. The word sanābhi occurs in Rg IX 89. 4 and means also the same thing as 'jñāti' in Āp. Gr. VII. 20. 18, Manu V. 72, Br (S B. E 33 p 310 verse 11), but in the Nṛukta IV. 21 and in Kāt. (q. by Aparārka pp. 669-670) the word sanābhi is used in a wider sense (as including paternal and maternal relations). The Amarakośa gives sapinda as a synonym of sanābhi. नान्या सनद्धा गर्भा जायन्ते इत्याहुरेतस्मादेव ज्ञातीन् सनाभय इत्याचक्षते सवन्धव इति च । निवक्त IV. 21. क्षीरस्वामी (on अमरकोश) explains समानो नाभिर्मूलनेषा ते सनाभयः and relies on पाणिनि VI. 3. 85.

or Baudhāyana. They may be translated as follows: 'The sons of one's father's sister, the sons of one's mother's sister and the sons of one's maternal uncle—these are to be known as ātmabandhus (one's own bandhus); the sons of one's father's father's sister, the sons of one's father's mother's sister, the son's of one's father's maternal uncle—these are to be known as one's pitrbandhus (father's bandhus), the sons of one's mother's father's sister, the sons of one's mother's mother's sister, the sons of one's mother's maternal uncle—these are to be known as the mātrbandhus (mother's bandhus).<sup>1452</sup> The Mit. states on this text that bandhus are of three kinds viz. ātma-bandhus, pitrbandhus and mātrbandhus and that ātmabandhus succeed before pitrbandhus on account of their greater propinquity to the deceased and pitrbandhus succeed before the mātrbandhus.<sup>1453</sup> The treatment of the rights of bandhus in the Mit. and other commentaries and digests is very meagre. This has led in modern times to a bewildering mass of case law on the inheritance of bandhus.

The first question is whether the enumeration of bandhus in the verses quoted is exhaustive or only illustrative. The V. P. expressly<sup>1451</sup> states that if the enumeration be held to be exhaustive absurd results would follow. For example, a maternal uncle's son is expressly named as an ātmabandhu in the verses quoted above, but his father (the maternal uncle), being not mentioned, would on that hypothesis be excluded. Therefore it was held by the Privy Council in a very early case<sup>1455</sup> that the enumeration of bandhus is only illustrative, that the maternal uncle though not mentioned is a nearer bandhu and would succeed in preference to his own son which is expressly mentioned. In Balasubrahmanya v. Subbaya 65 A. 93 it was held that under the Mitākṣarā the principle of proximity of blood relationship applies to the succession of bandhus, that in determining which of two ātmabandhus is entitled to succeed nearness of degree and not religious efficacy is the proper test to apply, that when the ātmabandhus are equal in degree the test of religious efficacy may be applied to determine preference and that the maternal uncle of the deceased is entitled to preference over the deceased's father's half sister's son. This was followed in Virangauda v. Yellappa I. L. R. (1943) Bom. 259 (F. B.) where the mother's brother of the deceased was preferred to the father's sister's son. So also the mother's father would be a bandhu. It is strange that the deceased's own descendants through a female or the deceased's father's descendants through a female such as the son's daughter's son, daughter's son's son, daughter's daughter's son, sister's son or sister's daughter's son, are not mentioned in any authoritative commentaries or digests as his bandhus. Further, the bandhus enumerated in the three verses do not go beyond the 4th degree from the common ancestor. But bandhu relationship extends up to five degrees at least. There is an ancient instance of the sister's daughter's son having succeeded to a Buddhist bhikkhu in Cambodia (in śaka 586). This would be so only according to the principles of the Mit. Vide 'Indian Cultural Influence in Cambodia' p 55 by Dr. Bijan Raj Chatterji (Cal. 1928). All the above (such as the son's daughter's son) have been recognized by the Indian Courts as ātmabandhus entitled to inherit. In United Provinces v. Kanhaiya Lal 16 Lucknow 551 it has been held that the father's father's daughter's son's son would be an ātmabandhu of the deceased. In an early case<sup>1456</sup> in British India two propositions were laid down, viz. (1) there must be mutuality of sapinda relation between the deceased and the claimant (i. e. each must be a sapinda of the other) and (2) that in order that a man may be an heritable bandhu of the deceased they must be related directly through themselves or 1456. Vide Umair Bahadur v. Udo Chand 6 Cal. 119 (F. B.), 128 where it was held that a man's sister's daughter's son is a heritable bandhu but a remark was made (which was an obiter dictum) that the sister's daughter's son's son would not be a bandhu of the propositus because the latter was not a descendant of the grandfather of the former, his father or mother.

through their mother or father. These propositions were accepted by the Privy Council,<sup>1457</sup> which further said that sapinda relationship extends in the case of bandhus only up to five degrees. The first proposition about mutuality has some support in the interpretation put on the famous verse of Manu IX. 187 by the Balambhatti and the Subodhini (vide above note 1418). But difficulty is created about mutuality by the unwarranted assumption that the common ancestor must be a member of one out of four families as stated by Sarvadhikari. The other propositions, however, are not supported by any texts or sound reasoning. Since the enumeration of bandhus is admitted to be not exhaustive, no sound inference can be drawn from the list of nine bandhus that a heritable bandhu must be connected with the deceased in any particular way. All that can be required is that he must be a bandhu as defined by the Mit and connected with the deceased by having particles of the body of a common ancestor within the limits of sapinda relationship as laid down by the Mit. The limit of five degrees categorically laid down by the P. C. is not, it is submitted with great respect, based on very sure or strong foundations. The Mit says that sapinda relationship extends to seven degrees when traced through the father, that wherever the word 'sapinda' is employed this meaning has to be understood and it extends up to five degrees when traced through the mother. Vide H. of Dh. Vol. II. pp. 454-455. What is material is not whether a female intervenes somewhere, but whether the person about whose sapindaship a question is raised traces his descent to a common ancestor through his father or through his mother. In the P. C. case the claimant claimed sapindaship with the deceased through his mother, and it was rightly decided that he being 6th from the common ancestor was not a bandhu. But to lay down as a universal rule that a bandhu in order to inherit under the Mit. should not be beyond five degrees from the common ancestor is against the definition of sapinda given by the Mit. itself and unduly narrows the express words of the Mit. The words of the P. C. 'the sapinda relationship, on which the heritable right of collaterals is founded, ceases in the case of the bhinna-gotra sapinda with the fifth degree from the common ancestor' (L. R. 41 I. A. 290 at p. 312) are very generally expressed and are susceptible of the interpretation that they lay down the rule of five degrees even when the claimant claims<sup>1458</sup> relationship with the deceased through his own father. Some support for the Privy Council rule that sapinda relationship ceases with the 5th

1458 Vide Brj Mohan v Kishun Lal (1938) A. L. J. 670 where the Allahabad High Court held that, even when the claimant traced sapinda relationship through his father, heritable bandhu relation ceases after the fifth degree. But in Kesar Singh v. Secretary of State for India 49 Mad 652 at p. 690 it is said that, though in the P. C. decision there are some observations which at first sight imply that sapinda relationship of bandhus for inheritance ceases with the 5th degree in all cases, there is nothing to suggest that the Privy Council intended to do away with the well-known distinction between bhinnagotra sapindas that claim relationship through their father and those that trace it through their mother. There is great diversity of view yet about what the P. C. meant in 41 I. A. 290. In Seelan Nagamma v. Reddam I L. R. (1943) Mad 739 (F. B.) it was held that Dr Sarvadhikari is wrong in his restrictions of heritable bandhus to the lines he propounds, that 54 All. 698 is wrongly decided and that 49 Mad 652 lays down the correct law. On the other hand, in Hanmant v. Vasudev I. L. R. (1943) Bom. 465 it has been held that the P. C. means that heritable bandhus whether claiming through the father or the mother must be within five degrees from the common ancestor. Vide Deb Das v. Mukat Behari I. L. R. (1943) All. p. 131 which lays down several rules deducible from an examination of numerous cases. As an illustration of how the law of the succession of bandhus is in a bewildering state, the following two cases may be read. In Sakharam v. Ralkrishna 49 Bom. 739 (F. B.) it was held that a father's sister's son is to be preferred under the V. Mayūkha to the maternal uncle, but the P. C. decided in Balsubramanya v. Subbayya L. R. 65 I. A. 93 that the maternal uncle is entitled to preference over the father's sister's son.

degree from the common ancestor in the case of bhinnagotra sapindas may be found in the words of Mitramisra in his commentary on Yaj I. 52, in the implication of the words of Kullūka<sup>1459</sup> on Manu V. 60 and in the remarks of the Bālabhāṭṭi (p 191). But this view is opposed to other weighty authorities such as the Nirṇayasindhu and the Dharma-sindhu

The whole law about the succession of bandhus is in a confused state owing to conflicting decisions, but the P. C. has laid down certain propositions which may be set down here: (1) ātmabandhus succeed before pitrbandhus and pitrbandhus before mātṛbandhus; (2) the nearer in degree in each class of bandhus is preferable to the more remote; (3) as between bandhus of the same class, the conferring of spiritual benefit would be a ground of preference, as the Viramītrodaya invokes that principle in several cases (and so the father's half sister's son would be preferred to the mother's sister's son, though both are ātmabandhus and of equal degree); (4) if the above three rules fail, bandhus ex parte paterna (on the father's side) succeed before bandhus ex parte materna (on the mother's side); (5) the bandhu between whom and the propositus a lesser number of females intervenes is to be preferred. As a corollary of the 2nd rule it should follow that the descendants of the propositus would be preferred to ascendants and collaterals and that bandhus of the same class that are descendants of a nearer line would succeed in preference to descendants of a remoter line though of the same class. But this last proposition has not yet been settled by the Privy Council. It has been, however, held in Debi Das v Mukat Behari I. L. R (1943) All. 131 that a sister's son's son should be preferred to the deceased's cousin's daughter's son, since the former belongs to a nearer line.

For the purposes of this work it is irrelevant and unnecessary to wade through the mass of case-law on the succession of bandhus. One or two matters, however, call for remark. If the theory of spiritual benefit be strictly applied, many of those who would inherit as bandhus under the Mit. system would be barred from inheritance. For example, the daughter's son's son<sup>1459</sup> or daughter's daughter's son would be a heritable bandhu under the Mitāksarā, but under the Dāyabhāga he would not be so, as he offers no pinda to the deceased or to any of the latter's ancestors. It is probably to obviate this unnatural and unjust consequence that the Dāyatattva refers to the text of Br. (quoted above in n 1419) in which the word 'bāndhavāḥ' occurs, remarks that the relatives of the father and mother of (the deceased) inherit in the order of their nearness to the latter and quotes the three verses about the three classes of bandhus, indicating thereby that spiritual benefit is not the sole test, but that where it fails the test of blood relationship may be applied.<sup>1460</sup>

Very elaborate rules have been evolved by Sarvadhikari in his Tagore Law Lectures on the Hindu Law of inheritance (2nd ed. of 1922, pp. 571-640). The author devoted great industry, labour and ingenuity in evolving those rules. But one regrets to say that he raised a stupendous structure on very slippery and meagre foundations. And the pity of it is that many Judges have more or less followed his lead, though emphatic disapproval of his views, whereby the list of bandhus capable of inheriting has been very much restricted, has not been wanting.<sup>1461</sup> It is not possible to examine here in detail his reasonings and results. But the futility of much that he has evolved can and must be briefly shown. The only solid foundations that we have in the Mit. are: (1) the definition of sapinda given by it on Yāj I 53; (2) the remark that bandhus are bhinnagotra sapindas (as contrasted with gotrajas); (3) that the bandhus of a man may be described under three classes; (4) that those that may be called ātmabandhus succeed before those called pitrbandhus and these latter inherit before mātṛbandhus. It is agreed on all hands that the nine bandhus enumerated in the verses of Śālitāpa or Baudhāyana are only illustrative. Therefore, the nine bandhus expressly mentioned should not have been used to exclude any one as not a heritable bandhu, as we have not got anywhere an exhaustive enumeration. Any one who satisfied the first two requirements stated above was a bandhu. Of the nine bandhus enumerated in the verses quoted above, none is connected by direct descent with the propositus, his father or mother; but one is a descendant of his paternal grandfather, one of his paternal great-grandfather, two of his maternal grandfather, two of his father's maternal grandfather, one of his mother's paternal grandfather, two of his mother's maternal grandfather. Sarvadhikari makes a different classification of these (p. 627) viz. 'two are connected through the father, three through the mother, two through the paternal grandmother and two through the maternal grandmother'. The whole trouble has been caused by this latter grouping. Instead of emphasizing lines of direct descent, he catches hold of females who are never spoken of in ancient works in connection with tracing descent (except in the case of the mother of the man concerned). If, because the illustrations given happen to be connected only with four lines of families, persons connected with the propositus through other lines are to be excluded, there is no reason why a man's own daughter's son's son, son's daughter's son, sister's son, or sister's son's son should be held to be bandhus. They bear no close analogy to the ātmabandhus enumerated by Śālitāpa. But it is admitted by Sarvadhikari that they are ātmabandhus. The terms ātmabandhu, pitrbandhu and mātṛbandhu are mere labels or devices to show nearness and preference among bandhus. Acc. to the V. Mayūkha<sup>1462</sup> the words pitrbandhu and mātṛbandhu are to be dissolved as sas̥thī-tatourusa compounds (pituḥ bāndhavāḥ or mātuh bāndhavāh) i. e. according to it pitrbandhus or māturbandhus are bandhus of the father or mother and must also be bandhus of the propositus if they are to inherit. It is not known in what context the three verses quoted in the Mit. and other digests from Śātātapa or Baudhāyana occurred. In Manu V. 81 it is laid down that one should observe mourning on the death of a pupil, sacrificial priest and bāndhavas for the duration of pakṣiṇī. It is possible that the three verses only illustrate what is meant by bāndhavas in such a connection.

The Bālabhaddhī (vyavahāra p. 214) here also explains that females are included in the word 'bandhu', although the verses quoted speak of 'putrah' only and the Bombay and Madras High Courts have allowed female bandhus to inherit, though in Madras the position assigned to female bandhus is very much lower than in Bombay.

Strangers as Heirs—In default of even bandhus, the Mit states<sup>1463</sup> that the teacher (of the veda) is the heir of the deceased, in default of the teacher the pupil (and relies on Āp. Dh. S II. 6. 14, 3) and that in default of pupil a sabrahmacārin (fellow student whose upanayana was performed by the same teacher as that of the deceased and who studied the veda under the same teacher)<sup>1464</sup> inherits. In the absence of even a fellow student the wealth of a brāhmana was to be given to some śrotriya (a brāhmana learned in the Veda) as laid down by Gaut (28, 39) and in default of a śrotriya in the same village, as said by the Dāyabhāga XI. 6. 27, to any brāhmana, since Manu (IX. 188-189) says, 'in the absence of all (heirs), brāhmanas that have studied the three vedas, that are pure and restrained, take the wealth; in this way dharma does not suffer: the rule is that the wealth of a brāhmana should never be taken by the king'. Nār.<sup>1465</sup> (dāyabhāga, 51-52) is to the same effect. To the same

This direction of so many ancient sages has not been respected in modern times.<sup>1467</sup> Manu (IX. 189) and Br.<sup>1468</sup> (S. B. E. vol. 33, p. 380 verse 67) say that the wealth of ksatriyas, vaiśyas and śūdras escheats to the king in default of heirs up to a fellow student. When the king takes by escheat heirless property he has to set apart a portion of the wealth of the deceased for the maintenance of his concubines and servants and for the performance of his funeral rites and śrāddhas as stated by Kāt.<sup>1469</sup> 931. Kaut III 5, Nār. (dayabhāga, 52) provide that the king (when he takes heirless property) should provide maintenance for his women and both the Mit. and the V. Mayūkha explain that the word 'women' stands for avaruddhastrī (exclusively kept concubine) and not for his wives (who would succeed as heirs and then there would be no escheat), because the word 'patnī' is not employed in the verse. These verses of Nār. and Kāt. are the foundation of the right to maintenance of a concubine against the heirs of the deceased paramour in modern times.<sup>1470</sup>

Yāj. (II. 137) states a special rule<sup>1471</sup> which is an exception to the general rule of inheritance laid down in II. 135-136 viz. '(the heirs) who take the wealth of a forest hermit, a yati (ascetic), a (perpetual) vedic student are in order the (vedic) teacher, a virtuous pupil, one who is looked upon as a brother and belongs to the same order'. According to the Mit. the heirs mentioned are to be taken in the reverse order of the words of the text i. e. the ācārya (who is mentioned first among the three heirs) is to be taken as the heir of the last of the three mentioned in the first half of the verse, so that the teacher, good pupil and the person looked upon as brother are respectively the heirs of the perpetual student, the ascetic and the forest hermit. According to the Dāyabhāga also the reverse order has to be taken, but it says that the wealth of the forest hermit, yati and perpetual student is taken respectively by one looked upon as brother, a worthy pupil and teacher, but that in the absence of these, any one who is in the same āśrama as the deceased may take it. According to the Madanaratna<sup>1472</sup> the order of heirs is the direct one, that is, the teacher, good pupil and accepted brother take the wealth of the forest hermit, ascetic and perpetual student, since the Visnu Dh. S. (17. 15-16) expressly says so. The Mit. adds that a brahmacārin is of two kinds viz. perpetual (naṣṭhuka) and upakurvāṇa (who intends to remain as a student for some time and then marry in order to confer the benefit of male progeny on his ancestors), that Yājñavalkya's words apply only to the former, that if the latter (upakurvāna) leaves any wealth of his own it is taken by his mother, father and the other heirs. The Mit. further says that a worthy pupil is one who is capable of studying the philosophical parts of the Veda, of understanding them and of acting up to them, that a badly behaved pupil will not succeed, so also a badly conducted teacher shall not succeed. The Mit. explains that Yāj III 47 allowed a forest hermit to accumulate materials that will be enough to meet his needs for a day, a month or six months or a year and so he may on his death leave some wealth. Similarly, though an ascetic was required by Gautama (III. 10) to make no accumulation of wealth, yet even an ascetic requires clothes to cover his body, he has his sandals and books on Yoga and the like; and so also the perpetual student requires these.

The heirs enumerated above succeed to persons in those religious orders in priority of their kindred. It has been held that members of the three twice-born classes alone can be ascetics with the result that their pupils inherit and not the kindred and that in the case<sup>1473</sup> of śūdra ascetics their kindred succeed unless some usage to the effect that a pupil inherits is proved. For the foundation and administration of mathas and properties attached to them, the selection of the heads of mathas and their powers and duties and about ascetics and their pupils, vide H. of Dh. vol. II. pp. 906-914 and pp. 944-952.

Reunion.—A reunion properly so called can take place only between those who were parties to the original partition. Reunion, therefore, postulates three stages, viz. (1) joint family, (2) partition between members of a joint family, (3) an intention and an agreement, express or implied, to reunite in estate among members who were parties to the partition. If persons who had separated in interest merely stay together, that is not reunion in law, as said by the Sm. C. II. p. 302 and Vivāda-candra<sup>1474</sup> p. 82. The Vivādacandra quoting Visnupurāṇa says that reunion may be implied from a course of conduct, even though an express agreement cannot be proved. There is a divergence of views as to who can reunite. The Mit., the Dayabhāga<sup>1475</sup>, the Sm. C. hold, literally construing a verse of Br. (S. B. E. 33 p. 381 verse 72), that a member of a joint family when once divided can reunite only with his father, brother or paternal uncle, but not with any other relation (such as a paternal uncle's son or paternal grand-father), while the V. G. (p. 157), the V. Mayūkha (p. 146), the V. P. (p. 533) hold that the members expressly mentioned by Br. are only illustrative and that a person may reunite with any member who was a party to the original partition. A reunited person is called samsrsta or samsrstin<sup>1476</sup> (who has reunited wealth). The subject of reunion has a comparatively ancient history. Gaut. 28. 26 states the general rule that on the death of a reunited co-parcener the surviving reunited member succeeds to the share of the deceased Kaut. (III 5 p. 160) states<sup>1477</sup> that those, who live together though they may have no ancestral estate or do so after dividing their ancestral estate, may divide their reunited estate again in equal shares. Manu IX. 210 (= Visnu Dh. S 18. 41) is similar to it.

The verses of Yāj. (II. 138-139)<sup>1478</sup> on succession to a deceased reunited person are understood by the Mit. to be an exception to the rules contained in Yāj. II. 135-136 laying down that the wife and others inherit the property of a person dying sonless. Therefore it follows that where a person reunites with his brother and then dies leaving a son not reunited with him, it is the son who will inherit and not the brother, though reunited. But if A separates from two sons B and C of whom B reunites with him and C does not and then A dies, then the reunited son B succeeds to A's interest and C takes nothing. This is expressly stated by the Vivādacandra p. 85 that relies on the Smṛtisāra<sup>1479</sup>. The two verses of Yāj. (II. 138-139) are variously read and interpreted by the Mit. and other commentators and it is not possible nor quite necessary to set out all these readings and explanations. Acc. to the Mit. the two verses mean: 'in the case of a deceased reunited person, the (surviving) reunited member should give (to the posthumous son of the former) the share of the deceased but may take it himself if there is no son (but only a wife); but from among the reunited brothers, the full brother, if reunited, should similarly give to the posthumous son of the deceased the latter's share and (if there be no son) he should take it himself to the exclusion of reunited half brothers; a reunited half brother takes the wealth of the deceased reunited member (dying sonless) and not another half brother who is not reunited; a full brother, though not reunited, may take the wealth along with a half brother who is reunited but the latter will not alone be entitled'. In this interpretation the word 'asamsrsti' in the latter half of II. 139 has to be taken in two connections, once with 'anyodaryah' in the first half and then again with 'samsrstah' (in the 2nd half). This last word is to be understood in two senses, viz.

The first is विष्णुधनसूत्र 17 17 also अपरार्क (p 747) reads 'नान्योदर्यधनं हरेत्' and आद्यात्सोदर्यो नान्यमातृजः. विश्वरूप, जितेन्द्रिय and विवाद-चन्द्र p 84 read 'चाद्यात्सोदरो नान्यमातृजः'.

(1) full brother (with the preceding word asamarsti) and (2) 'reunited' (with the word 'anyamātrjah'). Further, acc. to the Mit. we have to understand 'eva' after 'anyamātrjah'. Aparārka (p. 748) reads differently and he, Viśvarūpa and Śrīkaraṁiśra (Dayabhāga XI. 5-16) explain that a full brother though not reunited takes the whole estate and not the half brother though reunited with the deceased. The V. Mayūkha differs from the Mit. when it says that the word apuhasya (of one dying sonless) is not to be understood with Yāj (II 138). It derives two propositions from the first half of Yāj II. 138, viz (1) the wealth of one dying reunited is taken by the surviving reunited member or members; (2) in a competition between reunited full brother and reunited half-brother, the former takes the whole. The latter half of II. 138 is an independent sentence (and not joined with the preceding half as the Mit. understands) and applies where a reunited member dies leaving a wife who is pregnant but that fact being unknown the other reunited members divide the estate. In such a case if a son is born the surviving members should hand over to the son the share of the deceased reunited member. But if no such son is born then the survivors may take the estate. In II. 139 the Mayūkha holds that the words 'anyodarya' and 'anyamātrja' are not restricted to brothers only, but apply to a paternal uncle or his sons or other persons who were reunited, because their mother is also different from the mother of the deceased. The Dayabhāga discusses Yāj II. 138-139 under the topic of succession to the separate property of a sonless man and its treatment of succession to reunited property is very meagre (vide XII) <sup>1480</sup> The V. P. p. 533 notices this and levels against Jīmūtavāhana the criticism that he got confused. Aparārka (pp. 748-749) seems to be of the same opinion as the Dayabhāga. The V. P. follows the Mit. and criticizes the explanation given by Śrīkara, Sm. C. and others (pp. 535-538). It says that the texts of Śankha, Nārada and others conflict with the text of Yāj. II 135 and that the order of heirs as to a reunited co-parcener is based on express texts and not on Yāj. II. 135 <sup>1481</sup> or logical reasoning. According to the V. P. the order of succession to a deceased reunited person seems to be: (1-3) son, grandson, great-grandson; (4) reunited full brother; (5) reunited half brother and separated full brother; (6) reunited mother; (7) reunited father; (8) any other reunited member; (9) half brother not reunited; (10) mother not reunited; (11) father not reunited; (12) widow; (13) daughter; (14) daughter's son; (15) sister. The V. Mayūkhā gives the order as follows: (1) son if reunited, (2) son not reunited, though there may be reunited members (other than a son); (3) the parents if reunited in preference to other reunited persons (other than a son); (4) full brother if reunited; (5) full brother not reunited and half brother reunited; (6) half brothers and uncles, if reunited; (7) other male members reunited (in preference to wife though she be reunited); (8) wife if she be reunited; (9) full sister (or daughter according to another reading);<sup>1482</sup> (10) any other sapinda who is nearest. It is to be noted that Manu IX. 212 prescribes a peculiar rule of succession for reunited co-parceners viz. that full brothers (not reunited) and full sisters of the deceased reunited co-parcener equally inherit along with half brothers that are reunited the wealth of the deceased. This verse of Manu has been variously explained by Kullūka, Aparārka p. 749, Sm. C. (II pp 304-305), Nilakantha, Vivādacandra (p. 83) and others.

It may be stated here that cases of reunion come very rarely before the courts.

CHAPTER XXX

STRIDHANA

Stridhana (woman's property). This subject abounds with differing views on several topics that fall under it, as will be seen below

The germs of the topic of stridhana can be traced to the Vedic Literature. As Sir Gooroodas Bannerjee remarks (in 'Marriage and Stridhana' p 370), 'nowhere were proprietary rights of women recognized so early as in India; and in very few ancient systems of law have these rights been so largely conceded as in our own'. The wedding hymn in the Rgveda (X. 85) contains two verses<sup>1483</sup> (13 and 38) which indicate that gifts were sent to the bridegroom's house with the bride. They are, 'the bridal gifts of Sūryā that Savitr sent off have gone forth; in the Aghās (Maghā constellation) are struck the kine and in the Arjuns (Phalgunī constellation) is carried (the bridal gift); for thee in the beginning they carried about Sūryā together with the bridal gifts &c.'. Sāyana explains 'vāhātu' as 'cows and other objects given for pleasing the girl to be married', while Lanman (Harvard O series vol. VIII p. 753) renders it as 'bridal car'. Sāyana's interpretation suits the context much better. In the Tai. S VI. 2. 1 1 we read,<sup>1484</sup> 'the wife (of the sacrificer) holds on (to the cart), for the wife is the mistress of the household gear'. Manu IX. 11 uses the word 'pārinahya' (household gear) and states that the wife should be entrusted among other matters with the supervision over it. Jaimini<sup>1485</sup>, according to Śābara, refers to 13 and 38 These are almost the same as अथर्ववेद 14 I 13 and 14 2 I.

1485. स्ववत्सामपि दुर्क्षयति । जै. VI 1. 16, पत्नी चै पारिणय्यस्येष्टे पत्यैव गतमद-मर्तं क्रियते । शबर The printed text differs from the Tai. S. text पारिणय्य would mean 'nuptial gifts'. The वि. र p 517 explains पारिणय्य (in Vas. 17 46) as पारिणय्य परिच्छद् आदर्शकङ्कणादि (paraphernalia, mirrors and bracelets). वि. वि. p. 142 reads 'कङ्कलिकादि (combs &c) दि. ता (folio 160)

this passage of the Tai. S. for establishing that women do own certain property. Medhātithi<sup>1486</sup> on Manu VIII 416 (cited above on p 452) quotes this passage of the Tai S. and argues that if Manu VIII 416 (saying that whatever a wife earns is her husband's) were literally understood passages like the one in Tai. S. would have no scope and that therefore Manu simply means that though women may be owners they cannot dispose of the property independently. It appears from these ancient passages that the properties, which in early days were held to be owned by women, were presents made at the time of marriage (such as ornaments and costly dresses) and household articles that are generally under the control of women and that the later smṛti rules about the devolution of stridhana in the female line arose from the peculiar nature of the articles over which dominion was conceded to women. This early state of things is indicated by some of the early sūtras. Āp Dh<sup>1487</sup> S. (II 6. 14. 9) states the view of some predecessors (which Āp himself does not approve) that the ornaments belong to the wife and also such wealth as came to her from her agnates (father, brother &c). Baud. Dh S. II 2. 49 says that daughters get the ornaments of their mother and whatever else it is customary for them to get. Vas 17. 46 prescribes that women (daughters) should divide the nuptial presents given to their mother. Śankha (q by Sam. Pr. p. 851) prescribes that in all forms of marriage ornaments and stridhana should be given to the girl. It may be that Manu VIII 416 only gives expression to an ancient opinion, that the literal meaning of that verse was given up long before and that all that Manu meant was that during coverture a woman was subject to the control of the husband as regards her stridhana.

Three principal topics have to be discussed under stridhana viz what constitutes stridhana, woman's dominion over her

read this as a supplement to the preceding sūtra about the special share of the eldest son. The द्वापभाग IV 2 15 p 82 and विवादचन्द्र p 75 read पारिणय in Vas and explain as पारिणयनलब्धं धनं or विवादकालीनं respectively

stridhana and inheritance to stridhana. On each one of these topics great diversity of views prevails and the subject has become very complicated, as the Dāyabhāga remarks<sup>1488</sup>.

Gautama contains three sūtras about the devolution of stridhana, but he does not define or describe it.<sup>1488a</sup> Kaut (III 2. p. 152) defines<sup>1489</sup>: 'means of subsistence and what could be tied on the body (i.e. ornaments and jewellery) constitute stridhana. The means of subsistence should be fixed at 2000 (panas) as the maximum, while there is no limit to (what may be given) as ābadhya (ornaments &c.)'. This may be compared with a verse of Kāt. (902) and a similar<sup>1490</sup> verse of Vyāsa viz. 'the father, the mother, the husband, brother and kinsmen should give stridhana to a woman according to their means up to two thousand (panas) except immovable property' The Sm. C. and V. Mayūkha explain that this limit of 2000 applies to gifts made every year, but that if a gift is to be made once for all, then more may be given and even immovable property may be given.

The term stridhana literally means 'woman's property'. But in the ancient smṛti works the word was restricted to certain special kinds of property given to a woman on certain occasions or at different stages of her life. Gradually such kinds of property went on increasing in extent and value. We have to follow this evolution of the meaning and content of the word stridhana. One characteristic feature of stridhana from the times of Gautama downwards has been that it devolved on females in the first instance. The oldest extant definition of it in Dharmaśāstra works is that of Manu<sup>1491</sup> IX. 194. 'what (was given) before the nuptial fire, what was given on the bridal procession, what was given in token of love, what was received from her brother, mother or father, that is called the sixfold woman's property'. The Mit. on Yāj II 143 explains that the number six is intended to exclude a smaller number of the kinds of strīdhana and does not exclude a larger number. In IX. 195 Manu appears to mention one more kind viz. 'anvū-dheya' (gift subsequent)' Nār. (dāyabhāga, 8) has the same six kinds as Manu IX. 194, but reads 'bhartrdāya' (the husband's gift) for Manu's 'what is given in token of affection', the latter being thus wider than Nārada's words Yāj. (II 143-44) enumerates<sup>1492</sup> the several kinds of strīdhana as follows: 'what was given (to a woman) by the father, mother, husband or brother or was received by her before the nuptial fire, or what was presented on her husband's marrying another wife (ādīvedamika) and the like—these are denominated strīdhana; so also what is given by the cognate relations (of the woman), the śulka (fee), and gifts subsequent to marriage'. The Mit. and most of its followers read 'ādhivedanikādyam ca', while Aparārka and the Dāyabhāga read 'ādhivedanikam caiva', the difference being that if one reads as the Mit. does, several other kinds not expressly enumerated can be easily included under strīdhana. But it should be noted that even without reading —'kādyam', Aparārka explains the verse in the same way as the Mit. does. Visnu<sup>1493</sup> Dh S. 17. 18 enumerates almost the same kinds of strīdhana as Yāj, but omits the word 'ādya'.

Among smṛti writers Kātyāyana gives the most elaborate treatment of strīdhana in about twenty-seven verses. He defines several kinds of strīdhana enumerated by Manu, Yāj, Nār., and Visnu (in all six) as follows<sup>1494</sup>: what is given to women at the time of marriage before the nuptial fire is declared by the wise to be adhyagni<sup>1495</sup> strīdhana. That again which a woman obtains when she is being taken (in a procession) from her father's house (to the bridegroom's) is declared to be adhyāvahanika strīdhana. Whatever is given to a woman through affection by the father-in-law or mother-in-law and what is received by her at the time of doing obeisance at the feet (of elders) is said to be prīṭidatta (gift through affection) strīdhana. That is declared to be śulka (bride's fee) which is obtained as the price of household utensils, of beasts of burden, of milch cattle, ornaments and slaves. Whatever is obtained by a woman after marriage from the family of her husband as also from the family of her (father's) kinsmen is said to be anvādheya (gift subsequent). According to Bhṛgu whatever is obtained by a woman after marriage through affection from her husband or from her parents is anvādheya. It may be noted that Kātyāyana's definitions of adhyagni and adhyāvahanika are wide enough to include gifts made even by strangers on those occasions

These definitions given by Kātyāyana have been accepted by all digests including even the Dayabhāga.

"That is known as saudāyika which is obtained by a married woman or by a maiden in her husband's or father's house from her brother or from her parents" (Kāt.). Some of the divergences in readings and in interpretation deserve to be noted. Acc. to the reading adopted by the Mit adhyāvahanika includes all gifts made by any one when the newly married girl is taken from her father's house in a procession, while the reading adopted by the Dayabhāga<sup>1496</sup> and some others (patrakṛt) restricts the adhyāvahanika to gifts made by the father's or mother's family only. The V. R. (p. 523) includes under adhyāvahanika also the gifts made by the father-in-law and others when the girl is taken back to her father's house and the V. C. (p. 138) says that it is what is obtained at the time of 'duṁgamaṇa'. The Dayabhāga<sup>1497</sup> (IV. 3. 19-20 p. 93) explains 'dohyābharana-karminām' differently as 'the gratification paid by house-builders or goldsmiths to induce her to press her husband to engage them' or as Vyāsa says 'what is given to a woman to induce her (cheerfully) to go to her husband's house'. The Sm. C. and V. P. explain śulka as the price of the articles which the bridegroom was in the habit of presenting to the bride at the time of marriage or when he started a house.<sup>1498</sup> The V.

1498 The change in the meaning of śulka is interesting. One meaning of śulka is 'tax or toll on merchandise'. Vide Visnu Dh S III 29, Yāj. II 173, 261, Vas 19, 37 Pāṇini V 1. 47 uses that word in that sense (तदस्मिन्गृहस्थापलाभशुल्कोपदा दीयते) and the Kāśikā explains it as रसानिर्वेष्टो राजभोग्य शुल्क. Another sense is 'the fee paid to the bride or her parents by the bridegroom in consideration of marriage'. The word occurs in

Nir. (p. 468) states that sulka has two senses; (1) what is given as the price of the girl to the guardians of the girl which goes to the mother and brother (on her death); (2) what is given (by the bridegroom) as the price of the ornaments for the girl and of the household gear.<sup>1499</sup> Another verse of Kāt. (904) has been quoted by many writers, which restricts the literal sense of the word stridhana, 'over that wealth that is obtained by a woman by mechanical arts (such as spinning) or from a stranger through affection, the husband has ownership,

Gaut. 28 23 and in Sankha (svayam śulkaṃ vodhā) q by V. R. p 521 In very ancient days there appears to have been a practice to offer to some cases considerable wealth to the father of the bride to induce him to give her in marriage. Rg I 109. 2 refers to this. 'O Yodra and Agni! I have heard that you are more liberal than even an unsuitable (or deficient) son-in-law or even a brother-in-law'. Yāska (VI. 9) in explaining this verse remarks that the southern people speak of the husband of the bride that is purchased as 'vijāmātr' (विजामात्र इति शब्द दाक्षिणाताः कृतायतिमाचक्षते अतः समाप्त इव दत्तोभिधेयः) But this verse also shows that the bride's brother (śyāla) had to give wealth to his sister's husband, Vide H. of Dh. Vol. II. pp 503-506 for passages about the sale and purchase of girls in marriage from ancient times right down to 1800 A. D. Though sometimes girls were purchased for marriage, popular feeling gradually asserted itself against this In the Vanaparva (115. 23) Gādhī claims as the custom of his family one thousand horses of the best kind from Rcika when the latter preferred his suit for the hand of Gādhī's daughter (उच्यते नः कुले किञ्चिद् दूर्ध्वैर्त्तमवर्तितम् । एकतः श्यामकर्णानां पाण्डुराणां तरस्विनाम् । सहस्र वाजिनो ह्युत्कृष्टमिति विद्धि द्विजोत्तम ॥) Vide Anusāsana 4 12 (for a similar statement) and 2 31. Manu III. 51 forbids the taking of even a small gratuity through greed by the father when giving away his daughter in marriage and says that if he does so he would be guilty of the sale of his child and in III. 54 (almost the same as Anusāsana 46. 1-2) Manu says that when agnates do not appropriate to themselves the gratuity paid (by the bridegroom) for the bride but hand it over to the bride then it is not sale, but it is honour shown to the girl and is merely kindness to her. The Mit defines śulka as the gratuity after getting which the girl is given The V. C p. 139 defines it as what is obtained from the husband on condition of furnishing household gear Ac. the rest is declared to be stridhana.<sup>1500</sup> The prima facie view (pūrvapakṣa) in Jai. VI. 1. 12 urges that what a woman gets by serving cooked food or by cutting clothes does not belong to her. The gifts from strangers here referred to are other than those made by a stranger before the nuptial fire or at the time of the bridal procession. This definition makes it clear that what is obtained even from a stranger by a maiden or by a woman who is a widow at the time of the gift is pure stridhana. Devala says, 'maintenance (what was given for maintenance), ornaments, śulka (bride's gratuity), the profits of money-lending are a woman's stridhana. She alone is entitled to enjoy it and the husband is not entitled to enjoy it except in the case of distress'.<sup>1501</sup> Manu IX. 200 states, 'the heirs of the husband should not divide (among themselves) the ornaments worn by women during the lifetime of their husband; if they divide them they incur sin'. In the printed editions of Manu there is no comment of Medhatithi on this verse, but the V. R. (p. 509), V. C. p. 139, Dayatattva p. 184 all say that acc. to Medhatithi even ornaments, though not donated expressly, become stridhana, if worn with the husband's consent.<sup>1502</sup> According to the Vaijayanti such ornaments should be assigned to the share of the woman's husband so that she alone might put them on and that it is not meant that such ornaments are not to be taken into account at all at the time of partition.

Saudāyika is not a special kind of stridhana. It is rather a comprehensive term for several kinds of stridhana as the definition given by Kāt shows and as the V. C. (p. 139) expressly states<sup>1503</sup>. It is almost synonymous with stridhana in the technical sense. Acc. to most writers, it is wealth received by a woman, whether, as a maiden or as a married woman, in her father's or husband's house from her parents or relatives of the father and mother. The Sm C. II. p. 282 and V. R. p. 511 hold that saudāyika is all wealth obtained by a woman whether as a maiden or as a married woman from her mother, father or paternal relatives only, while the Dāyabhāga IV. 1. 23 pp 76-77 and V. C. hold that saudāyika includes also all property donated by the husband except immovable property, which latter she cannot alienate even after her husband's death. There is a verse of Vyāsa<sup>1504</sup> that defines saudāyika similarly, 'whatever is obtained by a woman as a maiden at the time of marriage and after marriage from the house of her father or husband, is termed saudāyika'. The word 'saudāyika' is derived from 'sudāya' and means, according to the Dāyabhāga IV. 1. 22 p. 76, 'received from affectionate kindred'. The Amarakośa says that 'sudāya' means 'gifts of yautaka and the like' and that saudāyika is merely a derivative without change of meaning<sup>1505</sup>.

Another word requiring explanation is 'yautaka'. It occurs in Manu IX. 131, 'whatever is the yautaka of the mother goes to the maiden daughter' (and not to the married daughter or son). So yautaka seems to be a synonym for stridhana in the technical sense The Sm <sup>1506</sup> C II p. 285, Madanaratna (folio 105 b) and V. Mayūkha remark 'yautaka is that wealth that is received as a gift from anybody by a woman while she is seated together with her husband at the time of marriage and the like'. It is derived from yuta ('joined'). It should, however, be noted that Yāj II. 149 employs the word yautaka as an adjective in the sense of 'separated' and that Medhātithi on Manu IX 131 explains 'yautaka' as the separate property of a woman, her strīdhana. The Sm C II p 285 remarks that Devasvāmi derived 'yautaka' from 'yu' (to separate) and held it to mean 'wealth obtained from the family of the woman's father which is separate in its characteristics'. The V. C. p 142 and Vivādacandra p. 74 read 'yautuka' and the former explains it as gifts from the father and the like at the time of marriage. The Dāyatattva (p 186) states that both forms 'yautaka' and 'yautuka' are in vogue and relies on Vācaspati and Rāyamukuta in support.

Kaut (III 2, p 153) names śulka, anvādheya, ādhivedanika and bandhudatta as kinds of strīdhana.

The above are the principal smṛti texts on the question of what constitutes strīdhana. It will be seen that the smṛtis only enumerate and describe certain kinds of property as strīdhana, which word is not used by them in the etymological sense of 'all kinds of property possessed by a woman'. They do not attempt a comprehensive definition of strīdhana. From the texts of the smṛtis it follows that strīdhana was a technical term, which at first included only six kinds of property, then nine and ultimately by the time of Kātyāyana it included all property (whether movable or immovable) obtained by a woman, either as a maiden or at marriage or after marriage, from her parents or the family or relatives of the parents or from the husband and his family (except immovable property given by the husband) and that what was obtained by a woman after her marriage by her own labour or from strangers did not become stridhana. Most smritis employ the word 'datta' (donated), but Kāt. and Vyāsa sometimes use the word 'obtained' (prāpta or labdha), which is ordinarily wider than 'datta'. But it is clear that the commentators do not expressly say that 'obtained' includes 'inherited', though from their general remarks to be quoted below it is arguable that they probably included inherited property under property obtained.

This is stridhana in a technical sense.

It is now necessary to find how stridhana was defined by the several commentaries and digests that are held authoritative in the several schools. This is a most important matter for practical purposes, since the courts have to follow the opinions of commentators<sup>1507</sup> that are authoritative in each school and are not at liberty to put their own construction upon ancient smṛiti texts, if such construction would run counter to the express opinions of the authoritative commentators. First then comes the Mitākṣarā. Its gloss on Yāj. II. 143 may be translated as follows<sup>1508</sup>: 'whatever is given by the father, mother, husband and brother; what was presented by the maternal uncle and the like at the time of marriage before the nuptial fire; and ūdhuvedanika, that is, gift made (by the husband) at the time of marrying a second wife as will be described subsequently in the words 'he should give to the wife that is superseded' (Yāj. II. 148); by the word 'adya' (meaning 'and the like') is indicated property that is obtained by succession, purchase, partition, seizure or finding—all this is declared by Manu and others to be stridhana. The word stridhana is employed here in its etymological sense and not in a technical sense, since, when the etymological sense is possible, it is improper to resort to the technical sense' The Mitākṣarā expanded the definition of strīdhana so as to include under it the five kinds of property of which a man becomes owner in various ways according to Gautama X. 39. The result is that, according to the Mit, property of any description belonging to a woman becomes strīdhana even if it be inherited by her from a male as a widow or as a mother or even if it be obtained at a partition by a wife or mother (acc. to Yāj. II 115 or 123 respectively). The same interpretation of the word 'ādyā' has been accepted by several works, such as the Madanapārijāta (p 671), the S. V. (p. 379), V. P. (p 542), the Bālabhāṭṭi. Aparārka without reading 'ādyā' gave the same explanation of 'ca' as stated above (on p. 773). On the other hand, the Dāyabhāga gave a restricted meaning to the word. Jīmūtavāhana reads Yāj II. 143 as 'ādhrvedanukam cava', quotes the verse of Devala (in note 1501), remarks that strīdhana is not restricted to the six kinds of Manu (IX. 194) but includes other kinds mentioned by other smrtis and finally<sup>1509</sup> observes: 'that alone is strīdhana which a woman has authority to donate, sell or enjoy independently of her husband's control'. The Dāyabhāga does not expressly state the kinds of property that a woman can dispose of independently of her husband, but immediately after defining strīdhana it quotes the texts of Kāt. (about earnings from mechanical arts and gifts from strangers) and Nār. (IV. 28), 'what has been given to a wife by her loving husband, she may spend or give away as she likes even after his death excepting immovables'. From this it follows that, according to the Dāyabhāga, all gifts from relations except a gift of immovable property made by the husband and gifts from even strangers made before the nuptial fire or on the bridal procession constitute strīdhana, but property inherited by a woman or obtained on partition, gifts from strangers (other than the two kinds noted above) and property acquired by her by mechanical arts or by her labour are not strīdhana. The Dāyatattva closely follows the Dāyabhāga.

The Sm. C. does not give a definition of strīdhana, but it does not adopt the interpretation of the word 'ādyā' given by the Mit. Therefore it may be said that it is in line with the Dayabhāga. The Par. M. III p. 547<sup>1510</sup> (another Madras authority) appears to follow the Mit., since it says: “‘ādya’ includes ‘ādhivedanika’ and what is acquired by inheritance, sale and the like.” The Viyādacintāmani (the leading authority in Mithilā) does not define stridhana in general, but enumerates the several kinds of stridhana described by Manu, Yāj., Viṣṇu, Kāt., and Devala and so is on a par with the Dayabhāga. The V. Mayūkha divides stridhana into two kinds, pārībhūṣika (technical) and apārībhūṣika (non-technical). The former comprises properties expressly stated to be stridhana by the sages, while the latter includes all other property belonging to a woman (except what is called technical) and acquired by her by partition or cutting (sewing or other mechanical arts).<sup>1511</sup> This division is peculiar to the V. Mayūkha. The Vīramitrodaya (the paramount authority in the Benares school) agrees with Mit. as stated above.

It is beyond the scope of this work to go deeply into modern caselaw. But it is necessary to show how the Indian Courts have in modern times dealt with stridhana as defined by the commentators. It may be said at once that the inclusion by the Mit. of property inherited by a woman or obtained at a partition under stridhana has been totally discarded by the Privy Council for all provinces in India except Bombay<sup>1512</sup>. A woman may inherit property from a male, such as from her husband, father or son or she may inherit property from a female, that is, from her mother, daughter &c. Both these kinds of property are stridhana according to the Mit, but the Privy Council has held as to both these kinds that they are not stridhana; e g if a daughter inherits property from her father or inherits the stridhana property of her mother, it does not become her stridhana, that on the death of the daughter, the property does not pass to her heirs, but to the next heir of the person from whom she inherited it. The Bombay school makes a distinction. If a woman enters a family by marriage and then inherits to a male of that family (as e g a widow succeeding to her husband, a mother to her son or a predeceased son's widow to her father-in-law), the property she inherits is not her stridhana, she takes only a limited estate in it and on her death it passes to the next heir of the male from whom she inherited. But if a woman inherits from a male belonging to the family in which she was born (e g a daughter succeeding to her father, a sister to her brother) or if a woman inherits property from a female, the property so inherited becomes her stridhana (in Bombay). As to property acquired by a wife or mother on partition<sup>1513</sup>, it has been held by the Privy Council that it is not stridhana even in provinces governed by the Mitāksarā (including Bombay).

1512. Vide Sheo Shankar v. Debi Sahas L. R. 30 I A. 202 (a case from Allahabad) for the proposition that according to the law of the Benares school even property inherited by a woman from a female is not her stridhana and does not pass to her heirs. The principal grounds for the decision were that as regards property inherited by a female from males the rule deducible from the gloss of Vijñāneśvara had already been discarded and that even as to property inherited from a female the same rule had been applied in most High Courts (p. 208). Vide also Balwantrao v. Bai Rao L. R. 47 I. A. 213, 223 where the Privy Council approve of the Bombay High Court's decision in Bhau v. Raghunath 30 Bom 229 that a daughter succeeding to her father takes the property absolutely as stridhana in the Bombay Presidency.

Kāt (903) declares.<sup>1514</sup> 'whatever was given to a woman for wearing only on some occasion (or on condition) or with fraudulent intent by the father, brother or husband is not held to be stridhana.' The idea is that if the father or husband gives some ornament to his daughter or wife for wearing on some special occasion (upādhi) or if a father or husband in fraud of his co-parceners gives some family property to his daughter or wife it cannot become stridhana.

Dominion over stridhana.—What is stridhana and what dominion a woman has over stridhana depend on three things, viz the source of acquiring the property, her status at the time of acquisition (i e whether she was a maiden or a married woman whose husband was living or a widow), the school of law by which she is governed. Certain verses of Kāt and Nār are the principal texts on this subject. Kāt (905-907, 911) says:<sup>1515</sup> 'on obtaining wealth of the saudāyika kind it is declared (lit. desired) that women have independent power over it, since it was given by them (the kindred) as support (or maintenance) in order that they (women) may not be reduced to a terrible (or wretched) condition. It has been declared that women always have independence in saudāyika property as regards sale or gift at their pleasure and even in immovables (if saudāyika). A woman, when her husband is dead, may deal with the gift (of movables) given by the husband as she pleases, but she should preserve it as long as he is alive or she may spend it on his family. Neither the husband nor the son, nor the father nor the brothers have power to use or alienate the stridhana of a woman'. The verse of Kāt about property acquired by labour or about the gift from strangers through affection and that of Nārada about the gift of immovable property made by the husband have already been quoted. From these texts it follows that a Hindu woman during her maidenhood<sup>1516</sup> could dispose of her stridhana property of every description at her pleasure, that during her widowhood she could dispose of every kind of stridhana including movable property given by the husband but not immovable property given by him and that a married woman whose husband was living could dispose of at her pleasure only that kind of property called saudāyika (i.e. gifts from relations except those made by the husband). Under modern decisions the distinction between saudāyika and 1516 So long as a Hindu maiden is a minor she cannot alienate her property or dispose of it by will, only her guardian can alienate it for purposes laid down in Hunooman Pershad's case, vide 6 Moo 1. A 393 (cited above on p 449), non-saudāyika is retained,<sup>1517</sup> but the distinction between saudāyika given by the relations and that given by the husband is not kept.<sup>1518</sup> Now the woman's power to dispose off as she likes depends on the question whether the gift was meant to pass an absolute estate or a limited estate even if the husband was the donor. During marriage when the husband is living her dominion depends under modern law upon the character of the stridhana. If it is of the kind called saudāyika she can dispose of it by sale, gift or will as she likes without her husband's consent; but as to other kinds of stridhana property (such as gifts from strangers, property acquired by mechanical arts or property inherited) she cannot dispose of it without her husband's consent. If she disposes of it without such consent the alienation is void. According to the D B IV. 1. 20 property acquired by a married woman by mechanical arts or by gift from a stranger is subject to the husband's dominion during his life and may be taken by him even when there is no distress. No one else (except the husband) has got control over even such stridhana. After the husband's death, she can dispose of even non-saudāyika stridhana as she likes. But even as regards saudāyika the texts concede certain rights to the husband in certain circumstances. Yāj II. 147 says: 'the husband is not liable to return to the wife her stridhana taken (i e used) by him in a famine, for (indispensable) religious acts, in disease, or when imprisoned (by the creditor or by the king or an enemy)' <sup>1519</sup>

Vide Bharṭ v Raghunath 30 Bom 229 (where it was held that property inherited by a woman from her father could not be bequeathed by her without the consent of the husband who survived her) Requests to a woman are on the same footing as a gift for the purposes of stridhana. Kat. (914)<sup>1520</sup> has a similar verse which says that he may return stridhana wealth if he chooses to do so when it is used by him in a disease or in calamities or when harassed by creditors. Kaut. (III. 2 p. 152) is closely similar to Yāj. and adds that the woman can spend it without blame for the maintenance of herself, her son and daughter-in-law or when the husband has gone abroad without making provision for the maintenance of these. Kaut. (III. 2. p. 152) further provides<sup>1521</sup> that there should be no complaint (by the wife) as regards the expenditure of stridhana made more than three years before by joint action of the husband and wife when they have given birth to two children (or to twins) and when the marriage has been in the most approved forms (brāhma and the other three), that when stridhana has been expended by (the husband and wife) that are married in the gāndharva or āsura form both should be made to restore it with interest and that what is expended when the marriage is in the rākṣasa or paśāṅga form the expenditure of stridhana should be dealt with as theft. The meaning of 'mithunam prajātayoḥ' and 'trivarsopabhuṅktam' in Kaut. is not quite clear. It is probable that Kautilya lays down a rule of limitation. If more than three years are allowed to pass without complaint, then no complaint made later (than three years after the expenditure) would be entertained. So also if there be no children of the marriage and the husband expends stridhana without objection by the wife then also no complaint would be entertained as the restraint on alienation of stridhana by the husband and wife was meant for the benefit and advancement of the children. None of the later smṛtis like those of Yāj., Nār. or Kat. makes these distinctions and so Kaut. probably represents an early stage in the evolution of the husband's dominion over stridhana. These later smṛtis hold that the husband and wife may be entirely separate as regards their properties and as a general rule the husband's debts are not binding on the wife's properties nor are the wife's separate debts binding on the husband or his properties (Yāj. II. 46, Visnu Dh. S. VI. 31-32). But the same smṛtis make it clear that under certain distressing circumstances the wife's separate property was liable for the maintenance or debts of the husband. The Mit. expressly states<sup>1521a</sup> that if the husband uses his wife's stridhana under any other circumstances (than those specified by Yāj. II. 147 and Kāt.) then he has to return it, that no relation except the husband has any right to use a woman's stridhana during her lifetime even in distress or disease &c. and relies on Manu VIII. 29 which requires the righteous king to award the punishment for theft against such relatives as appropriate the wealth of women. The Sm. G. and V. Mayūkha follow the Mit., but the V. R. and V. C. hold that Kātyāyana's verse applies not only to the husband, but also to the son, father and brothers of the woman. Kāt. (912-913) provides<sup>1521a</sup> that if any one of the four persons (q. in n. 1515 above) forcibly consumes stridhana he should be made to return it with interest and should be also liable to fine (or punishment) and that if any one of these consumes stridhana amicably after securing her consent then he would be liable to return only the principal amount, when he becomes well-off (i. e. able to pay). Devala<sup>1522</sup> also states, 'if the husband makes a gift of stridhana without cause or enjoys it, he must pay it back with interest, but he may use the stridhana of his wife for relieving the distress of a son (and also of the family, acc. to V. Mayūkha). Kāt. (908)<sup>1523</sup> adds a special rule, 'if the husband has two wives and he does not reside with one of them (i. e. neglects her), he should be forcibly made to return (the stridhana of his neglected wife) by the king even though she bestowed it upon him through affection.' The texts of Kāt., Devala and Nār. quoted above about the dominion of the woman over her stridhana and about the husband's power over it are authoritative in all schools even now. Manu IX. 199<sup>1521</sup> provides: 'wives should not spend (for their own benefit) from the property of their families which is common to many, nor from their own property without the husband's permission.' The V. Mayūkha interprets this as meaning that she has no independent power even over ādihivedanika and the like, but this would be opposed to the express texts of Kāt, Vyāsa and Devala. Therefore the words must be taken as only recommendatory.

Kāt. (916) delivers a special rule viz 'stridhana'<sup>1525</sup> which was promised (to a woman) by her husband should be paid to her as a debt by the sons (i.e. by her own sons or stepsons) provided she resides in the husband's family, she should not reside with her paternal family.' The Sm. C. and V P. (p 546) explain that even grandsons and great-grandsons are liable to pay just as sons are. According to Kāt. as understood by the Sm. C and others a wife who is full of evil acts, is immodest, wastes property and is given up to adultery, does not deserve (to dispose of) stridhana and V. P. and V. C. explain that it may be taken away from her in such a case<sup>1526</sup>. In modern times this rule of forfeiture of rights would not be enforced by the courts as regards stridhana. Some explain this verse as referring to the widow as heir and separate the words as 'strī dhanam.'<sup>1527</sup> Vide Ganga v. Ghasta 1 All 46 (F. B.), 48-49.

on any other. But one thing is generally common to all schools viz. that as regards succession to strīdhana daughters are preferred to sons, though in later days sons were introduced by some writers as heirs along with daughters or even as preferable to daughters for certain kinds of strīdhana. This was probably due to the fact that the value of strīdhana property became considerable in later times and society which held to the doctrine of the dependence and inferior position of women could not tolerate the idea that large estates should go to women alone. The causes of the variance among writers on the devolution of strīdhana are historical. The text-writers wrote at different times and in different countries and probably reflect the popular sentiments of their own countries and times tinged now and then by personal predilections also. The digests sometimes expressly say that their interpretation follows the usage of their times (vide V Mayūkha in note 1529 below).

The succession to strīdhana varies according as the woman is unmarried or married, according as the marriage was in an approved or an unapproved form, and also according to the species of strīdhana and the school of law to which she is subject.

First, the important texts of the smṛtis on succession to strīdhana may be brought together. The oldest extant text is that of Gaut 28.22 which provides,<sup>1528</sup> 'strīdhana devolves (first) on daughters; (in a competition among daughters) it goes to those that are unmarried (apratā, lit. not given away in marriage) and (in a competition among married daughters) to those that are not well provided for (i. e. that are indigent).' Manu (IX 192-193) provides: 'when the mother dies all the full brothers and full sisters should equally divide the mother's estate. Even to the daughters of those daughters some thing should be given (that is) as much as would be seemly out of the estate of their grandmother on the ground of affection'. In Manu IX. 195 it is said that the six kinds of strīdhana, as also anvādheya strīdhana and gifts made by the husband through affection, should go to her progeny if she dies in her husband's lifetime. The verses of Manu (IX. 192-3) are variously explained by the commentators, Sarvajña-Nārāyaṇa holding that mother's estate means estate other than technical strīdhana. Most of them rely on a text of Br. and hold that full brothers and unmarried sisters succeed together and married sisters (i. e. daughters of the woman whose heirs are to be found) get some trifle ( $\frac{1}{4}$  of each brother acc. to Kullūka). Manu IX. 196-197 further provide that when a woman was married in one of the five forms of marriage viz. Brāhma, Daiva, Ārsa, Prājāpatya and Gāndharva and died without issue her stridhana goes to her husband and if she was married in the Āsura and the other two forms it went, if she died issueless, to her mother and father. Yāj. II.<sup>1529</sup> 117 provides that daughters take the stridhana estate of their mother and on failure of them the (male) issue. In II.<sup>1530</sup> 144 Yāj. again says that stridhana goes to daughters, but that if the woman dies without issue then it goes to the husband if she was married in one of the four forms (brāhma, daiva, ārsa, prājāpatya) but to her parents if she was married in the other four forms. Viṣṇu Dh. S. (17. 19-21) and Nār. (dāyabhāga, 9) contain the same rules as Yāj. II. 144-145, while Nār. (dāyabhāga 2) states that the mother's wealth should be divided among the daughters and in the absence of daughters the latter's issue takes it. Śaṅkha-Likhita<sup>1531</sup> declare that the mother's estate is taken in equal shares by the full brothers (sons of the deceased mother) and their unmarried sisters. Br.<sup>1532</sup> (S. B. E.

33 p. 383 verse 87) declares, 'stridhana goes to her progeny, but the unmarried daughter is preferred, while the married one gets only some trifle as a token of regard'. Parāśara holds that the unmarried daughters take all the stridhana, but in a competition between married daughters alone and sons they all take equal shares. Devala<sup>1533</sup> states, 'on the death of a woman her stridhana is taken in equal shares by her sons and daughters; if she leaves no issue it would be taken by her husband, mother, brother or father'. Parāśara<sup>1534</sup> (q by Par. M. III. 552) states that stridhana devolves on the unmarried daughter, that the son does not get it, but that he shares equally with a married daughter. Kaut<sup>1535</sup> (III. 2 p. 153) prescribes that if a woman dies during her husband's lifetime her sons and daughters divide her stridhana; if she has no son then daughters divide it, on failure (of both sons and daughters) the husband takes it and that the śulka, anvādheya or any other kind of stridhana given by her relatives is taken by her relatives. Kātyāyana<sup>1536</sup> (917-920) whose treatment of stridhana is the most detailed of all smṛti writers has the following verses on succession to stridhana: 'Sisters whose husbands are living should share with their brothers the stridhana (of their mother); this is the rule of law about stridhana and partition (among brothers and sisters) is prescribed. On failure of daughters the (stridhana) wealth devolves on sons (of the deceased woman); the wealth given to a woman by her kinsmen (paternal or maternal) goes in the absence of the kinsmen (that gave it) to the husband.

Whatever immovable property was given by the parents to their daughter always goes to her brother if she dies without issue. Whatever wealth was obtained by a woman from her parents in the forms of marriage beginning with āsura is declared as going to her parents on failure of her progeny.<sup>1537</sup> The first two verses are apparently in conflict and must be read with Gaut 28 22. So probably the following propositions were laid down by Kat. viz (1) unmarried daughters are preferred; (2) married daughters whose husbands are living share along with their brothers, if there be no unmarried daughter; (3) widowed daughters take only if there are no daughters whose husbands are living or if there are no sons; (4) wealth given by paternal and maternal kinsmen goes to them and on failure of these, to the husband; (5) immovable property given by parents goes to the brother of the woman on failure of issue; (6) wealth given in the āsura, rāksasa and pāśāca forms goes to parents on failure of issue. Yama has a verse very similar to Kātyāyana's about a woman married in the āsura and the following forms. The commentaries and digests make valiant efforts to reconcile the conflicts among the smṛti texts quoted above. It is not quite necessary to go into that question here in detail for fear of encumbering this work too much.

How the devolution of strīdhana was dealt with by the commentators has now to be seen. They all prefer daughters to sons for certain kinds of strīdhana. Why the devolution of strīdhana property should be different from that of the property of a male is not clearly explained anywhere. The Mit on Yāj 1538 II. 117 gives the reason that woman's property goes to the daughter because in her more particles of the mother's body inhere than in the son. Probably the daughters were preferred as heirs to strīdhana as a sort of equity, when sons were allowed to exclude daughters in the inheritance to the father's wealth.

According to the Mit. there are two lines of succession to strīdhana, one for śulka and the other for all other kinds of strīdhana. Śulka, acc. to the Mit. that quotes Gaut, devolves first on the full brothers, then on the mother.<sup>1539</sup> Some like the Subodhini, the Dipakalikā, Haradatta on Gaut. 28. 23 hold that it devolves on the mother first and then on the full brothers; but many works such as the Dayabhāga IV. 3. 28 (p. 95), Sm. G., Par. M, V. P., V. C. follow the Mit. It is somewhat strange that the Madanapārijāta p. 668 (which was really composed by the author of the Subodhini in the name of his patron Madanapāla, holds that the śulka is first taken by the brothers and then by the mother. This raises a doubt whether the printed Subodhini is correct or whether the author changed his opinion.

As regards succession to the property of a maiden there is no difference at all between the Mit. and other works. The Mit. quotes a text of Baudhāyana<sup>1540</sup> that the wealth of a deceased maiden first devolves on her full brothers, then on the mother and then on the father. The V. P. adds that on failure of the father the maiden's wealth goes to the parents' nearest sapinda.<sup>1541</sup> Yāj. II. 146 provides that if a girl who had been promised in marriage dies before marriage, the intending bridegroom was entitled to take back the śulka or other gifts Bai Jadab* 24 Bom 192 (F. made by him after deducting his own expenses and those of her family.

The Mitākṣarā order of succession for all kinds of strīdhana, other than śulka and maiden's property, is as follows: (1) unmarried daughter; (2) married daughter who is indigent; (3) married daughter who is well provided for; (4) daughter's daughters; (5) daughter's son; (6) sons; (7) son's sons (here also the rule of per stirpes applies); (8) husband (if the woman was married in one of the four approved forms); (9) sapindas of the husband in the order of propinquity; on failure of any sapinda of the husband, her mother, then her father and then the sapindas of the father (before it goes to the Crown). But if the woman was married in one of the unapproved forms, then on failure of her descendants her strīdhana went to her mother, then to her father and then to the father's sapindas in the order of propinquity. On failure of the sapindas of the father it would (by analogy) go to her husband and then to his sapindas (before going to the Crown). When grand-daughters directly inherit the strīdhana of their grandmother they take per stirpes (acc. to the Mit which quotes Gaut. 28 15), if they are the daughters of several daughters.<sup>1542</sup> The Mit (on Yā, II. 145), Aparārka (p. 721) and several others provide (following Manu IX. 198 = Anuśāsana 47.25) that if a woman of a lower caste dies issueless leaving strīdhana, then the daughter of her co-wife of a higher class inherits that strīdhana and on failure of such step-daughter, the son of the latter inherits. It may be noted that as regards succession to strīdhana, the rule of representation which holds good in relation to succession to males does not apply. When a male dies leaving separate property and a son and a grandson (son of a predeceased son) both succeed together, the grandson representing his deceased father. But if a woman possessed of strīdhana dies having only a son and a predeceased son's son, the son will take the whole of the strīdhana excluding the son's son. Vide Ba. Raman v Jaggvandas 41 Bom 618.

It is not possible nor necessary to deal exhaustively with the devolution of strīdhana according to the various schools of Hindu Law. But a few indications from the important text books having authority in the different provinces will be offered. According to the Sm. C. (which is the leading authority in Madras after the Mit.) stridhana includes only those kinds of property that are so described in the smrtis (i. e. only technical stridhana) and the lines of devolution are as follows: (1) śulka devolves in the same way as laid down by the Mit. cited above (Sm. C. II. p. 287); (2) Yautaka devolves on unmarried daughters first (Sm. C. II. p. 285); (3) Anvādheyaka and Bhartrdatta pass to sons and married daughters whose husbands are living, all inheriting together in equal shares (Sm. C. II. p. 284); (4) other kinds of technical stridhana such as adhyagni &c pass first to the maiden daughters and married daughters who are aprahstuta,<sup>1543</sup> then to married daughters that are provided for; then to daughter's daughters, then to daughter's sons, then to sons, then to son's sons &c., then to the husband or father (according to the form of marriage). The Madras High Court follows the Mit. (in preference to the Sm. C.) as to the devolution of Anvādheyaka and Bhartrdatta and holds that certain kinds of non-technical stridhana (such as gifts by strangers during coverture) devolve acc. to the rules of the Mit. Vide Salemma v. Lutchmana 21 Mad. 100.

The Vivādacintāmaṇi, the leading authority in Mithilā, restricts stridhana to the technical stridhana recognized by the smrtis and lays down the devolution of it as follows: (1) Śulka<sup>1544</sup> (defined as property received by a woman at the time of her marriage, if in an unapproved form) passes as under the Mit. cited above; (2) Yautaka passes first to unmarried daughters, then in the way laid down by the Mit. for all stridhana; (3) all technical stridhana other than the two preceding varieties passes to sons and unmarried daughters together, then to sons and married daughters jointly, then to daughter's daughters, then to daughter's sons and then as under the Mit. system (for stridhana in general.)

Konkan<sup>1545</sup> proposes various lines of succession to strīdhana. Its treatment is based on the Sm. C. and the Madanaratna. It first divides strīdhana as stated above into technical (pāribhāsika) and non-technical (apāribhāsika). The first is subdivided into four classes for the purpose of inheritance; (I) śulka which passes as stated above under the Mitākṣarā; (II) yantaka goes to unmarried daughters, (if there be no unmarried daughters)

1545. For the territory in which the V Mayūkha is supreme, vide Lallubhai v. Mankuvarbai 2 Bom. 388 (F B) at p 418, Jankibai v. Sundra 14 Bom 612 at pp 623-24, Vyas Chimanlal v Vyas Ramchandra 24 Bom 367 (F B.) at p 373. How the Vyavahāramayūkha composed by a Mahā rāstra brāhmana whose family had settled at Benares came to be regarded as a work of high authority in Gujarat is explained in Lallubhai v. Mankuvarbai 2 Bom. 388 at pp 418-419 and in Bhagirathibai v. Kahnayirav 11 Bom 285 (F B) at pp. 294-95. As there is divergence between the views of the Mit and the Mayūkha in the rules of succession, it becomes a matter of great practical importance to settle with precision the exact limits in Northern Konkan up to which the Mayūkha must be regarded as a work of paramount authority. It has been judicially decided that Karanja, an island opposite the Bombay harbour, is governed by the Mayūkha (in Sakharani v. Satabai 3 Bom. 353), that Mahad, the southernmost Taluka of the Kolaba District, is not so governed and that the predominance of the Mayūkha cannot be taken further south than Cheul and Nagothna in the Kolaba District (vide Narhar v Bhan 40 Bom 621). Similarly difficult questions arise whether Kathiawar which is quite contiguous to Gujarat and some territory bordering on Gujarat towards the north or east is governed by the views of the Mayūkha in preference to those of the Mit. Some parts of Kathiawar which were (and even now are) under the domination of the Gawkwad of Baroda may, on the analogy of the grounds on which the Mayūkha is held to be of paramount authority in Gujarat, be deemed to be governed by the Mayūkha. It appears to me that the tendency of courts should be to restrict the extent of the territory in which the Mayūkha is supreme and to hold that everywhere the Mitākṣarā is supreme, except in those territories where the Mayūkha has been expressly recognized as supreme by the feudatory States contiguous in Gujarat or by judicial decisions. The Mit is the paramount authority in the whole of India except in Bengal, therefore on the analogy of the maxim that a general rule is applicable and is supreme in all cases except where an exception clearly covers the matter (अपवादविषय-परिहारेण उत्तमस्य व्यवस्थितिः) districts outside modern Gujarat but bordering on it should not be held to be governed by the Mayūkha.

then probably to the married daughters; (III) anvādheya<sup>1445a</sup> and bhatapriti-datta (husband's gift of affection) are inherited by sons and unmarried daughters together in accordance with Manu (IX. 192 and 195), (if there be no unmarried daughters) by sons and married daughters, then daughter's issue, then son's sons; (IV) other<sup>1546</sup> kinds of technical stridhana devolves as under the Mit; (V) non-technical<sup>1547</sup> stridhana is inherited in the following order; sons, son's sons, sons' sons' sons, daughters, daughters' sons, daughter's daughters. When there is no issue of the woman the succession depends in all cases as under the Mit on the question whether the woman was married in an approved or an un-approved form. The V. Mayūkha employs language somewhat different from that of the Mit. in speaking of the inheritance to stridhana when a woman dies without 1545a Vide Sitabai v. Vasantrao 3 Bom L. R. 201 (where a long passage from the V. Mayūkha is quoted in translation and it is held that anvādheya includes gifts or bequests from parents after marriage as well as from the husband and that sons and daughters succeed equally to anvādheya), Dayaldas v. Savitribai 34 Bom 385 (F B), where it was held that a passage of the Mayūkha wherein the view of the Mit was first stated and then the view of others really meant that the latter was the view of the Mayūkha, that sons and daughters inherited anvādheya together and that if there were both married and unmarried daughters, the unmarried daughters and the sons inherited together सुतायाः स्त्रिया धनं पुत्रैर्दुहितृभिश्च साम्येन ग्राह्यम् । तथा च मनुः—जनन्यां . . . सनामयः ॥ एतच्चान्वायेयमनुमीतिद्वत्तविषयम् । एतद्विविधधनविषयेऽपरीणितपरीणितपुत्रीसमवाये विशेषमाह बृहस्पतिः । स्त्रीधनं स्वादपत्यानां . . । अमत्तानामभावे मत्ताभिरविधवाभिर्भ्रातृभिः सह विभज्य ग्राह्यामित्याह कात्यायनः । मदनरत्न (folio 105 b) Vide च स text pp. 157-58 for the two views. It will be noticed that the Mit construes the verse of Manu distributively: the sons take equally when they succeed and daughters do so when they succeed and that Manu does not mean that sons and daughters inherit simultaneously.

1547. Vide Mamil Rewadāt v. Bai Rewa 17 Bom. 758 (as to inheritance of non-technical stridhana) where it was held that as regards stridhana under the Mayūkha the woman is recognized as a fresh source of devolution, that the words 'sons and the rest' mean no more than sons, grandsons and great-grandsons, that as regards property which does not class as pārībhaṣika stridhana, the sons and the rest take precedence over the 'daughters and the rest' (i. e. their issue), that failing sons and daughters the heirs to pārībhaṣika stridhana and apārībhaṣika stridhana are the same, save that as between male and female offspring the latter have a preferential right as to pārībhaṣika, while the former have a similar right as to apārībhaṣika. पारिभाषिकातिरिक्तं मातृधनं दुहितृसमवे पुत्रादप्येव लभेत् । च. मयूख p. 160.

issue. But it has now been judicially held that both mean the same thing<sup>1548</sup>.

In the Dayabhāga school the devolution of various kinds of stridhana according to the Dayabhāga and D. K. S. is as follows: (I) sulka devolves<sup>1549</sup> in the following order: (1) full brother, (2) mother, (3) father, (4) husband; (II) Yautaka devolves<sup>1550</sup> in the following order: (1) unmarried and unbetrothed daughters, (2) betrothed daughters, (3) married daughters, who have or are likely to have sons, (4) barren married daughters and childless widowed daughters taking together in equal shares, (5) sons, (6) daughter's sons, (7) sons' sons, (8) son's son's sons, (9) step-son, (10 and 11) stepson's son, stepson's grandson. Then if the marriage was in an approved form, yautaka passed in the absence of any of the above in order to husband, brother, mother and father. If the marriage of the woman was celebrated in an unapproved form then her stridhana passed in order to mother, father, brother, husband. (III) Anvādheya gifts<sup>1551</sup> (gifts or bequests) made subsequent to marriage by the father brother's son, sister's son, husband's sister's son, brother's son, daughter's husband. Br. says that the mother's sister, maternal uncle's wife, paternal uncle's wife, father's sister, mother-in-law, elder brother's wife are declared to be like one's mother, that when these women have no aurasa child or a son of their co-wife or a daughter's son or a son's son or stepson's son, then the sister's son and the rest may take their wealth. This text, acc. to the Dāyabhāga, simply declares that a sister's son and the others may be heirs to the stridhana of the maternal aunt and the rest but the priority is determined among the six heirs mentioned above in Brhaspati's text by the principle of religious benefit. Though the sister's son is the first in Brhaspati's text, it is the husband's younger brother who stands really the first among the six if regard is had to the principle of religious benefit. The Vir. (V. P. p. 554) states that in the absence of heirs up to the stepson and stepson's sons, the sister's son and the rest (mentioned in Br.) are the heirs to a woman's stridhana even when sapindas like her father-in-law are alive, since mere sapinda relationship would not count when in conflict with a special text. It does not appear that the V. P. holds that the six take in the order stated in the text of Br.;<sup>1554</sup> it rather states that among these six the choice of the preferential heir

The verses of Br. occur in Sm C II p 287, V. Nir p 472, Par M III p 555, V Mayūkha p 161, V. P pp 553-554. The above verses of Br mean that males who are a woman's sister's son or her husband's sister's son or her husband's brother's son or her own brother's son or her daughter's husband or her husband's younger brother are like her son and inherit her stridhana in certain circumstances would be determined by greater or less propinquity<sup>1555</sup>. On failure of these six the husband's sapīṇḍas, sakulyas and samānodakas take and then the father's kinsmen.

1554 In Bai Kesserbai v. Hansraj L. R. 33 I A 176 the above text of Brhaspati was discussed in a Bombay case at great length (pp 190-197) and it was held that under the Mayūkha a co-widow was entitled to succeed to the stridhana of a widow in preference to her husband's brother or brother's son, that the text of Br. must be taken distributively, that is, when the marriage is in an approved form the husband's sister's son will succeed and that when the marriage is in an unapproved form the brother's son or sister's son will succeed, that the text does not indicate the order of succession which is governed by the principle of propinquity under the Mit or the Mayūkha. It may be noted that the V. Nir p 472 expressly gives the distributive order. Acc. to the Sm C the six heirs referred to in the text of Br. take in the order stated therein. The Dāyabhāga does not hold this view.

The question of an unchaste daughter's succession to strīdhana would be decided in the same way as her succession to her father's property. Under the Dāyabhāga an unchaste daughter will not succeed. But under the Mitākṣarā as interpreted by modern courts an unchaste daughter who is a kept mistress or a prostitute may succeed but only after virgin daughters or married daughters as the case<sup>1556</sup> may be. The Mit. on Yāj. II 290 relies upon the Skandapurāṇa for the proposition that prostitutes are a fifth caste descended from certain apsarases.<sup>1557</sup>

It has been held by the courts that though prostitution entailed degradation according to ancient Hindu Law, it did not sever the tie of blood. So the strīdhana of a naikin (a dancing girl) or of a married woman who becomes a prostitute may be inherited by her brother or sister or her husband or her husband's relations.<sup>1558</sup>

It may not be out of place here to suggest how strīdhana should be dealt with when Hindu Law comes to be codified as it is likely to be in the near future. It may be urged that all distinctions on the ground of sex should be altogether done away with and whenever a woman succeeds to any property whether of a male or of a female she should take an absolute estate. But if this change is opposed by a large volume of opinion as it is quite possible, then it should at least be provided that all property which a woman inherits from a female should be her absolute property. Then as regards inheritance to stridhana one simple and straightforward rule should be laid down that the woman's sons and daughters should succeed together taking equal shares. A third suggestion would be that when there are no descendants of the woman herself, then the husband should be the next heir. When the stridhana is that of a maiden, the heirs in order should be her brothers and sisters, then her mother, then her father and after the father the latter's nearest heir. It is not quite necessary at this stage to specify what further rules of devolution should be prescribed.

CHAPTER XXXI

MAINTENANCE AND OTHER TOPICS

The subject of maintenance occupies an important place in modern Hindu Law. A brief statement of the law of the smṛtis and the digests on this subject must be made here.

The liability to provide maintenance for certain persons arises under the ancient Hindu Law in either of two ways viz. (1) on account of bare relationship between the parties or (2) on the ground of the possession of property. A verse<sup>1559</sup> quoted by Medhātithi on Manu III. 72 and IV. 251, by the Mit. on Yāj. I. 224 and II. 175 and occurring in some mss. of the Manusmṛti after XI. 10 provides, 'Manu declares that one must maintain one's aged parents, a virtuous wife and a minor son by doing even a hundred bad acts.' From this verse it follows that irrespective of the possession of property there is a personal legal obligation on the father to maintain his minor son, on the husband to maintain his wife and on the son to maintain his aged parents. Baud. Dh. S (II. 2. 48) goes further and provides<sup>1560</sup> that a son is bound to maintain a mother even if she be patila. To the same effect are Āp. Dh. S I. 10. 28. 9 and Vas. 13. 47.

Manu VIII. 389 prescribes that the man who abandons and does not maintain his parents, wife and son, when they are not patita, should be fined 600 panas by the king. Nār. also (S. B. E. 33 p. 184 verse 95) provides punishment for such a husband. Yaj. I. 76 states that if a man abandoned a wife who was obedient, diligent, the mother of a son and agreeable in speech he was to be made to give one third of his property to the wife and to maintain her, if he had no property. Visnu Dh. S. V. 163 made the husband punishable like a thief if he abandoned his blameless wife. Kaut. II. 1 prescribes<sup>1561</sup> that if a man being able fails to maintain his child or wife, parents, minor brothers and sisters, unmarried daughters, widowed daughters, when these are not patita, should be fined twelve panas. These dicta have been followed even by modern courts in India. In Subbarayana v. Subbappa<sup>1562</sup> it has been held that a son is bound to maintain his aged mother whether he has inherited property from his father or not

The manager of a joint Hindu family is under a legal obligation to maintain all male members of the family, their wives and children Nārada states<sup>1563</sup> that if any one among several (undivided) brothers dies without issue or becomes an ascetic the rest should take the estate and give maintenance to his wives till their death, provided they keep the bed of their husband unsullied but that they may cut off the maintenance if they (wives) behave otherwise. This is because the surviving brothers succeed to the estate in which the deceased had an interest during his lifetime. This is made quite clear<sup>1564</sup>

in the Sm. C. explaining a verse of Nār. viz. 'widows that are virtuous must be maintained with food and raiment by the eldest brother (of the deceased) or by the father-in-law or by any other gotraja' on which it remarks: "The words 'by him who takes the estate' must be understood before all the words such as 'the eldest brother'". Kāt. (922) states, 'when the husband goes to heaven the wife is entitled only to food and raiment if he was unseparated or she may get a share in (ancestral) property till her death'. The Sm. C. remarks that as maintenance depends upon taking wealth, Kāt. provides two alternatives. In cases too numerous to cite this has been followed by all High Courts. Similarly an heir is bound to maintain out of the estate taken by him those persons whom the deceased was legally or morally bound to maintain. Those persons who are excluded from inheritance or partition are entitled to maintenance and their virtuous wives and unmarried daughters also are entitled to be maintained (Yāj. II. 140-142 Manu IX. 202, Vas 17. 54). The Baud. Dh. S. (II. 2. 43-46)<sup>1565</sup> provides that those who are past undertaking transactions (i e. are very old) should be given food and raiment and also those who are blind, idiotic, impotent, immersed in vice and suffering from (incurable) diseases, and those that engage in prohibited acts, except the patita and his issue. Devala (quoted in the V Mayūkha p. 165) has a similar passage, 'when the father is dead (or even when being alive he makes a partition) the impotent, the leper, the lunatic, the idiot, the blind, an outcast and his offspring, a person wearing a heretical sect mark—these are not entitled to a share of the heritage; to these except the patita food and raiment are to be given'. These persons suffer from a personal disqualification and maintenance is given to them in lieu of a share not because their status is denied but because they are incapable of management and enjoyment of property. Vide Raja Ram Rao v. Raja of Piltapur.<sup>1566</sup>

The general principle is that an heir is legally bound to provide out of the estate taken by him as heir maintenance for those persons, male or female, whom the late owner was morally or legally bound to maintain. For example, if there is no ancestral property the father-in-law who possesses only self-acquired property is not legally bound to maintain his daughter-in-law (widow of a predeceased son); but on the death of the father-in-law, his heir i. e. son, widow, or daughter would be legally bound to maintain a widowed daughter-in-law.<sup>156a</sup> The Bombay High Court, however, adds the condition that the predeceased son must have been in union with his father when he died; vide 23 Bom. 608.

By Act XVIII of 1937 it has been provided that in a family governed by the Mitākṣarā the widows of deceased coparceners such as the daughter-in-law and the grand-daughter-in-law are entitled to their husband's interest. The Act does not expressly state that their rights to maintenance are taken away. In many cases such widows may prefer to take a share instead of being allotted only maintenance and so far the law of maintenance will tend to become obsolete.

Another important question is what is the effect of unchastity on the right to maintenance? As regards the wife's right to maintenance and the effect of unchastity thereon during the husband's lifetime, vide H. of Dh. vol. II pp. 571-73 above. Manu XI. 176 says that a wife guilty of adultery should be confined by the husband in the same house and should be made to undergo the same penance as a man guilty of adultery has to undergo; Yāj. I. 70 also says that a wife guilty of adultery should be deprived of her status as a wife as to wealth and religious observances, should be given bare maintenance and should be confined to a part of the house. Unchastity on the part of a Hindu widow disentitles her to maintenance under certain circumstances Vas 21.10 provides that four classes of wives must be abandoned viz. one who yields herself to her husband's pupil or to his guru and especially one who attempts the life of her husband or who commits adultery with a man of a degraded caste and in 21.12 Vasistha states that the wives of brāhmanas, ksatriyas and vaiśyas, who commit adultery with a śūdra, may be purified by penance if no child is born (of the adulterous intercourse) but not otherwise'. It is provided by Yāj. I. 72 that if a woman (of the three higher castes) conceives through adultery with a śūdra or kills her foetus or attempts the death of her husband or is guilty of grave sins (such as brāhmana-murder) she shall be abandoned

Manu IX. 188 provides that when women become pat-ita, the rite called ghatasphota (the procedure of which may be seen at p. 388 of the H. of Dh. vol. II and in note 1168 in the Appendix to this volume) may be performed, but they must be given food and raiment and they must be provided with a hut near the family house. Yaj. III. 296 has a similar provision. The result is that there is no text which provides that a widow who is once unchaste must be deemed unchaste for ever and must for ever forfeit her claim even to a starving maintenance even if she repents, reforms her ways and gives up an immoral life. On the contrary the texts say that widows guilty of adultery are purified by penance and may be restored to all their social privileges. For example, Manu<sup>1567</sup> XI. 189 says generally about all persons that after they perform the appropriate prāyascitta, they should not be rebuked or avoided (but should be restored to all social intercourse). The Mit. on Yaj. I. 72 expressly says that the abandonment of even such women as are referred to in that verse consists in not associating with them conjugally and in religious matters, but does not mean that they are to be driven out of the house.<sup>1568</sup>

On Yaj. III. 297 (which states that in the case of women there are three peculiarly grave sins viz. adultery with a low-caste man, killing the foetus and attempt to murder the husband) the Mit. sums up the whole position as follows: (1) total abandonment of women for the four grave sins laid down in Vas. 21. 10 takes place when they do not perform penance; (2) women guilty of adultery not of the aggravated kind mentioned in Vas 21. 10 are to be given starving maintenance that would keep body and soul together and are to be lodged in a hut near the house and to be afforded protection (Yaj. I. 70 and III. 296), even if they do not perform the requisite penance. But the Mit. is silent as to the claim to maintenance of widows that at first led a life of incontinence (but not of the aggravated kind) and subsequently reformed their ways. But from Manu XI. 189 it may be inferred that widows not guilty of aggravated adultery that have undergone the proper prāyascitta and that return to decent life would have been entitled to ordinary maintenance from the period they turned over a new leaf.<sup>1569</sup>

A brief reference to the modern case law on this point may be made here. In Bhikubai v. Hariba<sup>1570</sup> Sir Lallubhai Shah (after an elaborate examination of ancient and medieval authorities and decided cases) held that a widow who had been unchaste, but who is proved to have given up the life of unchastity is entitled to bare maintenance. In Lakshmichand v. Anand the Privy Council make the general observation.<sup>1571</sup> 'It is true that the right of a Hindu widow to maintenance is conditional upon her leading a life of chastity and that she loses that right if she becomes unchaste'. In Kisanji v. Lakshmi<sup>1572</sup> it was held that subsequent unchastity disentitled a widow from recovering maintenance, even though it is claimable under an agreement made with the deceased husband's father and brother. In Musammal Ganga v. Ghasia 1 All. 46 (F. B.) it has been held that unchastity does not incapacitate a daughter from inheriting stridhana. In Angammal v. Venkata 26 Mad 509 the same rule was laid down.

The illegitimate son born of a śūdra concubine to a man of the three higher castes appears to have been held entitled to maintenance from very early times. Gaut. 28. 37 provides, 'the son from a śūdra woman of a man (of the three higher varnas) who is without issue receives maintenance (lit source of maintenance), if he is obedient, in the same way as a pupil might receive'. And Gautama (28 43) extends the same rule to the offspring of pratiloma unions. Vide p. 601 above and note 1135 for the text of Gaut. and Br. on the point. Manu IX.

1569. Vide Sathyabhama v. Kesavacharya 39 Mad 658 at p 660 where it is said, 'But in none of these texts is there any provision for a woman who has repented and was subsequently leading an honest life. 155 also provides that the son of a man of the three higher castes from a sūdra woman (not married to him) is not entitled to share in the ancestral estate. Br. (S.B.E. 33 p. 374 v. 31) states<sup>1573</sup> that an obedient and meritorious son born from a woman of the sūdra caste to a man who has no other child should get maintenance and that the sapindas should divide the rest of the wealth of the deceased. Both the Mit and the V. Mayūkha, while explaining Yaj. II. 133-134 about the rights of the illegitimate son of a sūdra from a sūdra woman, remark that one who is begotten on a dāsi<sup>1574</sup> by a member of the regenerate classes is not entitled to a share even at the father's choice nor to a half share after his father's death but that he is only entitled to maintenance.<sup>1575</sup>

There is a good deal of case law on this subject, but much of it is irrelevant in this treatise. The right of maintenance attaches in the first instance to the separate property of the putative father and if the latter leaves no such property but was a member of a joint family it attaches to the property of the joint family of which the putative father was a member.<sup>1576</sup> It has further been held that it does not matter if the woman was not a dāsi (a slave) or a permanent concubine in the exclusive keeping of a man or that the intercourse was adulterous.<sup>1577</sup> It has been also held that the illegitimate son's right to maintenance is a personal right and cannot be transmitted to his son<sup>1578</sup> and that maintenance has to be provided for him till his death<sup>1579</sup> (and not merely up to his attaining majority), except in Bengal.<sup>1580</sup> The fact that the texts employ the word "sūdrāputra" (in the masculine gender) has been interpreted by the decided cases as involving that an illegitimate daughter is not entitled under Hindu Law to maintenance. Vide Parva v. Ganpatrao<sup>1581</sup> and Vellaiyappa v. Natarajan.<sup>1582</sup>

Another frequent subject of litigation in modern times has been a concubine's right of maintenance under the Hindu Law. It has been held that a concubine has no legal right to claim maintenance from her paramour during the latter's lifetime, as he can discard her at any time and as she cannot compel him to keep her.<sup>1583</sup> So also a Hindu is not entitled to transfer joint family property to a concubine for her maintenance during his lifetime.<sup>1584</sup> But on the death of the paramour a great difference is made in the rights of a concubine that was in his exclusive keeping till his death. Such a concubine has been held to possess a legal right to maintenance payable out of the estate, ancestral or self-acquired as the case may be, in the hands of those who take it after the death of the paramour. The rights of women, who are not wives, to maintenance are based mainly on two texts, viz. of Nārada and Kātyāyana, that are explained in the Mit, the V. Mayūkha and other medieval works. Nārada says:<sup>1585</sup> 'A king devoted to dharma should give maintenance to the women (strī) of a deceased person (when the king succeeds as heir by escheat), except when the deceased person is a brāhmana'; while Kat. (931) states,<sup>1586</sup> 'heirless property goes to the king after keeping aside (wealth sufficient to provide) for the women (yosit), the dependents (or servants) and the funeral rites and srāddhas (of the deceased)'

Kaṭ. also similarly prescribes (III.<sup>1587</sup> 5. p. 161), 'the king takes heirless property except that of *śrotriya*s, setting apart (wealth) for the maintenance of women (of the deceased), for funeral rites and for poor or wretched (dependents of the deceased)'. The Mit., the V. Mayūkha, the Par. M. and others state that the verses of Nār. and Kāt refer to avaruddha-stri alone, since the word patnī (duly wedded wife) does not occur therein, but only the words 'yast' and 'stri'.<sup>1588</sup> There has been a great divergence of views in the decided cases about the significance of avaruddha stri. It is generally rendered as a concubine or mistress in the exclusive keeping of a person till the latter's death'. Several conditions are necessary to constitute a woman an avaruddha stri capable of claiming maintenance from the estate of her deceased paramour in the hands of his sons or other heirs. In the first place, she must have been continuously and exclusively in his keeping till his death. How long she should have been thus in his keeping cannot be fixed by any hard and fast rules. She must have been so long in his keeping continuously till his death that it can be said that the connection had become permanent. In Bai Nagubai v Bai Monghubai a period of five years was deemed to be sufficient. In the second place the concubine<sup>1589</sup> must observe sexual fidelity to her deceased paramour after his death in order to be able to claim maintenance from the estate in the hands of his heirs or successors. In Bai Monghubai v. Bai Nagubai<sup>1590</sup> a third condition was laid down viz. that the connection of the concubine with the deceased paramour should be perfectly open and recognized and she must have been kept practically as a member of the family. But in Bai Nagubai v Bai Monghubai<sup>1591</sup> the Privy Council overruled the above decision and held that in order to entitle a mistress to maintenance it is not necessary that she should have resided in the same house with the deceased together with his wife and the ordinary members of his family. And in Dayavati v Kesarbai<sup>1592</sup> it was further held that the concubine need not prove that she was recognized by the family of the deceased or that his relationship with her was known to the family. A further restriction was imposed by the case of Anandlal v Chandrabai<sup>1593</sup> that the intercourse with the paramour should not have been adulterous. But this case has been overruled by a recent Full Bench decision in Akku v Ganesh<sup>1594</sup> which holds that a permanently kept concubine is entitled to be maintained out of the estate of her deceased paramour, although she has a husband living (who was examined in the case as a witness), provided she observes sexual fidelity to the deceased paramour after his death. It becomes, therefore, necessary to examine the Sanskrit medieval commentaries and digests in order to arrive at a correct interpretation of the expression 'avaruddha stri'. Strangely enough, the Mit. does not define the word in the section on dāyabhāga, but only under 'stri-sangrahana'. Yāj II 290 provides, 'a man should be awarded a fine of fifty panas, if he has intercourse with dāsīs that are avaruddhā or that are bhujisyā and also (other women such as prostitutes and svārnīs), even though ordinarily they (i.e. dāsīs and others) are approachable (without incurring the consequence of punishment)' The Mit. explains that the word 'ca' placed after 'bhujisyāsu' in Yāj. II. 290 is meant to include vesyās and svārnīs along with bhujisyās. Acc. to the Mit. the verse prescribes the same fine for intercourse with three kinds of women, viz. dāsīs that are avaruddhā, dāsīs that are bhujisyā and other women such as vesyās (who are ordinarily approachable by all males of their own or higher castes) and svārnīs (who abandon their husbands and resort at their desire to some other male of their own caste, as defined by Yāj. I. 67). A woman though originally a vesyā or a svārnī may be known to be kept by a man. In that case if another man approaches her, Yāj II 290 declares that he would be liable to be fined in the same amount as if he approached an avaruddhā dāsī or bhujisyā, because being in the keeping of another at the time she would be like a wife (as the other two classes do) so far as punishment for approaching a kept woman is concerned. This verse is not concerned with the maintenance of women at all. The Mit. here defines 'avaruddhā dāsi' as "a slave woman who is prohibited by her master from intercourse with other men with an order to stay in the master's house alone in order that there may be no loss of attendance (on the master)." The Mit. defines a bhujisyā dāsi as 'one who is restricted (as to enjoyment) to certain definite males' (puruṣanīyata-pari-grahā bhujisyā).<sup>1595</sup> It is worthy of note that the Mit. employs different phraseology in defining the two words. In defining a bhujisyā it employs the word 'nīyata', which generally means 'fixed or definite', while in defining 'avaruddhā' it employs the word 'niruddhā' meaning 'prevented or prohibited'. If the two words were intended to convey the same meaning, there is no reason why the Mit. should not have employed the same word (niruddhā) in defining a bhujisyā. The difference between an avaruddhā dāsi and a bhujisyā is that the former is ordered to stay in the master's house, while the bhujisyā is not so ordered and secondly the avaruddhā is forbidden to have sexual intercourse with any one except the master, while the bhujisyā is not so forbidden, but she is to restrict herself to enjoyment by certain specified males (friends or men of the master's family) and not necessarily by the master alone. This is the meaning assigned to those words by Mitramiśra in his commentary<sup>1596</sup> (not his digest) on Yāj II 290. The Mit. itself indicates the meaning of 'nīyata' by saying elsewhere that ownership springs from certain fixed sources (nyatopāyakaṁ svatvam on Yāj II 114). It is respectfully submitted that the Privy Council gave a wrong interpretation of the word 'avaruddhā' in Rai Naqubai v. Bai Monghubai.<sup>1597</sup> Though slavery is now abolished in India there is no reason why the two characteristics of avaruddhā (viz staying in the master's house and being exclusively kept by the master) stated by the Mit. should not have been strictly adhered to by the Privy Council, particularly when they were holding heirs liable for the maintenance of kept mistresses, which is hardly ever allowed in any other system of law. With the greatest respect to the Full Bench, it must be said they went wrong in holding that bhujisya means 'a mistress who is restrained from intercourse with other persons (other than the master)' and in holding that the only distinction between an avaruddha and a bhujisya is that the former is required to stay in the house of the paramour, while the latter is not (47 Bom. L. R. at pp. 13 and 22). The learned judges have not correctly interpreted the word 'niyata' and also the explanation of 'bhujisya' given by the Bālabhāṭṭi<sup>1598</sup>. The meaning of the Bālabhāṭṭi was misunderstood on account of the wrong meaning attached to the word 'niyata'. What the Bālabhāṭṭi means in explaining the definition of bhujisya is 'one who is to be enjoyed by certain definite males only other than the master' (i. e. by the master and also certain defined males) and it does not mean 'who is forbidden to be enjoyed by males other than the master'.

The F. B. further rely upon a passage of the Mit. in support of their conclusion (47 Bom. L. R. at pp. 14 and 22) On the question of what properties are impartible, the Mit. on Yāj. II. 119 quotes Manu IX. 219 viz 'clothes, conveyances, ornaments, cooked food, water (wells &c.), women, yogakṣema and pastures (or ways)—these they der. are impartible' The Mit. explanation<sup>1599</sup> of the word 'striyah' may be translated as follows: 'striyah' here means 'female slaves; if they are uneven in number they should not be divided by taking their price into consideration, but they are to be made to work in turns (for the separated members of the family), but as regards women kept by the father such as svairinis and the rest, they are not to be divided by the sons even though they be even in number". It is difficult to see how this passage supports the Full Bench decision. That passage can be explained in two or three different ways. In the first place, the Mit. having itself clearly distinguished and defined three classes, viz avaruddhā, bhujisya and svairinī (together with veśyas also) it cannot be lightly supposed that elsewhere it gives up that distinction. Therefore it would be difficult to say that here (on Yāj. II. 119) the Mit. means that svairinīs are also the same as avaruddhās. Hence the interpretation should be that women who are avaruddhā (kept exclusively by the father) and even other women also like svairinīs (who had sexual connection with the father though not as avaruddhā) should not be divided i. e. a 'ca' should be understood after 'svairinyādyāḥ'. Or it is possible to hold that the word 'avaruddhā' in that passage is not employed in the strict technical sense (as defined by the Mit. on Yāj. II. 290), but in its etymological sense meaning 'women who are svairinīs and the like that are taken into his harem (or under his protection) by the father should not be divided'. This interpretation derives support from the explanation offered by the Subodhini (which is repeated almost verbatim by the Bālabhāṭṭi) about the text of Gautama quoted by the Mit. that 'samyukta' in Gaut. means 'enjoyed' or 'confined' (in the house). This shows that the words 'ruddhā' and 'avaruddhā' were used in the etymological sense by distinguished writers. The Sm. C. II p. 321 while explaining the word 'ruddhā' in Manu IX. 12 applied to a wife guilty of adultery explains it as meaning 'confined in a part of the house' (gr̥he avaruddhām). When the Mit. states (p. 811) that the verses of Nār. and Kāt. refer to avaruddhā strī it follows that these verses do not refer to bhujisya, who would therefore be deemed not entitled to maintenance at all.

There is a large body of caselaw about the right of a widow in a joint Hindu family to reside in the family house, about the right of a daughter-in-law against her deceased husband's father who has no ancestral property in his hands and against the heirs of the father-in-law, about the amount of maintenance to be allowed to a widow and about the rate at which arrears of maintenance are to be allowed, about the period for which arrears may be awarded, about making the maintenance a charge on the estate in the hands of the heirs, about varying the rate of maintenance fixed by a decree or an agreement &c. These are not quite germane to the present volume, particularly because most of the decisions on these matters are not based on the words of the smrtis or of the medieval digests, but are based on logic and principles of justice and equity. But there is one matter which deserves a passing reference. Ancient Hindu Law attached the highest spiritual importance to the payment of debts ( vide pp. 414-417 above ). Therefore debts contracted by a Hindu are held by the Courts to take precedence over the right of maintenance of a man's wife, his infant child or his widow after his death.<sup>1600</sup> Similarly debts contracted by the manager of the joint family of which the widow's husband was a member would take precedence over the widow's right of maintenance, provided the debts were for the benefit of the family or were for legal necessity.

The last vyavahārapada is prakīrnaka, which is defined by Visnu Dh. S. 42 ' 1 as ' miscellaneous ' ( yadanuktam tat prakīrnakam ) or by Nār. as matters that were to be set in motion by the king himself ( vide note 331 ). These have been dealt with above and do not require any further treatment here.

At the end of this section on Vyavahāra it would not be out of place to say a few words about wills. Owing to the joint family system and the custom of adoption testamentary dispositions did not come into vogue in ancient India. Among the many kinds of documents (lekhyā) mentioned by Kaut., Br, Kāt and others cited above there is no term for a document which can convey the idea of a modern will. But it need not be supposed that the idea had not at all dawned upon the minds of people before the advent of the British<sup>1601</sup>. Wills were known among Mahomedans and contact with them would naturally suggest the idea of a will. Oral or written instructions by a man expecting death to his heirs intended to affect the disposal of his property must have been given occasionally and should not 1601. In Nagalutchmee Ummal v. Gopoo Nadaraja 6 Moo I A. p 309 the P. C. said ( at p. 344 ): ' It must be allowed that in the ancient Hindu Law, as it was understood through the whole of Hindustan, testamentary instruments in the sense affixed by English lawyers to that expression were unknown ; and it is stated by a writer of authority ( Sir Thomas Strange ) that the Hindoo language has no terms to express what we mean by a will. But it does not necessarily follow that what in effect though not in form are testamentary instruments which are only to come into operation and affect property after the death of the maker of the instrument were equally unknown.

be supposed to have been entirely unknown. Verses 341-359 of the Rajatarangini IV. appear to embody the political testament of king Lalitaditya of Kashmir in the first half of the 8th century. Kat. (566) makes a very near approach to the modern conception of a will<sup>1602</sup>. He says, 'if a gift was promised by a man for a religious purpose whether when in good health or when afflicted with disease, the son should be made to pay it, if the father dies without giving it over.' Here the mere declaration of the intention of a person was made enforceable after his death against the son or other heir. Brhaspati's verse saying that a promise or direction to take effect after the death of the promisor was not ordinarily enforceable has already been quoted above (n. 823). In the quarterly of the Bhārata-itihāsa-samsodhaka Maṇḍala of Poona, vol. XX p. 210 (for May 1940) there is a letter (dated 1775 A. D.) written by one Naro Babaji, who, after referring to his illness, provides on a generous scale for his funeral and śrāddha expenses and makes dispositions in favour of his daughter-in-law, of another widow, and for the marriage of his kinsman's sons and distribution of the balance of his assets<sup>1603</sup>.

One of the earliest wills to come before the British Indian Courts was that of the notorious Umichand<sup>1604</sup> (who died in 1758 A. D.). Bengal Regulation XI of 1793 recognized by section VI the power of a Hindu proprietor to make a will or declaration giving, prior or subsequent to 1st July 1794, his entire landed estate to his eldest son or next heir or other son or heir or to any person or persons. In a Bombay case the will of a Hindu made in 1789 is referred to<sup>1605</sup>. A Pundit of the Recorder's court of Bombay gave it as his opinion in 1812 A.D., 'there is no mention of wills in our Shaster; therefore they ought not to be made' (vide Strange's Hindu Law, vol. II p. 449). In I. L. R. (1940) 1 Cal. 415 at p. 424 the Privy Council observe that the Hindu will in its present form is a development since the middle of the 18th century.

It is beyond the scope of this work to dilate on the modern Acts dealing with Testamentary dispositions such as the Indian Succession Act (Act 39 of 1925).

Now that the foregoing lengthy presentation of the ancient and medieval Hindu judicial procedure and substantive law has been brought to a close a few general observations may be indulged in here. The Hindu Law of pleading and evidence compares favourably with similar laws of many other countries and has extorted the admiration and encomiums of such

eminent Jurists and Judges as Sir William Jones, Sir Thomas Strange and others. For example, Sir Thomas Strange in 'Hindu Law' (1830) vol. I observes (at p. 311), "sufficient be it to observe that Hindu pleading was noticed with commendation by Sir William Jones and that, with some trifling exceptions, the Hindu doctrine of evidence is, for the most part, distinguished nearly as much as our own, by the excellent sense that determines the competency and designates the choice of witnesses with the manner of examining and the credit to be given them; as well as by the solemn earnestness with which the obligation of truth is urged and inculcated; inasmuch that less cannot be said of this part of their law than that it will be read by every English lawyer with a mixture of admiration and delight, as it may be studied by him to advantage. Even the pious perjury which it has been supposed to sanction<sup>1605a</sup> being resolvable after all into no greater liberty than what our juries (not indeed with perfect approbation) have long been allowed to take, where the life of a prisoner on trial before them is at stake; credit is to be given to the pregnant brevity of the Hindu oath viz. 'what you know ..declare at large and with truth' (Manu VIII. 80); as also to the noble warning, with which the subject as detailed by Manu is ushered in, that 'either the court must not be entered by judges, parties and witnesses or law and truth must be openly declared' (Manu VIII. 13)." The medieval digests made a very near approach to the modern ideal of equality of all men before the law. How even in the 20th century the much vaunted equality before the law of all people in England is far from being achieved and how it often proves quite illusory where the poor or the labouring classes are concerned is well brought out in a book entitled 'Justice in England' by a Barrister published by Victor Gollancz in 1938, especially in chapters I and VI. The Hindu jurists evolved tolerably clear and sound ideas about contracts, debts, deposits and pledges, sales, mortgages and gifts of immovable properties, developed a system of joint family rights and liabilities and laid down a peculiar law of inheritance and succession to males and females. The Hindu system of inheritance and succession pursues a middle course. It does not distribute the estate of a deceased person simultaneously among several heirs as under the Mahomedan Law (where the widow, the father, mother, sons and daughters of a man take the estate together if they are all alive at the time). Nor did the Hindu system confine the descent to a single person among a group of heirs of the same degree and sex as in the English system before 1926 (where the eldest son succeeded to the real estate of an intestate person).

It has further been seen how the ancient and mediæval Hindu rules as to debts, adoption, partition and inheritance have been moulded for over a century by Legislation and by decisions of the Privy Council and the Courts in India. Many persons feel that the time has now arrived for the codification of Hindu Law. A Committee presided over by Sir B. N. Rau has prepared a draft code which attempts to codify certain branches of Hindu Law. From several quarters there has been vehement opposition to this draft code. The objections raised are many. It is not possible to deal here with the several objections in detail. But some of them which raise questions of fundamental importance will have to be briefly stated and answered. The first objection is that in view of Queen Victoria's proclamation of 1858 the Indian Legislature should not interfere with the customs and usages of the people that are part and parcel of the Hindu religious system. But this objection is hollow and unsubstantial and conveniently ignores what has happened during the last hundred years or so. All that the Queen proclaimed was: 'Firmly relying ourselves on the truth of Christianity and acknowledging with gratitude the solace of religion we disclaim alike the right and the desire to impose our convictions on any of our subjects. We desire it to be our royal will and pleasure that none be in any wise favoured, none molested or disquieted by reason of their religious faith or observances; but that all shall alike enjoy the equal and impartial protection of the law; and we do strictly charge and enjoin all those who may be in authority under us that they abstain from all interference with the religious belief or worship of any of our subjects on pain of our highest displeasure.' Notwithstanding the noble sentiments expressed here, the Indian Legislature both before and after the proclamation passed numerous laws that more or less impinged upon or affected the religious theories, sentiments and practices of millions of Hindus! The following is a list of some of the important laws of this character which will convince any one of the fact that people have always submitted to laws passed by the Governor-General or the Legislature that prevented them from carrying out their cherished ideas and practices: Regulation XVII of 1829 which declared the practice of Sati illegal and a crime punishable by the courts; the Caste Disabilities Removal Act (XXI of 1850); Hindu Widows' Remarriage Act (XV of 1856, which legalises the marriages of Hindu widows notwithstanding any custom or interpretation of the Hindu Law to the contrary); the Indian Penal Code (XLV of 1860, which makes sexual intercourse by a man with his own wife that is under thirteen years of age punishable as rape); the Child Marriage Restraint Act (XIX of 1929), which makes the marriage of a male below 18 and of a female below 14 punishable as a crime; the Hindu Inheritance (Removal of Disabilities) Act (XII of 1928) which sets aside the Mitāksarā rules about exclusion from partition and inheritance except in the case of those that have been lunatics or idiots from birth; the Hindu Law of Inheritance Amendment Act (II of 1929, which enables the son's daughter, daughter's daughter, sister and sister's son to succeed under the Mitāksarā in that order after the paternal grandfather and before a father's brother); the Hindu Gains of Learning Act (XXX of 1930); the Hindu Women's Rights to Property Act (XVIII of 1937, which enables the widow of a deceased member of a joint Hindu family to succeed to the interest of her husband in the joint family property and to succeed to her deceased husband's separate property for the same share as that of a son). The Privy Council claimed more than 70 years ago that 'the British Government by virtue of its sovereign power asserted, as the former rulers of the country had done, the right to visit endowments of this kind (viz temples) and to prevent and redress abuses in their management' (Rajah Muttu Ramalinga v. Peranayagum 1 I. A. 209 at p. 232). Non-Hindu Judges of the Privy Council and the High Courts have been interpreting and laying down the Hindu Law for over a hundred years and on many points the law declared by them has thoroughly changed the law of the smṛtis and digests. If all this has been allowed to happen without hardly a demur, there is apparently no satisfactory or convincing reason why an elected Indian Legislature the majority of whose members are likely to be Hindus should not pass an Act dealing with Hindu Law.

Another objection raised even by some retired judges of the High Court is that the present system of laying down the

Hindu Law by means of judicial decisions is quite satisfactory and there is no need of a code of Hindu Law. This objection merely shows that change is rather a painful process for most men. The present method may be a veritable El Dorado or paradise for lawyers and busy bodies fomenting longdrawn litigations. One must stand appalled at the colossal expenditure of time, labour and money which must have been involved during the last hundred years or more in fighting out doubtful points of Hindu Law from the lowest court to the Privy Council. It not unfrequently happens that after a point had been settled by a Full Bench decision of a High Court and after common people and lawyers had followed the law thus settled for fifty years the Privy Council upsets the decision on an appeal by an enterprising litigant. For example, the Bombay High Court decided in 1879 in Ramji v. Ghamau (6 Bom. 498) that the adoption by the widow of a deceased co-parcener, who had not her husband's express authority to adopt, was invalid, if made without the consent of the surviving co-parceners. But in 1932 the Privy Council held that Ramji v. Ghamau was wrongly decided and that a widow can adopt without her husband's express authority and even in the teeth of the opposition of the surviving members of her husband's family. And when an appeal was made to the principle of 'stare decisis' the Privy Council was pleased to observe, 'It was pressed on their Lordships that Ramji v. Ghamau had been accepted and acted upon in the Presidency of Bombay since 1879 and that the decision should not be disturbed. But this is a belated appeal. It should have been made when Yadav v. Namdeo was before the Board.' To ordinary minds this dictum, speaking with the utmost respect, appears strange. If for some reason or other a certain line of argument is not placed before the Privy Council by the counsel of a private party and a wrong decision is given, is it to be supposed that all litigants are to be precluded from trying to set the wrong decision right for all time to come? The Privy Council has not seldom set right a wrong decision given by the Board in a prior appeal. In Sahu Ram v. Bhup Singh 44 I. A. 126 the Privy Council held that the pious duty of the son to discharge his father's or grandfather's debts does not attach while the father or grandfather is alive; but in Brij Narain v. Mangla Prasad 51 I. A. 129 the Privy Council held (at p. 134) that the pious duty is always there irrespective of the question whether the father or grandfather is alive or dead.

Others opine that one Code for the whole of India is not and cannot be a practicable proposition. In support of their objection they rely on the existence of the several schools of law now prevalent in the whole of India. If India desires to be a self-governing political unity in the future, there is a compelling reason why it should be governed by a single Code of Hindu Law, as it has been governed and will be governed in other substantial provinces of law by codes applicable to all alike. That will help in the direction of solidarity and will be of some use in doing away with fissiparous tendencies. There are really only two schools of Hindu Law. And the unification of Hindu Law will be helped by the abolition of the right by birth which is the cornerstone of the Mitākṣarā school and which the draft Hindu Code seeks to abolish. Many people are vehemently opposed to the change. But they forget that, what with the rule that any member of a joint Hindu family may alienate his interest for value, what with the Gains of Learning Act, the Hindu Women's Rights to Property Act and other enactments, the real core of the ancient Hindu family system has been removed and only the outer moribund shell remains (vide p. 604 above). Some are opposed to giving along with sons a share to daughters, particularly to married daughters. But here a compromise may be effected by allowing a share to unmarried daughters alone (as Yāj II. 124 and the Mitākṣarā thereon expressly provide).

Another provision in the draft Hindu Code which has come in for severe animadversion is the provision that a woman even when taking by inheritance an estate from a male or by partition should be held to become absolute owner thereof. In the first place, if a man's agnate of the 13th degree or a male cognate up to the 5th degree takes an estate absolutely and may squander it away as he pleases, one fails to see why his own widow should not have a like power in the 20th century, whatever may have been the view of ancient works. In the second place, this objection can be met by means of a compromise, viz. that a widow inheriting her husband's estate will take only a limited estate if at the time of her husband's death any one of the compact series of heirs or any direct lineal descendant of her husband (such as a son's daughter or daughter's daughter) be alive, but she will take an absolute estate if none of these exists. Such a compromise should allay all fears about the widow unfairly disposing of the estate against near relations like the daughter or daughter's son or husband's brother &c. There are numerous other objections, but they are in matters of detail and if once it is agreed that there should be a Code of Hindu Law passed by the Indian Legislature these matters of detail may be adjusted to the satisfaction of most people.

Similarly serious objections are raised to the provisions of the Code as regards marriages and divorce. The draft code proposes to do away with the prohibitions based on sameness of gotra and pravara. This is a desirable change and being optional should not be opposed. Some reasons for this change have been advanced in H. of Dh. vol II. p 498. Besides, this provision will affect only a small percentage of the Hindu population. Similarly the insistence on monogamy is opposed by many. In this case some compromise may be arrived at as regards classes to whom two wives are an economic advantage. The provisions about divorce have been overdue. Among the higher castes no divorce has been allowed on any ground whatever. Many hard cases occur where there is no redress and the draft code proposes to give relief in such cases.

On the most contentious subject of adoption the draft code, it is satisfactory to note, has made certain provisions which are in line with the suggestions put forth by me in note 1338a above.

Compelling reasons exist why Hindu Law should be codified as early as possible. Men naturally desire that they should have easy access to the laws by which they are to be governed in all their actions, dealings and relations. It is hardly a commendable or desirable state of things that people should be forced to consult lawyers or bulky textbooks every now and then and even in small and simple matters. The general outlines and provisions of Hindu Law must be within easy reach of every intelligent or inquiring Hindu. This can only happen if there is a code for all Hindus or, if that is deemed impracticable for the present, at least for a large province or for a number of provinces.

CUSTOMS AND MODERN CUSTOMARY LAW<sup>1606</sup>

From Gautama<sup>1606a</sup> downwards many writers dilate upon the sources of dharma. Gautama I. 1-2 states: 'the Veda is the source (mūla) of dharma and also the tradition (or smṛtis) and practice of those who know the Veda'. Similarly Āp. Dh. S. (I. 1. 1. 1-2) says: 'we shall propound the acts (that produce merit) which are evolved from conventions and practices; the authority (for finding out the *dharma*s) are the conventions of those who know the dharma and the Vedas'. Vas. I. 4-7 provides: 'dharma is declared by the Vedas and Smṛtis; on failure of these two the practice of the śiṣṭas is the authority (for finding out what dharma is); a śiṣṭa however is one whose heart is free from (worldly) desires and (only) such acts of śiṣṭas are (to be held as) dharma for which no (worldly

I. 7; वेदोऽखिलो धर्ममूलं स्मृतिश्शिले च तद्विद्वद् । आचारश्चैव साधूनामात्मनस्तुष्टिरिव च ॥ मनु I. 6. हरदत्त explains mūla as Gaut. as pramāṇa and सामयाचारिकान् as 'पौरुषेयी व्यवस्था समयः स च त्रिविधः विधिनियमः प्रतिषेध इति । समयमूला आचाराः समययाचाराः तेषु भवा सामयाचारिकाः एवं धृतान्धर्मानिति । कर्मजन्योऽप्युदयनिःश्रेयसहेतुपदार्थस्य आत्मगुणो धर्मः '. According to him सामयाचारिकान् means relating to practices based upon agreements or conventions Manu distinguishes between śīla and ācāra. The first means, acc. to Kullūka and others, such moral qualities as 'devotion to learning, to gods and to parents' &c mentioned in Hārīta (quoted by Kullūka). All commentators connect 'svasya' in Manu II. 12 and Yāj. I. 7 with 'priyam', but Pandit Gattināl connects it with 'sadācāra' which means according to him 'sampradāya' (in Satsiddhāntamārtanda I. 5 p. 49, Nir. ed. 1942).

or secular ) cause ( or motive ) can be assigned'.<sup>1607</sup> Manu II. and Yaj. I. 7 declare that Veda ( or śruti ), smṛti and the practices of the good are the principal sources of dharma. The words employed in these works are śīla, saṁaya, ācāra or sadācār or śīstācāra<sup>1607</sup> ( the latter three meaning the same thing'. Āp. employs both words viz. saṁaya and ācāra, the first of which probably means 'agreement or convention or usage', while the latter means 'custom'. The word 'custom' now conveys the idea of some antiquity,<sup>1608</sup> while usage or convention does not necessarily convey that idea. A usage may be recent or it may be established by agreement among a certain class of persons ( such as traders or craftsmen ) We have to see what is meant when it is said that ācāra or śīstācāra or sadācāra is the source ( mūla ) of dharma. An indication of the meaning is furnished by the word pramāṇa employed by Āp. and Vas. The meaning is that just as the revealed books ( Veda ) and the smṛtis authoritatively lay down what dharma is, so also in our quest to find out what dharma is in the varying circumstances of life the practices of those who may be called śīstas furnish us with the necessary criterion or norm i e. śīstācāra is the touchstone for judging whether an act is in consonance with what the śāstras require us to do. The theory of the ancient writers was that the smṛtis were based on parts of Veda ( that consists of mantras and Brāhmaṇa texts ) which though formerly existent are not now extant or available, that similarly the practices of those who were learned in the Vedas and were deemed to be śīstas must be inferred to have been based on portions of Veda not now available. This theory was advanced by such ancient

I. 11 contains perhaps the oldest extant indication as to who should be regarded as śīstas, though that word itself is not used. अथ यदि ते कर्मविचिकित्सा वा वृत्तविचिकित्सा वा स्यात् : ये तत्र ब्राह्मण-संमतिनिः युक्ता आशुका अलूक्षा धर्मकामाः स्युः यथा ते तत्र वर्तेन् तथा तत्र वर्तेया । अथाभ्याख्यासेषु । ये तत्र ब्राह्मणाः . . धर्मकामाः स्युः यथा ते तेषु वर्तेन् तथा तेषु वर्तेया ।

In *Juggomohun Ghose v. writers as Āp.<sup>1609</sup> and was taken up by many subsequent works. Manu II. 7 also states that whatever dharma has been ordained for any person by Manu, all that has been entirely declared in the Veda for the Veda is full of all knowledge. But it does not follow from this nor is it ever meant that all practices of śīṣtas are authoritative in matters of dharma. The qualification was added that where the practices of śīṣtas are clearly referable to or are prompted by a seen motive or by the desire to secure pleasure, there they are not authoritative. Manu (II. 18) restricted the word sadācāra to the customs handed down from generation to generation among the four varnas and the mixed castes in the country called by him Brahmāvarta (II. 17). But many other writers did not so restrict it in this way.

We have to distinguish between what are called the sources (mūla or pramāṇa) of dharma and the sthānas of dharma (Yāj I. 3 and 7).<sup>1610</sup> The former indicate to the inquiring spirit what dharma is (i.e. they are what are called jñāpaka hetu), while the latter must be studied as aids by the expounders of dharma in order to correctly grasp what dharma is, i.e. the different lores (other than Veda and smṛti) are not directly the sources of dharma, but are only mediately so. This distinction is an ancient one as even Gautama XI. 19 provides that the king is helped in his administration of justice by the Veda, the dharmaśāstras, the auxiliary lores (angas), the Upavedas and the Purāṇa.<sup>1611</sup>

The position of the Pūrvamīmāṃsā in relation to the authoritative nature of smṛtis and customs requires careful and detailed consideration. In I. 3. 1-2<sup>1612</sup> Jaimini considers the question whether such smṛti injunctions as 'one should perform the Astakā śrāddhas',<sup>1613</sup> or 'one should construct a tank or set up a prapā (place for free distribution of water to thirsty travellers)', or 'tufts of hair should be kept on the head' (at caula according to the gotra) are authoritative and establishes the conclusion that they are authoritative, since such smṛti injunctions equally with Vedic ones are addressed to the same persons (viz. the followers of the Veda) who have to act according to them. The idea is that those who perform the acts expressly enjoined by the Veda are also seen to perform the acts enjoined by such smṛtis as that of Manu and therefore the principal reason why these smṛtis are authoritative is the fact that those who know the Veda accept these smṛtis as authoritative and hold fast by them, as Madhātithi on Manu II. 6 says citing some verses from his own work called Smṛtīviveka<sup>1614</sup> Śābara endeavours to show that there are indications (lūga) in the Vedic texts pointing to the existence of what is prescribed in the smṛtis, e. g. he cites the Vedic verse 'yām janāh' as indicative of aśṭakāś, Rg. X. 4. 1 of prapāś, Rg. VI. 75. 17 of tufts of hair. The objection may be stated as follows :—The smṛtis are composed by human authors (i. e. they are pauruseya) and so have no independent authority in matters of dharma, as a man may say what is either false or mistaken. If it be said that the smṛtis really propound what is stated by the Veda, then they are practically superfluous and useless. And not being Veda they should be discarded (anapeksa). To this the reply is that smṛtis are generally authoritative, as they must be held to be based on Veda because they are composed by men (like Manu) who were followers of the Veda, because what the smṛtis lay down has been consistently followed from generation to generation by the śiṣtas and because it is possible to regard the Veda as their source. To the question why the Vedic passages on which the smṛti rules are postulated to have been based are not seen or found by us several answers were proposed by different writers. One view was that just as Vedic indications about locks of hair lead to the inference of śruti texts enjoining the keeping of tufts on the head, so the fact of the existence of such rules leads to the inference that śruti must have contained injunctions corresponding to all smṛti prescriptions. Kumārila raises objections to this view. Inference is based on perception (pratyakṣa) and invariable concomitance (vyāpti). There is no vyāpti between the smṛtis and śruti texts that are never found pronounced by any one, so no inference is possible and it would be like one blind man following another.<sup>1615</sup> Manu must have composed his smṛti on finding that ācāryas preceding him performed certain acts as based on Veda. These last must have believed that their predecessors also acted on the same belief. Hence there is what is called an 'andha-paramparā' on this hypothesis. And further this hypothesis of the inference of Śruti in all cases is opposed to perception, since as a matter of fact hundreds of Śruti passages are known that can be the basis of corresponding smṛti texts. Another view is (and Kumārila holds that it is somewhat better than the preceding view) that one should infer that the Vedic passages that were the basis of smṛtis are lost (utsanna or pralīna). Some support is lent to this by such Vedic texts as 'anantā vai vedāḥ' (Tai. Br. III 10.

11) and by Āp. Dh. S L 4 12. 10. Even this view is not acceptable to the Tantravārtika and most of the Mīmāṃsakas. The objection against the 2nd view is raised as follows. Even Bauddhas and other heretical sects<sup>1616</sup> would advance the argument that their works also are based on śruti texts that are now lost, and any one may regard anything as authoritative by pretending that the basic vedic texts are lost. Further the Mīmāṃsā view that the Veda is eternal (ntya) would be refuted if it were admitted that some portion of the Veda is lost. There is not much difference between the first view and the second view. Therefore Kumārila propounds the third view viz. that smrtis are to be inferred as based on Vedic texts that are already in existence<sup>1617</sup>. If an objection is raised against this hypothesis that it must be explained why such Vedic texts (the bases of smrtis) are not seen or found, the Tantravārtika replies in a famous kūrikā that as the Vedic śākhās (the several branches of the Veda) are scattered about (in various countries), as men (followers of the Veda) are negligent and unmindful (i. e. they do not visit all the countries and so are unable to have a complete knowledge of all Vedic texts) and as several rules are declared in different contexts even when occurring in the same śākhā (and not at one place) it is not always possible to point out the Vedic sources of smṛti texts. If an objector were to ask: 'why were not the Vedic passages themselves (that are the sources of smṛti rules) embodied bodily into the smrtis,' Kumārila replies that this was not done from the fear of the loss of the correct arrangement of the Vedic texts as traditionally handed down. The Veda is principally concerned with sacrifices, though now and then there are rules addressed to men for regulating conduct only. People would only study the Vedic sentences contained in the smṛtis (that are concerned principally with conduct) where they would be arranged in a different order according to subjects and there would thus be loss of the arrangement of the Veda as originally delivered. Viśvarūpa<sup>1618</sup> (on Yāj. I. 7) quotes the above verse of Kumārila and states that there are thousands of smṛti rules that have their source in the Veda; he and Kumārila instance the rules against talking with (or coming in contact with) a woman in her monthly illness or the rule against assaulting a brāhmana, or the rule about the sin of killing an ātreya woman &c. Medhātithi on Manu II. 6 has an elaborate discussion on this very topic and quotes several verses from his own work called Smṛtīviveka<sup>1619</sup>. He does not approve of the first two views and follows Kumārila's view. Mimāṃsā writers and commentators like Medhātithi say that Manu and other authors of smṛtis brought together for easy comprehension matters that are scattered about in the various Vedic texts, that are either not known to the students of the several śākhās or that cannot be brought together by men of ordinary or weak intellect.<sup>1619a</sup>

The general proposition that smṛtis are authoritative being established, a further question arises. What is to happen if a smṛti rule conflicts with the rule of the Veda? Jaimini deals with this question in I. 3. 3-4,<sup>1620</sup> which form a topic that states an exception to the general rule contained in Jai. I.3.1-2. Śābara gives three instances where there is apparently a conflict between the prescriptions of the śruti and those of smṛti. The Veda says, 'the priest should chant (the stotra) after touching the audumbarī post', while smṛti says 'the whole of the audumbarī post should be covered with cloth'. The Veda says 'one to whom a son has been born and whose hair is still dark (and has not turned grey) should consecrate the Vedic fires', while smṛti says 'a man should observe Vedic studenthood for 48 years'<sup>1621</sup>; the Veda says 'when the Agnisomya rite is finished then one may eat (the food prepared) in the house of the sacrificer', while smṛti says 'the food of one who has undergone dikṣā for a sacrifice may be eaten after he purchases the soma plant'. In these cases the proposition enunciated by Jaimini is that 'in case of conflict (between an express śruti rule and a smṛti rule) the smṛti rule should be discarded, for when there is no conflict (with an express śruti) inference may be made (that a smṛti rule is based upon some Vedic text).' The examples may be explained as follows: The 'audumbarī' is a post of udumbara planted in the sadas in the performance of the Agnistoma; the stotras (other than Bahispavamāna) are chanted near the audumbarī post in the sadas. Vide H. of Dh. vol. II. p. 1135 for the fixing of the audumbara post in the sadas and p. 1185 for the chanting of stotras near the audumbarī. If the whole of the post be covered with cloth, it would not be possible to touch the post, but only the cloth would be touched. So there is contradiction. If a man is to consecrate Vedic fires when he has a son and his hair is dark, he must be between about 20 and 40 (i. e. a young man), but if a man were to observe brahmacarya for

48 years, he would be about 52 to 56 years of age before he married (as the upanayana of a brāhmana was to be performed generally in the 8th year or from the 5th year onwards at the most). Only a married man could consecrate Vedic fires. But a man's hair when he is fiftytwo years of age or more can hardly be all dark. Therefore there is contradiction between the rule derived from the Veda and that derived from smṛti. In the Jyotistoma (which generally occupied five days), the dikṣā (purification and initiation of the sacrificer) takes place on the first day in the afternoon (vide H. of Dh. vol. II, pp. 1134-1136). Soma is purchased on the 2nd day of the Jyotistoma (ibid. 1140-4) and the animal is sacrificed for Agni and Soma on the 4th day (ibid. pp. 1158-59). According to śruti therefore the food prepared in the house of a dikṣita may be eaten only after the 4th day, while smṛti says that it may be eaten after the purchase of soma on the 2nd day. In this way there is contradiction. Kumārila<sup>1622</sup> does not agree with Śābara as regards these examples in particular and as regards the general attitude towards smṛtis that are accepted by Vedic followers. He makes great efforts to explain how there is no real conflict in the cases cited by Śābara. As regards the cloth covering the audumbari he says that it may cover the bottom and the upper portion of the post and leave a space of two or three finger-breadths in the middle uncovered (so that the audumbari post can be touched in that particular portion), that (p. 188) there is a passage in the Śātyāyani

1622. The sūtra (Jai. I. 3 3) is read as अनपेक्ष or अनपेक्ष्य and with both readings it has been explained in different ways from ancient times. The तन्त्रवार्तिक says 'औतस्मार्तविज्ञानविरोधे यदुपपेक्षमपेक्षावर्जितं यस्य बाधपेक्षणीयमन्यत्रास्तीति एवं पाठद्वयेऽपि पूर्वसूत्राद्यमाणशब्दमनुवर्तते सम्बन्धय यदुपपेक्षं तत्तत्तत् प्रमाण स्यादिति' (p. 193). 'श्रुतिविरोधे यन्मानात्तरानपेक्ष श्रुतिबाध्यं तदेव प्रमाणं स्यात् न स्रुतिबाध्यं यस्मादुपर्येव विरोधे स्रुतेः श्रुत्यनुमापकत्वम्' मयूखमालिका On this interpretation the sūtra means 'in case of conflict between śruti and smṛti, the former which is independent is authoritative, for only when there is no conflict does an inference arise that smṛti is based on śruti'. The तन्त्रवार्तिक when it explains Jai. I. 3 3-4 as referring to Bauddhas and the like takes 'anapeksya' to mean 'deserving to be discarded'; 'तरनादने मति त्रयीबाह्यमेवजातीयकं प्रामाण्येनानपेक्षं स्यादिति सिद्धम्' p. 196. ऋङ्गुर in his भाष्य on वेदान्तसूत्र II 1. 1 appears to adopt Kumārila's 2nd interpretation of Jai. I. 3. 3. 'वियतिवसौ च स्रुतिनामवश्यकर्तव्येऽन्यतरपरिग्रहेऽन्यतरपरिग्राये च श्रुत्यनुसरण्यः स्रुतयः प्रमाणमनपेक्षया ह्यन्तराः । तदुक्तं प्रमाणलक्षणे विरोधे त्वन...तु मानमिति ।' कुल्लूक on मनु II. 14 quotes जै I 3. 3 and explains 'श्रुतिविरोधे स्रुतिबाध्यमनपेक्षममाणमनादरणोपम् । असति विरोधे मूलवेदान्तमानान्तिवर्धः ।

Brāhmana which refers to the cloth covering the audumbari (and so there may at most be an option), that as regards the taking of food in the house of a dikṣita after the purchase of soma there is a śruti passage in the Atharvaveda (pp. 181 and 189) similar to the smṛti passage (and thus there is no conflict between śruti and smṛti, but between śruti and śruti, which would lead to an option) and further the smṛti rule may apply in the case of a man in distress (āpad-dharma), that smṛti does not prescribe an absolute period of 48 years for the study of Veda, but Baud. Dh. S. itself allows several alternative or optional periods and so no question of conflict with śruti arises. Kumārila's own position is this: In the case of apparent conflicts between śruti and smṛti, various methods of interpretation and reconciliation are possible. Each of the two may be given its proper scope as referring to different subject matters (which is called viśaya-vyavasthā); it is also possible to hold that smṛti is based on some śruti texts already existing but not found at the time of discussion, but which may ultimately be found, in which case there will be an option, though the latter is to be avoided as far as possible as it is liable to eight faults (vide Tantravārtika pp. 174-175); or the two may be reconciled even when referring to the same subject matter e. g. a man may have dark hair even when he is 52 or more and the smṛti may be taken as meant to refer to such a man, while the śruti states the general rule about the age when consecration of Vedic fires was to be made. Therefore Kumārila holds that all that is meant by Jainini and even by Śābara is that there is a great distinction between śruti and smṛti in that the former is apauruṣeya and an independent authority, while the latter has a human author (liable to err), is either actually based on the Veda or is inferred to be so based, that the two therefore can never be said to be quite alike each other as regards their authoritativeness and that lastly smṛti is not in itself to be regarded as unauthoritative<sup>162</sup>. Kumārila therefore suggests that the proper subject of discussion in Jai. I. 3 3-4 is the works of Bauddhas, Sāṅkhya, Yoga, Pāñcarātra, Pāśupata and other heretical sects and the practices of mlecchas. These works contain some matters such as the emphasis on ahimsā, truthfulness, restraint of senses, charity and compassion, which are also emphasized in the Veda, but these works are not generally accepted by the followers of the Veda, are based on specious and false reasoning only (they are hantukas in the words of Manu), that they deny the authority of the Veda. Therefore Jaimini means that these works of heretic sects are not authoritative in matters of dharma as they are opposed to the Veda and should be discarded. For want of space it is not possible to set out in detail the interesting discussion in the Tantravārtika. The Jaiminiya-nyāya-mālavistāra also gives another explanation of Jai. I. 3. 3.

Śabara (on Jai. I. 3. 4) explains that the three smṛti passages stated above are not authoritative since it is possible to point out how they originated in a visible worldly motive such as greed. When a visible motive can be pointed out for any smṛti text, it is not proper to infer that it is based on the Veda and has an unseen spiritual motive. Śabara<sup>1624</sup> postulates the reasons in the way of a modern man finding fault with priests. Some priests covered the whole of the Audumbari post with cloth, because they coveted the cloth as part of the fee; others who desired a free meal when hungry took food at the house of a dikṣita even after he had purchased the Soma plant; certain others in order to conceal their absence of virility went in for Veda study for 48 years. The Tantravārtika tries to show that in all these cases there is really no visible motive such as covetousness (pp. 188-189)

Śabara gives an alternative explanation of this sūtra (Jai. I. 3.4) and makes a separate topic (adhikaraṇa) of it. The reasons<sup>1625</sup> for giving an alternative explanation of a sūtra or adhikaraṇa are two, viz. dissatisfaction with the explanation already given or the wide scope of the subject under discussion. In I. 3. 3 passages from smṛtis were cited which were apparently in conflict with śruti. If they were really in conflict, that one reason alone is more than sufficient to render the smṛtis invalid. Therefore to say further that those smṛti passages originate in worldly motives like greed does not add any very substantial reason for the abandonment of smṛtis as authoritative. Therefore Śabara makes another adhikaraṇa of sūtra 4 of Jai. I. 3.

He cites smṛti passages which are not opposed to Veda at all and says that such passages have seen a worldly motive such as covetousness and it is not proper to suppose that they are based on Veda and are therefore authoritative, when a visible purpose or motive can be ascribed to them. The result of the explanations of I. 3. 3-4 given by Śābara would be that smṛti rules that are opposed to śruti rules and smṛti prescriptions that can be shown to have a clear worldly motive are not authoritative or absolutely binding, while the rest of smṛti texts are authoritative.<sup>1626</sup>

Śābara cites on Jai. I. 3. 4 (when taken as a separate topic)<sup>1626a</sup> two examples; (1) the adhvaryu priest takes (as his fee) the cloth used in the Vaisarjana homa; (2) they perform the gift of the elephant (i. e. the cloth covering) of the sacrificial post. Śābara says that these passages are not opposed to any śruti text but instead of inferring a Vedic text as their basis it is far better to hold that there is a manifest worldly motive for these rules (viz. covetousness of the adhvaryu) and so these smṛti passages need not be looked upon as authoritative.<sup>1627</sup>

This discussion raises an important doctrine which frequently figures in dharmasāstra works. The doctrine is expressed post was 17 aratnis in height and 17 pieces of cloth were employed to prepare the appearance of a turban on the tip when enveloping the yūpa with a girdle. The figure presented by the cloth covering the yūpa was called yūpa-hastin (probably because it looked like the head and trunk of an in this form viz. when a visible motive or purpose is obvious in the case of a rule or prescription it is not proper to ascribe an unseen or spiritual purpose or reason for it. This doctrine is older than even Āp. Dh. S. I. 4. 12 11 which says, 'where men act because they find pleasure in so doing, there śāstra has no scope'. Śābara also says,<sup>1628</sup> 'those rules (in the smṛti) that have a seen purpose derive their authority from that fact, while those that have no visible purpose may be inferred to be based upon the Veda (and derive their authority from that).' These words of Śābara are quoted by Kullūka on Manu III. 7 where Manu states that a girl should not be selected as a bride from a family that neglects the samskāras, in which no male children are born, in which there is no Veda study, the members of which have on their bodies long and thick hair, that suffers from such diseases as piles, dyspepsia, epilepsy, black and white leprosy. Kullūka remarks that the works on medicine hold that such diseases are inherited and so if such a girl be married the progeny might suffer from these diseases, and thus this prohibition is based on a visible motive. From this a very important conclusion is drawn by dharmaśāstra writers viz. if one while performing a rite or when engaged in any matter acts contrary to a rule that has a seen purpose, the rite or matter does not become invalid or void, while where a rule is based on an unseen or spiritual purpose and it is infringed, the act itself becomes void or invalid. Yāj I. 52 and 53<sup>1629</sup> prescribe among other things that the bride to be chosen by a man must be free from (incurable) diseases, must have a brother living, must not be a sapinda of the bridegroom or must not have the same gotra or pravara as that of the bridegroom. On this the Mit. remarks that if a man marries a girl who is suffering from an incurable disease, the marriage is valid, only he does an act which runs counter to seen results (i. e. he may suffer the consequences that his children may be diseased), but if he goes through a ceremony of marriage with a girl who is a sapinda or of the same gotra or pravara there is no valid marriage and the girl is not his legal wife. No clear visible purpose can be associated with the prohibition against marrying a sapinda or sagotra girl; hence there must be a spiritual purpose in that prohibition and so if one infringes it the act itself (viz. marriage) becomes void.<sup>1630</sup>

The Tantravārtika of Kumārila has as usual a very long note on this discussion. He does not see eye to eye with Śābara. He says<sup>1631</sup> that the Mīmāṃsā is concerned with the investigation of dharma, that śruti is the prime authority in matters of dharma, that Mīmāṃsā has concern with smṛtis only so far as their authoritativeness in matters of dharma goes, that just as agriculture and the like are not discussed in Mīmāṃsā works because they have a purely secular purpose, so all acts that men do for a visible worldly purpose have no bearing on the investigation of dharma and that therefore the bhāṣyakāra (Śābara) was not quite right in saying that such practices as rising to receive an old man or a teacher have a visible purpose and are authoritative on that ground. He further remarks that visible and invisible or spiritual purposes are often inextricably mixed up. When the Veda prescribes 'he pounds the grains of paddy' or enjoins a sacrifice like the Kāriri for bringing down rain, there is a visible purpose therein (e.g. the rice grains have to be freed from husk before boiled rice for oblations can be prepared). So even when an act has a seen purpose it may still have Veda as the basis; so also an act such as rising to show respect to a teacher may have a seen result (such as the teacher being pleased teaches the pupils with enthusiasm) as well as an unseen result (viz. completion of Veda study without obstacles). Therefore he argues that all

1630. In a very recent case (Madhav Rao v. Raghavendrarao 48 Bom L. R. 196) the Bombay High Court has expressed doubts about the logic or reasonableness of this doctrine of the Pūrvamīmāṃsā in relation to marriages of sagotra parties

smṛtis<sup>1632</sup> are authoritative according to the purpose they serve, that whatever portion of the smṛtis is concerned with dharma and mokṣa (final release from samsāra) has its origin in the Veda and whatever is concerned with wealth and the satisfaction of desires (artha and kāma) is based on worldly practices. In this way are to be explained the didactic portions of the Mahābhārata and the Purāṇas, the episodes in these being useful as arthavādas (eulogies of what are prescribed as religious duties), the description of the several divisions of the earth being useful for indicating what countries are suitable for the performance of dharma and the enjoyment of its rewards and being based partly on Veda and partly on direct experience. Similarly the auxiliary lores (angas) of the Veda (such as phonetics, grammar, metrics &c.) are partly based on the Veda and partly on worldly experience. Mīmāṃsā and Nyāya (logic) are necessary for the correct interpretation and understanding of the Veda (as stated by Manu in XII. 105-106). He is even prepared to concede that systems<sup>1633</sup> like the Sāṅkhya (which postulates a prime cause of the world called Pradhāna) or Vedānta (which postulates Purusa as the cause of the world), the theory of atoms (propounded by Kaṇāda) serve the purpose of explaining the creation and dissolution of the world, lead one to understand how the performance of sacrifices gives rise to the subtle apūrva which leads on to heaven and also exemplify how human effort and fate have their own spheres of operation (i.e. without human effort the world is produced and in spite of human effort it may be dissolved). Kumārila goes a step further and states that even the Buddhist philosophies of vijñāna (cognitions being the only reality), of the non-existence of the soul or of eternal flux arise from the arthavāda passages of the Upanisads and serve the purpose of inducing men to give up extreme attachment to sensual pleasures and therefore may be useful in their own way. He winds up by saying that in the case of all knowledge or works wherever the result (or reward) of the course laid down in them is to take place in the future and there is no possibility of experiencing its happening in the present such work may be deemed to be based on the Veda; but where, as in the science of medicine, the result can be seen taking place in other people, that knowledge is authoritative only because of the visible result.

This discussion about smrtis based on the Veda or on perceptible purposes or motives is taken up in the digests on dharmaśāstra. For example, Aparārka<sup>1634</sup> (pp. 626-627) quotes long passages from the Bhavisiyapurāna dividing the contents of smrtis into five categories and exemplifying that division, viz. (1) those based on a visible purpose or motive, (2) those based on unseen or spiritual motives or purposes, (3) those based on both visible purposes and unseen or spiritual purposes, (4) those based on reasoning, (5) those that merely re-iterate what is already well-known or determined. All these except the first variety are based according to the Bhavisiyapurāna on the Veda. The examples of the five kinds given by the same Purāna are respectively as follows: (1) the smṛti (viz. Arthaśāstra or Dandaniti) in which there is a discussion about six guṇas (sandhu &c), the four upāyas (sāma, dāna &c), the various superintendents of state departments (adhyakṣa) and of kantakas, (2) the prescription that one should perform the sandhyā worship or that one should not partake of dog's flesh; (3) a brahmacārin should carry a staff of palāśa (the staff serves for one's protection, which is a seen purpose, but that it should be of palāśa and of no other tree is based on an unseen motive); (4) when one text declares that homa should be performed after sunrise and another declares that it should be performed before sunrise, reasoning requires that there should be an option (vide Manu II 15), (5) when Manu declares (in VI 38) that a brāhmaṇa should leave home to become a wandering ascetic he simply re-iterates what is laid down in such Vedic passages as Br Up. III 5 1 (vyutthāyātha bhiksācāryam caranti) or Jābāla Up 4.

In I. 3. 5-7 Jaimini as interpreted by Śābara<sup>1635</sup> deals with the topic of the authoritativeness of certain usages laid down in the smrtis in relation to Vedic rites. Śābara states: śistu<sup>s</sup> say that religious rites should be performed after sipping water (i. e. after ūcamana), one should wear the sacred thread in the upavīta way in the worship of gods, one should do with the right hand all religious acts. The question is whether these acts should be done if not opposed to the śruti or should not be performed if opposed to what is taught in the Veda. The pūrvapakṣa view is that these acts should not be done because they run counter to the sequence of the acts laid down in the Veda. For example, the Veda says, 'after getting ready a bundle (or handful) of kusa grass called veda one should prepare the vedi' (altar)'. Here the preparation of the vedi is declared to follow immediately after the getting ready of a handful of kusas. If after the handful is got ready a man has a sneeze he has according to Manu V 145 and Vas III 38 to sip water before going on with the preparation of the vedi. This would be against the sequence (krama) of acts laid down in the Veda. Strangely enough Mr. K L Sarkar in T.L.L. (on Mīmāṃsā rules) translates the words 'vedam krtvā vedīm karoti' as 'make the vedi and then recite the vedas' (p. 241), thereby committing two mistakes. He misunderstands the word 'veda' which in this passage only means a 'handful of kuśas' and inverts the sequence of the acts denoted by the gerundial termination 'tvā'. On account of these two mistakes the discussion on pp 240-242 is misleading and obscure. If a man were to do the things required in a vedic rite with both hands, he would be able to do them quickly. The smṛti rule that every religious act should be done with the right hand alone interferes with the quick performance of religious acts. The established conclusion is that these religious acts (such as ācamana) are performed by the śiṣtas, are prompted by no visible motive (such as covetousness) and are therefore to be looked upon as authoritative, being not opposed to śruti. Kumārila does not like this way of explaining the sūtras, since the instances given by Śabara really do not deserve to be put forth as even prima facie opposed to Śruti. The Tantravārtika (p. 201) sets out śruti passages wherein the wearing of the sacred thread in the upavīta form<sup>1636</sup> (Tai. S. II. 5. 11. 1 and Tai. Ār. II. 1), ācamana (Tai. Ā. II. 11), are enjoined. Therefore it explains the sūtras in a different way. It splits up Jai I 3. 5-7 into two adhikaranas. The first two constitute one topic. The pūrvapakṣa<sup>1637</sup> is those precepts of Buddha and other founders of sects, such as the construction of monasteries and parks, the insistence on desirelessness, the practice of meditation, ahimsā, truthfulness, restraint of senses, charity and kindness, are such that they are also laid down by the Veda, are not opposed to the ideas of śiṣtas or do not run counter to nor rouse those who know the Veda to anger and therefore they must be held to be authoritative. This is denied by saying that the Bauddha doctrines even on the abovesaid matters are not to be accepted as authoritative since only a limited<sup>1638</sup> number (14 or 18) of vidyās (the four vedas, the upavedas, the angas of the veda, the 18 smṛtis, purāṇas, Dandanīti) have been accepted by the vedic śistas as authoritative on matters of dharma and the works of the Bauddhas and Jaiṇas are not included therein. Just as milk though originally pure becomes useless and unreliable when put into a bag of dog-skin, so the doctrines of Bauddhas such as ahimsā, though based on truth, are useless and are not authoritative in themselves for the followers of the Veda.

The Tantravārtika holds that Jai. I. 3. 7 is an adhikarana by itself and is concerned with the authoritativeness of sadācāra (the customs and usages of śistas). Its position is that those usages are authoritative that are not opposed to express Vedic texts, that are practised by Vedic śistas under the belief that they are right conduct (dharma) and for which no visible motive (such as pleasure or the satisfaction of desires or the acquisition of wealth) can be predicated. Śistas are those who perform the religious acts expressly enjoined by the Veda. They are not so called because they practise what is said to be sadācāra; otherwise there will be an argument in a circle (in the form 'sadācāra means what is practised by śistas and śistas are those who practise sadācāra'). The practices traditionally handed down from generation to generation which are observed by śistas (as stated above) with the idea that they constitute a part of dharma must be regarded as dharma and as leading to heaven<sup>1639</sup>. Practices do not become authoritative by the mere fact that no such motive or purpose can be postulated for them, but they become so only when they are observed by śistas as part of dharma. The Tantravārtika (p. 205) gives certain illustrations of such practices viz gifts, japa, mātrayaṇa (offerings to the mother Goddesses), the festival of Indra's banner, fairs held at temples, fasts by maidens on the 4th day of a month, gifts of lamps on the first day of Kārtika, the spring<sup>1610</sup> festival on the first day of the dark half of Phālguna &c The Tantravārtika is careful to point out that many activities such as agriculture, menial service or trade that are the means of securing wealth and pleasures and that give rise to several fixed and varying acts and also such actions as eating sumptuous food, drinking, sleeping on soft beds, possessing a charming house and garden, engaging in painting, singing and dancing, enjoying the fragrance of sandalwood and flowers, all of which are common to mlecchas and Āryas, are not deemed by any one to be part of dharma and that it does not follow that, because a few actions (of śiṣtas) are accepted as dharma, all their actions are to be looked upon as dharma<sup>1641</sup> In ordinary life certain practices only are deemed to be śiṣṭācāra, while there are certain other acts that are common to all human beings (including śiṣtas), but are not so regarded. Certain practices such as worship of gods and honouring brāhmanas are seen to be common among all people and yet do constitute dharma, because that is deemed to be so by the śiṣtas. Those practices alone are dharma that are observed by śiṣtas only as obligatory on them and not other practices that are common to all beings. The Tantravārtika then refers to the Dharma-

The spring festival was one in which on the first day of the dark half of Phālguna people went about drenching each other in ordinary or coloured water discharged from syringes and the like 'कास्तुनकृष्णपतिपादि क्रियमाणः परस्परजलसेकः वसन्तोत्सवः' सप्तमालिका on शास्त्रदीपिका on जे. I. 3. 7. Modern practice combines this with the lighting of bonfires on the Full moon of Phālguna. The mythical origin of होलिका of modern days on the Full moon day of Phālguna is described in भविष्यपुराण (उत्तरपर्व chap 132)

sūtra<sup>1642</sup> of Gaut. ( I 3 ) and Āp. Dh. S. (II. 6. 13. 7-8) which say that ancient ( or great ) men in several instances were guilty of transgressions of dharma and of committing desperate acts, that on account of their spiritual merit they did not incur sin, but if a man of later days were to follow them in the same acts he would sink into hell. It then gives twelve instances of lapses from good conduct ( attributed even to avalārs ) that were transgressions and either explains them away or says that they were due to wrath, hatred or other passions, were not intended by the authors ( of those acts ) themselves to be dharma and are not to be looked upon as śīstācāra by modern men. The instances are : (1) Prajāpati who is said to have approached Usas, his daughter ( Śat. Br. I. 7 4. 1 or Ait. Br. 13 9 ); (2) Indra, who is described as the paramour of Ahalyā ( in the Subrahmanyā litany ); (3) Nahusa, who occupied the position of Indra, made approaches to Śaci, the wife of Indra ( Udyoga, chap. 13 ff ) and was transformed into an ajagara ( Boa Constrictor ); (4) Vasistha, who when his 100 sons were devoured by a demon, was so struck with grief that he threw himself bound into the Vipāsā river ( Nirukta IX. 26, Ādiparva chap. 177 1-6 = cr. ed. 167. 1-6, Vanaparva 130. 8-9, Anusāsana 3 12-13 ); (5) Purūravas who thought of dying by hanging or by being devoured by wolves ( Rg. X. 95. 14, Śat. Br. XI. 5. 1-8 ) when separated from Urvaśi; (6) Viśvāmitra, who officiated as priest at the sacrifice of Triśanku that had become a cāndāla through a curse ( Ādiparva 71. 31-33 ); (7) Yudhisthira who took Draupadī as wife although she had been won by his younger brother Arjuna by his skill in archery and who prevaricated in order to bring about the death of his brāhmana teacher Drona ( Dronaparva 190 55 ); (8) Kṛṣṇa Dvaipāyana. ( Vyāsa ), who thought himself a perpetual student, procreated by myoga at the request of his mother Satyawatī two sons on the widows of his brother Vicitravīrya; (9) Bhīṣma who lived on without belonging to any ( of the four ) āśramas and who is said to have performed several Asvamedhas though he had no wife; (10)

Rāma who performed Aśvamedha accompanied by a golden image of Sītā; (11) Dhrtarāstra, though blind, performed sacrifices; (12) Vāsudeva and Arjuna are described as being drunk and as having married Rukminī and Subhadrā respectively who were their maternal uncle's daughters (such marriages being forbidden). Kumārila, like a modern comparative mythologist, explains (Tantravārtika p. 208) that Prajāpati means 'the Sun' who approaches (i.e. rises after) the Dawn. This explanation is as old as the Ait Br. 13. 9 where it is said that there are two views viz. it is either 'Heaven' or 'Usas' that is meant by the word 'daughter.' Similarly Indra and Ahalyā respectively mean the Sun and the Night and jāra means literally 'one who makes to disappear or wither away' (and not paramour) in that passage. Vide H. of Dh. vol. II. p. 1145 note 2550 for the epithet 'Ahalyāyai jāra' in the Veda and quotation from Tantravārtika. The story of Ahalyā and Indra varies in its details in the epics. Vide Rāmāyana I. 48, Udyoga 12. 6. These two are instances of transgression of dharma (dharma-vyatikrama) and the next case of Vasistha is an example of sūhasa (through sorrow). Kumārila says that Viśvāmitra was prompted by his hatred of Vasistha and his pride, that the sin accruing from his act would be neutralized by his great austerities. So his actions cannot serve as a model for imitation by others. Vyāsa, who was a son of Satyawatī from Parāśara when she was a maiden, had Vicitravīrya as (his uterine) brother after Satyawatī married Śantanu. In the case of a brahmachārīn, sexual intercourse is most reprehensible (vide H. of Dh. vol. II. p. 374)<sup>r</sup> But Vyāsa agreed to nyoga because of his regard for his mother, as allowed by Gaut 18 4-5. Kumārila adds that Vyāsa could do so on account of his great past and future austerities, that another person with similar qualifications may do so even in spite of all prohibitions, since the Mahābhārata (Āśramavāśika 30. 24) says 'sarvaṃ balavatām pathyam' (to the strong everything is wholesome or allowable). He gives an apt illustration. An elephant can devour branches of trees without harm, but others doing so would meet death. Dakṣa V.10 prescribes 'anāśramī na tistheta kṣanamekamapi dvijah' (a twice-born person should not stay even for a moment unattached to some āśrama). Bhīṣma remained unmarried out of filial devotion to his father and Rāma could not think of another wife as he was so much attached to Sītā. Kumārila boldly asserts that Bhīṣma had a wife only for the purpose of the sacrifices he performed (though this is mentioned in no Itihāsa or Purāṇa) and relies upon the mode of proof called arthāpath for this<sup>1643</sup>. His words are given below. This and some other explanations offered by Kumārila shed a very interesting light on the theological apologetics of Mīmāṃsakas. Vide H. of Dh. vol. II. pp. 558 and 684 for Rāma and the golden image of Sītā. As to Yudhisthira's bringing about the death of his brāhmana teacher the explanation is that the former performed Aśvamedha after the end of the war by way of prāyaścitta (vide H. of Dh. vol. II p. 147 n 333 and pp. 1236-37 notes 2674-75 for Aśvamedha as the remover of all sins). As to Draupadī being the wife of five brothers Kumārila quotes Ādiparva 198. 14 (= or ed. 190 14) and offers several explanations (p 209), the most astounding being that there were five wives of the five brothers who were so similar that they were all referred to as one. As the Nyāyasudhā (p. 194) remarks, these various explanations were offered to show off great resourcefulness of interpretation (parihāra-vaiḥbhavārtham), the proper one being that the practice of the Pāṇḍavas was an evil one and was not to be imitated. A blind man could not perform sacrifices and was excluded from inheritance. Vide H. of Dh. vol. II p. 157 n. 369 and vol. III, p 609 n 1154. But Kumārila says that as Dhṛtarāstra was blessed with sight for a while and saw his deceased sons through the miraculous power of Vyāsa (Āsramavāsi parva chap. 32-37) he might have been endowed with sight at the time of the sacrifices or what is meant is that he made gifts which are spoken of as sacrifices. As regards Subhadrā, Kumārila asserts that in spite of the fact that Subhadrā was said in the Ādiparva (219. 18 = cr. ed 211. 18) to have been the daughter of Vasudeva and sister of Kṛṣṇa, she was really the daughter of Kṛṣṇa's step-mother's sister or the daughter's daughter of the sister of his step-mother's father (a female cousin being often called a sister among the Lātas). Vide H. of Dh. vol. II. pp. 459-460 and notes to my edition of the text of V. Mayūkha (pp. 200-202). Kṛṣṇa's marriage with Rukmiṇī is to be similarly explained. It is somewhat surprising that Khandadeva states that it is nowhere found that Subhadrā was the daughter of Vasudeva. Probably he had a corrupt reading of the Mahābhārata passage before him. As to the charge of drinking spirituous liquor (ubhau madhuśa-vaksibau in Udyogaparva 59. 5) against both Vasudeva and Arjuna, they were both ksatriyas and only brāhmanas were prohibited from drinking any kind of intoxicating drink (Gaut II. 25), while to ksatriyas and vaiśyas two kinds of wine called madhu (liquor from honey or madhuka flowers) and sidhu (rum) were allowed and only paistī (spirituous liquor distilled from flour) was forbidden (by Gaut. II. 25, Manu XI. 93-94).

Kumārila offers some other explanations of Jai<sup>1644</sup> I 3-5-7 which need not be set out here.

Kumārila mentions certain practices of his times and concludes that they are to be condemned and not to be followed or regarded as authoritative. He says:<sup>1645</sup> even in these days brāhmana women of Ahicchatra and Mathurā drink wine; northerners (northern brāhmanas) engage in such transactions as the gift and sale of horses and mules that have a mane, asses,

'सेषु आचमनादिषु क्रमादिविरोधस्यादर्शनाद्वैदिकमणीतत्त्वस्वप्नामामाष्यकारणस्याग्रहणे शिष्टे प्रयुक्तानि आचमनादीनि प्रमाणत्वेन प्रतीयेरिति सूत्रार्थः । एवं भाष्यकारेणाधिकरणार्थं उपपन्नम् ।' मीमांसाकौस्तुभ on I. 3. 7 p. 36 Kumārila implies a pūrvapakṣa and holds that I. 3. 7 is the sūtra giving the final conclusion only and as an independent adhiḥkaraṇa by itself.

The form अतिरस्युष्टा occurs in a Pabhosa Inscription (E. I. vol. II. at p. 243) For the different views about मातुलसुनापारेणयन vide H. of Dh. vol. II pp. 458-463 Kullūka on Manu XI. 95 notes that certain commentators held that the prohibition against drinking in the case of brāhmanas did not apply to brāhmana women. Vide H. of Dh. vol. II. p. 765 for सम्भोजन with wife and children and pp. 181 and 839 about gift and sale of horses and animals with two rows of teeth, where Tal. S. II. 2. 6. 3 and II. 3. 12. 1. and Jai. III. 4. 28-31 are cited.

camels and animals with two rows of teeth and eat from the same plate with their wives, children and friends; brāhmanas of the south enter into matrimony with the maternal uncle's daughter and take their meals while seated on a couch (of wicker work); both (brāhmanas of the north and south) take cooked food (kept in pots) that remains after their friends or relatives have partaken of it or that has been touched by them (at the time of eating); they chew betelnut leaves that have been touched by persons of all varnas, do not perform sipping of water (ācamana) at the end of the chewing of betelnut, wear clothes washed by washermen and brought on the back of asses; they do not avoid contact even with persons guilty of grave sins (except of brāhmana murder). There are everywhere an infinite number of very obvious transgressions of the subtle dictates of dharma laid down for each man, caste or family, that (transgressions) are contrary to śruti, smṛti and each other and that have a visible purpose behind them. It is not possible to regard such practices as authoritative. Similarly Varadarāja, (1600-1660 A. D.) a pupil of Bhattoji Dikṣita, in his work styled the Gīrvānapadamāñjarī in a dialogue between a Kānyakubja brāhmana and a sannyāsin hailing from Vijayanagara makes the brāhmana host say that each country has certain practices which are durācāras such as marrying a maternal uncle's daughter in the south, marriage of girls among southerners even before they are four years old, sitting down to a meal without bathing in Karnātaka, in Mahārāstra the marriage of a younger brother before an elder one, in the hilly country the practice of nyoga (vide Mr. P. K. Gode's interesting paper in 'Bhāratīyā-vidyā' vol VI pp 27-30).

According to Śābara, Jaimini in I. 3. 8-9 deals with certain words like yava, varāha and velasa, that have different significances among Āryas and Mlecchas (and therefore these sūtras constitute what is called yavavarāhādīkarana). But Kumārila does not like this view of Śābara and proposes another topic for these two sūtras, viz. the relative strength of smṛti and sadācāra where they are in conflict. Here there are three<sup>1646</sup> possible views, viz. that both are equally strong and so there is an option in case of conflict, that ācāra is stronger, that smṛti is the stronger of the two. The prima facie view is that both are equally strong, since smṛti and sadācāra are both inferred to be based upon Veda. Kumārila's own final conclusion is that smṛti is of greater force than ācāra, that is, where they come in direct conflict smṛti should prevail. His position is that, though both smṛti and ācāra are to be deemed to be based on Veda, there is a difference between the two. People have full faith in such smṛtis as that of Manu and Manu and others are believed to have been inspired sages and are the propounders of the rules of dharma scattered about in various Vedic śākhās, while the same cannot be said about modern men and their practices cannot claim or possess the same weight and allegiance that the practices laid down by Manu and other sages can. From the practice of śiṣtas one may infer a smṛti as the root thereof and then further one may infer a śruti as the root of the smṛti. Therefore ācāra is removed by two stages from the Veda, while smṛti is removed only by one stage from the Veda. Hence Kumārila says that in case of conflict smṛti should prevail over ācāra. The practices that are discussed here (acc. to Kumārila, Pārthasārathi and others) are such as the marriage with a maternal uncle's daughter or with a paternal aunt's daughter and the like that are in vogue among certain people and that are yet opposed to smṛtis (such as Manu XI. 171-72) and for which a visible motive can easily be found (kāmādāhetvantaram spastameva drśyate, as the Śāstradīpikā says).

Kumārila gives another (and so a third) explanation of Jai, I 3. 8-9<sup>1647</sup> which need not detain us here.

1647. समा विप्रतिपत्तिः स्यात् । शास्त्रस्था वा तस्मिन्निवृत्त्यात् । जै I. 3. 8-9 Acc to कुमारिल here शास्त्र means स्मृति, while acc. to Sabara's gloss शास्त्रस्था means शिष्टाः. Sir G. Jha in 'Pūrvaśāstram in its sources' p. 226 translates 'giving and accepting in gift and buying and selling lions, horses'. केसरिन् means 'a lion' also, but it is hardly possible to believe that gifts of lions were made to brāhmanas or that they accepted them. केसरि must be taken as an adjective of 'asva' here. The शास्त्रदीपिका on III 4 34 remarks, तेन यत्र घोषस्त-त्रोद्विः । लौकिके चाश्वदाने न केसरिणो दद्यातीति प्रतिषेधाद् घोषोरिति वैदिके द कर्मोद्गदाने विशेषविधानात्प्रतिषेधामुक्तेनारिति घोषः. This shows that the prohibition against the gift of 'kesarin' refers to the gift of horses. Sabara on Jai VI. 7 4 makes this quite clear when he says तत्रात् in the Viśvajit where the sacrificer had to make a gift of all his wealth, horses

Jai I. 3. 15-23 constitute what is called Holākādhikarana, or Sāmānyaśrutikalpanādhikarana. The first two and the last two sūtras are the most important. Certain practices<sup>1648</sup> like the Holākā (spring) festival are observed by the easterners, certain others like Āhninaibuka (worship of growing Karañja or Arka or other trees as handed down in one's family) by the southerners, and the Udvrsabhayañña (honouring oxen on the Full Moon of Jyestha and making them run a race) by the northerners. The question is whether, in making an inference about these practices being based on Veda, one was to suppose that the inferred Vedic text also should be restricted to the easterners and the like<sup>1649</sup>. The pūrvapaksa view is that the śruti to be inferred as the basis of the respective practices must be deemed to be restricted to certain persons only (such as the easterners i. e. prācīyas &c.). The established conclusion is that such practices must be deemed to be meant for all, since the general rule about vedic injunctions is that they are applicable to all. The performer specially meant by each Vedic injunction is known in either of three ways,<sup>1650</sup> viz. by capability, by non-prohibition and by the employment of a special epithet or attribute. When it is said 'svargakāmo yajeta' then only the three twice-born classes are meant, for, they alone are capable of tending the sacred fires and of possessing Vedic learning and a śūdra is not a fit person to whom that injunction can apply. Those who are guilty of grave sins (patita) and the impotent are prohibited from performing Vedic rites. When the Veda says 'ājā rājasūyena yajeta' there is a special attribute of the performer (viz. being a ksatriya) prescribed by the śruti and so no one else can perform Rājasūya. When none of these three exists a Vedic udhi is in general meant for all (sarvadharma). The practices of Holāka, Vrsabhayajña and the like should not be held to be restricted to certain countries or people only, but should be inferred to be applicable to all. When a man leaves the east and goes to the south, he may still perform the Holāka festival; while a man from the eastern country itself may not perform it at all. Further the words 'southern, eastern and northern' are relative. A country that is called southern may be to the north of another. Therefore Holāka and other practices are not invariably concomitant with particular countries or peoples. Nor can it be said that those practices require those particular countries for their performance in the way in which śruti expressly requires the Vaiśvadeva rite (one of the four cāturmāsya) to be performed on a spot that slopes towards the east. The Tantravārtika<sup>1651</sup> points out that persons receive appellations from names of countries on various grounds as being born in a country or as residing therein or as coming from that country or as going to that country. Medhātithi on Manu VIII. 46 says the same.

The Tantravārtika explains that the first two sūtras are meant to refer to another question also, viz. whether the rules of the grhyasūtras<sup>1652</sup> and of such dharmasūtra works as the sūtra of Gautama are authoritative only as to certain groups or are meant to be authoritative for all. He begins by saying that the Purāṇas, the Manusmṛti and Itihāsa (i. e. the Mahābhārata) are equally authoritative for all people and then points out that the Gobhila-grhya and Gautama-dharmasūtra are traditionally accepted by the students of the Sāmaveda, that the dharmasūtra of Vasistha is accepted by the students of the R̥gveda, the sūtra of Śāṅkha-Likhita by the followers of the white Yajurveda and the sūtras of Āpastamba and Baudhāyana by the followers of the Taittirīya Śākhā. The Śāstradīpikā explains that an author who was a student of the Sāmaveda taught his own work to his pupils who also learned the Sāmaveda under him, that these pupils in their turn taught that work to others and in that way there arose a tradition among the students of the Sāmaveda to study the sūtra of Gautama. Therefore, to say even as to grhya works that they are restricted to particular groups of persons is not correct. Similarly in the case of practices there is no epithet or attribute that is common to all those who practise them or which distinguishes those who do not observe them from those that observe them and therefore it is not possible to restrict such practices as Holākā to particular countries or groups of people.

The requisites of valid customs as laid down by the eminent writers of the Pūrva-mīmāṃsā school may now be summarised. Such customs must be ancient, must not be opposed to the express texts of the Veda or of smṛti, must be such as to be regarded as obligatory by the sistas and must be observed by them with the consciousness that they are so, they must not have a seen or visible purpose, and they must not be immoral<sup>1653</sup>. It has to be remembered that the pūrvamīmāṃsā writers did not lay down anything about the binding character of usages that were peculiarly secular but restricted their remarks to customs and usages that had more or less an unseen or spiritual purpose. Khandadeva emphasizes this by stating 'only those customs can be deemed to be based on the Veda that are not opposed to the Veda and smṛtis and that are observed by respectable people under the belief that thereby they are carrying what dharma dictates'<sup>1654</sup>. Medhātithi on Manu<sup>1655</sup> II 18 makes this position quite clear after quoting a verse of Kumārila 'a smṛti that is opposed to the Veda or is self-contradictory, or has a visible secular purpose or expressly states a motive (for observing its precepts) cannot be deemed to be based on the Veda'. The Mīmāṃsā-kaustubha (p. 51 on Jai. I 3. 7) quotes a verse to the effect that 'only those whose ancestors also observed certain usages handed down from generation to generation would not incur blame by observing them (if they are opposed to śruti or smṛti), but not others (who

The words या चैषा सम्भवश्रुति appear to mean 'that smṛti which declares its promulgation (by a sage) is not to be deemed to be based on Veda (since otherwise Veda will be held to be not smṛtya).

CHAPTER XXXIII

CUSTOMS AND DHARMAŚĀSTRA WORKS

It is now necessary to see how Dharmaśāstra works have dealt with the authority and binding force of customs and usages. Sadācāra is defined by Hārta as follows<sup>1657</sup> :— the word 'sat' means 'good' and the good are those who are free from (moral) taint; the practices of such people are called sadācāra. Vide Manu II. 18, which also defines sadācāra. Even the most ancient sūtras testify to the fact that numerous customs and usages had arisen in different countries and villages. The Āśv. gr. (I. 7. 1-2) says,<sup>1658</sup> 'various indeed are the observances of (different) countries and villages; one should follow those in marriages; what, however, is common (to all or most) shall be declared by us'. The Āp. gr. (II. 15) declares, 'people should understand from women what procedure is to be observed (according to custom)' and the Āp. Dh. S. provides (I. 7. 20. 8 = II. 11. 29. 14) that one<sup>1659</sup> should regulate one's course of action (in difficult or doubtful matters) according to the conduct which is unanimously approved of in all countries by the Āryas (men of the three higher castes), who have been properly disciplined, who are aged, who have restrained their senses and who are neither covetous nor hypocritical and concludes with the aphorism (II. 11. 29. 15) 'some teachers hold that the rest of the dharmas (not set out in this work) may be understood from women and from men of all castes'. Baud. Dh. S.<sup>1660</sup> (I. 5. 13) states (on the subject of śrāddha) 'the usages of people should be followed as to other rites to be performed'. Several grhyasūtras (like Pāraskara II. 17, Mānava gr.I. 4. 6) refer to the practices of people that should be followed in such matters as commencing agricultural operations, holidays &c. It is needless to set out these in detail here. Manu<sup>1661</sup> IV. 178 pronounces the general prescription for all men, 'one should walk in the path of good men which their fathers and grandfathers trod; by so doing one will come to no harm' For ordinary men this procedure is easy to understand and to follow This dictum sets a premium on the attitude of no change in any matter for fear that change may lead to some unexpected harm and has been throughout the ages up to the present the motto of most people in India. As ācāra or sadācāra is tangible and requires no effort to decide between conflicting views, we find eulogies of it in the earliest smṛtis and purāṇas. Vide Manu IV. 155-158, Vas. VI. 6-8 (the first and last of which are the same as Manu IV. 157-158), Anuśāsanaparva 104. 6-9, Viṣṇu Dh. S 71. 90-92 (which are almost the same as Manu IV. 155, 156, 158), Mārkaṇḍeya chap 34, Brahmapurāṇa 121. 6-9, Viṣṇu-purāṇa III chapters 11-12, Kūrmapurāṇa (uttarārdha, chap 15).

The general rule about the binding character of customs is set out as follows Gaut (XI. 20) observes,<sup>1662</sup> 'the *dharma*s (customs) of countries, castes and families, which are not opposed to the Vedic scriptures, are authoritative and binding' Gaut provides in the next two sūtras that cultivators, traders, herdsmen, money-lenders and artisans can lay down conventions or usages that would be binding on the respective classes, that when a dispute arises as to these usages the king should learn affairs from those who wield authority over those classes and decide the dispute accordingly Vas 1.17 states, 'Manu has declared that the (peculiar) customs of countries, castes and families may be followed in the absence of rules propounded by the Veda', and in XIX. 7 prescribes that the king should enforce these among the four varnas Āp. Dh. S. II. 6. 15. 1 appears to lay down that the customs of countries and families (if not opposed to Veda) are authoritative and are to be followed in the respective countries or families. But this view seems to be unacceptable to Baudh Dh. S. (I. 1. 19-26) which says, <sup>1663</sup> 'there is difference of opinion regarding five (practices) in the South as well as in the North. We shall explain those peculiar to the south. They are: to eat in the company of (in the same plate with) one whose upanayana is not performed, to eat in the company of one's wife, to partake of stale food, to marry the daughter of a maternal uncle or of a paternal aunt. Now (the customs peculiar) to the north are: to sell wool, to drink rum, to deal in the sale of animals with an upper and a lower row of teeth, to follow the profession of arms and to travel by sea. He who follows (these practices) in any other country than where they are generally in vogue commits sin. For, in respect of these customs the authoritativeness must be restricted to the respective countries. Gautama declares that this is false. And one should not approve of (accept) either (of the two sets of practices), because they are opposed to the tradition of sistas (or opposed to the smṛtis and the views of śiṣṭas)'. The Tantravārtika <sup>1664</sup> (p. 211) mentions the argument of some concerning these passages of Āp. and Baudh viz. that Āpastamba's very general statement that practices of countries and families are authoritative in the respective countries cannot be accepted as valid, as it is opposed to the views of Gaut. (XI. 20), as Baud. expressly states that certain practices though prevalent in certain localities cannot be accepted as valid and binding even in those localities because they are opposed to the express words of such authoritative and highly venerated smrtis (as those of Manu) Manu in several places provides for the enforceability of customs and usages. In Manu VII. 203 it is said, 'the conqueror should hold as authoritative and binding the lawful customs of the conquered country, just as they are stated to be' and in Manu VIII. 41 and 46<sup>1665</sup> it is provided, 'A king who knows dharma (sacred law) should carefully inquire into the customs of castes, of countries, of guilds and of families and settle (or enforce) the customs peculiar to each. Whatever may have been practised by the good and by twice-born men devoted to dharma, that shall be established (by the king) as the law, provided it be not opposed to the (customs of) countries, families and castes'. Medhātithi adds that the king has to see whether the customs of countries, families, castes and guilds are directly in conflict with the Veda or are harmful to others or utterly immoral (such as marrying one's mother) and only those that are found not to be so are to be enforced by the king and he<sup>1666</sup> adds on Manu II. 6 that the practices of sistas (persons who are well conducted, free from greed and learned in the Veda) on matters on which the Veda and smṛti are silent and which they observe with the consciousness that they (practices) are right (dharma) should be deemed to be based on Veda. He offers certain illustrations of such practices and also relies<sup>1667</sup> upon the words of the Mahābhārata (Vanaparva 313. 117), 'what is true dharma is concealed as in a dark cave; the (only) path is to follow great men'. In I. 118 Mann declares that the ancient (or long enduring) laws (or customs) of countries, castes, families and the rules among heretics and companies (of traders and the like) have been dealt with by him in the śāstra (Institutes). Yāj. I. 343 provides that when a conqueror reduces a country to subjection he should preserve intact whatever customs, laws and judicial procedure, and family usages are handed down from generation to generation therein (provided they are not opposed to śāstras and, as the Mit. says, he should not cause confusion by imposing the usages of his own country on the conquered country). Yāj. II. 192 (like Manu and Gaut.) provides that the varying usages and conventions of śrenis (guilds of artisans), naigamas (traders), heretics and associations (of soldiers and the like) should be respected by the king in the same way as he honours the usages of learned brāhmanas. About the latter Yāj. II. 186 says that the king should sedulously enforce the conventions of learned brāhmanas which are not opposed to the dictates of the Veda and smṛti (such as about pastures, water-courses and wells and the preservation of temples) and he should also enforce his edicts that are not opposed to Veda and smṛti (such as making provision for travellers and prohibiting the sale of horses to an enemy &c.). Kautilya prescribes<sup>1668</sup> that the king should follow as regards inheritance and partition the customs that are in vogue in a country, a caste, a saṅgha (company or guild) or a village. Devala<sup>1669</sup> and Brhatparāśara (X. p. 281) have a verse very similar to Yāj. I. 343. The Mahābhārata remarks that there is no custom or practice that can be said to be beneficial to all alike<sup>1670</sup>. From this it follows that variations in practices were to be tolerated by the king. Bṛhaspati<sup>1671</sup> advises the king to keep intact the customs of countries, castes and families that have been long in vogue in them and states that otherwise the subjects become irritated and disaffected and there is loss of wealth and army. He gives certain striking illustrations of peculiar practices: 'members of the twice-born classes in the southern countries take in marriage their maternal uncle's daughter; in the middle country (the country between the Himālaya and the Vindhya lying to the west of Prayāga and to the east of Vinasana where the Sarasvatī disappears, as said by Manu II. 21) artisans and menial workers eat the flesh of a cow; in the eastern countries people (all including brāhmanas) eat fish and women are given to adultery; in the north women drink liquor and contact with them even in their monthly illness is allowed; the people of the Khakha country take as wives the widows of their own brothers; these several people are not liable to undergo punishment or penance because of their doing these things in the respective countries'. Medieval writers differed about the meaning of the last half verse. The Madanaratna said (acc. to V. P. p. 22) that there is neither punishment nor prāyaścitta when the above practices which are opposed to smṛti texts are indulged in by the inhabitants of the countries specified, while the V. P. p. 22 holds that there is only absence of punishment at the king's hands for these people in those countries, but they are still liable to undergo prāyaścitta and that if these practices are followed in other countries both punishment and prāyaścitta have to be undergone

Kāt.<sup>1672</sup> defines what is meant by the customs of countries and families and states how and when they are to be enforced: 'That is said to be the custom of a country, which is in vogue in a country, is of long standing and is not opposed to the Veda and Smṛti. That is called family custom which has come down hereditarily in a family as right conduct (dharma) to be observed (by members of that family); the king should preserve it as it is.' In disputes between the residents of the same country or capital, hamlet of cowherds, town or village the decision should be based on their own conventional usages, but in disputes between inhabitants of these and others the decision must be in accordance with the sacred texts. Therefore the king should decide the causes of people according to the rules of śāstra: but in the absence of texts he should carry out (the administration of justice) according to the usage of the country. Whatever conventions are settled in accordance with the consent of (the people of a) country should always be preserved in writing sealed with the royal seal. Such conventions should be sedulously upheld as if they were the dictates of śāstra and the king should decide (disputes) after carefully considering them.' Here Kāt is principally concerned with the decision of legal disputes on the basis of the customs of countries and families, but his rules also have a general application. He also states that in the case of the conflict of laws by which the parties are governed śāstra prevails. Pīṭamāha<sup>1673</sup> has a similar verse about the usages of towns, villages and guilds and mentions that Br held the same view. Manu also (VIII. 3) requires the king to decide the disputes of people according to principles drawn from local customs (deśadr̥ṣṭa hetu) and from the Institutes of law (śāstradr̥ṣṭa). Medhātithi (on Manu VIII. 3) gives some interesting illustrations of local customs; viz in certain southern localities a sonless widow cupies a square low table in the hall of justice, when she is ruck with dice by the judicial officers and then she gets her husband's property (this is a reminiscence of Nirukta III. 5 explaining Rg. I. 25. 7), in the north there is a custom that ten certain persons come on behalf of a bridegroom seeking a virgin in marriage and they are fed at the house of the girl's father then it is implied that there is a promise to give that girl in marriage to that particular bridegroom. These two customs are not opposed to any śruti or smṛti (and even the P. p. 10 refers to the second as prevalent in the north and adhyadesa). But Medhātithi mentions other local usages that are opposed to smṛti e.g. grain is lent in spring and in the autumn of the same year double of it is taken. This is opposed to the rules of smṛti laying down rates of interest.

Very difficult questions arise in regard to the relative force of śruti, smṛti and sadācāra and numerous rules have been laid down in cases of apparent and real conflicts among them. As Manu II. 6, Vas. I. 4-5 and Yāj. I. 7 mention the sources of dharma to be śruti, smṛti and sadācāra in that order, the Mītākaraṇa remarks<sup>1674</sup> that 'in case of conflict, each preceding one of these three has more force (or binding character) than each succeeding one.' Śruti or Veda is recognised by all smṛti writers as the highest or supreme authority for those who desire to know what dharma<sup>1675</sup> is (vide Manu II. 13 and Yāj. I. 40). If two Vedic texts of equal authority are in conflict, then Gaut<sup>1676</sup> I. 5, Manu II. 14 and Jābāli declare that there is an option. For example, there are two Vedic texts 'he takes the sodaśin cup in the Atirātra sacrifice' and 'he does not take the sodaśin cup in the Atirātra'. In this case there is an option. Similarly Vedic texts say that the daily Vedic agnihotra may be performed after sunrise, or before sunrise or when neither the sun nor stars are visible. Therefore there is an option, viz. the daily agnihotra offering may be made at any one of the three times specified (Manu II. 15). But a Vedic text which is in apparent conflict with another is not always of equal force with that other. In such a case there is no option, and various rules are laid down in the Pūrvamīmāṃsā some important ones among which will be discussed at length in the section on Pūrvamīmāṃsā. Such texts may be explained by holding that one lays down a general rule (sāmānya), while the other lays down a special rule (viśeṣa) or an exception, or that one is a udhā and the other merely an mithuvāda or that the two texts have different scopes or refer to different ages &c. All these rules about the interpretation of Vedic texts have been held to apply to smṛti passages. For example, Manu VIII. 381 is a general rule absolutely prohibiting the killing of a brāhmana. While Manu VIII. 350 allowing the killing of a brāhmana in self-defence is a special rule or may be regarded as a mere arthavāda (viz. even a guru who is really not to be killed on any account may be killed when he is an ātatāyin, what of others, as the Mit. on Yāj II. 21 explains). Similarly Manu VIII. 351 saying that there is no fault (i.e. no sin, no punishment and no prāyościtta) in slaying an ātatāyin has restricted scope as applying only to an ātatāyin who is not a brāhmana. A few more examples will be given immediately below.

In cases of conflict between śruti and smṛti, the rules laid down by the Pūrvamīmāṃsā have already been explained (pp 832-34) Jaimini VI. 1. 13-14 and Śābara furnish an example. If, relying on Manu VIII. 416, the pūrvapakṣa were to argue that women own no wealth and so should not engage in a vedic sacrifice then as that smṛti so interpreted is opposed to the Veda it may be discarded by women<sup>1677</sup>. Smṛtis also lay down certain general rules on that point. Laugākṣi<sup>1678</sup> and Jābala lay down that in case of contradiction between śruti and smṛti, the former has greater force and that if there is no contradiction then what is laid down in the smṛti should be observed as if it were laid down by the Veda. The Mit. on Yāj III. 46 admits that a proposition of the Veda cannot be set aside (būdhata) by even a special proposition in a smṛti text. But in spite of the general proposition commentators like Viśvarūpa, Medhātithi and Vijñānesvara had to admit that what was laid down by śruti texts was set aside or contradicted or abandoned by smṛti texts or by popular sentiment. After the Udayaniyā (concluding isth) in the Agnistoma sacrifice was finished, a rite was prescribed by Vedic texts in which a barren cow (called Anūbandhyā) was sacrificed for Mitra and Varuna. But later on this was condemned and in lieu of a cow āmiksā (mixture of heated milk and curds) was substituted. Vide H. D. II pp 1200-1201 for the anūbandhyā cow and p. 628 n 1198 above for the verse quoted by the Mit. on Yāj. II. 117 condemning cow sacrifice in Kaliyuga. Yāj. III. 234 puts govadhā (slaughter of a cow) at the head of upapātakas. Medhātithi on Manu IV. 176 after stating that even such acts as donating all one's property in the Viśvajit sacrifice or killing a cow should not be done (though sanctioned by the Veda) remarks that he gives that explanation following his predecessors' views but that to him it appears that an express śruti text cannot be set aside by a smṛti passage<sup>1679</sup>. Viśvarūpa also (on pp. 25-26) after adverting to the fact that Yāj. III. 234 places govadhā at the head of Upapātakas remarks that this may apply to the killing of cows spoken of in smṛtis such as at the time of samāvartana (vide Manu III. 3) and that the rule must be upheld that a smṛti that is in conflict with an express text of the Veda is to be set aside. Sometimes even a smṛti text though theoretically weaker than śruti was allowed to prevail over a śruti. For example, the Veda prescribes the filling of the cups of wine in Sautrāmanī isti, but this is one of the matters prohibited in Kali<sup>1680</sup> (vide chapter on Kalivarjyas below).

The general rule is that when a custom or usage is opposed to the text of the Veda the latter must prevail. So early a writer as Āpastamba states this rule emphatically in several places. In Āp. Dh. S. I. 1. 4. 8 it is stated<sup>1681</sup>: 'For, an explicit śruti text has greater force than ācāra (usage) from which a śruti text (on which it may be supposed to be based) may be inferred.' In I. 11. 30. 8-9 Āp Dh. S. says, 'during the morning and evening twilights a snātaka should be seated outside the village and should restrain his speech (should not speak about worldly matters); but (an agnihotrin must not go out for) what is enjoined by śruti is of more force in case of conflict of duties'. Similarly in Āp. II 9. 23. 8-9, 'It is the settled view of those who are deeply learned in the three Vedas that they are (highest) authority. They consider that the rites which are there prescribed for performance with rice, yava, animals, clarified butter, milk, potsherds (in conjunction) with the wife and accompanied by loudly or inaudibly recited (mantras) must be performed and that a usage opposed to these rites is without authority'. In spite of this and the doctrine of the Pūrvamīmāṃsā stated above (p. 843) usages sprang up that were opposed to or gave the go-by to the prescriptions of the Veda as will appear a little below and particularly in the section on Kalivarjya

The conflict of smrtis among themselves presents much greater difficulties. From very ancient times authors of smrtis differed greatly among themselves. A few striking examples may be cited. Āp. Dh. S. (I. 6. 19 2-12) cites the views of ten predecessors on the question of the persons whose food may be partaken of by a brāhmaṇa (ka āśyāmah). The difference between Gautama and Baudhāyana on the one hand and Āp. on the other on the question of the validity of certain usages in certain localities has already been referred to (p. 858). In III 16 Manu mentions three views (and four sages) on the question of the position of a brāhmaṇa who marries a śūdra wife or has a son or a child from her. Baud. Dh. S. I. 8 2, Manu III. 13, Viṣṇu Dh. S. 24. 1-4, Pār. Gr. I. 4, Vas. I. 25 show that brāhmaṇas were allowed to have śūdra women as wives. But Yāj. I. 56 emphatically dissents from this by stating 'this is not my view'. In this state of affairs the medieval digests and commentators were hard put to it to evolve rules of interpretation. One rule early evolved was that when two smṛti texts were in conflict, 'reasoning based on the practices of elders (śiṣtas) was of greater force' (Yāj. II. 21)<sup>1682</sup>. The Mit explains that ratiocinn-tion may take the form of holding that one text lays down a general rule and the other lays down a special rule (which prevails over a general rule), or the text may be held to relate to different sets of circumstances or in the last resort it may be held that there is an option, but in arriving at these conclusions the practice of the old or of śīstas who follow the rule in one text and discard or avoid the rule in the other text is the guide<sup>1683</sup>. Br.<sup>1684</sup> gives the following warning to those who do not take reasoning into consideration: 'The decision (in a cause) should not be given by merely relying on śāstras, for in the case of a decision devoid of reasoning loss of dharma results'. Nār. (I. 40) provides in a strain similar to the Mit, 'when there is conflict between two texts of dharmaśāstra, it is declared that the method to adopt is to resort to reasoning, for the practices (of śīstas) are of great force and the strict letter of the law is overruled by them (or properly understood through them)'. These provisions remind us of the working of the principle of equitas applied by the praetors in Rome to the rigid older legislation or the influence of Equity in English Law. When is stronger (he approves of this), (3) in case of conflict nyāya is stronger than

II 21 was translated (at p 252) as follows. 'if two texts be opposed usage is of force for their construction'. In Chunilal v Surajram 33 Bom. 433 at p. 439 Yāj. II 21 is rendered as 'where there is a conflict between two or more smṛtis that one should be accepted, which is conformable to equity'. The former rendering is rather obscure and the latter does not translate Yāj. closely. The exact meaning of 'equity' in this translation is not clear. It certainly does not mean 'equity' in the strict sense of English Law.

old rules become too narrow or are deemed to be not in harmony with the views of a changing or progressive society, it was thought to be the privilege of the king or the judge to adopt his practice to the existing state of society and not to decide a case by a too strict adherence to ancient dicta.

Another rule that was laid down was that in case of conflict between dharmaśāstra and arthaśāstra, the former is of more weight or authority or that one should discard the rule in the arthaśāstra<sup>1685</sup> (Ap. Dh. S. I. 9 24. 23; Yāj. II. 21; Nār. I. 39; Kāt. 20) Vide pp. 8-9 above for an explanation of this rule. The rule of the arthaśāstra has the accomplishment of a visible or worldly purpose as the goal, while the dharmaśāstra rule has as its purpose the securing of unseen or spiritual results. Therefore the latter from a spiritual or ethical point of view is superior to the former.

Several other methods of resolving conflicts between smrtis may be mentioned here. Br.<sup>1686</sup> states: 'Manusmṛti occupies a pre-eminent position because it puts together the purport of the Vedas; that smṛti which is in conflict with the purport of Manu is not commended'. Angīras also states that to follow the words (of another smṛti) disregarding the unrivalled dharmaśāstra of Manu would not be beneficial to a person. The Mit. on Yāj. III. 300 speaks of the Manusmṛti and others as the great smrtis (mahā-smṛti). Some writers<sup>1687</sup> quote the Vedic text 'whatever Manu said' is indeed medicine' in this connection, thereby identifying the author of the Manusmṛti with the Manu named in the Vedas. But this does not afford much help. Another principle evolved was that certain rules of conduct and certain smrtis were of special authority in certain cycles of time. = Brhat-Parāśara I. p. 55) himself says that the dharmas differ according to which of the four yugas is current, viz. tapas is the highest dharma in the Kṛta age, knowledge in Tretā, yajña in Dvāpara and only dāna in Kali. This verse only means that in a particular yuga the predominant or easily performed dharma is the one indicated but the verse does not mean that a dharma predominant in one yuga was prohibited in another. Parāśara I. 24<sup>1688</sup> (= Brhat-Parāśara I. p. 55) declares that in the Kṛta age the dharmas (to be observed) were those promulgated by Manu, in Tretā those of Gautama, in Dvāpara those of Śaṅkha-Likhita and in Kali those of Parāśara. This also did not solve all difficulties, since the medieval digests and commentaries found that even what was allowed by Parāśara came to be disapproved of or condemned by the people: Many prescriptions of the smṛtis were therefore included under Kalavarjya (acts forbidden in the Kali age) on the ground that action, though at one time prescribed or sanctioned by the śāstra, should not be resorted to, if it has become hateful to the people, since it would not lead to heaven<sup>1689</sup> (if persisted in). This was the dictum of Yāj. I. 156 (= Brhan-Nāradya-purāṇa 24. 12), Manu IV. 176, Viṣṇu Dh. S. (71. 84-85), the Viṣṇupurāṇa (III. 11. 7), Śukra III. 64, Bārhaspatya-sūtra (on Arthasāstra) V. 16. Vide p. 630 and n. 1202 above. These texts were relied upon for prohibiting certain acts (though done in former times) by the Mit. (on Yāj. II. 117, III. 18), V. P. (p. 442) and others. But these devices of interpretation also proved futile in certain cases. On the question of the periods of mourning due to death for ksatriyas and others the texts are so various and so conflicting that even the great Viṇṇāneśvara declares (on Yāj. III. 22) that he is not going to furnish any orderly presentation of the smṛti texts assigning to each its proper province, since it would be useless to do so in view of the fact that the usage of śiṣtas did not agree with most of them<sup>1690</sup>. Viśvarūpa also (on Yāj. III. 30) is in the same predicament. The commentators (such as Mādhava in Par. M. on I. 1, p. 84) were aware that people would not go in for religious practices that called for great effort and would seek for such rules as would be easy of observance <sup>1691</sup>

In some cases it was provided that where there is a conflict among smrtis the view of the majority should prevail. Gobhila-smṛti (III 148-149) provides <sup>1692</sup> that where there is a conflict among passages (of smrtis), authoritativeness rests with that view which is supported by a majority of the texts, but where two passages are of equal authority then reasoning has to be employed. The assumption or axiom was, according to Medhātithi <sup>1693</sup> (on Manu II. 29 and XI 216), Mit (on III 325), Sm C. (I. p. 5), Aparārka p. 1053, Madanapārijāta (pp. 11, 91) and others that all smrtis form one śāstra, that if some smṛti texts on the same subject are in conflict there is an option and when there is no conflict all rules from all smrtis should be held applicable to the subject matter; this was based on the analogy of the maxim called 'sarva-śākhāpratyayanyāya' or 'śākhāntarādhikarāṇa' (vide Jai. II. 4, 9 and Śābara thereon)

It is further provided that works of heretical sects were to be left out of consideration. Manu calls them smrtis, but they are outside the pale of Vedic orthodoxy. Manu (XII 95) declared, <sup>1694</sup> 'the smrtis that are outside the (pale of) Veda and all false or fallacious doctrines are of no avail after death, because they are all based on ignorance'. In the Vedāntasūtra (II. 1. 1) also the word smṛti is applied to the works on the Sāṅkhya philosophy. The Tantravārtika (p. 195) says that the Bauddhas and other heretical sects do not admit that their doctrines are based on the Veda, like a bad son hating his parents; the prescriptions contained in their works are opposed to all the 14 vidyās except in the case of a few sentences laying down restraint of senses, charity and the like; they were promulgated by persons like the Buddha who had given up the path of the Veda and did acts contrary to the Veda and they were propounded to persons that were beyond the pale of the three Vedas and that mostly were śūdras and persons outside the system of the four varṇas and āśramas. Medhātithi on Manu II. 6 adopts this and remarks<sup>1695</sup> that the Śākyas, Bhojakas and Kṣapanakas do not admit the Veda as authoritative, they openly declare the Veda to be unauthoritative and they teach doctrines directly opposed to the Veda. The Caturvīṃśatīmata<sup>1696</sup> states that the words of Arhat (Jina), of Cārvāka and of Bauddhas, should be abandoned as they lead to delusion.

Then comes the question of the conflict between smṛtis and purāṇas. It has been shown in the H. of Dh., vol. I pp. 160-167, how the Purāṇas are rich in Dharmaśāstra material. The sūtras and early smṛtis do not look upon the Purāṇas as a source of dharma, though Gaut. XI. 19 and Yāj. I. 3 mention Purāṇa as one of the classes of works on which the king or any one else may draw for knowledge of dharma and though the Āp. Dh. S. quotes from a Purāṇa in I. 6. 19. 13, I. 10. 29. 8 and II. 9. 23. 3 and names a Bhaviṣyatpurāṇa in II. 9. 24. 6. It is to be noted that the views quoted by Āp. from the Purāṇas in the first three passages are opposed to the views of the Kalivarjya section alleged to be taken from the Ādityapurāṇa in medieval digests. The passage of the Tantravārtika stating that Purāṇas, Manuśmṛti and Itihāsa are universally accepted throughout India has been already quoted (on p. 853). When Manu states that smṛti is a source of dharma he does not obviously comprehend Purāṇas under smṛti as Manu II. 10 clearly shows (dharmaśāstram tu vai smṛtiḥ). Manu III. 232 and Yāj. III. 189 employ the plural 'Purāṇāni' and so those smṛtis obviously knew several Purāṇas and Medhātithi notes that they were composed by Vyāsa and described the creation of the world &c. The Strīparva (13. 2) also employs the plural and the Svargā-rohanikaparva (5. 46-47) speaks of Kṛṣṇa Dvaipāyana as the author of 18 Purāṇas. The Ādīparva<sup>1697</sup> (1. 293-94) prescribes that one should strengthen the Veda by (the study of) the Itihāsa and Purāṇa and that the Veda fears the man whose knowledge is insignificant 'this man will harm me'. According to the Bhāgavata-purāṇa I 4. 25 the purpose<sup>1698</sup> of the composition of the Mahābhārata was this that as the Veda cannot be learnt by women, śūdras and brāhmanas who are so only by birth (and do not study) the sage Vyāsa took compassion on them and composed the Mahābhārata for their benefit. The same must be deemed to be the purpose of the composition of the purāṇas. The Dakṣasmṛti II. 69 prescribes<sup>1699</sup> the recitation of itihāsa and purāṇa in the 6th and 7th parts of the day (divided into 8 parts). The Auśanasa smṛti (III. p. 515, Jīvananda) prescribes the study of the Veda in the bright half of the months from Māgha after utsarjana and the study of the Vedāṅgas and of Purāṇa in the dark half. It appears that some at least of the extant Purāṇas were composed in the first centuries of the Christian era and that from early times they contained dharmaśāstra material. In another section the paurāṇadharma will be separately dealt with hereafter. Gradually the Purāṇas became very popular in the course of centuries, some of the original rites prescribed by the Veda and the early smṛtis went out of vogue and new modes of worship and rites provided by the Purāṇas came into general observance. The Vedavyāsa smṛti<sup>1700</sup> (I. 4) and the Sangraha state that in case of conflict between smṛti and purāṇa smṛti is to be preferred. Aparārka (p. 9) quotes<sup>1701</sup> a smṛti text, 'that is highest dharma which is understood from the Veda, that is to be known as inferior dharma that is declared in the Purāṇas and the like'. Aparārka (p. 15) further tells us that<sup>1702</sup> according to the Bhaviṣyatpurāṇa the purāṇas are of authority in declaring dharma that is vyāmśra (i. e. mixed up and not purely Vedic). Medieval writers were often divided as to the authoritativeness of purāṇas. Mitramiśra (in his commentary<sup>1703</sup> on Yāj. II. 21) asserts that dharmaśāstra (viz. smṛti) is not more authoritative than purāṇa and that in case of conflict between a smṛti text and a purāṇa text recourse must be had to reasoning as in the case of conflict between two smṛtis. On the other hand, the V. Mayūkha,<sup>1704</sup> after quoting Manu IX. 126 and Devala about the first born among twins being regarded as the oldest and after referring to a half verse from the Bhāgavatapurāṇa (rather from the commentary of Śrīdhara thereon) which holds that among twins the one born later is to be deemed as the elder, remarks that the Purāṇa passage is to be set aside in favour of the smṛti passages and that in the purāṇas usages opposed to the smṛtis are very frequently met with. It further says that this view is preferable to that of some others according to whom in this matter the custom of the country should be followed. The Nirnayasindhu (III. p. 251) also says the same. The respect for the purāṇas carried away late medieval writers so far that relying on some prophetic passages in the purāṇas about the disappearance of four varṇas in the Kali age and the subsistence of only brāhmanas and sūdras therein, they denied the existence of ksatriyas and vaiśyas in the Kali age, in spite of the fact that all smṛtis (like Manu, Yāj, Parāśara) and many commentaries (including the Mitākṣarā) hold that the four varṇas exist in the Kali age

The case of conflict between smṛti and customs has now to be considered. The general rule deduced from Vas. I. 5, Yāj. I. 7 and supported by the Mit. (on Yāj. I. 7 and II. 117), the Sm. C. (II p. 266), Kullūka (on Manu. II 10) and several others is that smṛti is of superior authority to the usages of the śiṣtas. But from early times there have been dissenting voices. Viśvarūpa on Yāj. III. 250 states that that purport of the smṛtis is to be followed which is in accordance with the settled practice of the śiṣtas resident in Āryāvarta<sup>1705</sup>. On Manu IV. 176 Medhātithi points out that niyoga is permitted by such smṛtis<sup>1706</sup> as Gaut. 18.4-14, Yāj. I. 68-69, Vas 17. 56-65, but being condemned by the people it is not practised. Therefore the principle that may be deduced from these is that the prescriptions of smṛtis (and even of śruti) need not be observed and should not be observed when they are vehemently condemned by the people. The chapter on Kalivarjya will make this clear. Commentators like Medhātithi (on Manu II. 10) went so far as to say that Dharmasāstra is that which prescribes what is to be done for attaining dharma, that is smṛti from which dharma which one performs as a duty is understood and therefore śiṣṭācāra<sup>1707</sup> also is smṛti. The smṛtis themselves embodied the practices of the people current in their days, as Manu I. 107 declares, 'in this work dharma has been fully stated as well as the good and evil qualities of (human) actions and the ancient customs and usages of the four varnas.'<sup>1708</sup> Manu adds (I. 108), 'ācāra (customs and usages) are transcendental law, and so are the practices declared in the Veda and the smṛti; therefore a twice-born person desirous of his own welfare should always make efforts to follow it'.<sup>1709</sup> This has been the basic text in modern decisions that recognize the binding nature of customs. It is therefore necessary to understand the exact meaning of this verse. Two constructions are possible; (1) that the word ācāra is qualified by the words 'śrutyukta' and 'smārta' and that the first half declares that usages declared in the Veda or smṛti are transcendental law (this is the meaning given by most commentators of Manu); (2) that ācāra by itself and other rules of conduct declared in the śruti or smṛti are transcendental (i. e. here in the first half of the verse there is a reference to three kinds of ācāras, as Govindarāja and Nandana explain). If we look to the preceding verse and the following verses (that eulogise ācāra) the 2nd construction looks more natural and has been accepted by the decided cases when<sup>1710</sup> they lay down that 'immemorial usage is transcendental law' (Sir William Jones' translation of Manu I. 108) and that "under the Hindu system of law clear proof of usage will outweigh the written text of the law". The Anuśāsana (141. 65) and Śānti 354. 6 expressly state that dharma is threefold viz. that declared in the Veda, that declared in the smṛtis and the third is what is practised by śiṣṭas. Sumantu<sup>1711</sup> emphatically declares that family usage should be preferred to the prescriptions of śāstra. The Kūrmapurāṇa<sup>1712</sup> (Uttarārdha 15. 19) appears to support the 2nd interpretation when it says, 'one should observe that ācāra which is declared by the śruti and smṛti and which is rightly followed by the good'. The exact import of the word ācāra (or sādācāra) has been shifting from age to age and among commentators. In the earliest days, as shown by the Tai. Up., Gaut. (28. 48, 51), Baud Dh. S. I. 1. 4-9, Manu XII 108-109,

Vas. I. 6, the ācāra to be followed was that observed or declared by learned brāhmanas who were highly moral and selfless (the śīstas) Madhātīthi on Mann II. 6 states that binding ācāra is that of śīstas learned in the Vedas. Gradually every usage that had no visible secular purpose came to be looked upon as binding and lastly the usages of sūdras, of pratiloma castes and even of heterodox sects became, as will be shown in the sequel, enforceable by the king. As observed in 39 Mad. 298, 301 the commentaries indicate an attempt to reconcile the text law with the actual usages of the people.

The requisites of valid customs, according to the smṛtis and commentaries and digests, are similar to those laid down by the writers on Pūrvamīmāṃsā i. e. they must be ancient, must not be opposed to śruti and smṛti, must be such that they are regarded by respectable people as obligatory on them and such as are observed with that consciousness by the śīstas, they must be strictly construed and cannot be availed of by others not within their purview and must not be immoral or severely condemned by popular sentiment. Customs once in vogue may be abandoned by the people as the chapter on Kalivarjya will show.

From Gaut., Manu, Br., Kāt and other writers quoted above it follows that the customs and usages of which account has to be taken are those of districts (deśa or janapada), towns and villages, castes, families, guilds or corporations or groups (gana, śrenī, sangha, naigama, varga). A few words on each of these and on usages of gotras and śākhās will be said later on and a few illustrations of each will be given. But first of all certain preliminary observations have to be made about customs in general. The medieval writers on Dharmasāstra make it clear that customs that depart from the generally received smṛti prescriptions must be strictly construed and that they cannot be extended on the ground of analogy to other matters outside the specific acknowledged customs. For example, both the Sm. C. (I. 71) and the Smṛtimuktāphala<sup>1713</sup> (on Varnaśrama p. 31) say that, though one's maternal uncle's daughter can be married (by custom) yet one's mother's sister or mother's sister's daughter cannot be married, because popular sentiment is opposed to the latter kind of marriages and popular sentiment has to be respected as Manu declares (in IV. 176). Similarly the Saṁskāra-kaustubha<sup>1714</sup> and the Dharmasindhu provide that where there is a local or family usage for narrowing down the limits of sapinda relationship in marriage, only those who belong to that locality or family can avail themselves of such narrowing down, but if a person in a different locality or belonging to a different family were to follow the practice of narrowing down the sapinda relationship, he would incur blame. Owing to the vastness of Bharatavarsa it was recognised that what was sadācāra in one country would not be so in another, as is noted by the Par. M. (I 2. p. 65) in relation to marriage with one's maternal uncle's daughter.<sup>1715</sup>

A few words may now be said about customs of countries. That usages about details of ritual varied a great deal even in the Vedic times is quite clear. The Śat Br. (I 1. 4 13) notes that in former times it was the wife of the sacrificer that rose at the Haviskrt call, but that in its own day the wife or a priest (the Āgnidhra) rises in answer to the call. Vide H. of Dh. vol. II p. 1027 and n. 2311 on the Haviskrt call. For similar differences in practices vide the same Brāhmaṇa XII. 3, 5. 1 and XII. 6 1. 41. The Ait. Br. frequently refers to one view and refutes it by saying that one should not do so (tat tathā na kuryāt) or one should discard it (tat tat nādrīyam) e. g. vide chap. 12 7, 17. 1, 18. 8, 28 1, 29. 5. Vide also Tai. Br. I 1. 8, I 3. 1, III. 8 8 for similar words. That different districts had different customs about marriages and other matters even before the times of the grhyasūtras and dharmasūtras has been noted above (pp. 856-857) Baudhāyana made a distinction about the customs of the northern and southern people (countries). That customs of the northern and southern countries differed is emphasized by many commentators and writers of digests. For example, the Mit. on Yāj. I 256 refers to the differing views of dāksinātyas and udīcyas on Ekoddista-śrāddha. Śankarabhāṭṭa in the introductory verses of the Dvaitanīrṇaya (or Dharma-dvaita-) expressly states that he will furnish solutions of knotty points in Dharmaśāstra after abiding by the views of southern writers.<sup>1716</sup> The Nirṇayasindhu in its section on sāpindya speaks of Śūlapāṇi, Vācaspati and Śuddhiviveka as Gaudas and Maithilas, and points out that Śūlapāṇi in the Sambandha-viveka and the Sambandhatattva (a Gauda work) allow marriage with a girl separated by three gotras from the bridegroom, while the southern writers (dāksinātyas) do not accept the view. But in those days there were no rigid territorial boundaries for certain practices or doctrines. For example, Vijñāneśvara, Madana-ratna, Pārijāta, Vācaspati and Śūlapāṇi accepted the view that sāpindya arises from community of the particles of the body, while Aparārka, Smṛticandrikā and Mādhava (though they were southern writers like Vijñāneśvara) held that sāpindya was based on the offering of pinda in śrāddhas. The fashion of dividing Hindu works into schools and assigning them definite territorial limits started with Colebrooke and has been perpetuated by decisions of the Privy Council and of the Indian High courts. Vide Collector of Madura v. Mootoo 12 Mad. L.A. 397 at p 432 (for reference to Colebrooke), p 435 (as to how schools arose), pp. 436-437 (as to different schools) Strange results have flowed from this. The Vyavahāramayūkha, written by Nilakantha, whose family belonged to Paithan in Mahārāstra and migrated to Benares and who himself wrote under the patronage of a Bundella chief, came to be regarded as a work of the highest authority in Gujerat and North Konkan (even superseding the Mitaksarā), while in Mahārāstra proper its authority is subordinate to that of the Mitaksarā. The Mit. (on Yāj. II. 119) avers that in the section on the partition of heritage the texts generally repeat what is already current among the people<sup>1717</sup> and that if Yāj. II. 118-119 were interpreted to mean that the words 'what is acquired at the cost of paternal estate by a person himself' stand by themselves and do not qualify the other clauses, then what is acquired through friendship even at the cost of the paternal estate would not be liable to partition, which would be opposed to the practice among people. The Vyavahāra-mayūkha also<sup>1718</sup> says on Manu IX. 210 (about reunion) that the law and administration of justice are generally based as is the case with grammar on people's usages. The Viramītrodaya also states that all writers of digests are agreed that smṛtis on Vyavahāra generally re-iterate recognized popular usages.

Customs of countries and families have been specially recognized from very ancient times in the sphere of marriage. The Āśv. gr. (I. 7. 1-2) has been already cited above (p. 856). The commentators on Āśv. gr., Haradatta and Nārāyaṇa, both mention that in certain countries sexual intercourse is commenced immediately after marriage, that this practice is opposed to the rule in Āśv. gr. I. 1. 10 that the married couple should be celibate after marriage for at least three nights (if not for a longer period) and that one should follow the rule laid down in the grhyaśūtra and not the usage of the country. The Āp. gr. (II. 15) remarks,<sup>1719</sup> 'people should understand from women (and others) what procedure is (to be followed according to the custom of the country)' and the commentator Sudarsanācārya notes that certain rites like the worship of planets, aṅkurāropana and the tying of prahsara (a string or ribbon tied round the wrist) are usual and are performed with Vedic Mantras. The Kāthakagṛhya (25. 7) allows the usages of countries and families to be observed in marriage and the commentators mention some usages, viz. Devapāla refers to stating the purpose of the visit, announcing the name of the maiden, worship of family deity, striking with flowers and cressets. The com. Brāhmaṇabala states that in Kashmir at the time of marriage the mother-in-law or some other woman whose husband is alive ties an auspicious wreath on the heads of the bride and the bridegroom, that the mother-in-law places flowers on the feet, knees, shoulders and head of the bridegroom and on the same seven places of the bride's body flowers are placed but in the reverse order (i. e. first on the left limb and then on the right).

Haradatta on Gaut. XI. 20 (cited above in n 1862) mentions the following usages: in the Cola country while the sun is in the zodiacal sign of Aries maidens draw with powders of various colours on the ground an orb of the sun together with attendants and offer worship in the morning and evening; on the full moon day of Mārgaśīrṣa maidens putting on ornaments walk about in the village and offer to a temple idol whatever they get in their wanderings; when the sun is in the sign of the Crab, maidens worship the goddess Uṃā while the moon is in the constellation of the Pūrva Phalgunis and offer to the gods mudga beans that have put forth sprouts and salt; when the sun is in the sign of Pisces, house-holders worship the Goddess of wealth while the moon is in the constellation of Uttara Phalguni. Āp. Dh. S. II. 6. 13, 7 notes that in certain countries the special portions of the eldest son in paternal wealth are gold, dark-coloured cattle and black-coloured produce of the soil (i. e. black grain). Vide Br. and Tantravārtika quoted above (as to customs of certain countries).

Several such illustrations may be furnished from other writers, but considerations of space make it necessary to omit reference to them.

The Pār. gr. S. I. 8 states<sup>1720</sup> that the usages of villages may be followed, since a text says 'one should enter a village (i. e. follow the opinion of village elders) in case of marriage and funeral rites' and since the Veda says that 'the village is the authority in these two.'

Numerous caste customs have been recognized from ancient times to these days. Gaut. XI. 20, Vas I. 17, Manu I. 118, VIII. 41 and 46, Kaut. III. 7, Śukra IV. 5. 47 emphasize the validity of caste customs and call upon the king to enforce them. Yāj. I. 361 advises the king to punish those who swerve from the usages of their family, caste, guild, or group. Kātyāyana (40) enjoins<sup>1721</sup> that the king should not disregard the fixed usages even of pratiloma castes and of the inhabitants of inaccessible places (mountain forts or habitations), even if they be opposed (to the rules of smṛtis). In the Paribhāṣā-prakāśa Mitrāmīśra holds<sup>1722</sup> that the usages of good sūdras free from moral defects are binding on their sons and others even though they do not know the Veda.

Compared to Western Christian countries very great religious tolerance prevailed in ancient India. Vide H. of Dh. vol. II. pp 388 (n. 928 a), 723-724 for some remarks on this. Aśoka in his Pillar Edict VII (E. I. vol. II. p. 272) says that he looked after sanghas, brāhmanas, Ājivakas and all other sects (pāsanda). The Bhagavadgītā (IX. 23-25) proclaims that the devotees that worship other gods do worship Kṛṣṇa himself though in an irregular way and that those who offer worship to the Manes or to the elements reach the goals they desire. The Mānasollāsa enjoins<sup>1723</sup> that one should give up condemnation of or hatred towards other gods, that one should show reverence on seeing an image or a temple and should not pass it over (in contempt). People of different countries no doubt twitted each other on the customs and usages peculiar to each; but it rarely went beyond the bandying of words. For example, even such a philosophical work as the Jivanmuktiviveka remarks<sup>1724</sup> that brāhmanas of the south condemn even the learned brāhmanas of the north as fleashaters and brāhmanas of the north condemn southern brāhmanas because they marry their maternal uncle's daughters and because they carry earthen vessels in fairs or on pilgrimages. It was on account of the general attitude of religious tolerance that the smrtis and digests prescribe that even the usages of heretical sects should be enforced by the king. Yāj. II. 192 prescribes<sup>1725</sup> that the king should guard against breach of the distinctive usages and conventions of guilds (of artisans), of traders, of heretical sects and bands (of soldiers). Nārada (samayasānapākarma 1-3) states<sup>1726</sup> that the king should uphold the conventions of heretical sects, of traders, guilds and other groups and that whatever traditional usages, activities, mode of attendance and means of maintenance were peculiar to them should be permitted to them by the king without introducing any change. Among the matters of which the king was to take cognizance suo motu and included under prakīrnaka by Nārada (verse 2) was the transgression of the usages of heretics, traders, guilds and ganas. Brhaspati provides<sup>1727</sup> that in disputes among husbandmen, artisans, wrestlers, money-lenders, guilds, dancers, heretics, thieves, a decision is to be given in accordance with their conventions. It is no doubt true that certain smrtis present a sterner treatment of heretics and the like Gaut. IX. 17 provides<sup>1728</sup> that a snātaka should not talk with mlecchas, impure persons and sinners. Manu IX. 225 prescribes that the king should banish from his capital gamblers, dancers, heretics, vintners &c. Manu IV. 30 holds that one should not honour as guests even by words persons who are heretics, rogues &c. and recommends that one should not reside in a country which is overrun by groups of heretics. Yāj. II. 70 and Nār. (rñādāna 180) say that a heretic (pākhāndi) or an atheist is not a proper witness. These passages may be explained in various ways. Probably the prescriptions of Gautama and Manu refer to an age when the schism caused by Buddhists and Jainas was not very old and feelings between the followers of the Veda and the heretics ran high. But most of these prescriptions are addressed to the followers of the Veda as individuals. They do not negative the requirements laid down by Nār., Br. and others that the king (though of a different persuasion) was to enforce among heretics their own usages. It can be said without any fear of contradiction that at least from the 4th century A. D. onwards the policy of the State in India was 'to protect all religions, but to interfere with none'.<sup>1729</sup>

Customs of families will be briefly referred to later on in connection with modern law cases. Among family customs the customs about the year when caula was performed and the locks of hair kept on the head in the caula ceremony are frequently mentioned in the grhya sūtras and other works. Vide H of Dh. vol. II pp. 260 and 265.

The digests contain numerous examples about the customs and usages that were adhered to among the followers of the several Vedic branches (śākhās) and the grhya sūtras in performing several religious rites. A few examples may be set out here by way of illustration. According to Yāj. I. 242 the offering of pinḍas to the pitrs in a śrāddha takes place after the brāhmanas invited at the śrāddha are fed, while Manu III. 261 shows that they were offered also before the brāhmanas were fed. The Sm C (on śrāddha p. 471) says that one should follow the practice of one's own Vedic śākhā. Among the five daily sacrifices (mahāyajñas) one is pitryajña, which acc. to some (such as Kātyāyana) means tarpana, while according to Manu 1729 Vide Vasudev v Vamnay 5 Bom 80 at p 82 where Melvill J states that this is the policy of the British Courts in modern India.

III. 81 it means śrāddha and the Sm. C. (I. p. 208) provides that one should follow one's śākhā. The same remark applies to the number of handfuls of water offered in tarpana (Sm. C. I. p. 191 and Madanapārijāta p. 286). About the month of pregnancy in which the ceremony of śimantonnayana was to be performed each person was to follow his own grhyasūtra (Sm. C. I. p. 17, and Par. M. I. part 2 p. 22). The same holds good as to the day of nāmakarana (Sm. C. I. p. 21, Par. M. I. part 2 p. 25). It is not necessary to multiply examples. According to Gaut. XI. 21-22 and others already cited above, the king has to enforce the usages of guilds (śreni) and corporations. Several such usages have been cited above (pp. 487-488)

CHAPTER XXXIV

KALIVARJYA

(ACTIONS FORBIDDEN IN THE KALI AGE.)

It has been stated above (pp. 865-866) that one of the several ways in which the conflict between several smṛti texts was got over was to hold some of them as legislating for a bygone age (yugāntara). For example, when Hārīta allowed upanayana to women, both the Sm. C. (I. 24) and Par. M. (I. 2. p. 83) hold that the text refers to another kalpa (aeon). In H. of Dh. vol. II (on pp. 151, 162, 424, 451, 603, 612, 620, 750, 790, 796, 928, 929, 934, 953, 1005 n, 1201 n) reference has been made to several matters forbidden in the Kali age. It is remarkable in this connection to note that, though the Parāśarasmr̥ti (in I. 24) claims par excellence to lay down the dharmas for the Kali age, several important provisions contained in it, viz. the remarriage of a married woman<sup>1730</sup> (Parāśara IV. 30), the variation in the period of impurity due to births and deaths depending on the learning and character of a brāhmana (Parāśara III. 5-6), permission for a brāhmana to partake of the food of five classes among śūdras (XI. 21) are included among Kalivarjyas by the Ādityapurāṇa (as quoted by writers of the 12th and later centuries). It is necessary, therefore, to investigate into the origin and development of the Yuga theory and of the topic of Kalivarjya.

From the Mahābhārata (Śānti 59), Manu (I. 81), Nārada (I. 1-2), Brhaspati and the Purāṇas it is clear that they all believed in the existence of an ideally perfect community in the dim past followed by gradual degeneracy and decline in morals, health and length of life. But they also believed that a cycle of decline would be followed in the far distant future

<sup>1730</sup> Some of the printed editions of Parāśara (IV. 30) read नष्टे युते ... पतिरन्यो न विद्यते But the Par. M. on it (vol. II part 1 p. 53) makes it clear that this reading was fabricated by orthodox people and that Mādhava at least read it as पतिरन्यो विधीयते, as he remarks 'अयं च पुनश्चादौ पुनश्चादौ विधीयते'.

by another of moral perfection. The only pity is that all works that are extant think that they are in the midst of a very sinful age and there is not a single work which thinks that the era of perfection may dawn in the very near future

The germ of the theory of progressive deterioration in morals is found even in the R̥gveda. In the famous dialogue of Yama and Yamī the former exclaims in one place<sup>1731</sup> (R̥g X. 10. 10) 'those later ages are yet to come when sisters would do what is not sister-like'. The word 'yuga' occurs at least 33 times in the R̥g., but the exact meaning is somewhat doubtful. In a few places it means 'yoke' (R̥g X 60 8, X 101. 3 and 4). In several places it appears to stand for a very brief period of time (e. g. R̥g. III. 26. 3) Generally it means 'a generation' (as in R̥g. I 92 11, I. 103. 4, I 124 2, II 2 2, III. 33 8, V. 52 4) In R̥g. I 158. 6, 'dirghatamā māmāteyo jujurvān daśame yuge' yuga probably means 'a period of four or five years', while in R̥g. VI 15. 8, VI. 8 5, X 72 2, X. 94 12, X 97. 1 it should mean<sup>1732</sup> 'a long period of time'. In the Atharvaveda VIII. 2. 21 yuga appears to mean a period of several thousand years, two yugas being indicated as longer than 10000 years (śatam tesyutam hāyanān die yuge trin catvāḥ kṛnmah). Here there is a clear reference to four yugas and to the fact that yuga meant a very long period of time. Whatever be the meaning of the word in each passage, the R̥gveda does not contain the names of all the four well-known yugas viz. Kṛta, Tretā, Dvāpara and Kali. The word 'Kṛta' when used in the R̥gveda appears to mean 'the best throw of dice or of the seeds of vibhītaka in gambling' (X. 34. 6, X. 43 5). In the Atharvaveda VII. 52. 2, 5, 6 kṛta has the same meaning Kali is the name of the author of R̥g. VIII. 66 and in verse 15

1731. आ घा ता गच्छादुत्तरा युगानि यत्र जमय कृणवन्नजानि। ऋ. X 10. 10. The Nirukta (IV. 20) understood this verse in the sense given above 'आगमिष्यन्ति तानि उत्तराणि युगानि यत्र जमय. करिष्यन्ति अजामिकर्मणि' R̥g I. 113. 13 and III 33. 8 make it clear that उत्तर must mean 'future'. ह्यश्वत्थुरोषा च्युवास देव्ययो अयेद् व्यासो मघोनी। अथो च्युच्छादुत्तरा अह्यूनजरासृता चरति स्वधामि. II ऋ I 113 13. Here the occurrence and sequence of पुरा, अद्य and उत्तराद् leave no doubt about the meaning of the last word.

1732. या औषधी. पूर्वा जाता देवेभ्यस्त्रियुगं पुरा। ऋ. X 97 1. Here what is meant by त्रियुग is doubtful. The Nirukta IX 28 explains देवेभ्यस्त्रीणि युगानि पुरा, while सायण says कृताद्वियुगत्रयम्. In the शतपथ VII 2. 4 26 त्रियुगं means 'three seasons of spring, rains and autumn' (S. B. E. vol. 41 pp. 339-340).

of that hymn we read 'kalayo mā bibhītana' (O descendants of Kali! do not be afraid). In Rg. X. 39. 8 the Āsṛins are said to have rejuvenated Kali who had become old. Vide also Rg. I. 112. 15 (where Kali is said to have got a wife from Āsṛins). But Kali as a throw of dice does not occur in the Rgveda. In the Atharvaveda VII 114 1 Kali<sup>1733</sup> means a throw of dice. The words krta, tretā, dvāpara and āskanda occur in the Tai S. IV. 3. 3, Vaj S. 30. 18<sup>1734</sup> and in the Śat. Br. XIII. 6. 2. 9-10 (S. B. E. vol. 44 p. 416). In later literature Kali is also called Tisya (as in Bhismaparva 10. 3). In the Tai Br. III. 4. 16 the word Kali is used<sup>1735</sup> in place of Āskanda. In all the above places Krta and the other three words denote throws in gambling, Krta being the most lucky and Kali being the most unlucky. In another passage of the Tai<sup>1736</sup> Br. (I. 5. 11) we read 'the four stomas (Trivrt, Pañcadaśa, Saptadaśa and Ekavimśa) are Krta and the five are Kali; therefore the catustoma (should be performed in the Jyotistoma)'. This shows that Krta meant a throw of four or any multiple of four and Kali a throw which when divided by four left one as remainder. The Aitareya Br. employs the words Krta<sup>1737</sup> and the other three in a metaphorical sense as representing progressively more desirable states of human activity, 'one lying down becomes Kali, when about to leave the bed he becomes Dvāpara, when rising he becomes Tretā, and when he moves about he becomes Kṛta'. The Śat. Br. V. 4. 4. 6 speaks of Kali<sup>1738</sup> as 'abhibhū' (the vanquisher) and suggests that Kali is a throw of five that vanquishes all others. In the Chān. Up. IV. 1. 4 it is said 'as (in a game<sup>1739</sup> of dice) all the lower throws are included in the Kṛta throw which becomes victorious, so to him (to Raikva) comes (the merit of) all the good acts that people do'. Here Śāṅkara explains that Kṛta is a throw of dice having four marks, while other throws that have three, two or one mark are called Tretā, Dvāpara and Kali respectively. The Mundaka Up. I. 2. 1 refers to Tretā<sup>1740</sup>. 'This is the truth; the sacrificial rites which the sages saw in the mantras (i.e. as prescribed in the hymns of the R̥gveda and other vedas) have been performed in many ways in the Tretā'. This last word is explained by Śāṅkarācārya in two ways, first as referring to the threefold priestly duties (of hotr, adhvaryu and udgātṛ) which are based on the three Vedas and alternatively as referring to the Tretā age. From this resume it appears that even up to the times of the latest period of Vedic literature (i.e. Upanisads) the words Kṛta, Tretā, Dvāpara and Kali were used in the sense of throws of dice in gambling and that it is very doubtful whether they were used in the sense of different ages of the world. Even in the Mahābhārata Kṛta<sup>1741</sup> and Dvāpara are used also in the sense of throws of dice (vide Virāta 50. 24). In the Gopatha Brāhmaṇa (I. 28) there is a reference to the beginning of the Dvāpara age.

Even in the Vedāṅga Jyotiṣa<sup>1742</sup> (of R̥g.) the word yuga is used in the sense of a period of five years (pañcasamvatsaramayam yugādhyakṣam prajāpatim). The ancient Pitāmahasiddhānta which is not now extant, stated, according to the Pañcasiddhāntikā of Varāhamihira (XII. 1), that yuga means five years of the Sun and the Moon (raviśaśinoh pañca yugam varṣāni Pitāmahopadistāni). This sense of the word is still found in the Sabhāparva 11. 38.

The Nirukta (I. 20) distinguishes between ancient sages and those of later days in the words,<sup>1743</sup> 'the (ancient) sages had an intuitive perception of dharma and they imparted the Vedic mantras by instruction to later (sages) who had no intuitive perception of dharma'. But it does not mention or refer to any theory of four yugas. Both Gaut. I. 3-4 and Āp. Dh. S. II. 6. 13. 7-9 give expression to the view that among sages of old transgressions of dharma and violent actions are observed, but that on account of their distinguished spiritual greatness they incurred no sin, while a person of later days, being weak in spiritual merit, should not imitate them, otherwise he would come to grief. Here a distinction is drawn between very ancient sages and later sages as regards the endowment of spiritual merit, but nothing is said about the names or the theory of the four yugas. Āp. Dh. S. I. 2. 5. 4 further says<sup>1744</sup> that sages are not born among men of later days (avaresu) on account of the transgressions of religious ordinances (prevalent in later ages). Therefore, it would not be quite wrong to assume that the theory had not been fully developed even in the times of the early dharmasūtras of Gaut. and Āp. even though both held that they were living in an age of decline and that sages coming after the authors of the mantras were inferior.

Here epigraphic evidence affords some help in fixing the lower limit of the period when the theory of yugas must have been developed.

In the Rock Edicts of Aśoka No. 4 and No 5 we have at Kalsi and two other places the words 'āva kapam' (yāvat kalpam) and at Gīrnar the words 'āva samvāta kapa' which mean 'up to the end of the kalpa' or 'up to the end of the kalpa when the clouds or fires of destruction called samvāta will arise<sup>1745</sup>. Vide C. I. I. vol I. pp. 8, 10, 30-33. This indicates that the idea of a kalpa (a vast period of time at the end of which the universe would be dissolved) which is part of the theory of the yugas had been developed in the 3rd century B. C. The Junāgadh Inscription of Rudradāman<sup>1746</sup> (150 A. D.) refers to 'wind the velocity of which was as terrible as that at the end of the yuga'. In certain very early inscriptions of Pallava<sup>1747</sup> kings (of about the 3rd or 4th century A. D.) they are described as 'always ready to extricate dharma that had sunk deep owing to the evil effects of the Kali age'. In one of the Gupta Inscriptions dated in the 96th year of the Gupta era (415-16 A. D.) Dhruvasarman is praised as following the path of righteous conduct which prevailed in Krtayuga,<sup>1748</sup> while the Chammak copperplate of the Vakātaka emperor Pravarsena II also speaks of Krtayuga (Gupta Inscriptions No. 55 p. 237 at p. 240) The Talgunda inscription of the early Kadamba king Kakusthavarman refers to Kaliyuga (E. I. vol. VIII p. 34) It is not necessary to adduce passages from inscriptions of a later date. From the above it may be said that the theory of yugas and kalpas had begun to take shape at least in the 4th or 3rd century B. C. and that in the first centuries of the Christian era it had been fully developed. It must have gone through several stages in the course of its development. For example, Brahmagupta (Brāhmasphuṭa-siddhānta XI. 10) states that the theory of yugas, Manus and kalpas set out by Āryabhata was not like that of the smṛtis.

The same conclusion is arrived at from a consideration of the classical Sanskrit literature. The theory of yugas and manvantaras as detailed in the Mahābhārata (Vanaparva chapters 149, 188, Śānti chapters 69, 231-232), Manu chap. I, Viṣṇu-dharma-sūtra XX. 1-21, the Purāṇas (such as Viṣṇu I. 3, VI. 3, Mārkaṇḍeya 46, Brahma 229-230, Matsya 142-144) and astronomical writers from Brahmagupta is briefly as follows: Kṛta, Tretā, Dvāpara and Kali comprise together with the period called sandhyā (that precedes each yuga) and the period called sandhyāṃśa (that follows each yuga) 12000 years, i. e. Kṛta, Tretā, Dvāpara and Kali extend respectively over 4000, 3000, 2000, 1000 years and sandhyā and sandhyāṃśa of these four extend over 400, 300, 200 and 100 years each (i. e. the sandhyā of Kṛta is 400 years and the sandhyāṃśa of Kṛta is 400 years and so on). But these are divine years. Each divine year is equal to 360 human years. Therefore we have to multiply 12000 by 360 to arrive at the number of human years in the four yugas (i. e. the figure is 4320000). The Kṛtayuga with its sandhyā and sandhyāṃśa comes to 1728000 human years, Tretā to 1296000, Dvāpara to 864000 and Kali to 432000. These four yugas are together called sometimes caturyuga (Manu I 71) or simply yuga also (Vanaparva 188. 27, Śānti 232. 29); 1000 of these four yugas constitute a day of Brahmā, which is called Kalpa. The night of Brahmā is of the same duration. At the end of a kalpa the universe is resolved into Brahmā (and this is called pralaya) and at the end of Brahmā's night the world is created again. In one day of Brahmā there are 14 Manus and therefore each Manvantara is equal to about 71 caturyugas (1000 divided by 14). The life of Brahmā is 100, out of which half is gone and therefore the present is said to be the 2nd or latter half (dvitiya parārdha) of the life of Brahmā and at present the kalpa that is running is called Vārāha. From the above it will be seen that, according to the Purāṇas, the universe has been created and dissolved many times and there have been numerous Manvantaras also (vide Manu I. 80). The four yugas in various ways differ in their characteristics. Kṛta is so called because it is an age in which everything is fulfilled by every one and nothing is left to be done<sup>1749</sup>. The symbolic colours of the four yugas are respectively white, yellow, red and dark (Vanaparva 189. 32). In Kṛta, Dharma prevails in all its perfection and it stands with all its four feet (dharma being figuratively spoken of as vṛṣa,<sup>1750</sup> a bull, in Manu VIII. 16 and Vanaparva 190. 9) and it declines or deteriorates by a quarter in each of the following yugas (Manu I. 81-82 = Śānti 232. 23-24), so that in Kali only one quarter (or one foot) of dharma remains and adharma occupies three quarters. In Kṛta people are entirely free from diseases, secure all that they desire and the length of human life is four hundred years, all of which decline by one quarter successively in the following three yugas (Manu I. 83=Śānti 232 25). The dharmas in each of the four yugas are different; tapas was the highest in Kṛta, philosophic knowledge in Tretā, sacrifice in Dvāpara and charity alone in Kali (Manu I. 85-86=Parāśara I. 22-23=Śānti 232. 27-28). Manu I. 85, Śānti 232 27 and 261. 8, Parāśara I. 22 all have the same verse stating that the dharmas prescribed for men in each yuga differ.

In Kṛta, Tretā, Dvāpara and Kali the dharmas (that should be observed) are respectively declared by Manu, Gautama, Śāṅkha-Likhita and Parāśara (Parāśara I. 24). In Kṛta there was a single varṇa but at the end of Kali almost all will be sūdras (Brahma 229. 52, Matsya 144. 78). Parāśara (I. 25-28) points out other characteristics of the four yugas, which need not be detailed here. Manu IX. 301 and 202, however, indicate that the yugas are not watertight parts of Time. It is the king who can by his conduct introduce the characteristics of one yuga into another. Medhātithi on Manu IX. 301 explains that the king should not be misled into thinking that Kali is a historical part of Time and that he (the king) cannot therefore be Kali or Kṛta, but that it is the king's way of conducting himself that will produce the conditions of the several yugas among his people.

In Vanaparva 149. 11-38, Vāyu 32 and 57-58, Līṅga 39, Matsya 142-144, Garuda 223, Nārada-purāṇa (pūrvārḍha 41) and in several other purāṇas there are descriptions of the nature of the four yugas, which are passed over here. But it is important to see how the Great Epic and the Purāṇas describe the nature of Kaliyuga. Vanaparva chap. 188 and 190, the Yugapurāṇa chapter of the Gargasaṃhitā (published in the J. B. O. R. S. vol. 14 pp. 400 ff. by K. P. One extract<sup>1751</sup> taken from the Vanaparva (188) is added at the end by way of sample, of which a summary is given below. All men will generally be liars; in will deceive worthy husbands, will be of bad character and will have intercourse with slaves and even beasts; wives of heroes will resort to other men and will be guilty of adultery even while their husbands are alive.<sup>1754</sup>

The dates of the composition of the Purāṇas not being beyond controversy, it would be difficult to point to a particular period as the time when the full-fledged theory of the yugas was developed. But this much can be stated with certainty that by the 4th century A. D. at the latest the theory had been completely developed. Āryabhata<sup>1755</sup> (in Kālakriyāpāda 10) states that when three pādas of the yuga (i. e. Kṛta, Tretā and Dvāpara) and 3600 years more had elapsed, he was 23 years old i. e. (accepting the calculations current at present) in 499 A. D. Āryabhata was 23 years old and so was born in 476 A. D. In his Pañcasiddhāntikā Varāhamihira<sup>1756</sup> (505 to 587 A. D.) summarises the data of several astronomical 1754. It would be interesting to compare the descriptions of Kali given in the Mahābhārata and the several Purāṇas. Some verses are common to several of them and the ideas are almost the same throughout. The principal counts in the indictment are that there will be śūdra and Mleccha lings, that heretical sects will predominate, that the ordered duties and privileges of the several castes will be turned topsyturvy and there will be great physical and moral decline. After Vanaparva chap. 188 there is an additional description in chap. 190 of what will happen in the Kali age, which appears, from the express words of Vanaparva 191. 16, to have been taken from the Vāyupurāṇa. So this chapter is a later interpolation. The verse अहंशूद्रा &c. occurs again in Vanaparva 190. 52 and also in Harivamśa (Bhaviṣyaparva 3. 12), Brahmapurāṇa 230. 11, Matsya 47. 258. Two characteristic verses are शूद्रदन्ता जिताक्षाश्च मुण्डा. काषायवाससः । शूद्रा धर्मं बहिष्यन्ति शास्त्रबुद्धौपजीविनः ॥ (ब्रह्मपुराण 230. 13, वायु 58. 59, ब्रह्माण्ड II 31. 59-60, Harivamśa, Bhaviṣyaparva 3. 15) and देवस्थानेषु चैतेषु नागानामलयेषु च । एहं कश्चिद्वा प्रीतिं न देवश्च हन्यते ॥ वनपर्व 190. 67. The first says that śūdras with white teeth and (professing to have) curbed their senses, with the head shaved and wearing ochre-coloured robes and maintaining themselves on false doctrines will propound dharma. This is a direct attack on Buddhist monks taken from the class of śūdras. The 2nd says that the earth will be covered with edifices enshrining bones (of Buddha) and not with temples of gods. The idea about girls of 5, 6 and 7 being mothers occurs in Viṣṇupurāṇa VI 1. 41-42, Brahma 229. 41-42, Nāradya Pūrārdha 41. 64 and elsewhere.

Siddhāntas of which Romaka is one, about which Brahmagupta remarks that the Romaka siddhānta is outside the pale of smṛtis because<sup>1757</sup> it omits all mention of yugas, manvantaras and kalpas that have been regarded by the smṛtis as useful in measuring time. Kālidāsa<sup>1758</sup> in Raghuvamśa 15. 96 speaks of dharma as having only three feet (in Tretā) when Rāma made up his mind to depart from this world. No scholar will assign to Kālidāsa a date later than the middle of the 5th century A. D. Therefore the theory of yugas must be deemed to have been perfected long before 400 A. D. K. P. Jayaswal holds that the Yugapurāṇa chapter of the Garga-saṃhitā was composed about 50 B. C. (J. B. O. R. S. vol. 14 p. 399) and he is probably right.

At present it is the practice to hold Kali 5046 (expired) as equal to 1945 A. D. or śaka 1867 or saṃvat 2001-2. But it appears that there were several views about the date of the beginning of the Kaliyuga. The exact starting point on the above computation was Friday, 18th February 3102 B. C. One view was that Kaliyuga was about to begin when the great Mahābhārata war was fought out.<sup>1759</sup> This view is expressed in the Aihole Inscription which appears to equate the beginning of Kali with the Bhārata war and states that 3735 years (expired) from the Bhārata war are equal to 556 years of the śaka era.<sup>1760</sup> Āryabhaṭa knew this computation, since he says that he was 23 years old when three parts of the (great) yuga and 3600 had elapsed (Kāla-kriyāpāda, verse 10). Another view set forth in the Purāṇas is that Kaliyuga began when Kṛṣṇa finished his avatāra and went to heaven.<sup>1761</sup> This would put the beginning of Kaliyuga several years after the date arrived at on the first view.<sup>1762</sup> Vide Mausalaparva chap. 1. 13 and 2. 20 for reference to the lapse of 36 years before Kṛṣṇa's passing away. The Yuga-purāṇa appears to make Kaliyuga start on the day Draupadī died (vide J. B. O. R. S. vol. 14 p. 400). Another view is that of Varāhamihira who says that the constellation of the Great Bear was in Maghā when Yudhisthira was on the throne and that that time is arrived at by adding 2526 years to the śaka year.<sup>1763</sup> This would place Yudhisthira in 653 of the Kali age (as calculated at present) and not at the end of Dvāpara and the beginning of Kali. The Rājataranginī I. 56 quotes the Bṛhat-saṁhitā and holds that Kurus and Pāṇḍavas flourished in 653 of the Kali yuga (I. 51). Great efforts have Trivedi in Festschrift Kane pp 515-525 in which after setting out many divergent views and criticizing them, it is held that the Mahābhārata war was fought out in 3137 B. C., 'Purāṇic date of Mahābhārata', a paper by Mr. M. Raja Rao in the Bulletin of the Ganganath Jha Research Society, vol. II pp. 125-143, which mentions numerous dates suggested by various scholars. I am not at all convinced of the correctness of Dr. Trivedi's conclusions, in spite of the great learning that he brings to bear on the problem. Vide also his paper in 'Bhāratīya Vidyā', vol. VI (1945) pp. 117-120.

1763. आसन्नं भवति युगप. शासति धृष्टिं युधिष्ठिरे वृषतौ। पद्मद्विकपञ्चद्विसुत शक-
कालस्तस्य राक्षस्य ॥ बृहत्संहिता 13.3 This is not a verse of Garga as some scholars assert. In 13.2 Varāhamihira promises that he will dilate on the movements of the seven sages (ṁuricāra) according to the opinion of Vṛddhagarga. It appears that 13.3 is his own verse. Garga held the opinion that the Great Bear remained in one constellation for one hundred years. That is all Utpala quotes the verse of Garga, but it is in the Anuṣṭubh metre. It was believed by the authors of the Purāṇas and even by such astronomers as Varāhamihira that the constellation of the Great Bear remained in each nakṣatra for a hundred years. Vide Br. Sam. 13.4, Bhāgavata XII.2.27-28, Matsya 273.40-44, Vāyu 93.421-422, Viṣṇu IV.24.33. Mr. Velandī Gopal Aiyer in 'Chronology of Ancient India' (p. 75) holds that 'śad-dvika-pāṇca dvī' means 26 times 25 i. e. 650 years and that we should read 'śakyakāla' or 'śakyakāla' (p. 73) instead of 'śakakāla' in Br. Sam. 13.3 in order to correct the error of one mātrā in the 4th quarter of the verse. In this last he is in error; he forgets that, according to works on chandas-śāstra, a short syllable at the end of a pāda is deemed to be prosodically long (and therefore the last syllable in Br. Sam. 13.3 is long). Besides, he is not able to cite a single example to show why the usual rule of अङ्गानां वान्वेति गतिः should not be followed here also or that Varāhamihira elsewhere employs a similar method in a compound word.

been made by several scholars to meet this discrepancy by explaining the word 'sad-dvika-pañca-dviyutah' (in the Bṛhat-samhitā) in various fanciful ways, which are far from satisfactory. There is no reason why dvika should not straightforwardly be taken in the sense of 'two',<sup>1764</sup> as the Līlāvati and Br. Sam. 71. 5 itself do.

It is difficult to believe that the Śakakāla referred to in that verse is different from the Śakendrakāla or Śakbhūpakāla, which the Pañcasiddhāntikā (I 8) and the Bṛhat-samhitā (8. 20-21) make use of in several places. At least Varāhamihira gives no such indication. Mr. C. V. Vaidya in his 'Mahābhārata, a criticism' pp. 80-81 holds that the Śakakāla referred to in the verse 'āsan maghāsu &c.' is the era of Buddha's Nirvāṇa. There is hardly any warrant for this assumption. His interpretation of 'sad-dvika-pañca-dviyutah' as meaning 2566 (and not 2526) is not bad and does not seriously affect the argument about the date of Yudhisthira. On that interpretation Yudhisthira would be placed in 2488 B. C. (instead of in 2448 B. C.). But there is no reason why the usual values of sat (six), dvika (two) and other words should not be understood to be meant here.

The data contained in the Nidhanpur plates of Bhāskara-varman (E. I. vol. XII p. 65), when properly scrutinized, appear to favour the position of Varāhamihira. Those plates in setting out the genealogy of Bhāskaravarman start with Naraka, whose son Bhagadatta fought on the side of the Kauravas in the Mahābhārata war and was killed by Arjuna (vide Drona-parva chap 29). Bhagadatta's son is said to have been Vajradatta. After Vajradatta his descendants ruled over Kāmarūpa for 3000 years and then Pusyavarman, a scion of the Bhagadatta family, became king of Kāmarūpa. King Bhāskaravarman was 12th from Pusyavarman and was a contemporary of Emperor Harsa (first half of the 7th century A. D.). Taking an average of 20 years for the reign of each ruler, Pusyavarman should be taken as having flourished about the beginning of the 5th century A. D. Adding 3000 years which are alleged by the plates to have intervened between Pusyavarman and Vajradatta, we arrive at about 2500 B. C. as the time of Vajradatta and therefore approximately of the Mahābhārata war. This corresponds rather very closely with the statement of Varāhamihira who puts Yudhiṣṭhira's reign at 653 Kaliyuga (i. e. 2448 B. C.). On the other hand, if we assume that the Mahābhārata war was fought in or that Kaliyuga started in 3101 B. C, then Pusyavarman who flourished 3000 years after the Mahābhārata war would have to be placed about 101 B. C. and there will be an interval of about 700 or 750 years between Pusyavarman and Bhāskaravarman. A period of 700 or 750 years for 12 rulers would work at about 60 years for each ruler, which is a very improbable average. Therefore the Nidhanpur plates do not support the hypothesis that the Mahābhārata war was fought about 3101 B. C, but rather support the statement of Varāhamihira that it was fought about 2500 B. C.

Another epoch for the Mahābhārata war and the beginning of Kaliyuga is indicated by some passages of historic importance found in some of the Purāṇas. The Vāyupurāṇa (99. 4-15) and the Matsyapurāṇa (273. 36) say that from the birth of Parikṣit to the coronation of Mahāpadma (Nanda) a period of 1050 years elapsed, while the Bhāgavata XII. 2. 26 assigns 1015 years for the same. There is some mistake in the Purāṇa texts here. The Matsya (in chap. 271. 17-30) enumerates the kings of the Bārhadraṭha dynasty of Magadha descended from Sahadeva, son of Jarāsandha, and states that the dynasty will rule (i. e. ruled) for a thousand years. Then chap. 272 (verses 1-5) speaks of five kings, who will be followed by the Śiśunāka dynasty, that together reigned for 360 years and the last king in which was Mahānandi (verses 6-13) whose son from a sūdra wife was Mahāpadma (272. 18). So if the years of these three dynasties are added we get the period of about 1500 years. This is supported by the Bhāgavatapurāṇa (IX. 22. 48 and XII. 1-2) and Vāyupurāṇa (99. 308-321), which latter says that 32 kings of the Bārhadraṭha dynasty will rule for 1000, then five Vitihoṭra kings for 138 years (Pradyota and others) and then the Śaiśunāka (Śiśunāga in the Bhāgavata and in the Brahmāṇḍapurāṇa III. 74. 134-135) dynasty for 362 (in all exactly 1500 years). The same periods are given by the Viṣṇupurāṇa (IV. 23 and 24) and by the Brahmāṇḍapurāṇa III. 74. 121-135. Śrīdhara in his comment on Bhāgavata XII. 2. 26 states that the interval between Parikṣit and Nanda is 1498 as the Bhāgavata holds that the Śaiśunāga dynasty ruled for 360 years (XII. 1. 4-6). Therefore the proper reading in the Vāyupurāṇa or Matsyapurāṇa or the Bhāgavata should be 'pañcaśatottaram'

instead of 'pañcāśaduttaram' or 'pañcadasottaram.' Taking the interval between Parīkṣit and Nanda to be 1500 years and holding as most modern scholars do that the Nandas flourished in the 4th century B. C., Parīkṣit, the grandson of Arjuna, the Mahābhārata war and the beginning of Kaliyuga would have to be placed in the 19th century B. C. Therefore there are so far three main different epochs for the Mahābhārata war viz. 3101 B. C., 2448 B. C. and about 1900 B. C. All the three are well attested by evidence dating at least from about the 5th century A. D. One cannot dogmatically say that a certain tradition alone out of these three is the only correct one. All that one can say is that one prefers a particular tradition to the other two. Since the epoch of 1900 B. C. is supported by the Purāṇas in great detail by citing the names of the several kings and their regnal years I personally regard the epoch of 1900 B. C. for the Mahābhārata war as more probable than the other two. It is best to acknowledge one's inability to assign a certain date to the Mahābhārata war rather than twist plain words or ignore altogether inconvenient passages or put on them fanciful or far-fetched interpretations. The first desideratum is to prepare critical editions of the important purāṇas from the best mss material. Even then it is doubtful whether unanimity among scholars can be secured. A scholarly beginning was made by Pargiter in his book 'The Purāṇa texts of the dynasties of the Kali Age' (1913). He compares the material available in the printed editions of several Purāṇas and Mss on the subject of royal dynasties. One cannot or may not agree with many of the assumptions and inferences that he makes or draws, yet one cannot withhold admiration for his industry and method. For example, I cannot agree with him when he takes 'bhaviṣye kathitān' of the Matsyapurāṇa or 'bhaviṣye pathitān' of Vāyu (99, 267) as referring to the Bhaviṣyapurāṇa. In many passages of the Purāṇas we have references to 'bhaviṣyajāna' (Brahmaṇḍa III. 74-105), which simply means 'those who are conversant with sections on the future' contained in ancient works like the Mahābhārata.

It is not possible owing to limitations of space to enter into detailed examination of the theories of several scholars about the date of the Mahābhārata war. But one or two important matters will have to be referred to here.

Mr. Velandi Gopala Aiyer in 'The chronology of Ancient India' in chap. II. (pp. 51-104) examines the astronomical data furnished by the Mahābhārata and relying on the far-fetched and wrong interpretation put by him on the words of the Brhat-samhitā (quoted above) and on the fact that the Kollam era in Malabar appears to take 1177 B. C. as the starting point for Kaliyuga arrives at the conclusion that the Mahābhārata war took place in the latter part of 1194 B. C. This theory goes against all the three other starting points which are supported by comparatively ancient and authoritative evidence.

The information derived from the fragments of the work of Megasthenes on India are supposed to shed some light on this vexed problem. In one fragment (p. 115 of 'Ancient India as described by Megasthenes &c.') occurs the passage: 'From him (i. e. Bacchus) to Alexander the Great 6451 years are reckoned with three months additional, the calculation being made by counting the kings that reigned in the intermediate period to the number of 153'. An extract from Pliny makes out the number of kings to be 154. As against this we have the statement in the 'Indika' of Arrian (2nd century A. D., translated by McCrindle, p. 203): 'From the time of Dionysos to Sandrakottus, the Indians counted 153 kings and a period of 6042 years, but among these a republic was thrice established ... another to 300 years and another to 120 years. The Indians also tell us that Dionysos was earlier than Heracles by fifteen generations and that except him no one made a hostile invasion of India'. This passage is of very great importance for one reason, viz that it proves that in the 4th century B. C. there was a persistent Indian tradition which carried back Indian civilization and ordered government to 6000 years before the 4th century B. C. But there is great doubt as to what Megasthenes actually wrote and there is some divergence as to the number of years and kings also. Besides, this has no direct bearing on the date of the Mahābhārata war or the beginning of Kaliyuga, unless Heracles is taken to be Hari-Kṛṣṇa, as some scholars<sup>1765</sup> do. The account of Heracles (pp 201-203 of McCrindle's work) agrees in some respects with the legends about Kṛṣṇa viz. that he was honoured by the Sourasenoi (Śūrasenas), an Indian tribe who possess two large

<sup>1765</sup> Vide Mr. C. V. Vaidya's 'Mahābhārata, a criticism' pp. 75-76, where ignoring the figures of total years (viz. 6042 or 6451) he comes to the conclusion that Kṛṣṇa flourished about 3101 B. C. since 138 Kings between Heracles and Sandrakottus (i. e. Candragupta) may have ruled in all about 2760 years, taking 20 years as the average for each reign cities Methora (Mathurā) and Cleisobora and that Heracles had many wives; but then there are other anecdotes about Heracles which do not at all agree viz his having a daughter Pandaia with whom when she was only seven Heracles had intercourse for raising a mighty race. Here there is some confusion with the Pāṇḍavas and Kuntī or with the Pandyan kingdom in the South. Moreover, 6000 years for 153 or 154 kings is rather a very long period. It cannot be said that a king is only a unit of time in these computations (40 years on an average), since such Purāṇas as the Vāyu and the Matsya expressly mention the number of years that each dynasty held sway, the number of kings belonging to each dynasty and the lengths of the reigns of several kings. It is no doubt true that the details of the names of the several kings, the number of kings and the duration of their reigns do not always tally. It appears that the Purāṇas that contain historical material were recast at different times, e. g. the Vāyupurāṇa (99. 383) refers to the Guptas while the Matsyapurāṇa is silent about them. The extant Purāṇas cannot be supposed to have given imaginary details about historical dynasties, but they must have had before them older records or traditions. The Purāṇas do not appear to have invented names of new kings or given imaginary lengths of reigns. The authors surely knew that the total of the several dynasties between Parīkṣit and Nanda did not square with the total of the lengths of the reigns of the several individual kings. But they gave both these without trying to solve the discrepancies as they wanted to record all the traditions they had got before them. The Purāṇas have a claim on our attention, but in the present state of our knowledge they cannot unfortunately form the basis of any certain or connected history and chronology of ancient times.

A few words may here be said about the attempts made to deduce the age of the Mahābhārata war from the astronomical references in the Epic.

The number of works and papers in which the dates of the Bhārata war and of Kaliyuga are discussed is very large. A few of them only are noted here. The late Shankar Balkrishna Dikshit in his exhaustive volume on 'the History of Indian Astronomy' (in Marathi, 2nd ed. of 1931) deals with this subject at pp. 107-127. Mr. C.V. Vaidya in 'Mahābhārata, a criticism, 1904' devotes one chapter (pp. 55-78) and appendix note Y (pp. 180-190) to the date of the Mahābhārata war. He holds fast to the traditional view that the Mahābhārata war was fought in 3101 B. C. Mr. N. Jagannatha Rao writes a book on 'the Age of the Mahābhārata war' (Bezwaḍa, 1931), in which he disputes the identity of Candragupta Maurya with Sandracottus mentioned by Megasthenes, holds that Sandracottus is the Gupta Emperor Candragupta, that the date of Candragupta Maurya would be about 1535 B. C., that the word 'Śakakāla' in the Brhatsamhitā refers really to the era of the Persian Emperor Cyrus about 550 B. C. and that the Great War was fought in 3139 B. C. The work does not go deeply into anything and is rather superficial. There is a lengthy and interesting article by Mr. K. G. Sankar on 'some problems of Indian Chronology' in Annals of the B. O. R. Institute, Poona, vol. XII pp. 301-361 in which he seems to favour 1198 B. C. as the date of the Mahābhārata war. Mr. J. S. Karandikar, editor of the 'Kesari' (Poona), contributed certain articles (in Marathi) which are now issued as a booklet (1939), in which he examines many of the astronomical references in the Mahābhārata and the Paurāṇic lists about the dynasties of ancient Indian kings and arrives at the conclusion that the Mahābhārata war was fought in 1931 B. C. Though I differ from him in important details, I think that the date arrived at by him appears to be one of the two probable or best authenticated dates among the several dates proposed by various scholars. Prof. P. C. Sen-Gupta contributed a paper to the Journal of the Bengal Asiatic Society in 1937, vol. III pp. 101-119, in which he discusses the date of the Mahābhārata war and arrives at the conclusion that the Bhārata war was fought about 2449 B. C. This also is a very probable date and has the authority of the tradition mentioned in the Brhatsamhitā that the śaka era is 2526 years after the era of Yuddhiṣṭhira. In J. A. S. B. for 1938, vol. IV pp. 393-413 Prof. Sen-Gupta again examines 'Bhārata battle traditions' and confirms the date 2449 B. C. already arrived at by him. Dr. K. L. Daftari delivered some lectures in the University of Nagpur on 'the astronomical method and its application to the chronology of Ancient India' which are published in book form (Nagpur, 1942). This work exhaustively deals with almost all the passages of astronomical importance contained in the Mahābhārata and is characterized by great industry, patient calculations and ingenious explanations of conflicting passages. His conclusion is that the Bhārata war was fought in 1197 B. C. Although one feels nothing but admiration for the author's great learning and acumen, it is not possible to agree with the date arrived at by him or with the method and theories adopted by him. Apart from details one cannot accede to the following theories propounded by him viz. his division of the astronomical references into two groups, his assumption that a passage in the Dronaparva (chap 184) about the rising of the moon at about 2 A. M. is an interpolation (because it does not square with his explanations of the other passages), his bold expedient of changing 'citrām' to 'cantām' in Bhīṣma 3.12 and his transposition of Śravana and Pusya in Śalyaparva 34.6, his taking 'angaraka' to mean Venus (and not Mars). Dr. Daftari's work was reviewed by Prof. Sen-Gupta in JASB for 1943, vol. IX pp. 221-228 and after submitting it to a searching analysis and calculations, the learned Professor arrives at the conclusion that he cannot accept Dr. Daftari's method, which is useless for all practical purposes. Prof. K. V. Abhyankar contributes an article to the Annals of B. O. R. I. for 1944, vol. XXV. pp. 116-136 on 'the date and time of the Bhārata war', in which he takes into account only the material available in the Epic itself and bases his conclusions on the principle of following the voice of the majority. He furnishes a useful table in an appendix that shows at a glance some of the important astronomical passages of the Mahābhārata with their interpretations given by the commentators Arjunamīśra and Nīlakantha and by Mr. Karandikar and himself and finally gives his opinion that the traditional view of the date (3101 B. C.) is approximately correct. It appears that he had not, when he wrote the article, the work of Dr. Daftari before him nor Prof. Sen-Gupta's devastating criticism of it. It will be apparent from the above that the attempts to settle the exact date of the Mahābhārata war on the strength of the astronomical materials contained therein are dismal failures. Hardly any two scholars agree on the exact dates so arrived at, which range from 1193 B. C. to 3101 B. C. and even beyond. There are many reasons for this disappointing result. In the first place, several of the criteria mentioned in the epic are hopelessly inconsistent, as will be made clear a little below by a few examples. Further, several scholars assume that the epic was composed within a short time (about three years according to Adiparva, 62.52, cr. ed. chap 56.32) after the war. Many (including my humble self) cannot subscribe to this view. Besides, we are totally in the dark about the details of the system of the calendar generally adopted at the period of the war. Many suppose that it largely resembled the rules contained in the Vedānga Jyotiṣa (of the Rgveda). There is no unanimity on the question whether the months ended with amāvāsyā (i. e. whether they were amānta) or whether they ended with Full Moon (i. e. whether they were pūrṇimānta).<sup>1766</sup> That a pūrṇimānta month was in vogue in Vedic times is beyond dispute. For example, Tai. S states that Pūrṇvā Phalgunī is the last night of the year and Uttarā Phalgunī is the month (i. e. beginning). Similarly Tai. S VII. 4. 8. 2 declares that the citrāpūrṇamāsa is the month of the year; while Śān. Br. IV. 4 declares that the Phalgunī Pūrṇamāsi is the mukha of the year. The author or authors of the Mahābhārata, in describing the evil portents of an impending tragic or catastrophic event, often assemble together (as in Udyoga 143.5-29, Bhīṣma 2. 16-33) all of them irrespective of the fact whether some of them are possible in the very order of nature. For example, it is stated that Arundhatī went before Vasistha (Bhīṣma 2. 31), that a mare gave birth to a cow calf and that a bitch gave birth to a jackal (Bhīṣma 3. 6) and that images of gods trembled, laughed and vomited blood (Bhīṣma 2. 26, which may be compared with Brhatsamhitā 45. 8 and the verses of Garga quoted by Utpalā thereon); it is several times said that the Moon and the Sun are seized (i. e. eclipsed) at an unusual season (aparāṇu) or simultaneously by Rāhu (vide

1766 That the months in North-west India were pūrṇimānta in the Kharosthī records drawn up in Kaniska's era is shown in E. I. vol. 18 p. 266 and E. I. vol. 19 at p. 10. Aparārka (p. 423) quotes a verse from Bhādrapada 'अथयुक्कृष्णपक्षे तु अर्द्धं कार्यं दिने दिने' and remarks that Bhādrapada dark half is in that verse said to be the dark half of Āśvina. In the Bhavisiya-purāṇa (Uttara-parva, chap. 132. 17) the Full Moon of Phalguṇa is said to be the end of the month' (किमर्थं फाल्गुनस्यान्ते पौर्णमास्यां जनार्दन । उत्सवो जायते लोके ग्रामे ग्रामे दुरे दुरे ॥). In the Matsyapurāṇa (159. 4-6) it is said that Skanda and Viśiṣṭha were born on the 15th of the dark half of Caitra, that in the bright half of Caitra itself on the 5th Indra made one boy out of the two and on the 6th crowned him as Lord. This shows that in the Matsya Caitra was pūrṇimānta and not amānta. When the month is pūrṇimānta, the first fortnight ending with amāvāsyā is assigned to a month which is one month in advance of the amānta reckoning; i. e. what is Kārtika dark half with amānta reckoning becomes Mārgaśīrṣa dark half with the pūrṇimānta reckoning. On Jai VI. 5. 31 Sabara quotes a Vedic passage about यवानपन 'पुरस्तात्पौर्णमास्याश्चतुर्दशे दक्षिणत् । अतुदुस्त्वं वैषा पौर्णमासी संवत्सरस्य या चैत्री पौर्णमासी', which seems to indicate that the year began with the Full Moon of Caitra and that the pūrṇimānta reckoning was not unknown.

Bhismaparva 3. 28 and 32-33 and Āśvamedhikaparva 77. 15 ],<sup>1767</sup> Further, these very verses state that the eclipses of the Sun and the Moon took place on the same day and on the 13th and in the same month. Dr. Daftari interprets 'ekāhna' as meaning on the same week-day and 'on the 13th tithi' (pp. 5-6 of his work) calculated according to the wrong method of those days. It is extremely doubtful whether week-days had been known or named at the time of the Bhārata war or even at the time of the composition of the Epic. It is too much to assume that the astronomers of the Mahābhārata war days, while they could predict eclipses and state accurately the position of the planets, were so clumsy as to allow a mistake of two tithis to occur in their calendar with respect to the occurrence of a solar eclipse. The words in Bhismaparva 3. 28 and 32-33 appear to be a mere exaggerated statement of portents. If real observed eclipses are meant they would have to be taken in the order of the words in the text, viz. first an eclipse of the Moon (on Kārtika purnimā) and then an eclipse of the Sun (on Kārtika amāvāsyā) and further it must be assumed that the dark half of Kārtika contained only 13 days. Dr. Daftari (pp. 44-46 of his work) holds that first there was a solar eclipse on Āśvina amāvāsyā, then a lunar eclipse and then again a solar eclipse. In that case we should expect the order to be 'sūrya-candrau' and not 'candra-sūryau'. Besides, hardly any other scholar holds that there were three eclipses one after another. Therefore, it is hardly possible to say with certainty that the author accurately states astronomical facts observed by him or even traditionally handed down as definite facts and does not draw on his own imagination about the portents or does not exaggerate the first of these two verses. Utpala in his com. on Brhatsamhitā 5. 26 reads एकमासे त्रयोदशे. The words प्रजाः सक्षपयिष्यतः make it quite clear that eclipses and the fortnight of thirteen tithis are taken as very evil omens.

Similar words occur in Bhīma 3. 12 and 13 quoted below in note 1779. In Brhatsamhitā 3. 6 it is said that a graha called Tvastr makes the orb of the Sun look dark even when there is no parva (amāvāsyā). Utpala quotes on the same a verse of Parāśara 'अपर्वणि शशाङ्काकीं लटा नाम महाग्रहः । आवृणोति तमःश्यामः सर्वलोकविपत्तये ॥'. There is no doubt whatever that the writer of Bhīma 2 and 3 is more concerned with chronicling evil omens than with settling out accurate astronomical and other data observed by him personally or by others.

as a rhetorical device. In Brhatsamhitā 5. 26, 97-98 Varāhamihira states the evil consequences if a moon eclipse precedes or follows a sun eclipse in the period of one fortnight.

Most of the important astronomical details will now be set out from the time when Lord Kṛṣṇa is said to have started as a peace-maker to the Kauravas. In Udyogaparva 83. 6-7<sup>1768</sup> it is said that Kṛṣṇa started in the month of Kārtika (Kāumude māsi) at the end of the śarad season and about the advent of winter, when the moon was in Revatī nakṣatra and on mañtra muhūrta. Āśvina and Kārtika are at present said to form the season of śarad, and Mārgaśīrṣa and Pausa form hemanta. This verse itself presents a difficulty. On the Full Moon day of Kārtika, the moon is in Kṛttikā nakṣatra and the moon would be in Revatī three days before i. e. on or about the 12th of the bright half of Kārtika. If we take this along with the words 'at the end of śarad' it follows that the month was pūrṇimānta; otherwise (i. e. if the month were amānta) it would be highly improper to say that the 12th of the bright half of Kārtika was at the end of Śarad. After Kṛṣṇa failed in his mission he returned to the Pāṇḍavas (for all of which we must allow a few days after the 12th of Kārtika śukla) and reported what Duryodhana and he himself said. Two of the statements reported by him are very material. Duryodhana said to his allies: 'March towards Kurukṣetra (for battle); to-day the moon is (in) Pūṣya nakṣatra'.<sup>1769</sup> If Kṛṣṇa started on his mission when the moon was in Revatī (on the 12th of the bright half of Kārtika), then these above words must have been uttered in his presence on or about the 5th of the dark half of Kārtika (or of Mārgaśīrṣa if the month was pūrṇimānta). Another important statement is that Kṛṣṇa in his conversation with Karna (whom he had tried to win over) stated to him: 'this is a mild month in which fodder and fuel can be easily had, which is neither too hot nor too cold; on the 7th day (from today) there will be amāvāsyā; battle may be joined on that day; they regard it as having Indra for its (guardian)<sup>1770</sup> deity'. Therefore this must have been said on or about the 8th of the dark half of the month. But what was the name of the month? If the reckoning was pūrṇimānta, the month must be Mārgaśīrṣa, but if the reckoning was amānta, the month must be Kārtika. The words 'this month' taken along with Udyoga 83 6-7 would indicate that the month meant was Kārtika. Further, Indra was the deity of Jyesthā nakṣatra and the amāvāsyā (as stated in Udyoga 142. 16-18) had Jyesthā nakṣatra. In modern times this is possible on Kārtika Amāvāsyā, while there cannot be Jyesthā nakṣatra in modern times on Mārgaśīrṣa amāvāsyā, but only on or about the 13th of the dark half of it. But this passage itself (Udyoga 142. 16-18) is in conflict with Śālyā 35. 10 where Kṛṣṇa says: 'the Kauravas do not act up to my words, being driven to do so by the Time Spirit; O' descendants of Pāṇḍu, go out (for battle) together with me when the moon is in Pūṣyā'. If the moon was in Jyesthā on amāvāsyā when Kṛṣṇa had proposed to Karna that the war should be begun, this passage of Śālyaparva would put the beginning of the war 16 or 17 days after Kārtika amāvāsyā, which is not warranted by any other passage and which no scholar puts forward. In Udyoga 143 11 it is stated,<sup>1771</sup> 'the spot on the moon has turned away (disappeared) and Rāhu approaches the Sun'. The exact meaning of the first quarter is not quite clear. Some interpret it to mean that 'an eclipse of the Moon has already taken place'. The moon looks beautiful with the spot thereon (compare Śakuntalā I 'madanamapi hṛmāṅko lakṣmī lakṣmī hṛdī'). The disappearance of the spot might have been looked upon as an evil portent. Even supposing that the first quarter refers to an eclipse of the moon, it does not matter much. The second quarter states that an eclipse of the Sun was expected when Karna addressed these words to Kṛṣṇa, the envoy of the Pāṇḍavas. Later on in Bhīṣma 2.23 it is stated<sup>1772</sup> that the Moon had become devoid of brightness, was without its spot on the Full moon day of Kārtika and assumed the colour of fire while the sky retained its original hue; so that if there was an eclipse of the moon it was on Kārtika Paurṇimā and an eclipse of the sun was yet to take place. On the whole, therefore, one may assume, though not without hesitation, that the months were amānta, that possibly there was an eclipse of the moon on Kārtika Full Moon when Kṛṣṇa had gone as a peace-maker and that there was a solar eclipse on the amāvāsyā of Kārtika just about the time the war began. In Śalyaparva 56.10 we again meet with the words (at the beginning of the mace duel) 'Rāhu swallowed the Sun at an unusual season'. This passage and Āśvamedhika 77.15 (Rāhur-agrasadādityam yugapat somameva ca) rather suggest that the eclipse of the sun at an unusual time had become a stock example of an evil portent without the actual occurrence thereof. The words in Śalyaparva refer to the last day of the war before the mace duel between Duryodhana and Bhīma and the passage says that Rāhu seized the sun and there was an earth-quake also. Hardly any one (except Dr. Daftari) holds that there was another eclipse on the last day of the war, when just before the war there already had been an eclipse on Kārtika amāvāsyā.

In the Kumārasambhava VII. 6 the mañtra muhūrta is mentioned in connection with ceremonies preceding marriage. The commentators explain mañtra as the 3rd muhūrta after sunrise. In the Atharva Jyotiṣa fifteen muhūrtas of the day are enumerated of which the first three are Raudra, Śveta and Mañtra.

As to the exact tithi and nakṣatra on which the Great War began, there are many conflicting statements. In the Bhārata-sāvitrī it is stated that the Bhārata war started in the first month (i.e. Mārgasīrṣa) of Hemanta on the 13th of the bright half when the moon was in the nakṣatra presided over by Yama (i.e. Bharani)<sup>1773</sup>. The Bhārata-sāvitrī is no part of the 1773 The following verses of the Bhārata-sāvitrī are material for the days of the important events of the war: 'हेमन्ते प्रथमे मासे शुक्लपक्षे त्रयोदशी । प्रवृत्तं भारतं युद्धं नक्षत्रं यमदेवतम् ॥ कालगुण्या निहतो भीष्म कृष्णपक्षे च समरी । अष्टम्यां चैव सौमद्रो नवम्या च जयद्वयः । द्वात्रिंश्यां भगदत्तस्तु महायुद्धे निपातितः । एकादश्यामर्धरात्रौ हतो गीरो घटोत्कचः । ततः प्रभातसमये विराटमुपदी हतो । द्वादश्या चैव मध्याह्ने द्रोणाचार्यः रणे हतः ॥ त्रयोदश्यां तु मध्याह्ने द्रुपसेनो निपातितः । चतुर्दश्यां तु पूर्वाह्ने रणे दुःशासनो हतः । अमास्यां धर्मद्वयेण शल्यो मद्राधिपो हतः । . . अमायामर्धरात्रे तु राजा दुर्योधनो हतः । . . अमायामेव यामिन्यां द्रोणिना निहतास्तदा । धृष्टद्युम्नः शिखण्डी च द्रौपद्याः पञ्च चात्मजाः । (set out at the end of हरिवंश in the Citraśālā edition). There are some statements here that are opposed to the text of the Mahābhārata Abhimanyu

Mahābhārata, yet it has some traditional value, being probably earlier than all the commentators of the Mahābhārata and later than the text of Sauti. In conflict with this passage of the Bhāratasāvitri we have the words of Udyoga 142. 18 (quoted above) where Kṛṣṇa says to Karna that battle may be joined on amāvāsya when the moon is in Jyesthā. The Mahābhārata itself states that after the disposition of the vast armies were made and commanders were appointed, Duryodhana called Ulūka and sent him to the Pāṇḍavas to inflame their feelings with the words<sup>1774</sup> (Udyoga 160. 93) 'the worship of steel (weapons) has been performed, the site of Kuruksetra is dried up (has no mud), your horses are well fed, warriors are hired by you; fight tomorrow'. This Lohabhihāra (or-sāra) is the same as the rite of nirājanā (according to the Amarakośa) or is performed immediately after nirājanā (for which see pp. 230-231 above). Kāutilya (II 30 p. 135) prescribes a nirājanā rite at the start of an invasion and when two seasons meet. So a nirājanā rite on Kārtika amāvāsya would be most appropriate (both because a battle was to be begun and because at the end of Kārtika the season of Śarad ended). The Brhatsamhitā (43. 1-2) prescribes a nirājanā rite for horses, elephants and men on the 8th or 12th of Kārtika bright half or on the 15th of Kārtika (Full Moon or amāvāsya). It is extremely doubtful was killed on the third day after Drona became commander-in-chief. It may be noted that Nīlakantha explains यमदैवतम् differently as meaning Mr-gasīrsa which has a double deity as its presiding deity. It may be noted that this text of the भारतसावित्री as printed is not quite reliable, since नीलकण्ठ in his commentary on भीष्म 17. 2. reads 'अञ्जनेन हतो भीष्मो माघमासेऽसिवाहमी' for फाल्गुनी . . सप्तमी and 'अयोद्धयां हु मध्याह्ने भारद्वाजो निपाति' for 'हादृष्या .. रणे हतः'. If these readings be accepted it follows that the Bhāratasāvitri impliedly recognizes the existence of a tithihsaya, since Drona is there said to have been killed on the 13th tithi of dark half when the epic itself says that he died on the 15th day after the battle began. As the war commenced on the 13th of bright half, there would be 16 days on 13th of dark half.

About this, अमरकोश says 'लोहाभिहारोऽन्वा भूता राज्ञी नीराजनी विधिः' (v. 1 नीराजनाद्विधिः). The तिथितत्त्व of रघुनन्दन quotes (Jivananda p 35) a passage from the Devīpurāṇa that on the 6th of Caitra Śaṇḍa is to be worshipped and it is called स्कन्दपट्टी. whether Mr. Karandikar is right in saying that Lohābhihāra (or-sāra) refers to Skandasasthi. In the first place, the worship of weapons can be done at any time, particularly when a battle is to be commenced. In the second place, it is not necessary to postulate the lapse of six days and more for the sending of Ulūka and his return from the time when Kṛṣṇa said that battle may be begun on amāvāsyā. The armies had taken up opposite positions on the field of Kuruksetra and Ulūka could have come and gone in a day or two. Further, we have no evidence that Skanda-sasthi was performed in northern India in Mārgaśīrṣa, though very late works composed by dākṣaṇṭyas like the Nirayasinḍhu say that Skandasasthi is the same as Campāsasthi in Mahārāstra and is observed on the 6th of Mārgaśīrṣa. Raghunandana quoting Devipurāṇa places Skandasasthi on Caitra 6th of the bright half and is supported by the Matsyapurāṇa quoted above in n.1766. There is no reason why the actual fight should commence so late as the 13th day of Mārgaśīrṣa (or even 11th as Mr. Karandikar suggests) when Kṛṣṇa said that it should be joined on amāvāsyā. It is quite possible that the war began on or about Kārtika amāvāsyā. The observance of 'lohābhihāra' does not lead to the certain inference that the war was not begun till several days after the 6th of the bright half of Mārgaśīrṣa. Similarly, Mr. Karandikar says that the moon is ordinarily in Bharanī on the 11th or 12th of the bright half of Mārgaśīrṣa. It may be so. But it is possible to have the moon in Bharanī even on the 13th. I am inclined to hold that the Bhāratasāvitṛī dates of the beginning of the war embody a different tradition altogether from the one contained in the Mahābhārata itself. The Bhāratasāvitṛī is silent about nakṣatras on which the principal events of the war took place except at the commencement of the war. It mentions no tulṅasaya or tuluvṛddhi. Kṛṣṇa sends a message with Ulūka to Duryodhana (Udyoga 162. 57) 'tomorrow you will be seen' (in your true colours) and Arjuna does the same (Udyoga 163. 14).

The Mahābhārata nowhere states quite explicitly the tulṅa or nakṣatra on which the battle actually commenced. We have to rely upon various indications to arrive at the tulṅa or nakṣatra. Balarāma could not bear to see the fight between Duryodhana and Bhīma, both of whom were his pupils in mace-duel and went on a pilgrimage (Udyoga 157. 33-35 and 158. 39). Balarāma returned on the 18th day of the war and (in Śalya parva 34. 6)

he remarks, 'it is 42 days since I left (on a pilgrimage); I started when the moon was in Pusya and I have come here again on Śravana' <sup>1775</sup>. In Śalya 35. 13-14 it is stated that Balarāma went to the river Sarasvatī on pilgrimage on 'maitra-naksatra-yoga' (i. e. when the moon was in Anurādhā). This conflict may be resolved by holding, as Nilakantha does, that Balarāma left the Pāṇḍavas on Pusya, reached the Sarasvatī on Anurādhā and returned on Śravana. If we follow Śalya 34.6 the war commenced when the moon was in or near Mrgāśīrṣa (18 nakṣatras before Śravana). This would be in direct conflict with a passage in Bhīsmaparva 17.2 that <sup>1776</sup> 'on the day of battle the moon was in the province of Maghā' and also other passages that will be indicated later on. This last passage should ordinarily mean that the moon was near Maghā. Mr. Karandikar looks upon Śalya 34.6 as an interpolation and takes Bhīsmā 17.2 to mean that the moon was in an inauspicious nakṣatra of the category of Maghā. This would suit Bharanī but not Rohini or Mrgāśīrṣa. His meaning is far-fetched and he does not explain why Bharanī was not directly mentioned in the Epic, when in several other places the epic does mention directly the nakṣatra concerned. His explanation gives the go-by to the 13th tīthi. Dr. Daftari boldly asserts that we must transpose the nakṣatras (in Śalya 34.6) and read 'śrāvane samprayātosmi pūsyena punarāgataḥ'. If we once resort to these methods followed by these two learned writers, there is no knowing where one should stop. There are scholars who might with equal or greater plausibility claim that most of these astronomical references are either of very late date or are interpolations (vide Vaidya's 'Mahābhārata' p. 71). Similarly, if we once concede that we are at liberty to change readings to suit our theories even in the total absence of all manuscript evidence, then there is no sure foundation on which we can build. The Mahābhārata passages have a tradition of centuries behind them. We must, in the absence of good mss. evidence to the contrary, either accept them all and try to explain them or we must give up the job of reconciling them as a hopeless tangle and rely on other evidence to arrive at the date of the

Bhārata war as best as we can. We saw above that Jyesthā was the nakṣatra on Kārtika amāvāsyā and, if the war began then, the nakṣatra on the 18th day from then would be Pūṣya. Nilakantha, following the Mīmāṃsā rules of interpretation, holds that the concluding passage (upasaṃhāravākya) is superior in strength to passages that occur at the beginning of a work, that the passage in Salya 34.6 is the dominant one and other conflicting passages must be either brushed aside or explained away in conformity with Salya 34.6 and gives an explanation of 'Maghāvisayagah somah' which is quite unsatisfactory. Dr Daftari also holds, relying on Atharva Jyotiṣa, that the passage means 'the moon was in Mūla' (p. 27 para 62-65 of his work 'Astronomical method' &c.) The explanation is ingenious but one fails to see why this round-about way was resorted to and why the text did not simply say 'mūlanakṣatragah somah', which violates no metrical requirements. In Anuśāsana parva (167.26-28) Bhīṣma, while on the bed of darts, states.<sup>1777</sup> 'the sun has turned (towards the north); 58 days have passed by since I laid myself down on this (arrow bed) This is the mild month of Māgha that is now current, three parts of it remain and this fortnight should be śukla'. Bhīṣma was struck down on the 10th day of the war; so 67 nights had passed from the day when the war began to the day in Māgha on which this was uttered. The difficulty is how to connect 'tribhāgaśeṣah', whether as an adjective of 'māsa' or of 'pakṣa'. If we take it in the first way, these words were uttered on 8th of Māgha śukla: if we take it as an adjective of 'pakṣa', then they will have to be taken as uttered on the 4th of the bright half or on the 4th of the dark half which may be regarded in its astrological effects as equal to śuklapakṣa (though the tithi itself is in the dark half) If the words were uttered on the 8th of Māgha śukla, the Bhārata war began on Kārtika amāvāsyā (which will be in consonance with Udyoga 142.18 quoted in n 1770). The passage in Anuśāsana (167.26-28) is supported by two other passages. After the war was over, Yudhiṣṭhira went to the capital and stayed there for 50 nights and when he found that the Sun had started on its apparent northward path (uttarāyana) he came to Bhīṣma (Anuśāsana 167.5) In Śāntiparva 51.14 Kṛṣṇa says to Bhīṣma: 'You have yet to live 56 days' Nilakantha, who takes Salya 34.6 as the dominant passage, puts a most far-fetched construction on the word 'astapañcāśatam', which he takes to mean 'one hundred minus 58', i. e. 42 nights and explains 'pañcāśatam sat ca' as equal to 30. This shows to what straits commentators are reduced when conflicting passages have got to be explained away. One more indication about the tithi on which the war commenced is afforded by Dropaparva chap. 184, where it is stated that a grim fight went on till midnight when Ghatotkaca was killed, that the fatigued armies then snatched some sleep, that then the moon rose at about 2 A. M. (verse 46) and that the fight was then resumed<sup>1778</sup> (chap. 186. 1 'tribhāgamātraśeṣāyām rātryām yuddham-avartata'). This description of moonrise shows that Ghatotkaca was killed on or about the 11th of the dark half. We know from the Mahābhārata itself that Ghatotkaca was killed on the night of the 4th day of Drona's command or on the 14th day after the war began. This would establish that the war began on the 12th or 13th of the bright half and ended on the 14th of the dark half or on amāvāsyā of Mārgaśīrṣa. Dr. Daftari holds that this description is an interpolation.

If we try to find out the nakṣatra on which the war began, we have one sure criterion in Śalya 34, 6 viz. that the war ended on Śravana nakṣatra when Balarāma returned from pilgrimage. Now the moon cannot be in Śravana at all in Mārgaśīrṣa dark half, but may be in it on the first or 2nd of the bright half of Pausa. So between the tithi and nakṣatra as disclosed by the Mahābhārata itself there is a slight discrepancy of a day or two. There is another way of looking at the data. Bhīṣma was waiting for uttarāyana to begin and we know that he passed away on the 59th day after he was mortally wounded on the 10th day of the war. Therefore, a period of 67 days (58 nights of his lying on arrow-bed plus 9 nights of the battle when he slept on his usual bed) elapsed between the beginning of the war and the beginning of Uttarāyana, which undoubtedly occurred in Māgha in that year (as Anuśāsana 167. 28 expressly states). The real difficulty is to find out the tithi of the commencement of Uttarāyana. But if we accept the approximate tithi and nakṣatra (as stated above) of the end of the war (i.e. Mārgaśīrṣa amāvāsyā or 1st of Pausa and Śravana nakṣatra), uttarāyana began 49 days thereafter i. e. on or about the 4th of the dark half of Māgha. According to the Vedāngajyotiṣa, 4th of the dark half of Māgha is one of the tithis on which uttarāyana may begin (vide Dikṣit's work pp 75, 91). How scholars accept one of the data and reject others is well illustrated here. Acc. to Śālyā 34 6 the war ended on Śravana (and so should have begun when the moon was in Mārgaśīrṣa). Acc. to the Bhāratasāvitṛī the war began on Bharanī and on the 13th of the bright half of Mārgaśīrṣa and ended on Amāvāsyā (and therefore the nakṣatra was Mūla or Pūrvāṣādhā). Arjunamīśra gives up the nakṣatras and sticks to the tithis. Mr. Karandikar gives up the express verse about Śravana (and regards that whole chapter as an interpolation), he gives up the 13th tithi of the beginning of the war as given in the Bhāratasāvitṛī, holds that the war began on 11th instead and sticks fast to the Bharanī nakṣatra given in the Bhāratasāvitṛī. Dr. Daftari altogether changes the reading of Śālyā 34 6 by transposing the nakṣatras mentioned

The difference between the day of Uttarāyana in Māgha stated in the Mahābhārata and the day thereof at present is utilised by scholars for arriving at the date of the Mahābhārata war.

There are other data in the Mahābhārata from which also the date of the Mahābhārata war is sought to be deduced. Before entering into details, some matters that are accepted by most scholars may be stated here. It is generally held that there were two eclipses, first, one of the moon immediately followed by a solar eclipse, that there was a fortnight of 13 days which was looked upon as very unusual and a very evil omen. Vide Bhīṣma 3 28 quoted in n 1767. In Bhīṣmaparva 3 31-32 Vyāsa is reported as saying, 'I have known amāvāsyā occurring on the 14th, 15th or 16th day (of a pakṣa), but I do not know an amāvāsyā occurring on the 13th day (of a pakṣa); both the moon and the sun were eclipsed in the same month on the 13th day'. In the Mausala-parva<sup>1779</sup> 2 18-19, when Kṛṣṇa, 36 years after the war, beheld certain portents it is said, "on observing those portents on the amāvāsyā occurring on the 13th day he declared 'Rāhu had made this (13th day) appear as the 14th and 15th (when usually there is amāvāsyā) when the Bhārata war took place; to-day it has again occurred for our destruction'. From these words it is clear that the occurrence of an āvāsyā at the end of a pakṣa of 13 days was looked upon as a very evil omen. Then many scholars hold that a comet had also appeared at the time of the great war. Bhīṣma 3.13<sup>1780</sup> states, 'a very frightful comet stands in the sky covering the constellation of Pusa'. There are grave doubts whether the statement is made from actual observation. The appearance of a comet has always been associated in ancient times with great calamities. Compare Kumārasambhava II.32 'upaplavāya lokānām dhūmaketurivot-thitah'. As indicated above, the Mahābhārata gathers together several possible and impossible things to emphasize their significance as to impending calamities. Therefore the inclusion of a comet among portents does not establish that a comet had actually appeared at the time of the Bhārata war. Supposing for argument that a comet had appeared, that circumstance is of no help at all in settling the date. A large number of comets is included in the sun's retinue. The number of comets of long periods that approach the sun in a century is said to be 300. There is nothing to show what particular comet appeared at the time of the war and no one has data to connect the Mahābhārata comet with Halley's comet or any other comet well-known in modern times. Therefore the datum about a comet is entirely worthless for purposes of chronology. According to Brhatsamhitā 11.5 and Utpala thereon the ancient writer Parāśara held the view that there were 101 ketus and Garga said that there were a thousand. The description in Bhīṣma 3.13 states that the perihelion of the comet was in Pusa. In Udyogaparva 143.10 it is said 'since a graha specially afflicts Citrā, a great calamity is indeed approaching the Kauravas'. This may probably refer to a comet. Two other verses appear to have some bearing on this. Bhīṣma 3.12 states<sup>1781</sup> that the white graha stands traversing 1781. ध्रुवं प्रज्वलितो घोरमपसव्यं प्रवर्तते । रोहिणीं पीडयत्येवमुभौ च शक्रि-भास्करौ ॥ चित्रास्वात्यन्तरे चैव विष्ठितः परुषग्रहः । भीष्म 3.17, compare बृहत्संहिता 11.39 'श्वेत इति जटाकारी रुद्रः. उपायो विचित्रिभागतः । विचित्रवर्तेऽपसव्यं विभागशेषा प्रजा कुरुते ॥'. उत्पल explains 'रुद्रं परुषं इयाव कुरुणवर्णं'. It is remarkable that बृहत्संहिता 11.57 is चित्रासु कुरुक्षेत्राधिपस्य मरणं समादिशेत्तज्ज्ञः, thus agreeing very closely with भीष्म 3.12.

ritrū (i.e. it is about to enter into sāh) and verse 16 says, 'the white graha is fiery like fire emitting smoke and stands occupying Jyesthā which is a bright star presided over by Indra'. What is meant by 'white graha'? The words 'sveto grahah' should ordinarily denote Venus. Nilakantha takes them to mean Ketu (node) in Bhīṣma 3.12 and another comet in 3.16. If this latter explanation be accepted there were two comets seen at the time. Even if we hold that Bhīṣma 3.16 describes the tail of the comet mentioned in 3.13, that is of very little help. All that would be meant would be that the tail of the comet was a very long one. Bhīṣma 3.17 has been taken to refer to Rāhu by Nilakantha, while some modern scholars hold that it refers to a comet. It means, 'a cruel comet standing between Citrā and Svāti, afflicts Rohini and also the sun and the moon'. The description of the Ketu called Śveta in Brhat-samhitā 11.39 agrees very closely with the description in the Bhīṣmaparva and Parāśara quoted by Utpala thereon states that the Ketu called 'Śveta' becomes visible after 115 years and portends the destruction of two-thirds of the population.

Then there are several passages which state the positions of several planets just before the battle or on the day the battle began. Here again at least two different positions are assigned to each planet except Mercury. It is first to be noted that at the beginning of the war all the seven planets excluding Rāhu and Ketu are declared to have been near each other (Bhīṣma 17.2, q. in note 1776 above). We know from the Mahābhārata itself that the Sun and the Moon on Kārtika amāvāsyā were in Jyesthā. If the war began on amāvāsyā or a day later, the planets must be near Jyesthā. If the Bhāratasāvitrī be followed then the war began on Mārgaśīrṣa bright 13 and on Bharanī. If that were so, the sun and the moon cannot be together. Mr Karandikar takes 11th of the bright half of Mārgaśīrṣa to be the tithi of the beginning of the war and holds that the Sun was in nakṣatra Jyesthā and that the moon was in Bharanī (following the Bhāratasāvitrī as to this last). I should hold that we are not at liberty to take one datum from one group of statements and another from another group and then say that it is proved that the war was fought at a particular time. It is further noted in Karnaparva 37.4 that on Karna's death (i.e. 17 days after the war began), the seven planets were seen going away from the Sun.<sup>1782</sup> The positions of the planets at the beginning of the war were as follows:—

- SUN— Udyoga 143. 11 (Rāhu approaches the Sun)

 The Sun was either in Jyesthā or near Mrgasīrsa.
- MOON— Bhīṣma 3 17 (parusa graha i. e. Rāhu afflicted both the Sun and the Moon) and Rohini Bhīṣma 3. 28, 32 (q. above in n. 1767)
 Bhīṣma 17. 2 (the Moon was in the province of Maghā q. above in n. 1776).
- MERCURY— Karnaparva 94. 49 says that on Karna's death the son of the Moon (i. e. Mercury), the white luminary, rose slantingly resembling in hue fire and the Sun. The Śalyaparva 11. 18 states that Mars, Venus and Mercury were in conjunction <sup>1783</sup> If Mars was in Maghā as stated in Bhīṣma 3 14 and Mars and Mercury were in conjunction Mercury would be in Maghā, which forebodes destruction of people by war, as stated in Brhatsamhitā 7 3
- MARS— Udyoga 143. 9 states, 'Mars having made a retrograde motion in Jyesthā seeks (to reach or afflict?) Anurādhā, the nakṣatra presided over by Mitrā, as if bringing death (to friends)' Bhīṣma 3 14 states: 'Mars is retrograde in Maghā' What is the meaning of this? Literally it means that Mars was in Maghā and was retrograde in motion. Mr Karandikar holds that Mars had only drsti on Maghā and was in Pūṣya. Supposing this is correct, Mars was not near the Sun but far away.
 Bhīṣma 3 18 declares: 'Mars, having changed its motion after being retrograde and with the lustre of fire, stands covering Śravana, the mansion of Brhaspati'. <sup>1784</sup>

We find that the Mahābhārata employs two classes of expressions. When it uses words like 'tisthati' (stands), 'ākramya' (having traversed), 'samvṛtya or samparivārya' (having covered or concealed) it means that the planet was in or very near that nakṣatra. When words meaning 'afflicts (pīdayati) are employed, the meaning is probably that the planet has only dr̥sti on the nakṣatra. It is impossible to say whether the rules and theories about dr̥sti or pūrṇa dr̥sti and partial dr̥sti had been evolved at the time of the Mahābhārata War. If the war was fought about 3101 B.C. or even 1931 B.C. there is nothing to establish that the theories about dr̥sti contained even in the Atharvayajotisa (which is certainly later than the Vedāngayajotisa of the R̥gveda i.e. much later than about 1200 B.C.) were known then. Vide under Venus for further difficulties.

JUPITER— Bhīṣma 3. 14 states that Jupiter was retrograde in Śravana; Bhīṣma 3. 27 states,<sup>1785</sup> 'Both Jupiter and Saturn that had stayed together for a year are near Viśākhā and are both fiery'.

Jupiter cannot stay for one year in one nakṣatra; it traverses  $2\frac{1}{2}$  nakṣatras in a year. If at the time of the war Jupiter was near Viśākhā it could not have been near it for a year. Eleven months before that it would have been very near Citrā. If it was near Viśākhā at the time of the war and the Sun was in Jyesthā, it can hardly be correct to say that seven planets had come together in the sky (there being a distance of about two nakṣatras or about 26 degrees between the two) Even if we hold the meaning to be that Jupiter and Saturn had remained near Viśākhā for one year and are (now at the time of the war) fiery, that does not solve the difficulty. In the first place, it is not a natural construction. This meaning would leave the exact position of the two planets at the time of the war unspecified. But Jupiter and Saturn must be supposed to be in or near Jyesthā if the Sun was in Jyesthā at the beginning of the war. If Saturn was in Jyesthā at the time of the war it could have been one year in Viśākhā about two years before the war. What is the propriety of mentioning Saturn's position two years before the war? The relevant point is to state that position at the time of the war. Therefore it must be held that Bhīṣma 3.27 states their position at the time of the war and adds one more circumstance that they were there for one year.

Kaṇva 94. 51 says: 'Brhaspati having entirely covered Rohinī has become like the Sun and the Moon'. If at the beginning of the war Brhaspati was retrograde and was near Viśākhā, it passes one's understanding how in a fortnight it came to Rohinī. Mr. Karandikar suggests that Rohinī here is the name of Jyesthā as in the Tai S IV 4.10.1-3. Again in this explanation there are several difficulties. There is nothing to show that at the time of the Bhārata war or of the epic Jyesthā was called Rohinī. The Tai S does not employ the name Jyesthā in its list. It speaks of Rohinī once as having Prajāpati for its presiding deity and then as having Indra as the presiding deity. Jyesthā is well-known to the Mahābhārata and the word is employed by it in other passages. Further, if Brhaspati had covered Jyesthā it can hardly be correct or even useful (for the purposes of chronology) to say that Jupiter was near Viśākhā.

VENUS—

Bhīṣma 3.15 states that Venus<sup>1786</sup> having ascended (i. e. occupied) the Pūrvābhādrapadā nakṣatra shines charmingly and it looks up to Uttarābhādrapadā together with (?) The meaning of 'parikramya sahitā' is not at all clear. However the first half is as clear as possible. Venus was in Pūrvā Prosthapadā. If the Sun was in Jyesthā on Kārtika amāvāsyā, it is impossible that Venus could have been in the 8th nakṣatra from Jyesthā. Venus is never more than four nakṣatras from the Sun in the sky. This would completely knock on the head the principal statement that seven planets were near each other. Mr. Karandikar in desperation suggests that we should understand Pūrvāsādhā for 'Prosthapade Pūrve' and also that the word 'Prosthapade' was an interpolation inserted by some busy body later on. As I have frequently said above, this is a most unjustifiable way of dealing with the so-called astronomical data in the Mahābhārata. 'Prosthapade Pūrve' can never mean 'Pūrvāsādhā'. In the Tai. S. IV. 4. 10. 1-3, and the Tai. Br. I. 5. 1 and III. 1. 1 the word Prosthapadā is expressly employed for Pūrvā Bhādrapadā. Why should one word in a verse be held to be interpolated? Is it because it does not agree with one's hypothesis? In Śalya 11. 18 Venus and Mars are said to be in conjunction with the Moon. If the war started on Bharanī as the Bhāratasāvitrī says, then at the time of the mace-duel the moon might be in Jyesthā and therefore both Mars and Venus will have to be in Jyesthā. But this is opposed to two of the passages cited above referring to the position of Mars. If the war began on Jyesthā and Kārtika amāvāsyā, then on the 18th day the moon will be in Pūṣya or Āślēsā and both Venus and Mars would have to be in one of these two. In any case, if Venus was in Pūrvā-bhādrapadā at the beginning of the war, on the 18th day it can neither be in Jyesthā, nor in Pūṣya nor in Āślēsā. Besides, it is debatable whether Bhīṣma 3. 16 (where 'śveto grahaḥ' is mentioned) refers to Venus or not. Venus is often called 'Sita' in ancient astronomical works (e. g. in Brhat-samhitā 9. 42, 45).

SATURN— We have four statements about Saturn. In Udyoga 143 8 we read,<sup>1787</sup> 'A refulgent and malignant planet, Saturn, afflicts the nakṣatra presided over by Prajāpati (i. e. Rohini)', Bhīṣma 2 32 states, 'Saturn afflicts Rohini': Bhīṣma 3. 14 says, 'the nakṣatra presided over by Bhaga is covered and afflicted by Saturn'. Jupiter and Saturn are near Viśākhā (Bhīṣma 3.27 considered above). In the first three passages the root 'pīd' occurs and therefore it is possible to argue that some kind of aspect (drśā or vedhā) of the nakṣatra mentioned in the text is meant. But in the third passage both 'ākramya' and 'pīdyati' are used about the same nakṣatra. This makes that passage inexplicable in the usual way. The 'prajāpatya nakṣatra' must be Rohini as in the 2nd passage Rohini is expressly named. All authorities agree that Prajāpati is the deity of Rohini. 'Prajāpatya nakṣatra' cannot be taken to mean Mūla, since the presiding deity of Mūla is 'pitarah' in Tai. S. IV. 4. 10 1-3 and Nirrti (in the Tai. Br. I 5. 1 and in the Vedāṅga-jyotiṣa) and Prajāpati only in some later works. Bhaga is the presiding deity of Uttarā Phalgunī in the Tai. S. IV. 4. 10. 1-3 and Tai. Br. I 5. 1, and III. 1 1, while in the Vedāṅga-jyotiṣa (Rgveda, verse 25), Viṣṇu Dh. S. (78 16), Śān. Gr. (I. 26 9, SBE vol. 29 p. 53) Bhaga is the deity of Pūrvā Phalgunī. The 4th passage about Saturn being near Viśākhā has been already dealt with under Jupiter.

The above detailed statement about the astronomical passages of the Mahābhārata will induce any unbiased reader who has no axe to grind that they are hopelessly inconsistent and that no certain chronological conclusion can be drawn therefrom. In the above discussion I have generally not cited the various explanations indulged in by several scholars, as that would have involved me in a very lengthy discourse without any adequate benefit. To me it appears probable that the final redactor of the Mahābhārata had two or more sets of astronomical data about the war before him and without trying to examine and sift them he included them all in his work. The Bhārata-sāvitrī probably represents one (and a later) tradition about the positions of the planets at the time of the war. As I hold that either the Mahābhārata passages on the positions of the planets were interpolated at a very late stage or are hopelessly inconsistent I deem it unnecessary to enter upon an examination of the mathematical calculations made by several scholars to find out the date of the Bhārata war from the shifting of the solstices and the position of the planets.

Since only 5046 years have elapsed (in 1945 A. D.) from the beginning of the Kali age and as Kaliyuga extends to 432000 years according to Paurāṇic computations we are just on the threshold of the Kaliyuga and it is beyond one's comprehension to visualize what will happen towards the end of the vast period of about 427000 years that are still to pass before Kaliyuga ends. It is very small consolation to read in the Purāṇas in a prophetic strain that at the end of that colossal period Viṣṇu will be incarnated as Kalkin in a village Śambhala, will destroy all Mlecchas, śūdra kings and heretics and will establish dharma, so that the Kṛta age will then be ushered in. Here again as in almost all matters there are differences in the legend. The Vāyu (58 75-90) and the Matsya (144, 50-64) state that it will be Pramati Bhārgava who will be the avatāra of Viṣṇu and uproot the Mlecchas, heretics and śūdra kings, while Vāyu 98, 104-110 and 99 396-7, Vanaparva 190 93-97, Bhāgavata XII 2 16-23 state that Kalkin will conquer the Mlecchas, will become a universal emperor (cakravartin) of the dharma-yajña type and will start the Kṛta age. 'In some passages he is called Kalki (nom. of Kalkin) as in Vanaparva 190 93, Brahma 213, 164, Vāyu 99 396, Matsya 47. 248, Nṛsimha 54 3; while in others as Kalkiḥ (nom. of Kalki) as in Vāyu 98, 104, Kalki 2 28, Bhāgavata XII. 2 16, Matsya 47. 251. In some passages he is said to be the son of a brāhmana Visnu-yaśas who will be the head<sup>178a</sup> of the village called Śambhala (Bhāgavata XII. 2. 16, Viṣṇupurāṇa IV. 24. 26, Agni 16. 8, Nṛsiṃha 54. 3, Kalkipurāṇa 2. 34), while in other passages he is himself styled Viṣṇuyaśas (Vāyu 98, 104, Vanaparva 190. 93, Brahma 213. 164, Viṣṇudharmottara I. 74, 40)<sup>178a</sup>. In some places 1788a Various efforts have been made about finding germs of history in the legend of Kalkin. In I A vol 48 pp. 123-128 Prof. H. B. Bhude tries to show how Jain authorities about Kalkin are conflicting. Mr K. P. Jayaswal in I. A. vol 46 (for 1917) p. 145 holds that Kalkin must be identified with the great hero Yaśodharman who ruled over India from the Brahmaputrā to the Western Ocean and from the Himālaya to Mahendra and who conquered the Hun Mihirakula and made him pay homage to his feet as stated in the Mandasor Inscription (vide Gupta Ins. p. 149). Prof. Pathak on the other hand relying upon certain Jaina sources identifies Kalkin with Mihirakula himself (I A for 1918 at p. 19). Otin Schrader in Brahmayidyā vol I pp 17-27 discusses how the names Kalkin or Kalki came to be given to the saviour of India from Mlecchas, heretics and the like. Kalka means 'sin' or 'sediment' and Karka means 'a white horse'. Therefore he thinks that Kalkin is a form of karkin (one riding a white horse). Vide also N I A vol. IV pp 337-343 (on Kalki from the Kalkipurāṇa). It is probable that the distasteful accounts of Kaliyuga were put forth in the first centuries of the Christian era when the ancient varṇa-śrama-dharma had suffered a great set-back owing to the ascendancy of Buddhism and Jainism and the invasions of foreigners like the Śakas and Hūnas, that when Yaśodharman defeated the great Hun invader Mihirakula, people believed that the dark ages were at an end and that an era of perfect dharma was at hand. That Mihirakula was a most ruthless and blood-thirsty invader who in his long career of 70 years slaughtered myriads of men and women is stated by the Rājataranginī I 310 (which speaks of him as trikotihan) and 322 (which narrates that he slaughtered three crores of women of respectable birth together with their husbands, brothers and sons). Hiouen Tsiang (Beal's B. R. W. W pp. 171-172) narrates that Mihirakula either slaughtered or made slaves of nine lakhs of people in Gandhāra. Passages in a prophetic vein were added about the time of Yaśodharman to those already existing about the decline of dharma in Kaliyuga. This will of course necessitate that all passages about Kalkin in any work whatever were put in later than about 530 A D. There are two theories as to who defeated Mihirakula. Hiouen Tsiang's account gives the name of the victor as Bālāditya of Magadha (vide Beal's B. R. W. W. part I. pp. 167-171). On the other hand there are three inscriptions, the

he is said to have already flourished (Vāyu 98. 111, Matsya 47. 255), in other places the texts employ the future (Vāyu 99. 396, Bhāgavata XII 2. 16). This last discrepancy is probably due to the fact that the writers sometimes forget their role of prophets. Further, it has to be remembered that according to the Purāṇas the four yugas (and therefore the Kalki avatāra) have been repeated again and again. The Kalki-purāṇa (I. 2. 33 and I. 3 32-33) states that Kalki was a contemporary of Viśakhayūpa king of Māhismati, while the Vāyu (99. 312-314), Matsya (272. 4) and Viṣṇu (IV. 24) state that Viśakhayūpa was the 3rd of the Pradyota dynasty that preceded the Śiśunāga dynasty. Though the Kalki-purāṇa several times uses the past tense about Kalki, yet at the very beginning it says (I. 10) that what is narrated is an ākhyāna (story) of the future. It is interesting to note that in the Parnālaparvata-grahan-ākhyāna<sup>1788b</sup> of Jayarāma composed about 1673 A.D. Bahlol Khan,

No. 33 p. 142), and the Mandasor Stone Inscription of Yaśodharman Viṣṇuvar-dhana (Gupta Ins No 35 p. 150) in none of which is Bālāditya referred to. But in the Sarnath Stone of Prakatāditya, son of Bālāditya, another Bālāditya is referred to (Gupta Ins. No. 79 p. 284). In the Mandasor Stone Pillar Inscription (Gupta Ins p. 147) occur these words relating to Mihirakula 'नीचैस्तेनापि परमं प्रणतिभुजबलावर्जनाक्रिष्टमूर्ध्ना चूहायुषोपहारे-मिहिरकुलनृपेणाचितं पादयुग्मम्'. In the Mandasor Stone Ins (Gupta Ins. No. 35 at p. 153) lines 4 and 5 read अथ जयति नरेन्द्रः श्रीयशोधर्मनामा । आजौ जितौ विजयते जगतीं पुनश्च श्रीविष्णुवर्धनराधिपतिः स एव ॥. Dr. Fleet held that Yaśodharman and Viṣṇuvar-dhana were different, but the reasons he assigns are unconvincing and Jayaswal appears to be right in holding that Viṣṇuvar-dhana is the same as Yaśodharman (in 'Imperial History' pp. 39-41) and that Viṣṇuvar-dhana was the overlord of Bālāditya. It appears likely that the compilers of the extant Purāṇas combined the two principal parts of the two names Viṣṇuvar-dhana and Yaśodharman and that the conqueror of the Mlecchas was said to be Viṣṇuvar-dhana. Vide I H Q. vol. XII p. 531 and vol. XV pp. 302-306 for Yaśodharman, Viṣṇuvar-dhana and Mihirakula and Dr. R. G. Basak in 'History of North-East India' (1934) pp. 97-101 (who holds that Yaśodharman and Viṣṇuvar-dhana were two different Kings). Fargiter's 'Ancient Indian tradition' and 'Dynasties of the Kali age' and Dr. Pradhan's 'Chronology of Ancient India' may be read with advantage in connection with the historic material in the Purāṇas.

commander-in-chief of the Bijapur army, is made to say to Khawaskhan, the Vazir, as follows, 'In the Hindu sāstras some say that Kalkin, the 10th avatāra of Viṣṇu will be born and he will destroy the hordes of Yavanas. Shivaji appears to be the first harbinger of that Kalkin'.

Even though the Purāṇas are carried away by their over-zeal in condemning the moral and physical decline of the Kali age, almost all of them exhibit no verses about matters forbidden in the Kali age. We have to see when the topic of Kalivarjya attained prominence and what the matters are that were once practised by people without objection and that later on came to be prohibited or condemned.

The Āp. Dh. S (II 6. 14. 6-10) condemns the practice of giving all or most of the ancestral property to the eldest son as opposed to śāstras. The Āp. Dh. S (II 10 27. 2-6), after referring to the view of some that a woman when being married is given to the whole family of the bridegroom, condemns the practice of nyoga.<sup>1789</sup> Both these practices (of uddhāra and nyoga) are among those included in the texts on Kalivarjya. Among the earliest references in the smṛtis to practices once current, but forbidden in the Kali age is a passage of Brhaspati quoted by Aparārka p 97, where nyoga and the numerous secondary sons are said to be impossible owing to the decadence<sup>1790</sup> of spiritual power among men of the Dvāpara and Kali ages. Aparārka p 739 and the D M quote a passage of Śaunaka to the effect that sons other than the aurasa or dattaka are not allowed in the Kali age<sup>1791</sup> Prājāpati (verse 151) refers<sup>1792</sup> to the ancient practice of offering meat and wine in śrāddhas, but prescribes that these should be eschewed in the Kali age Vyāsa<sup>1793</sup> quoted in the Nirṇayasindhu and other works forbids the setting of the three vedic fires and of resorting to sannyāsa after 4400 years of Kali. The Laghu-Āśvalāyana<sup>1794</sup> smṛti (21 14-15) states that the two kinds of sons called Kunda and Golaka were permitted in former ages and had the saṃskāras performed on them, but are condemned in the Kali age. Viśvarūpa and Medhātithi, it is worth noting, do not quote a single verse about Kalivarjya. On Yāj. III. 30 Viśvarūpa tries to reconcile Parāśara III. 5 (saying that a brāhmana who is learned in the Veda and keeps the sacred Vedic fires becomes free from impurity in a day) with Parāśara III. 8 (that for ten days on impurity due to birth or death the food of that family becomes unpartakable for others). He does not accept the idea that the period of impurity is only one day for a learned man, but explains that Parāśara III. 5 is only an arthavāda meant for glorifying the study of Veda and the keeping of sacred fires. Among later commentators it is stated that the narrowing down of the periods of impurity on the ground of Veda study is forbidden in the Kali age. As this explanation is not offered by Viśvarūpa it is not unreasonable to infer that Viśvarūpa was not aware of the passage on this point quoted from the Ādityapurāṇa. Medhātithi<sup>1795</sup> also (on Manu IX. 112) refers to the opinion of some that the smṛti passages about niyoga and uddhāra-vibhāga were applicable only in bygone ages, since smṛtis are restricted to certain ages (vide Manu I. 85); but he refutes that view and explains Manu I. 85 by saying that the meaning is that the dharmas (i.e. qualities or natures of things) change from age to age as they do from season to season. From this it is clear that he did not accept that certain practices current in one age were forbidden in others. Vyāsaśara<sup>1796</sup> quotes a single verse which condemns the practice of niyoga, the giving of a special share to the eldest son and the killing of a cow in a sacrifice as not allowable in the Kali age. verse is said by the Sm. C II p 266 to have occurred in the Sangraha (i.e. the work called Smrtisangraha). The Sm. C quotes a verse of Kratu which forbids four acts in Kali, viz. niyoga, remarriage of a married girl, killing a cow in sacrifices and the taking of a jar.<sup>1797</sup> The Nāradya-mahāpurāṇa contains four verses about Kalivarjya stating that certain practices which were once allowed are forbidden in the Kali age, viz. sea voyage, the carrying of a jar of water, marrying a girl of a class lower than one's own, niyoga, killing of an animal in Madhuparka, offering of flesh in śrāddhas, the stage of a forest hermit, remarriage of a married girl when the marriage was not consummated, perpetual student-hood, human sacrifice, horse sacrifice, starting on the great journey, the sacrifice of a cow<sup>1798</sup>. Aparārka (pp. 15, 63) quotes one verse and a half from the Brahmapurāṇa about certain Kalivarjyas viz. perpetual student-hood, the carrying of a kaṇḍalu, marriage with a sagotra or sapinda girl, the killing of a cow, human sacrifice, horse sacrifice, drinking intoxicating liquors<sup>1799</sup>. This could not be traced to the Brahmapurāṇa, but the Prāyaścitta-tattva (p. 520) expressly states that these were cited from the Brahmapurāṇa in the works of Halāyudha, Śūlapāṇi and in the Gr̥hastharatnākara (i. e. from about the 12th century onwards). Aparārka (p. 98) quotes another passage from the Brahmapurāṇa<sup>1800</sup>, which condemns remarriage of women, niyoga, independence of women, on the ground that men in the Kali age are sinners. Aparārka (p. 233) quotes two verses from a smṛti (without name) the first of which prohibits six acts, viz. killing a cow in sacrifice, niyoga (of husband's brother), the performance of sattras, taking a water jar, use of wine (in sautrāmaṇi), being an ascetic (of the parāmahansa type) and the second prohibits five, viz. human sacrifice, cow sacrifice, the taking of a kamaṇḍalu, niyoga, and the remarriage of a girl whose marriage has not been consummated. Aparārka (p. 233) quotes a passage from the Mārkaṇḍeya recommending the offering of a golden vessel in place of the cow in Madhuparka and stating that Bhṛgu laid down that no animal was to be sacrificed in Kali. The Sm. C. (I p. 12) quotes a Purāṇa passage that 'the remarriage of a married woman, special share to the eldest son, the killing of a cow, niyoga and the taking of a kamaṇḍalu—these five are to be avoided in Kali'<sup>1801</sup>. Hemādri and the Sāhyādrī-khaṇḍa state, 'Agnihotra, the killing of a cow, śannyāsa, offering of meat in śraddha and raising of a son by the husband's brother—these five were<sup>1802</sup> to be avoided in Kali. Hemādri in Dānakhaṇḍa quotes a passage from the Garudapurāṇa in which seven matters are mentioned as forbidden in Kali, viz. Āśvamedha, Gosava, human sacrifice, Rājasūya, remarriage even of a girl whose first marriage was not consummated, the carrying of a kamaṇḍalu and procreation of a son on a widow by her husband's brother. The Smṛtyarthasāra (p. 2) mentions twenty-six Kali-varjyas without expressly citing the name of any work. In the Sm. C., the Caturvargacintāmaṇi of Hemādri (III. part 2 p. 666), the Par. M. Madanaratna (samayoddyota), the Udvāha-tattva (p 112), the Samaya-mayūkha, the Samayaprakāsa of Mitramisra (pp. 261-263), the Nirñayasindhu (III, pūrvārdha at end), Bhattoji on Caturvimsati-mata, the Smṛtīmuktāphala (varṇāśrama p. 13), the Smṛtikaustubha, the Dharma-sindhu (pp. 357-358) and some other works quote long passages from a purāṇa (which in some of them is specified as the Ādityapurāṇa) that mentions about 50 Kalivarjyas<sup>1803</sup>. There is a work called Kalivarjyavinirnaya or Kalivarjyanirnaya composed by Dāmodara elder brother of Nīlakantha (first half of 17th century A. D.), who in his Samaya-mayūkha refers to it. It quotes the Ādityapurāṇa, Brahmapurāṇa and other texts that are quoted here from Hemādri and other older digests<sup>1804</sup>.

The स्मृतिच., हेमाद्रि III 2 (p. 666), मदनरत्न and निर्णयसिन्धु (p. 367) read गोत्रान्मातुः सपिण्डाच्च विवाहः which means 'marriage with a daughter of the paternal aunt or with a girl who is a sapinda of one's mother i. e. maternal uncle's daughter'. The स्मृतिच. attributes these verses to आदित्यपुराण while निर्णयसिन्धु p. 286 ascribes them to आदित्यपुराण. The कलिवर्ज्यविनिर्णय reads गोत्रान्मातृसपिण्डात्, notices also the reading गोत्रान्मातुः सपिण्डाच्च and has a long note on this, citing and refuting various views. According to the मांसतत्त्वविवेक of विश्वनाथ p. 27 even the कल्पतरु quoted this ब्रह्मपुराण passage (reading गोत्रान्मातृसपिण्डाच्च)

In the passage quoted the several Kalivarjyas are not arranged on any systematic basis. Here, first of all a few Kalivarjyas that have a bearing on law will be mentioned and then the rest will be taken up one after another in the order in which they appear in the extract and lastly those that do not appear in that extract will also be dealt with. The first verse states that certain actions were discarded by the wise though this was unauthorized (by śruti or smṛti) after arriving at a convention among themselves through fear of the loss of dharma (if they were persisted in), because in the Kali age there is absence of good men. The last verse and a half again state that at the beginning of the Kali great men arrived at certain conventions and discarded certain actions in order to guard the people (against harm and sin) and (it is well known) that the conventions of good men are authoritative like Veda<sup>1805</sup>.

1. Giving a larger share of ancestral property or the whole of it to the eldest son (this is called jyesthānta or uddhāra or uddhāravibhāga). Vide pp. 624-631 above for this.<sup>1806</sup>

1803. Vide Appendix for the passage.

1805. Compare Āp Dh. S. I. 1. 1. 2-3 'धर्मज्ञसमयः प्रमाणम् । वेदाश्च' and Vas. I 4-5.

1806. The earliest reference in English to Kalivarjya matters is found in a translation of the passage of the Samayoddyota section of the Madanaratna contained in Sir William Jones' Works vol. VIII (ed of 1807), General Note, vide also Strangé's Hindu Law, vol. II pp 164-174 for reference in a modern work on Hindu Law to several topics of Kalivarjya.

2. Appointing the husband's brother (or a sagotra &c.) to raise issue on the wife of a sonless man. This is called niyoga and has been dealt with at length in H. of Dh. vol. II. pp. 599-607. It may be added here that in the K. V. N. there is a long discussion on the question whether an elder brother of the deceased could have been appointed to raise issue on his younger brother's widow and gives it as the opinion of some that he could not be so appointed, but that only a younger brother could be appointed to raise issue on his elder brother's widow. They rely on the Mit. on Yāj. I. 68 where 'devara' is paraphrased as 'kaniyān bhrāta'. The K. V. N. (folio 5 b and 6 a) relying on Manu IX. 62 and the words of the Mit. on Yāj. II. 127 (where Manu IX. 69-70 are cited and explained as 'devaras-tasya iyesthah kanistho vā') holds that any brother whether elder or younger than the husband could be appointed.

3. The admission of several kinds of secondary sons other than the aurasa and the dattaka. For this vide above pp. 647-653.

4. Remarriage of widows. This subject has been dealt with in H. of Dh. vol. II. pp. 608 ff. Some texts such as Vas. 17. 74 make a distinction between the remarriage of a woman whose marriage was not consummated and of a woman whose marriage was consummated, remarriage being allowed in the first case but not in the 2nd. The Kalivarjya texts forbid remarriage in both cases.<sup>1807</sup>

5. Intercaste marriages. This subject has been treated of in H. of Dh. vol. II. pp. 447-451. It has been shown by me above (pp. 599-600) that the decisions in 46 Bom. 871 and 55 Bom. 1 are based upon a misunderstanding about the real views of Nīlakantha.

6. Marriage with sagotra girls or with girls that are sapindas of the mother (such as the maternal uncle's daughter). Vide H. of Dh. vol. II. pp. 452-478 for prohibition on the ground refers to both kinds of widows viz बालिका (whose marriage is not consummated) and क्षतयोनि (whose marriage is consummated). The reading of देमाद्रे and कलिबर्चस्वि. (folio 1) 'बालिकाक्षतयोन्यास्तु (or—न्याश्च) is to be of sapinda relationship, pp. 497 ff. for prohibition on the ground of gotra and pp. 458-463 for marriage with maternal uncle's daughter. The custom of marrying the maternal uncle's daughter has persisted to this day in many castes in spite of the inclusion of it among Kalivarjyas. An inscription at Nāgārjunikonda (3rd century A. D.) shows that Virapurusa-datta, son of Śāntamūla, married three daughters of his paternal aunts (E. I. vol XX p. 1).

7. Slaying a brāhmana who comes as an ātatāyin in a properly conducted fight Vide H. of Dh. vol. II. pp. 148-151 and p. 517 above for this subject.

8. Awarding of fines against witnesses who depose in disputes between father and son<sup>1808</sup> It has already been seen (p 299) how ordinarily suits between husband and wife, father and son were not encouraged in ancient India. But when such a dispute came to the king's notice he could take action suo motu, as Nār. includes 'pitāputra-vivāda' among the miscellaneous matters (prakīrnaka verse 3) which the king was to set in motion. Even in ancient times this rule must not have been strictly enforced. As time went on and separation of father and son became frequent the rule must have appeared to be unreasonable. Vide Mīt. on Yāj. II. 32 referred to above in n. 418. Yāj. II. 239 (= Matsya 227. 198) prescribed a fine of 3 panas for those who (instead of composing the quarrel between father and son and being able to do so) undertake to be witnesses. Viśvarūpa read 'a fine of two hundred panas'. Viṣṇu Dh. S V. 120 prescribes a fine of ten panas. This shows that at the time of the Matsyapurāṇa this act was probably not included among Kalivarjyas.

9. Taking (or stealing) of corn even from one whose actions are lowly (i. e. even from a śūdra), when a brāhmana has been without food for six times (i. e. three days). Gaut. 18. 28-29, Manu XI. 16 and Yāj. III. 43 provide that when a brāhmana cannot earn his maintenance in a season of distress even in any one of the ways indicated in Yāj. III. 42 and has been hungry for three days he may steal or take away one day's food even from a low person such as a śūdra. It should be noted that this Kalivarjya text pointedly repeats the very words of Manu XI. 16 'bhaktāni sad-anaśnatā .. hartavyam hinakarmanah ). In ancient times theft of such a minor nature was permitted when the brāhmana was famished. But later times took a stricter view of the matter.

10. 'The admission to intercourse of a brāhmana who undertakes a sea voyage, even though he may have performed the penance prescribed for the same' (I. 7 in the appendix) Here the word used is 'dviṣasya'. It may mean either any person of the three higher castes or a brāhmana. If a man who has made a sea voyage took prāyaścitta he expiated only the sin, but did not become fit, according to this dictum, to be associated with by others. Whether the Vedic Aryans knew the sea has been doubted. Vide 'Vedic Index' on 'samudra', vol. II, pp. 431-433. The Nirukta II. 10 refers to the fact that a doubt arises whether the word 'samudra' in a particular vedic verse refers to the sea or to the sky. In some verses as in Rg. X. 98. 5 'he discharged divine rain waters from the higher to the lower samudra' both the meanings of 'samudra' (viz. sea, sky) are pointedly brought out. Vide also Rg. VII. 6. 7 (a samudrād-avarād-ā parasmāt). In Rg. VII. 95. 2 Sarasvatī is mentioned as going from the mountains to the sea. In Rg. X. 136. 5 the two seas, Eastern and Western, are mentioned (ubhau samudrāvā kseti yaśca pūrva utāparah). In Rg. VIII. 6. 4 it is said, 'all people bend down to him, as the sīndhus (rivers) flow to the Ocean.' Rg. I. 116. 4-5, X. 39. 4 and X. 143. 5 refer to the story that Āśvins saved Bhujyu from the waters of the sea.<sup>189</sup> The Atharvaveda XI. 2. 25 refers to eastern sea and northern sea. There is no doubt that in the Brāhmanas the sea was well-known. The Tai. Br. II. 2. 5. 6 remarks, 'there is no end to desire and also to samudra' (neva hi kāmasyāntosti na samudrasya). The Ait. Br. (40. 2) remarks 'just as the sea stands surrounding the earth' (tābhi rājānam parigrhya tisthati samudra iva bhūmim). It has already been seen that among the five practices peculiar to the north the Baud. Dh. S. (I. 1. 22) enumerates sea voyage (samudra-samyāna) as the last and condemns it. Baud. (II. 1. 51) places sea voyage at the head of grave sins (patanīyām) along with misappropriating a brāhmana's wealth kept as a deposit. The Mit.

on Yāj. III. 288 quotes the sūtra of Baud. Manu ( III. 158 and 166-167 ) provides that a brāhmana who had been on a sea voyage was sinful and was not to be invited at a śrāddha. But it is clear that Manu does not say that such a brāhmana altogether loses caste or that he becomes altogether unfit to be associated with; all that Manu provides is that such a brāhmana became unfit for invitation at a śrāddha. The Aśvanasasmṛti ( IV. pp. 525-526 ) declares that those who sell the Veda, who marry a widow, who undertake a sea voyage are pāta and are not to be invited at a śrāddha. These passages show that the prohibition against sea voyage affected only brāhmanas and even then they did not apparently become altogether unfit to be associated with. That brāhmanas crossed the ocean and went to such distant countries as Siam, Cambodia, Java, Sumatra and Borneo can be easily proved<sup>1810</sup>. E. I. vol. 17 p. 314 gives references to inscriptions from Borneo to show that brāhmanas from India migrated to that country about 400 A. D. That kings and merchants undertook sea voyages is also clear from several considerations. The Bāveru Jātaka ( vol. III No 339, Fausboll ) tells us that merchants from Benares went to Babylon in order to sell Indian goods. The 'Questions of Milinda' S. B. E. vol. 36 p. 269 refers to a ship-owner voyaging by sea to distant countries<sup>1811</sup>. The Rājataranginī refers to the sea voyage of an envoy of king Jayāpīḍa of Kashmir to Ceylon ( IV 503-506 ). Manu VIII. 157 prescribes that the king should allow that rate of interest which those who are adepts in sea voyages and land journeys and who understand what is required to be the interest at certain times and in certain places determine to be the proper one. Yāj. II. 38 provides for very high interest (20 per cent per month) from those who engage in trade by sea. Nār. IV. 179 says that a trader (saṃdru-vanik) who makes sea voyages is not a proper witness. The Vāyu (45. 78-80) and other purāṇas state that Bharata-varṣa<sup>1812</sup> has nine divisions called dvīpas, all of which are separated from each other by the sea and are not (easily accessible, that Jambudvīpa (India proper) is the 9th dvīpa and the other eight are Indra, Kaseru, Tāmraparnī, Gabhastimat, Nāga, Saumya (Siam?), Gandharva, Vārūna (Borneo?). Therefore Bharatavarṣa according to Paurāṇic Geography included modern India and also Greater India. None of the ancient works at least says anything against śūdras undertaking sea voyages; but now even śūdras, probably in their desire to emulate the brāhmana and rise higher in social esteem, think that sea voyage is forbidden to them also.

The whole passage is interesting and may be set out here: 'Just as a shipowner, who has become wealthy by constantly levying freight in some seaport town, will be able to traverse the high seas and go to Vanga or Takkola or China or Sovira, Surat or Alexandria or Coromandel coast or Further India or any other place where ships do congregate' &c ( S. B. E. vol. 36 p. 269 ).

When during the latter half of the 19th century some brāhmanas went to England on a political mission or for study and returned to India, the question whether after taking the appropriate prāyaścitta those brāhmanas could be associated with fully as before was referred to many orthodox and learned Pandits (such as the late Tārānātha Tarkavācaspati) and it is creditable to the Pandits and gratifying to note that many of them came to the conclusion that they could be associated with by others. The two principal texts referred to were those of the Brhan-Nārada-purāṇa (note 1798 above) and the one from the Ādityapurāṇa translated at the head of this particular Kalivarjya. Very interesting and hairsplitting arguments and explanations were advanced by the learned Pandits in 1872. Some of them may be noted here. As regards the Nāradya passage, it is argued that only that seavoyage is forbidden in the Kali, which was a righteous act (dharma) in former times. In Parāśara-smṛti XII. 58 the following prāyaścitta<sup>1813</sup> is prescribed for brāhmana murder: 'the sinner should be directed to perform the penance of going to the setu on the ocean; he should beg for alms on the road to the setu from men of the four classes that are free from improper acts, should walk barefooted and without umbrella, should declare his sin in all towns, villages and hamlets of cowherds on the way while resting there or in forests, sacred places and rivers and after reaching the sea and on seeing the setu, 100 yojanas long and 10 yojanas broad, constructed with heaps of stones at the bidding of Rāma by Nala he will get rid of the sin of brāhmana murder'. Here brāhmana murder being a most heinous offence it cannot be supposed that a mere sight of the setu from land would absolve the sinner and the words about the length and breadth of the setu would be otherwise meaningless. Therefore what is meant is that he must undertake a sea-voyage and go along the whole length and breadth of the setu in a vessel. Such a voyage was religious conduct in former ages, but in Kali this is forbidden. The word 'holding a kamandalu' (which also was prescribed as dharma in former ages) conveys that a similar or analogous practice is referred to in the immediately preceding words. The words 'dvijasyābhdhau &c.' are to be interpreted as follows: 'nauyātuh' is the genitive singular of 'nauyātr'. The affix 'tr' is not the ordinary 'tr' but it is 'trn' used in the sense of 'one who habitually does a thing', according to Pāṇini III. 2. 134-135.<sup>1814</sup> Therefore the words of the Ādityapurāṇa apply only to a dvija who habitually engages in a sea voyage either as a trader or as a helmsman or sailor. When Nārada (Dāyabhāga 21) states that even an aurasa son who is hostile to his father or who is patita (guilty of one of the five great sins) or is impotent or is 'apayātrita' he does not get a share of ancestral wealth, the Vyavahāramayūkha explains the last word as 'one who goes to another continent (other than Jambudvīpa) through mid ocean by means of a vessel for purposes of trade' and relies on this passage (dvijasyābhdhau &c.) for support. So according to the author of the V. Mayūkha only that dvija who constantly undertakes sea voyages for trade is here declared to be unfit for social intercourse though he may have taken a prāyaścitta, and not one who casually or once in a life undertakes a sea voyage. No text prescribes a prāyaścitta merely for going in a vessel on the sea. If that were intended in this passage the text would have read differently viz. 'samudre naugamanābhāve &c.' Even śiṣtas have been

crossing the sea to Ceylon for purposes of trade. In dramas like the Ratnāvalī (where the kañcukān Bābhavya undertakes a sea voyage and a merchant from Kauśāmbī is said to have gone to Ceylon) and in romances like the Daśakumāracarita frequent references are made to sea voyages to Ceylon and other countries. What is aimed to be hit when prāyaścitta for sea voyage is prescribed is the fact that on such voyages a man may give up for long such daily duties as the performance of sandhyā and may have come in very close contact with mlecchas as regards food etc. If he has done these two, then only he is not fit for intercourse even though he may have undergone a prāyaścitta. If he performs his daily duties wherever he may dwell and does not come in too close a contact with mlecchas he may have to perform no prāyaścitta, much less would he become unfit for social intercourse. The view of Medhātithi on Manu II. 23 that any country by itself is not unfit for the residence of an ārya, that if mlecchas overrun a country in India and permanently reside there it may become a mlecchadesa, that even a mleccha country, if it be conquered by an Indian king and if the system of the four varnas be introduced therein, would be a fit one for the performance of Vedic sacrifices, has already been noted (in H. of Dh vol. II p 16). It has to be remembered that the Ādiparva (85. 34) states that mlecchas and yavanas sprang from Anu and Turvasu, sons of Yayāti. The Sabhāparva notes that Bhīma made mlecchas dwelling beyond the seas and in Anūpa bring tribute (30. 25-27) and that mlecchas came to see the Rajasūya sacrifice along with Bhagadatta of Prāgyotisa (Sabhā 34. 9-10). The following propositions follow from the above discussion : (1) As the word 'dvija' is used a śūdra or a person of the mixed castes (sankīrna-jāti) does not become unfit for social intercourse even by habitually undertaking a sea voyage, but he may have to undergo a prāyaścitta, (2) a dvija who casually undertakes a sea voyage to a place outside India either at the king's bidding or for any other purpose has to undergo a prāyaścitta, but if he does so he becomes fit for social intercourse; (3) a dvija habitually undertaking a sea voyage for trade or as a sailor would become unfit for intercourse even after undergoing prāyaścitta. Manu IX. 314, when enlarging upon the devastating power of brāhmanas, mentions that the sea was made undrinkable by brāhmanas, which, according to Medhātithi and other commentators, has in view the story in Sānti 343 60-61. It is difficult to say whether this story had any influence in leading to the prohibition against sea voyage.

The Smṛtikaustubha explains that 'samudrayātrā' means 'tīrthayātrā' i e. pilgrimage to holy places beyond the sea and that is forbidden here. But this seems to be wrong, as stated by Kṛsnabhāṭṭa on the Nīr. S. The latter says that expiation is to be undergone only where a sea voyage is undertaken from worldly motives, but where a sea voyage has to be undertaken for reaching a holy place like the Śāṅkhoddhāra-tīrtha, it is an inseparable part of the pilgrimage and therefore there is no necessity to undergo a prāyaścitta.<sup>1815</sup>

11. 'The initiation for a sattra' (1. 8) Sattras were sacrificial sessions the duration of which varied from 12 days to a year, 12 years or even more. Only brāhmanas could perform them (Jai. VI 6 16-23). Acc. to Śābara on Jai. VI. 2. 1 persons who engaged in them must not be less than 17 nor more than 24. All of them were both sacrificers (yajamāna) as well as priests. Vide H. of Dh. vol. II pp. 1239-1246 for sattras. The prohibition against engaging in sattras is a clear indication that people had become tired of the ancient Vedic sacrifices, of the great demands they made on time and wealth and had begun to prefer other and easier modes of worship.

12. 'Carrying a jar of water' (1. 8). The Baud. Dh. S I 4 devotes numerous<sup>1816</sup> sūtras (1-27) to the subject of carrying an earthen or wooden jar full of water. Every snātaka was always to carry a jar of water from which he was to take water for śauca. He was to wash it with water and rub it with his hand. This was declared to be equal to paryagnikarana (encircling with fire for purification, vide H. Dh. vol. II p. 1120 n. 2501). He was not to go to another's house or to the village boundary or on a journey without the jar. Vas. 12. 14-17, Manu IV. 36, Yāj I. 133 contain similar provisions. Viśva-rūpa explains that the snātaka himself need not carry it and that it may be carried for him by another. It was an encumbrance, gave rise to unhygienic and unclean habits and so gradually it came to be dispensed with. This practice was regularised by declaring that in the Kali age a water jar was not to be carried at all. The Madanapārijāta (p. 16) explained that 'kamandaluvidhāraṇa' refers to perpetual studenthood, but this explanation cannot be accepted, because in the Nāradyapurāṇa (note 1798 above) both are mentioned separately. The K. V. N. (folio 3 a) notes that some explained 'kamandaluvidhāraṇam' as standing for 'dirghakālam brahmācāryam' (studenthood for long periods).

13. 'Starting on the Great Journey' (1.9). The Bṛhan-Nāradya-purāṇa (pūrvārtha 24. 16) also forbids this. According to Manu VI. 31 and Yāj. III. 55 a forest hermit, when he suffered from an incurable disease and could not perform the duties of his order, was allowed to start towards the north-east on the Great Journey (mahāprasthāna) till the body fell down to rise no more. Similarly, a man guilty of brāhmaṇa murder was allowed to meet death at the hands of archers or to throw himself head foremost into fire. Vide H. of Dh. vol. II. pp. 924-928 for Mahāprasthānagamana Aparārka<sup>1817</sup> (p. 877-879) quotes long passages from the Ādipurāṇa to the effect that if a man suffering from an incurable disease starts on the Great Journey in the Himālaya or commits suicide by entering fire or water or by falling from a precipice, not only does he not incur sin, but on the contrary he goes to heaven. It is rather inconsistent that the Ādipurāṇa (or Ādityapurāṇa) should in one place extol the starting on the Great Journey and in another place should forbid it in the Kali āga. The K. V. N. cites the instance of the Pāṇḍavas that are said to have started on the Great Journey. This makes one suspicious about the authenticity of the passages on Kalivarjya quoted from the Ādityapurāṇa by some and from Ādipurāṇa by others.

14. 'The killing of a cow in the sacrifice called Gosava' (I. 9).

There were various occasions on which in ancient times a cow was sacrificed. The Anūbandhyā cow killed at the end of the Udayanyā isti in Agnistoma has been referred to above (on p. 627 n. 1196). In the Madhuparka which was offered to an honoured guest a cow was either killed or let loose at the desire of the guest. Vide H of Dh. vol. II pp. 543-545. A cow was killed in one of the three or four astakā śrāddhas (vide Khādira gr. III. 41, Gobhila gr. III. 10. 16). Āp Dh. S. II. 7. 16. 25 states that if cow's flesh is offered in śrāddha for the *mītr*s, the latter are gratified for one year. There was a sacrifice called Gosava or Gomedha, that was an Ukthya in which the fees were ten thousand cows and which according to some could be performed only by a vaiśya (Kāt. Śr. 22. 11. <sup>1818</sup> 3-8). A bull was killed as an offering in the rite called śūlagava (vide H. of Dh. vol. II pp. 831-832). As flesh-eating came to be looked down upon, cow sacrifice became most abhorrent and Kalivarjya texts only register a prohibition which had been acted upon centuries before.

15. 'The employment of cups of wine in the Sautrāmanī' (I. 10).

The Sautrāmanī is not a soma sacrifice but it is a combination of an isth with an animal sacrifice. It was so called from 'sutrāmanī' (an epithet of Indra). Its peculiar characteristic was the offering of surā in cups. In modern times milk is offered in its place and Āp Śr. allowed it even in ancient times <sup>1819</sup>. It was included among the seven haviryajñas by Gaut. (VIII. 20). At the end of the Rājasūya it was performed or in Agnicayana or for one who suffered vomiting or purging from the excessive drinking of soma. For sautrāmanī and the preparation of surā in it, vide H. of Dh. vol. II pp. 1225-1228. Bhattoji (in com. on Caturvimsati-nata p. 53) and the Nirṇaya-sindhu construe this to mean 'having social intercourse with one who employs surā in Sautrāmanī' but this is not satisfactory. The Dharmasindhu explains as above (III. pūrvārdha p. 357) <sup>1820</sup>.

16. 'The licking of the Agnihotrahavani and the use of it even after it was licked' (1. 11). In the Agnihotra the sruva ladle is held in the right hand and the sruca called agnihotrahavani is held in the left and the milk is poured into the latter from the milk pot with sruva. After the Agnihotra homa is offered the agnihotrahavani is licked twice in order to take out the remnants of the milk and after wiping it with darbha blades it is used again. Ordinarily a vessel when it is once licked by a man cannot be used again in a religious rite unless proper purification is resorted to. But this did not apply to the Agnihotrahavani and camasas of soma. Vide H. of Dh. vol. II p. 1002, n. 2663 for agnihotrahavani, p. 1005 for its licking and p. 1177 (n. 2598) for the drinking of soma from the same camasa by the several priests. The licking of the agnihotrahavani and its use constitute really the subject of the prohibition.<sup>1821</sup>

III. 45-55 lay down elaborate rules for the stage of forest hermits. Vide H. of Dh. vol II pp. 917-929 for a description and remarks on sannyāsa to be made later on.

18. 'The narrowing down or curtailment of the periods of impurity depending upon the Vedic learning and the mode of life of a person' (1. 13). 'Agha' means 'āśauca'; 'vṛtta' (mode of life) refers to tending sacred fires or maintaining oneself in the way described by Manu IV. 7-10. The general rule about the period of impurity for a brāhmana on the death of a sapinda was stated by Gaut. 14. 1, Manu V. 59 and 83 to be that it was ten days and Angiras quoted by the Mit. on Yāj. III. 22 prescribes impurity for ten days for all varnas, but Manu V. 59 also spoke of the period being four days, three days or one day, which, acc to the Mit. on Yāj. III. 28-29, refers respectively to kumbhidhānya, one who has collected food for three days or one who collects nothing for the morrow. Dakṣa VI. 6 and Parāsara<sup>1822</sup> III. 5 both state that a brāhmana who keeps the Vedic fires and has studied the Veda becomes free from impurity in a day, one who has only studied the Veda (but does not tend sacred fires) becomes free in three days, while one devoid of both becomes free after ten days. Aparārka (p. 894) and Haradatta on Gaut. 14. 1 quote Brhaspati to the same effect. The Mit. remarks<sup>1823</sup> (on Yāj III. 28-29) that the curtailment of the period of impurity is not absolute but is restricted only to certain special matters viz. the receiving of gifts, the performance of Agnihotra, the study of the Veda and such matters in which distress would be caused if the period were not curtailed. This explanation clearly proves that Vijñāneśvara (end of 11th century) was not aware of the prohibition of the curtailment of the periods of impurity or treated it with scant respect. The curtailment of the period of impurity was laid down probably because curtailment led to confusion, since a person may claim to be learned, while his neighbours may not concede that claim.

19. 'Prescribing death as the penance for brāhmanas'.
(1. 14)

Manu XI. 89 provides that if a person intentionally murders a brāhmana there is no expiation for it. Manu XI 90 prescribes death by drinking boiling wine for the sin of drinking surā, while Manu XI. 146 provides<sup>1824</sup> that if a man knowingly drinks wine there is no expiation for it, but only death. The Viṣṇu-dharmasūtra (chap. 34) states that incest with the mother, daughter or daughter-in-law is atpātaka, such sinners have to enter fire and there is no other penance for this sin. Vide Gaut. 21. 7 also. Some smrtis held that there was no-prāyaścitta for certain grave sins except falling from a precipice or into fire. As a brāhmana's person became more and more sacred with the march of time, death ceased to be a penance for a brāhmana sinner, however grave the sin might be. But this did not apply to a ksatriya or any one else (other than a brāhmana).

1824. मतिपूर्वमनिर्द्वैद्यं प्राणान्तिकमिति स्थितिः । मनु XI 146 Most of the commentators of Manu explain this half differently as meaning 'a penance destructive of life should not be prescribed'. But this explanation is opposed to Gaut 21. 7 (श्रोत्रि प्रथमान्यनिर्द्वैद्यानि मनु.) and to Medhātithi Vide कलिवर्णने folio 7a 'यत् कैश्चिद् व्यासपात मतिपूर्वं .. स्थितिरिति मधुराभ्यासरो-धाद् सन्ध्याविषयो मरणान्तिकं नोपदेष्टव्यं तैस्तु एहस्पयाश्चित्तवधधाकर्णचित्तदुष्टेयमिति तन्मन्वं मनुस्मृत्यैव द्युगवियस्ये मनाणाभावाद् ।'.

20. 'Pollution through contact with a sinner' (1. 15). Manu XI. 180 (= Śānti 165. 37 = Baud. Dh. S. II. 1. 88),<sup>1825</sup> Visnu Dh. S. 35. 2-5 provide that if a person continues for one year in close association (samsarga) with one guilty of the grave sins (enumerated in Manu XI. 54), in respect of occupying the same conveyance or seat with him or dining in the same row with him he becomes patita; but he becomes patita immediately if he officiates as a priest for such a sinner or performs his upanayana for teaching him the sacred Gāyatri and the Veda or if he enters into a matrimonial alliance with him. Parāśara (I. 25-26) states that in the Kṛta age a person became patita by speaking with a patita, in Tretā by seeing him, in Dvāpara by partaking of food prepared in his house, but in Kali by actually committing a (sinful) deed and that when a grave sin was committed by a man, in the Kṛta age the whole district in which he lived was to be abandoned, in Tretā the village, in Dvāpara his family alone and in Kali only the perpetrator.<sup>1826</sup> Parāśara (XII. 79) no doubt<sup>1827</sup> says that 'sins (i. e. pollutions are caused) are transferred, as a drop of oil (spreads) on water, by sitting or sleeping together or by using the same conveyance, by speaking with or by dining in the same row with a sinner'; but this only means that to associate with a sinner is bad, but it does not mean that to associate with a patita immediately makes the associator himself a patita. The Mit. on Yāj III. 261 quotes Devala<sup>1828</sup> and Vṛddha-Bṛhaspati to the effect that samsarga arises in nine ways viz. by talk, by touch, by breathing the same air (i. e. by being in the same room), by being in the same conveyance or on the same seat or bed, by dining in the same row, by being a sinner's priest or vedic teacher or entering into matrimonial alliance with him. The Par M. says that Parāśara held the view that there was no pāṭhya by the various kinds of contact in Kali and so provided no prāyaścitta for samsarga. The Nirṇayasindhu<sup>1829</sup> and Bhattoji make similar remarks. The Udyāhatattva says that Parāśara I. 25 is to be interpreted in this way that merely speaking or touching a patita or receiving money from him does not make another liable to any prāyaścitta, but that if the association with a patita goes quite beyond these, then sin may be incurred by association. So almost all the digests are agreed that the rigour of the very strict rules about samsarga in Manu and Baud. was modified by declaring that speech with or sight of a sinner involved no sin in Kali.<sup>1830</sup>

21. 'Undergoing (secret) expiation for the grave sins (mahāpātakas) except theft' (I. 15). Hārta (q by Par. M. II<sup>1831</sup> part 2, p 153) prescribes secret expiation for a brāhmaṇa who has studied dharmasāstra and committed a sin without anyone knowing it. Gaut. (chap. 24) prescribes certain expiations to be undergone secretly (without any third person knowing of such performance) for even mahāpātakas such as brāhmaṇa murder, drinking surā, incest and theft of gold. Vas. (chap. 25) also does the same and states (25. 2) that only those who have kept the sacred vedic fires, who are disciplined and old or learned are entitled to secret expiations for sins and not other people. The Visnu Dh. S. 55 deals with secret expiations. Parāśara IX. 61 (last verse) laid down<sup>1832</sup> the general rule that one should openly declare one's sin. The Kalivarjya text provides that secret expiation is allowed as regards only theft among the mahāpātakas in the Kali age, though in earlier ages it was allowed as to other mahāpātakas also. The Nirayasindhu says that secret expiation is allowed only to brāhmanas. According to the Dharmasindhu, in the Kali age if a man is guilty of the murder of a brāhmana or of other mahāpātakas he does not avoid the consequences of falling into Hell when he undergoes an expiation but he becomes only fit for social intercourse, while as regards theft of gold (a mahāpātaka) by undergoing prāyaścitta he avoids the fall into hell and also becomes fit for social intercourse. The Kalivarjyavinirnaya appears to hold that all secret expiations are forbidden in Kali.<sup>1833</sup>

22. 'The act of offering an animal with the recital of Vedic mantras to the bridegroom, to a guest and in honour of pitrs' (1 16)<sup>1834</sup> Madhuparka was offered in ancient times on several occasions and to several persons such as to ritviks at sacrifices, to the king, to a snātaka, to one's ācārya, father-in-law, paternal or maternal uncle and to a bridegroom. Vide H. of Dh. vol. II. pp 542-546 for details about Madhuparka. Originally a cow or a bull was killed for an honoured guest, later on when the cow came to be extremely sacred the flesh of some other animal was offered; when flesh-eating itself came to be looked down upon then only pāyasa and other vegetarian eatables came to be prescribed. Vide H. of Dh. vol. II pp. 777-782 on flesh-eating. This half line forbids the offering of flesh to a bridegroom or to an honoured guest (in madhuparka) and the feeding of 1833. The कलिर्गर्ग्ये (folio 8a) notes, 'अत एव बृहन्नारदीयविष्णुपुराणादि-पु-द्यादयन्ति मयत्नेन स्वर्गदोषं पापकर्मिणः । रहस्यमेव कुर्वन्ति प्रायश्चित्तकार्या कलौ ॥ मन-छुद्धिर्विहीनाना निष्कृतिर्न ततो भवेत्—इत्यादि तत्र तत्र निन्दामक्रमे रहस्यव्रतमेव निन्दितम् ।' It should be noticed that the Nirayasindhu and a few others read ससर्गदोषस्तेषामहपापकनिष्कृतिः as one word meaning 'secret expiation for mahāpātakas other than theft and other than association with those guilty of grave sins'. The स्मृत्यर्थसार (p 2), मद पा p. 16 and उद्गाहस्तव (p. 112) read this half line as ससर्गदोषः पापेषु मधुपर्कपशोर्घृणः. 'बृहन्नारदीय-नारायणपुराणेषु प्रायश्चित्तेन नरकनिवृत्तिर्न भवति किं विह लोके व्यवहार्यतामात्रं कलौ भवति । स्वर्गस्तेषादिषु तु प्रायश्चित्तेन नरकनिवृत्तिर्यवहार्यता च । धर्मसिन्धु III, पूर्वार्ध p. 358.

1834. उपाकरण has a technical sense. It means 'touching the animal to be sacrificed with several mantras'. Mann V 7 employs the word in that sense and Kullūka comments, 'पशुयागादौ मन्त्रबहूलेन पशोः स्पर्शनमुपाकरणम्'. The कलिर्गर्ग्ये. (9a) quotes देवतानादिशेद्धुर्मन्त्रा उद्गृह्यपाकरोमि. With reference to śāṅkhya the word upākaraṇa is used in a secondary sense and not in the literal sense. For the upākaraṇa mantra अहुर्मन्त्रं करोमि, vide आश्व य. I 11. 2

brāhmanas with flesh at śrāddhas. Comparatively so late a writer as Yāj (I. 258-259) extols the high gratification that the Manes feel when flesh of various animals is offered in śrāddhas. This one prohibition includes in itself several prohibitions that are separately mentioned in other texts such as 'govadha' (in notes 1797 and 1799), the killing of an animal in a Madhuparka (in n. 1798), 'gavāmbha' and 'palapaitrka' (in note 1802). It is noteworthy that even so late as the first half of the 17th century Viśvanātha, a great logician, takes up the cudgels on behalf of flesh-eating by brāhmanas in sacrifices, śrāddha, madhuparka, in danger to life and when ordered by a brāhmana and charges those who totally forbid flesh-eating with being the followers of the doctrines of Bauddhas, while the latter at the same time prescribe expiations for even murderers of brāhmanas through greed of money and marry their maternal uncle's daughters or other sapindas of their mother, though both of these latter are forbidden by the Kalivarjya texts. <sup>1835</sup>

23. 'Association with those that are guilty of intercourse with women who are not of the same varṇa, even though the former may have undergone proper expiation for the lapse' (I. 18). There was great divergence of views as regards the prāyaścitta for adultery by a male with a female of the same class, of a higher class or of a lower class. Further the ancient sūtras were rather hard on the guilty parties, the harsh rules being relaxed by later smṛti writers. For example, Gaut. 23. 14-15 and Vas. 21. 1-3 prescribe for a male of a lower caste having intercourse with a woman of a higher caste death in various ways. If a brāhmana had sexual intercourse with a cāṇḍāla or śvapāka woman Parāśara (X. 5-7) prescribes that he has to undergo a fast for three days, tonsure of the head together with the top knot, three Prājāpatyas, Brahmakūra, feeding brāhmanas, constant recital of the Gāyatrī, gift of two pairs of cows and then he becomes pure, while a śūdra doing the same had to undergo the expiation of one Prājāpatya and had to make a gift of two cows. If a person of a low caste has intercourse with a woman of a higher caste (e g. a śūdra has intercourse with a brāhmana woman) Samvarta (verses 166-167) prescribes the expiation of subsisting for a month on cow's urine and yāvaka (barley gruel) for him. If a brāhmana commits adultery with a śūdra or cāndāla woman Samvarta (verses 169-170) prescribes the expiation of cāndrāyana, while Parāśara (X. 17-20) prescribes a far more severe expiation. The present text prescribes that, even after undergoing expiation, men guilty of intercourse with women of castes other than their own cannot be allowed to have social intercourse with their castemen. The Dharmasindhu<sup>1836</sup> says that śūdras that have intercourse with brāhmana or other women of a higher caste are hereby declared to be unfit for social intercourse even after they undergo expiation. This no doubt made for strictness in morals, but it also led to the preservation of caste exclusiveness.

24. 'Abandonment of a mother (or other woman who is to be honoured owing to relationship) because she has had sexual intercourse with one of low class' (I. 19).

The provisions of the sūtras and smrtis on the subject of expiation for adultery by women varied from time to time. Gaut 23. 14 and Manu VIII. 371 prescribe that a woman who has intercourse with a man of low caste is to be punished by the king with being devoured by dogs. But other smrtis and Manu himself (XI. 177) are not so harsh, but are rather humane in their treatment of adulteresses. Manu XI. 176 says that the husband should keep confined to one apartment his corrupt wife and compel her to perform the expiation which is prescribed for males in cases of adultery. Manu XI. 59 and Yāj III. 235 regard adultery by a male (pāradārya) as an upapātaka and Manu XI. 117 and Yāj. III. 265 prescribe cāndrāyana as an expiation for all upapātakas. Vas. XXI. 12 prescribes that the wives of men of the three higher castes who are guilty of adultery with a śūdra may be purified by an expiation if no child is born of the intercourse but not otherwise. Yāj I. 72 provides that a woman becomes free from the taint of adultery when she has her monthly illness after the adultery but if she conceives in adulterous intercourse she may be abandoned. The Mit. on Yāj. I. 72 states that both Yāj. and Vas. are to be understood in the same sense and abandonment does not mean driving out of the house but only not allowing her to participate in religious acts and not having sexual intercourse with her. Vas. XXI. 10 states that only four kinds of women are to be abandoned, viz. one who has intercourse with the husband's pupil or with the husband's guru, one who attempts to kill her husband or one who commits adultery with a man of a degraded caste. Yāj. ( III. 296-7 ) provides that to women that are patita the same rules apply as to men, but they should be given food, raiment and protection and that intercourse with a man of low caste is one of the three gravest sins for women. Vide Mit. on Yāj. III. 297. The present text states that a woman ( such as a mother ) who is entitled to honour from a person because of her relationship ( as mother, elder sister etc. ) is not to be abandoned and cast on the street by him, although she may be guilty of adultery with a degraded or low caste man, in spite of Vas. XXI. 10 and other texts ( such as Br. ),<sup>1837</sup> That is, this text was more humane to such women than ancient texts. Kṛṣṇa-bhaṭṭa explains that 'gurustriyāḥ' means 'of a brāhmana woman'. Vide H. of Dh. vol. II pp. 571-573 for further remarks on adulterous women. Āp. Dh. S. I. 10. 28. 9 requires the son always to serve and wait upon the mother even though she may be patita. Atri<sup>1838</sup> (195-196) and Devala (50-51) contain two verses ( almost in the same words ) which are lax as compared with other ancient texts. They say: 'If a woman conceives through intercourse with a male who is not of her caste, she becomes impure till her delivery. When she is delivered or she has her monthly illness after the intercourse she becomes like pure gold'. Atri (197-198) further provides that whether a woman willingly has sexual intercourse or is deceived or is enjoyed against her will or in secret, she should not be abandoned; one should wait till the monthly illness and she becomes purified by that illness'. This comparative laxity of the later smrtis of Devala and Atri is remedied by this Kalivarjya text which forbids abandonment of only such women as the mother, but allows the abandonment of others when guilty of intercourse with a male of low caste. Devala prescribes expiation by sāntapana in the case of those women that are raped by mlecchas and conceive (verses 47-49) Vide also Atri 201-202 The Sm Kau restricts this half verse to the mother alone. Parāśara (X 24-25) prescribes that if a woman be raped once she becomes free from pollution by undergoing Prājāpatya after she has her monthly illness and in other cases of rape she has to undergo Sāntapana.

25. 'Sacrificing one's life for the sake of another' (I. 20). The Vismu Dh. S III. 45 states <sup>1839</sup> that those who are killed in saving the life of a cow, a brāhmana, the king, a friend, one's wealth and one's wife go to heaven and XVI. 18 provides that even those (untouchables) who are outside (the pale of the four varnas) and sacrifice their life for brāhmanas, for cows and for women and children attain heaven The Ādityapurāna quoted in Rājadharmakāṇḍa (p. 91) has a similar verse. The Samaya-mayūkha and Bhattoji quote a smṛti, 'one should at once sacrifice one's life for cows and brāhmanas'.<sup>1840</sup> This text forbids self-sacrifice of one's life simply for the promised reward of heaven in the cases specified. The K. V. N. (folio 9b) offers two more (rather far-fetched) explanations of this phrase, one of which is 'offering one's services as a serf to another'. This is prohibited to members of the three twice-born classes in Kali, but not to the śūdras, acc to K. V. N.

26. 'Offering (of food) to another that remains after one has partaken of it' (I 20). In the Madhuparka the honoured guest used to partake of a part of the offering of honey, milk and curds and was to give the remainder to a brāhmana (or a son or a younger brother) This is prohibited by this Kalivarjya text Vide H. of Dh. vol. II. p. 544 for this practice. Āp Dh. S. (I 1. 4. 1-6) provides that the pupil may partake of the leavings of his teacher's food, but the teacher should not give him honey or meat or other food which will be opposed to the observances of a vedic student The Nirnayasinḍhu reads 'uddistasyāpi varjanam'<sup>1841</sup>, which means 'not accepting what has been donated.' Yāj. I. 213 says that if a person worthy of accepting a gift does not keep it for himself (but passes it on to others), he secures the highest worlds obtained by those who make generous gifts Bhattoji gives another explanation. Vas (14. 21) forbids a man to eat the remnants of his own food or to eat food that comes in contact with the leavings of food. This Kalivarjya text sets aside for the Kali age the prohibition contained in Vas. 14. 21 (acc to Bhattoji) The K. V N. (folio 10 a) states that this is the explanation given by some, but does not approve of it. The Sm Kau. gives yet another but extremely far-fetched explanation.<sup>1842</sup> These several explanations of the same half verse indicate how some of the Kalivarjya texts are comparatively recent and have no settled meaning even according to comparatively late writers of digests.

27. 'The resolve to offer worship (throughout life) with various details to a certain idol (1. 21)

It is not easy to see why such a resolve should have been prohibited. Therefore this explanation given by Bhattoji, K. V. N. (folio 10 a), the Samayamayūkha and others is not satisfactory. It is better to accept the explanation of the Nir S. that this forbids the undertaking of the worship of a particular image for wages Aparārka (pp. 450 and 923) quotes a smṛti text defining a devālaka as a brāhmana who performs the worship of an image for wages for three years and who thereby becomes unfit to officiate at śrāddhas.<sup>1843</sup> Manu III. 152 declares the devalaka to be unfit for being invited for śrāddhas or rites in honour of gods and Kullūka quotes Devala to the effect that one who maintains himself on the treasury of a shrine is called devalaka. It is remarkable that Vṛddha-Hārīta (VIII. 77-80) says that only the worshippers of Śiva for wages are called devalaka and those of Viṣṇu are not. Acc. to the Sm. Kau. what is forbidden is the resolve to worship an image for securing a direct vision of the Deity.<sup>1844</sup> This is rather pedantic and far-fetched.

28. 'Touching the bodies of those (who are impure on the death of a relative) after the collection of the bones' (1. 22). The day on which the bones were to be collected after the body was cremated differed greatly according to various writers. The Mit. on Yāj. III. 17 notes that according to Samvarta<sup>1845</sup> (verse 38) the bones may be collected on the first, third, seventh or 9th day, that the Viṣṇu Dh. S (19. 10-11) prescribes the 4th day for it and recommends the casting of them into the Ganges, that some did it on the 2nd day and that therefore everyone should follow his own Grhyasūtra. The Mit. on Yāj. III. 18 quotes Devala to the effect that, after the lapse of one-third of the period of impurity prescribed for members of the four varnas (as in Yāj. III. 22), persons who lost relatives become touchable, that members of the four varnas become touchable in three, four, five and ten days respectively. Samvarta (verses 39-40) states that, after the collection of bones, touching those who are under pollution due to death is allowed on the 4th, 6th, 8th and 10th day respectively in the case of brāhmanas, ksatriyas, vaiśyas and sūdras. The present Kaliyarjya text forbids this and becomes stricter as to the rules about impurity.

The animal in a srauta sacrifice was to be killed by choking it and strangling it. The person who did so was called samitr. Different views were entertained as to who was to be the samitr. Acc. to Jai. III. 7. 28-29<sup>1846</sup> the adhvaryu himself was to be the samitr; the usual opinion was that he was to be some one other than the ritviks. The Asv. Śr. (XII. 9. 12-13) shows that he may be a brāhmana or a non-brāhmana. For further details vide H. of Dh. vol. II. pp 1121-22, n. 2504. As animal sacrifices themselves came to be looked down upon or even forbidden, this text forbids a brahmana from being a samitr.

30. 'The sale of the soma plant by brahmanas' (I. 23).

Soma beverage was to be drunk only by brāhmanas. The soma plant had to be purchased and there was a symbolic haggling for it. The vendor of soma in ancient<sup>1847</sup> times was, acc. to Kāt. Śr. VII. 6. 2-4 and Āp. Śr. X. 20. 12, either a brāhmana of Kutsa gotra or any brāhmana or a sūdra.<sup>1847</sup> In later times, though Manu XI. 7 (= Śānti. 165. 7) and Nār. (dattāpradānika 7)<sup>1848</sup> allow a brāhmana who has wealth sufficient for the maintenance of himself and his dependents for three years or more to perform a soma sacrifice, yet Manu III. 158, Yāj. I. 165 and Vas. 14. 3 hold that a brāhmana who sells the soma plant is unfit to be invited at a śrāddha and that one should not partake of food at his house. Manu X. 88 forbids a brāhmana to sell water, arms, poison, soma &c. Vide H. of Dh. vol. II. pp 1141-1143 for purchase of soma and the dramatic haggling for it.

food of these four and of his own barber. Haradatta on Gaut. 17. 6 and Aparārka (p. 244) remark that a brāhmana can take the food of these persons among śūdras only in the event of extreme calamities. From this it appears that up to the 12th century A. D. the peremptory prohibition contained in this text was either unknown or was not much respected. The exclusiveness of caste in matters of food and marriage was made more strict by the Kalivarjya texts. Vide above (pp. 869 and 885) as to how Parāśara himself was overruled by this text.

32. 'Pilgrimages to very distant holy places' (1. 26).

A brāhmana was called upon to tend his Vedic or grhya fires. If he went to distant places on pilgrimage this duty would be interfered with. It is provided by Ap.<sup>1850</sup> Sr. IV 16. 18 that even when on a journey the agnihotrin has, after turning his face in the direction of his fire altar, to go mentally over the whole procedure of his daily fire worship and the Darśa-pūrnāmāsa. The Gobhila-smṛti II. 157 says the same. The Smṛtikaustubha<sup>1851</sup> says that this prohibits pilgrimage to holy places beyond the sea or on the borders of Bharatavarṣa. This text prohibits a brāhmana from going to distant places on pilgrimage, but it does not prevent him from undertaking a journey for earning wealth for performing sacrifices. K. V. N. (folio 10a) quotes a text of Satyavrata to this effect.

33. 'The rule that a pupil should habitually observe the same behaviour towards the wife of the guru as towards the guru himself' (1. 27). Ap. Dh.<sup>1852</sup> S. I. 2. 7. 27, Gaut. II. 31-34, Manu II. 210, Viṣṇu Dh. S. 32. 1-2 prescribe that a student should perform the same acts of honour and obedience towards the wife or wives of his teacher as towards the teacher (except holding her feet in doing obeisance and eating the leavings of the food). As students were often grown-up young men and the teacher's wife might often be a young lady, Manu II. 212, 216, 217 ( that are the same as Visnu Dh. S. 32. 13-15 ) provide that a pupil full twenty years old should not show honour to the young wife of his teacher by clasping her feet, but that he may prostrate himself on the ground before the teacher's young wife in performing obeisance and that he may hold her feet in obeisance only (once) when he returns from a journey. This text accepts the principle underlying the special rules laid down by Manu and Visnu and prohibits the daily touching of the feet of the guru's wife on the part of the pupil. The Sm<sup>1853</sup> Kau. and Dharmasindhu ( III p. 353 ) hold that this sets aside the rule laid down in Yāj I 49 that a perpetual student may stay till his death with his teacher or with the teacher's son or ( in default of both ) with the teacher's wife.

34. 'The modes of maintenance conceded to brāhmanas in times of distress ( or calamity )' ( I. 28 ).

The special modes of maintenance prescribed for brāhmanas were receiving gifts, teaching the Veda and officiating as priests ( Gaut. X. 2, Āp. Dh. S. II. 5. 10. 5, Manu X. 76, I. 88, Vas. II. 14, Yāj. I. 118 ). But it was recognised from very ancient times that if a brāhmana could not maintain himself by following the above modes of earning wealth he could in a season of distress pursue the avocations peculiar to a ksatriya or vaiśya ( Gaut. VII. 6-7, Baud. Dh. S. II. 2. 77-81, Vas II. 22, Manu X. 81-82, Yāj. III 35 )<sup>1854</sup>. Vide H. of Dh vol. II. pp. 118-133 for detailed treatment of this matter and for the restrictions imposed even when brāhmanas were allowed to follow the avocations of ksatriyas and vaiśyas. The Kalivarjya prohibition is merely one on paper. From ancient times till now brāhmanas have pursued all sorts of avocations and hardly any importance has been attached to this dictum.

35. 'Not accumulating any wealth ( or grains ) for the morrow ' ( I. 28 ). Manu IV. 7 and Yāj. I. 128 provide that brāhmanas are of four kinds, viz. those who accumulate grain of the capacity of a kusūla, those who accumulate grain of the capacity of a kumbhī, those that accumulate grain enough to satisfy their needs for three days and those who do not collect grain even for the next day. The smrtis prescribe that each later one is superior in merit to each preceding one. The commentators differ as to the meaning conveyed by kusūladhānya (some holding that it means one who has accumulated grain for three years, while others say it means one who has grain for 12 days) and kumbhidhānya (a person accumulating grain for a year, or grain for six days). Vide H. of Dh. vol. II. p. 110, note 234 and p. 641 note 1502. The Mit. on Yaj. I. 128 says that the advice not to accumulate corn even for three days or one day is not addressed to all brāhmanas, but to those only who are called yāyāvara<sup>1855</sup>. This explanation of the Mit. indicates that the Kaliyarjya text on this point was either not known to the Mit. or was not much thought of by it. The Kaliyarjya text provides that the ideal of extreme poverty and absence of acquisitiveness for brāhmanas was not to be insisted upon in the Kali age.

36. 'The acceptance of the kindling of a log of wood (i. e. setting up sacred Vedic fire) at the time of the homa of Jātakarma for the purpose of securing long life to the child born to a person' (I. 29). The aranis are two logs of Asvattha tree from which fire is produced by attrition, which (fire) is used for kindling the gārhapatya fire. In certain śākhās, it is the practice to kindle fire from aranis and to use it for the homa in the Jātakarma rite. This fire was to be used in the subsequent rites for the child such as cūḍā, upanayana, marriage. It was supposed that this enabled the child to live long.<sup>1856</sup> The Sam K. quotes a pariśista text to this effect.<sup>1857</sup>

37. 'Constant journeys by brāhmanas' (I. 30). The Mahābhārata (Śānti 23. 15)<sup>1858</sup> says, 'As a snake swallows mice hiding in holes, the earth swallows two persons viz. a king who does not fight (an invader) and a brāhmana who does not engage in travel' (for acquiring learning from famous teachers) This text only forbids taking aimlessly to long journeys but not those for study or for religious purposes.

38. 'Blowing on fire with the mouth' in order to kindle it into flames (I. 30). Gaut. IX. 32, Manu IV. 53 and Brahmapurāṇa 221. 102 forbid the blowing on fire with the mouth (as in doing so it is likely that drops of saliva from the mouth may fall into the fire and pollute it). Haradatta on Āp. Dh. S. I. 5. 15. 20 notices that in the Vājasaneyi Śākha it is said that fire should be kindled into flames by blowing upon it with the breath from the mouth since it sprang from the mouth of the Creator (as stated in the Puruṣasūkta, Rg. X. 90. 13). Therefore, acc. to Haradatta and the Gobhila-smṛti (I. 135-136)<sup>1859</sup> the śrauta fire could be kindled by blowing upon it with the mouth, but smārta fire or ordinary fire should not be kindled in that way (but only by using a fan or a bamboo cylindrical piece). The Kalivarjya text forbids blowing with the mouth even on śrauta fire.

39. 'Allowing social intercourse to women who have become polluted by rape and the like (when they have performed prayaścitta) as prescribed in the sūtras' (I. 31).<sup>1860</sup> Vas. 28. 2-3 state, 'when a woman is polluted by being raped or kidnapped by a thief, she should not be abandoned; one should wait till her monthly illness (making her undergo certain expiations till then) and she becomes pure after it.' Ātri (V. 2-3) has the same verses, which are quoted (from Vas.) by Viśvarūpa on Yāj. III. 256 (p. 133, Tri. ed.) and explained at great length. The Matsyapurāṇa 227. 126 is liberal enough to say that the man who commits rape should be punished with death but the woman raped incurs no blame. Parasara (X. 27) provides that if a woman is raped by an evil-doer only once she becomes pure by undergoing the Prajapatya expiation and after the following monthly illness. Even so late a smṛti writer as Devala provides that if a woman of any class is raped by mlecchas and she conceives she can be purified by the expiation of Śāntapana.

But this text is harsher on such innocent and unlucky women when it says that they cannot be restored to social intercourse even after undergoing expiation.

40. 'Begging of food by a sannyāsin from members of all varnas (including śūdras) according to the rules of the śāstra' (l. 32). The Sm. M. p. 201 (on varnāśrama) quotes Kathaka Brāhmaṇa,<sup>1861</sup> Aruṇi Up., Parāśara (in prose) to the effect that a yati may beg for food from members of all varnas. Baud. Dh. S. II 10 69<sup>1862</sup> also quotes a verse which allows the begging of food from all varnas to a yati. Vas. X. 7 requires a yati to beg at seven houses not selected beforehand and in X. 24 states that he should subsist on what food he gets at the houses of brāhmaṇas.<sup>1863</sup> The present text requires even the yati to observe caste rules as to food.

41. 'Not using for ten days fresh rain water' (l. 33). Haradatta on Āp. Dh. S. I 5. 15. 2, Bhattoji on Catur. (p. 54), Sm. Kau. p. 479 quote a verse, 'she-goats, cows, she-buffaloes and brāhmaṇa women become free from impurity (due to delivery) after ten nights and so does fresh rain water accumulated on the ground'. According to this the long period of ten days in the case of rain water is set aside. But Bhattoji notes that according to another smṛti 'rain water falling at the proper season is pure, but it is not to be used for drinking for three days; when rain falls at an unusual season rain water is impure for ten days and if a man drinks it within that period he should abstain from food for one day and night'. Bhattoji remarks that the Kaliavarjya text only sets aside waiting for ten days, but does not set aside the rule against drinking it for three days.

The ancient practice was to make no agreement as to fees for teaching. Vide Br. Up. IV. 1, 2. Gaut. (II. 54-55) prescribes<sup>1865</sup> that at the end of his studies the student should request the teacher to accept the wealth that he could offer or ask the teacher what should be given and after paying or doing what was required by the guru or if the teacher permitted him to go without demanding anything the student should take the ceremonial bath. Vide Manu II 245-246 and H. of Dh. vol. II, pp. 360-361 for details. Yāj. I. 51 provides that at the end of his studies the student may give to the teacher what he desires (or a cow) according to his ability or may with his permission take the ceremonial bath (without paying anything). On account of these provisions we have stories in the ancient literature that very rarely teachers or their wives made fanciful demands. This Kalivarjya text only sets aside the requirement of paying what the guru demands, but does not prohibit the voluntary gift of a fee by the student.<sup>1866</sup>

43. 'The engagement of a sūdra for such acts as cooking and the like in the houses of brāhmanas and the rest' (1. 34). Āp. Dh. S. (II. 2. 3 1-8) requires that<sup>1867</sup> the food for Vaiśvadeva should be prepared by pure men of the first three varnas and also optionally allows a sūdra to be a cook for an ārya provided he is under the supervision of men of the first three varnas, provided he sips water whenever he touches the hair, any limb or his garment, provided he cuts the hair (on his head and his body), the beard and nails every day or every 8th day of the month or on the new and full moon day and provided he bathes with the clothes on. It is this permission that is set aside by this Kalivarjya text.

Aparārka (p. 536) quotes several smrtis to the effect that a very old man or one suffering from very serious illness, one who has no desires left and has carried out his tasks may bring about his death by entering fire or water or falling from a precipice and he will incur no sin. Vide H. of Dh. vol. II. pp. 926-927 for further details. This text may also be taken as forbidding suicide by falling from a precipice or into fire as an expiation in the case of those that are guilty of mahāpātakas knowingly committed. The Mit. on Yāj. III. 226 quotes a smṛti to this effect<sup>1869</sup> The Śuddhitattva holds (pp. 284-285) that suicide by entering water and the like is allowed in Kali only to śūdras and forbidden to brāhmaṇas and others.

Manu V. 128, Vas. III. 35, Baud. Dh. S. I. 5. 65, Yāj. I. 192, Viṣṇu 23. 43 provide<sup>1870</sup> that water collected on the ground is pure and may be used for ācamana provided it is sufficient in quantity to slake the thirst of a cow. But this text forbids on hygienic grounds the use of small quantities of water collected on the ground for sipping and similar purposes.

Śāṅkha (VII. 6) states that an ascetic should stay in an empty house or he may stay wherever he may be when the sun sets. This provision of Śāṅkha is set aside by the Kalivarjya text. Another meaning of the words, according to Kṛṣṇabhāṭṭa on the Nir. S. (p. 1310), is that this runs counter to the recommendation of Manu VI. 56 that an ascetic should go for begging to the houses in a village in the evening when all smoke from kitchens has ceased i. e. by this text he is allowed to beg in the noon. In a way this appears to be a better explanation.

The above is a complete list of all Kalivarjyas quoted from the Ādityapurāṇa (except one or two). Some of the Kalivarjyas not included here, but included in other texts cited above will also be now set out for the sake of completeness of treatment.

47. 'Resorting to sannyāsa'. Vyāsa quoted above (n. 1793) forbade sannyāsa in the Kali age after 4400 years of it had elapsed, but then Devala<sup>1872</sup> made an exception to this extent that as long as the division of society into four varṇas existed and as long as the Veda was studied sannyāsa could be resorted to even in Kali. The Nir. S. explains that what is forbidden is the sannyāsa with three daṇḍas and not the sannyāsa with one daṇḍa. Baud II 10. 53 (ekadaṇḍī vā) gives an option that a sannyāsin may carry three staffs or one, while Yāj III 58 speaks of a yati as only tridaṇḍī. Daṇḍa means a staff and also 'restraint, curbing'. Manu XII 10 (same as Dakṣa VII 30) declares that that man is called tridaṇḍī who has restraint over his body, speech and mind. Dakṣa<sup>1873</sup> also says that a yati is not called tridaṇḍī by carrying three bamboo staffs, that he is called tridaṇḍī who has the spiritual restraint in him (v. 29) In l. 12-13 Dakṣa says that just as a girdle, deer skin and a wooden staff are the outward signs of a vedic student, so three staffs are the peculiar sign of a yati. Vide H. of Dh vol II. pp. 937-938 for further details. If the Kaliyuga text were meant to forbid sannyāsa altogether, it must be said that it was never honoured and even now thousands become sannyāsins every year. If, as the Nir. S. says, this text only forbids the carrying of three dandas, it is a meaningless prohibition, giving importance only to outward symbols and not to the substance of the matter.

48. 'The observance of agnihotra' or 'the acceptance of three fires'. Vyāsa (n. 1793) forbade the performance of śrauta agnihotra along with sannyāsa in Kali, but an exception was made by Devala in favour of its observance as also of resort to sannyāsa on the grounds stated above (in No. 47). Some digests and authors such as the Nirnayasindhu<sup>1874</sup> and Bhaṭṭoji explain that agnihotra of the sarvādhāna type is forbidden in Kali, but that of the ardhādhāna type is allowed. Agnihotra means 'ādihāna', that is, setting up of the śrauta fires. When a man consecrates the three śrauta fires he may do so with half of his smārta fire and keep up the other half of the smārta fire. This is called ardhādhāna. If he does not keep the smārta fire separate, it is sarvādhāna. Laugākṣi quoted by the Nir. S. (III. p. 370), Bhaṭṭoji and others states this. The Mit. on Yāj. III. 45 mentions these two modes. Therefore, according to these explanations, sarvādhāna was allowed in former ages (and acc. to one interpretation up to 4400 years of Kali), while in Kali (or at least after 4400 years of Kali) only ardhādhāna is allowed.

49. 'Human sacrifice' (vide note 1798 giving extract from Nārada-purāṇa).

The Tai. Br.<sup>1875</sup> (III. 4. 1-19) contains a description of the procedure of human sacrifice. The oldest texts even do not show that a human being was killed. The whole procedure is symbolical. The Vāj. S. (XXX. 5 ff.) has many passages in common with the Tai. Br. The Tai. Br. III. 4. 1 (= Vāj. S. 30. 5) begins, 'the brāhmana should be offered to brahman (spiritual power), the ksatriya to ksatra (military power), the vaiśya to the Maruts' &c. Acc. to Āp. Śr. XX. 24, a brāhmana or ksatriya performs this sacrifice, whereby he attains power and valour and all prosperity. There are eleven sacrificial posts and eleven animals to be offered to Agni and Soma. After the rite of paryagnakarana is performed on the brāhmana and others, they are presented to the several deities and then discharged from the sacrificial posts, eleven goats are killed and oblations of their flesh and limbs are offered. Acc. to the com. on Vāj. S., it is begun on the 10th day of the bright half of Caitra and goes on for 40 days, which are occupied with 23 diksās, 12 upasads and five *sutya*s (days on which soma is extracted). After this yāga, the yajamāna usually resorted to a forest as a sannyāsin.<sup>1876</sup>

50. 'Aśvamedha' (n. 1798). The Tai. S. V. 3. 12. 2 states,<sup>1877</sup> 'he who performs the Aśvamedha becomes free from (the sin of) brāhmana murder'. In spite of this Vedic authority the Brhan-Nāradya and other purāṇas prohibited it. But no one heeded this prohibition and numerous historic kings performed this sacrifice from at least 200 B. C. to Jayasing in the 18th century A. D. Vide H. of Dh. vol. II pp. 1238-1239 and pp. 70-71 above for numerous historical performers of Aśvamedha.

51. 'Rājasūya' (acc. to the Garudapurāṇa, p. 929 above). This was a very complex rite extending over two years and could be performed only by a ksatriya. Vide H. of Dh. vol. II pp. 1214-1223 for a brief description. The Rājasūya was performed by the Kalinga Emperor Khāravela as he proclaims in his Hathigumpha Inscription (E. I. vol. XX p. 71 at p. 79) and by queen Nāyanikā as stated in the Nānāghāt Inscription (A. S. W. I. vol. V. p. 60).

52. 'Perpetual studenthood' (n. 1798). Vedic students were of two kinds, upakurvāṇa (who offered some return or fee at the time when they returned home) and the naisthika (who remained students till death). Vide p. 764 n. 1471 above.

Hārta, Dakṣa<sup>1878</sup> (I 7) and others mention these two varieties, while Yāj. I 49, Vedavyāsa I 41 and Viṣṇu Dh. S. 28. 46 name and describe the naisthika. Manu II. 243-244, Yāj. I. 49-50, Vas. VII. 4-5 provide that a perpetual Vedic student should stay with his teacher till his own death, that on the teacher's death he should stay with the teacher's son or the teacher's wife or should tend fire, that if he curbs his senses till his death, he reaches the world of brahma (immortality) and is not born again. This was a very difficult mode of life, there were great temptations as the flesh is weak and therefore the Brhan-Nāradya and others prohibited perpetual studenthood. Some works such as the Madanapārijāta (p. 16), the Kalivarjyavinirṇaya of Dāmodara, and the Nir. S. read 'dirgha-kālam brahmacaryam' in place of 'naisthikam brahmacaryam' in the Brhan-Nāradya.

53. 'Brahmacarya for long periods' (n. 1799). The Band. Dh. S. (I.2.1-5) declares, "the term of studenthip for Veda study as observed in ancient times lasted for 48 years, or 24 years, or 12 years for each Veda or at least one year for each kāṇḍa (of the Tai.S.) or it lasted till the Veda was committed to memory, as life is evanescent and as the Veda ordains 'let him kindle the sacred fires while his hair is still black'." The Āp. Dh. S. (I.1 2. 11-16) provides that the student's stay with the teacher's household should be 48 years, 24 years or 12 years at the lowest. Manu III. 1 also states that the vow of studying the three Vedas under a guru must be observed for 36 years or for half of that time or for a quarter of it or until the student has mastered (the Veda). These long periods of 48 years, 36 or 24 years for Veda study (before a man could become a householder) are here forbidden in Kali. This was nothing new. Yāj. I. 36 had allowed 12 years for each Veda or five and if a man did not want to study all vedas but only one he could finish his studenthood in five years. Only an extremely small number could have spent 48 or 36 years in Veda study. Śābara on Jai. I. 3. 3 held that this text of Band. was opposed to the śruti about kindling fires when a man was a young householder with black hair and was to be discarded. Vide pp. 832-834 above for a discussion of this. The authors of the Samayamayūkha and the Sm. Kau. both of whom had before them the reading 'dirghakālam brahmacaryam' held that this prohibition was aimed at the words of Āp. and Baud. and that the vow of perpetual studentship which was undertaken with a special purpose in view (viz. realization of brahma and non-return to saṃsāra) was not prohibited by the Kalivarjya text and that there was nothing wrong in the practice of perpetual studentship among the Dravidas.

54. 'Animal sacrifice.' In the Mārkaṇḍeya as quoted in Aparārka p. 929 above animal sacrifice was forbidden in the Kali age. Though popular feeling had gradually veered round to the view that meat should not be offered in śrāddhas, in madhuparka (No. 22 above), yet animal sacrifices were performed at all times and are even now performed, though very rarely.

55. 'Intoxicating drinks (madya)'. There were startling vicissitudes in the attitude to intoxicants.

In Vedic times soma was a beverage drunk by the priests and surā was a beverage for common men and usually not meant to be offered to the gods. Soma and sura are sharply distinguished (vide Tai. S. II. 5. 1. 1, Vaj. S. 19. 7, Sat. Br. V. 1. 5. 28). The Śat. Br. (V. 1. 5. 28) has the striking antithesis 'For, Soma is truth, prosperity, light; and surā is untruth, misery, darkness'. In the Sautrāmanī isth a brāhmana had to be hired for drinking the dregs of surā offered in it and if a brāhmana could not be found the surā was poured on an ant-hill (Tai. Br. I. 8. 6 and Śābara on Jai. III. 5. 14-15). It appears from the Kāthaka-saṃhitā XII. 12 that<sup>1879</sup> brāhmanas had by that time come to regard the drinking of surā as sinful. From Chān. Up. V. 10.9 it appears that a drinker of surā was enumerated among five grave sinners. In the Āśv. gr. II. 5. 3-5 it is said that in the rites of the Anvastakā day when pindas are offered to the male ancestors, the female ancestors viz. the mother, the paternal grandmother and great-grandmother are offered surā and the scum of boiled rice in addition<sup>1880</sup>. The Nir. S. (III.

p. 367) refers to this passage of the Āśv. Gr. and holds that the Kalivarjya text against intoxicants forbids this also.

Madya is a generic term applicable to all intoxicating drinks; surā is said to be of three kinds, viz that prepared from molasses, that from honey (or madhūka flowers or from grapes) and that from corn flour (Manu XI. 94, Visnu Dh. S. 22. 82 and Saṁvarta 117). The Visnu Dh. S. (22. 83-84) specifies ten kinds of madya, all of which a brāhmana was not even to touch. Gaut. II. 25<sup>1881</sup>, Āp. Dh. S. I. 5. 17. 21, Manu XI. 95 forbid all kinds of madya to brāhmanas at all stages of life. Āp. I. 7. 21. 8, Vas. I. 20, Manu XI. 54, Visnu Dh. S. 35. 1 hold that the drinking of surā is one of the five grave sins (mahāpātakas), while Yāj. III. 227 employs the word 'madya' in place of surā in this connection. Baud. Dh. S. I. 1. 22 however notes that among the five practices peculiar to the brāhmanas of the north was that of drinking rum and Baud. condemns it. The verses of Manu XI. 93-94 about the three kinds of surā have been the subject of frequent and varying interpretations. Viśvarūpa on Yāj. III. 222, the Mit. on Yāj. III. 253, Aparārka p. 1069 and others establish that the word 'surā' primarily applies to paistī (liquor prepared from flour) alone, that paistī is forbidden to all brāhmanas, ksatriyas and vaiśyas, that it is the drinking of paistī alone that constitutes a mahāpātaka, that all intoxicating drinks are forbidden to brāhmanas in all ages, but intoxicants other than paistī (such as those prepared from molasses or madhūka flowers) are not forbidden to ksatriyas and vaiśyas. Manu XI. 93 says that surā is the refuse of cooked food (rice); therefore members of the three higher castes should not drink surā. This clearly shows that Manu took surā as meaning only paistī (liquor prepared from rice flour). The Visnu Dh. S. (22. 84) expressly says that ksatriyas and vaiśyas are not polluted by touching the ten kinds of madyas specified by it. In the Udyogaparva (59. 5) both Vāsudeva (Kṛṣṇa) and Arjuna are described as intoxicated by drinking the liquor prepared from honey and the Tantravārtika establishes that there was nothing wrong in this as both were ksatriyas. Intoxicants were not forbidden to śudras. Brahmacārins of whatever varna had to abstain from intoxicants of all kinds. Aparārka<sup>1882</sup> (p. 63)

after quoting the Brahmapurāṇa states that intoxicating drinks were forbidden to the three varnas in Kali and to brāhmanas in all yugas (ages). But this is opposed to tradition. The Ādiparva (chap. 76) narrates<sup>1883</sup> that Śukrācārya prohibited for the first time brāhmanas from drinking intoxicants (vide H. Dh. vol II. pp 792-799 for detailed discussion of this topic). The Kalivarjya text forbids the drinking of intoxicants to all the three twice-born classes. But ksatriyas and vaiśyas pay scant attention to this prohibition and even some brāhmanas in these days have taken to drink as a fashionable indulgence. The K. V. N. (folio 5a), Kṛsnabhāṭṭa<sup>1884</sup> and Sm. Kau. note that in the śākta treatises (called Vāmāgama) madya is allowed to be offered to the idol for all the three varnas and to ksatriyas in the propitiatory rites for Vināyaka and for birth on the Mūla constellation but this kalivarjya text forbids all that.

An analysis of these 55 kalivarjyas yields very interesting results. About one-fourth out of the above 55 relate to Śrauta matters. There are several texts forbidding Agnihotra, Asvamedha, Rājasūya, Purusamedha, sattras, Gosava, animal sacrifices, while a few others are concerned with matters of detail in sacrifices (vide No. 11, 14-16, 29-30, 38, 48-51, 54). The first nine of these 55 are concerned with legal matters and relations. Some prohibitions are due to growing caste exclusiveness (No 5, 10, 31, 40, 43). Others again spring from ideas of greater insistence on the sacredness of the marriage tie, a stricter morality and a demand for greater decency and purity, particularly in women (No. 2, 3, 4, 9, 15, 23, 24, 33, 39, 55). A few are based on notions of compassion, justice and equity (No 1, 8, 24, 25, 42). Some owe their origin to the growing sacredness of the brāhmaṇa's person and his high social position (No. 7, 10, 27, 29, 30). Some must have been suggested by hygienic considerations (No. 12, 16, 28, 38, 41, 45), some arose from strict ideas of sin, expiation and ceremonial purity and impurity (No 13, 18-21, 28, 44). Two of these, when they prohibit the stage of forest hermit and of sannyāsa, strike at the very root of the ancient scheme of āśramas.

The chapter on Kaliyarjyas can be employed as a very effective answer to those who trot out the theory of the 'unchanging East'. Social ideas and practices undergo substantial changes even in the most static societies. Many of the practices, that had the authority of the Veda (which was supposed to be self-existent and eternal) and of such ancient smrtis as those of Āp, Manu and Yāj, had either come to be given up or had become obnoxious to popular sentiment. This fiction of great men meeting together and laying down conventions for the Kali age was the method that was hit upon to admit changes in religious practices and ideas of morality. The Kaliyarjya texts are also a complete answer to those who hold fast to the notion that dharma (particularly ācaradharma) is immutable and unchangeable (aparivartaniya). This chapter on Kaliyarjya unmistakably shows how the most authoritative dicta of the Veda and of ancient sages and law-givers were set aside and held to be of no binding authority because they ran counter to prevailing notions and furnishes a powerful weapon in the hands of those who want to introduce reforms in the incidents of marriage, inheritance and other matters touching modern Hindu society. One can further see how some practices still persist in spite of the prohibitions in the Kaliyarjya texts viz. marriage with one's maternal uncle's daughter, sannyāsa, agnihotra and even śrauta animal sacrifices (rarely).

Some works add two more to the Kaliyarjya verses which mean, 'imprecations, omens, dreams, palmistry, listening for supernatural voices or messages, promises to make presents to a deity if a certain prayer were granted, prophetic replies by astrologers to questions, may rarely turn out to be true. One should not, however, resort to these through the desire to secure results from them. Similarly there are other actions also (that have to be abandoned) in the Kali age, because they have come to be included (by people) under improper acts (adharma)' 1885

From the fact that no ancient smṛti speaks of Kalivarjya, that the ancient commentaries of Viśvarūpa, Medhātithi and even Vijñāneśvara do not cite long lists of Kalivarjyas, that such lists first make their appearance in the Smṛtyarthasāra, the Sm. C. and Hemādri (works and authors of 12th and 13th centuries), the most probable inference is that these lists of Kalivarjyas were first put together at the earliest in the 10th or 11th century A. 1886 An attempt at a systematical collection of the Kalivarjya texts and elucidation thereof was made by me in a paper submitted to the 8th All India Oriental Conference held at Mysore in December 1935. The paper was published in the Journal of the Bombay Branch of the Royal Asiatic Society, vol. 12 pp 1-18 (New Series), 1936. Recently (1943) Mr Batuknath Bhattacharya has published a book which contains a full treatment of Kalivarjyas. He states in the preface that it is 'an exact reprint of the thesis for Jogendrachandra Ghose Research Prize in Comparative Indian Law for 1933', that the subject is 'comparatively fresh and unexplored' and that the treatment is on lines marked out by the writer himself. He claims that his work is 'original as a whole except one section on secondary sons'. He does not state exactly in what year the thesis for a prize of 1933 was submitted to the Calcutta University. Presumably a thesis for a prize of 1933 should have been submitted in 1934 or 1935 at the latest. No satisfactory explanation is given why the thesis was published in 1943, so long after the year of the prize, nor does he mention my paper published so far back as 1936. It appears from quotations in the book as printed that it was probably retouched, if not actually written, after 1937. For example, on p 76 he quotes a passage from the Smṛtimuktāphala (section on Varnāśrama p. 201), which was published by Principal J. R. Gharpure only in 1937 in Devanāgarī. If the original thesis was written or revised in or after 1937 my paper published in 1936 should have been mentioned. Mr Batuknath Bhattacharya in his paper 'the sources of dharma and their comparative authority' published in the Proceedings of the 10th Oriental Conference at Tirupati held in 1940 refers to my paper on Kalivarjyas (p. 160) as 'brief and compact'. This shows that he knew my paper years before he published his work in 1943. The claim of the subject being 'unexplored' and the thesis being 'original' is hardly admissible.

CHAPTER XXXV

CUSTOMS IN MODERN INDIAN LAW

Though an elaborate treatment of customs in modern Anglo-Indian Law is far beyond the scope of the present work, yet a few words on customs in modern times may not be altogether out of place here. When the British began to acquire political domination in India they realized the importance attached to customs by all persons in India and the Charter of the Mayor's court at Bombay in 1753, unconsciously following the ancient dicta of Manu ( VII. 203 ) and Yaj ( I. 343 ), contains the earliest trace in British royal charters of a reservation to the peoples of India of their laws and customs.<sup>1887</sup> The British Parliament and the Indian Legislatures have allowed customs to occupy a very high place in the administration of law and justice. The preamble to 21 Geo. III chap. 70 ( 1781 A. D. ) recited that one of the purposes for which the Act was passed was that the inhabitants of Bengal, Bihar and Orissa should be maintained and protected in the enjoyment of all their laws, usages, rights and privileges and sec. 17 of that Act provided among other things that, in the case of the inhabitants of Calcutta, their inheritance and succession to lands, rents and goods and all matters of contract and dealing between party and party shall be determined in the case of Mahomedans by the laws and usages of Mahomedans and in the case of Gentus by the laws and usages of Gentus<sup>1888</sup> and, where only one of the parties shall be a Mahomedan or Gentu, by the laws and usages of the defendant. 37 Geo. III chap. 142 ( 1796 A D ), sec 13, Bombay Regulation IV of 1827, sec. 26, the Government of India Act of 1915 ( 5 and 6 Geo V chap 61, sec. 112 ), Government of India Act 1935 ( 25 Geo. V chap. 2, sec 223 ), the 1888. The word 'Gentu' ( or Gentoo ) was the Portuguese word for 'Gentile' and appears to mean a pagan inhabitant of Hindustan who is not a Mahomedan. Its use in a judicial document first occurs in the judgment of Lord Chief Justice Willes in Omichand v. Barker ( Durnford's Reports of cases, 1737-1769, p 538 ) Vide on the word Gentoo 'Khojas and Memons case' in Perry's Oriental cases 110, 123 and Lopes v Lopes 5 Bom. H. C. R. ( O. C. Madras Civil Courts Act (III of 1873, sec 16), the Bengal, North-west Provinces and Assam Civil Courts Act (XII of 1887 sec. 37), Central Provinces Laws Act (XX of 1875, sec 5), the Oudh Laws Act (XVIII of 1876, sec. 3), the Bengal Laws Act (XVI of 1872, sec 5) enact that the custom of the parties or of the defendant shall be the rule of decision in matters of succession and inheritance, marriage, caste, religious institutions and the like.

The burden of proving a custom opposed to the general law or in derogation of the ordinary rights of another lies heavily on the person alleging it.<sup>1889</sup> The decided cases lay down several essentials of a valid custom. In order to make a particular custom valid it must be proved to be immemorial or ancient, uniform, certain, reasonable, obligatory and it must not be immoral or opposed to public policy or to any express enactment of the Legislature. What antiquity must be proved before a custom can be accepted as valid depends upon the circumstances of each case.<sup>1890</sup> When it is said that a custom must be ancient it is not meant that the antiquity must be carried back to a period beyond the memory of man. According to the Mit. on Yāj. II. 27 smārta-kūla (time within living memory) in relation to possession means a period of one hundred years, while according to Kātyāyana and Vyāsa it is only a period of sixty years.<sup>1891</sup> On evidence of the prevalence of a custom even for 20, 30, 80 or 90 years the Courts have held that a presumption may arise that the custom is ancient and that if the presumption is not rebutted the Court may accept it as a valid and ancient custom.<sup>1892</sup> Many instances have generally to be adduced for proof of a custom. No hard and fast rule can be laid down about the number of instances required to prove a custom.<sup>1893</sup> In certain cases it has been held that specific instances are not absolutely necessary, but the opinions of persons likely to know the existence of the custom is entitled to great weight, even though they may not be able to cite specific instances.<sup>1893a</sup> Customs once prevalent, particularly family customs, may come to be discontinued on account of accident, change in popular sentiment or by the concurrent will of all the members concerned.<sup>1894</sup> Customs must be strictly construed and cannot be extended by analogy or parity of reasoning. Because in a particular caste marriage with a maternal uncle's daughter is allowed by custom it does not follow that marriage with a maternal aunt's or paternal aunt's daughter will necessarily be valid. Vide H. of Dh. vol II p. 467 notes 1095-6. The evidence about a custom should be such as to prove the uniformity and continuity of the usage, the conviction of those following it that they were acting in accordance with law and the consciousness of obligatoriness and the custom should not spring from mere habit, imitation and ignorance or mutual arrangement.<sup>1895</sup> A custom must not be unreasonable. A custom of excluding daughters from inheritance was held to be not unreasonable according to the ideas of the Hindu community.<sup>1896</sup> A custom that only members of certain castes (and not of others) were entitled to make use of a temple and to worship therein was held not unreasonable in India, though it may appear obnoxious to cultured people at the present day.<sup>1897</sup>

A custom which authorizes a woman of the lower castes to contract a second marriage without divorce on payment of a certain sum to the caste was held to be immoral<sup>1899</sup> and the Bombay High Court refused to recognize the authority of the caste to declare a marriage void or to give a woman permission to remarry without a release from the husband.<sup>1900</sup> The adoption of girls by dancing girls (nauts) has not been recognized by the Bombay High Court,<sup>1901</sup> though the Madras High Court would recognize such an adoption if there was no intention to make it for purposes of prostitution.<sup>1902</sup> Dagger marriages are practised among certain castes. The Brahmapurāṇa (chap. 111. 15 and 44-46) states that among ksatriyas there are several forms of marriage such as forcibly carrying away the bride (which is the form called rāksasa) or marriage with the weapons (of the bridegroom). In modern times dagger or sword marriages have not been held valid by the courts even among śūdras; vide Maharaja of Kolhapur v. Sundaram 48 Mad. 1, Ram Saran v. Mahabir 61 I. A. 106.

Many customs and usages have been expressly forbidden by the Central Indian or Provincial Legislatures e. g. Sati<sup>1903</sup>, female infanticide,<sup>1904</sup> slavery,<sup>1905</sup> marriages of children under a certain age,<sup>1906</sup> the dedication of women as devadāsīs to temples or idols.<sup>1907</sup> This being so, no court will allow a party to plead a custom against these positive enactments. It was recognised in a number of cases that in the Bombay Presidency<sup>1908</sup> a vatandar joshi had the right to recover by suit from a yajaman who had employed another priest to perform religious ceremonies the amount of the fees which would properly be payable to the vatandar joshi if he had been employed to perform such ceremonies and also the right to recover damages from a person who intrudes upon his office. But Bombay Act XI of 1926 (the Invalidation of Hindu Ceremonial Emoluments Act) now enacts (by sec. 4) that no person shall be entitled to claim as a matter of right any ceremonial emoluments from any Hindu who does not call in the services of the person claiming those emoluments. Therefore, suits of the nature described above cannot be brought now in Bombay by a vatandar joshi.

How customs and practices once prevalent may come to be discontinued or abrogated is well illustrated in the section on Kalivariyas. Some of those that have a legal bearing have been already discussed above.

NOTE 191

Long lists of high functionaries and other officers occur in several inscriptions. Vide E. I. vol. VII at p. 91 (Kahla plate of Sodhadeva), E. I. vol. XII at p. 40, E. I. vol. XIV at p. 327 (grant of Mahipāla). There are about 40 titles in some inscriptions. They are generally arranged in order of dignity and importance, the highest coming first. Sometimes several offices are held by the same man. For example, in the Jesar plate of Śīlāditya (dated in Valabhi year 357) the high officer Mammaka is styled 'sandhivigrahādhikṛta, divirapati, mahā-pratīhāra, sāmanta' (E. I. XXII at p. 120). It is not claimed that the following is a thoroughly exhaustive list. It is, however, exhaustive enough. Titles and dignitaries in South Indian languages have been generally omitted. Vogel stands for Dr. Vogel's work on 'Antiquities of Chamba State' where, on pp. 120-136, he furnishes informing notes on some officers. There is difference of opinion among scholars about the exact meaning of certain office names. The individual functions of several officers are not quite clear. The references given here as to where an office occurs are not exhaustive. Chronologically older references alone are generally given and they are mostly taken (so far as inscriptions are concerned) from the Epigraphia Indica (E. I.) and the Indian Antiquary (I. A.). Many official titles have the word 'mahā' prefixed without any change in meaning in some cases. Vide India Office Plate of Lakṣmanasena in his 27th year (E. I. XXVI. p. 1 at p. 7) for many official titles beginning with 'mahā'.

अक्षपटलिक—Vide Mahāksapaṭalika below. 'Aksapaṭala' means 'Account office' (Stein) or 'Record office' (Fleet). There is 'grāmāksapaṭalika' mentioned in the Harsacarita (VII, para 2). Vide Chandela plate dated saṃvat 1108 (E. I. XX at p. 128) and Candrāvati plate of Candradeva dated saṃvat 1148 (E. I. IX at p. 305). X p 365 of śake 532 (where the ājñapti is Durgapati), E I XII p. 3, E. I. XV p. 70 (plate of Sundara Cola) In the grant of the eastern Cālukya king Amma II we have 'ājñaptih katakādhiśo bhattadevasca lekhakah' (E. I. VII at p. 188). Vide p. 184 of the same for a discussion of the meaning

No 25 at p. 115 (of Mahārāja Sanksobha) or in the plate of Dronasimha in the Valabhi year 183 in E. I. XVI at p. 19 the words at the end are 'svayam-ājñā' the meaning is that the king employed no dūtaka to convey the details of his grant to the local officers but that he gave the details in person.

क्षत्र—Chamberlain. Vide p. 111 above. He is one of the 'ratnams'. According to Manu X. 16 and Yāj. I. 94 the offspring of a ksatriya woman from a sudra male was called ksattr and it is probable that such mixed offspring were employed as door-keepers or chamberlains.

क्षत्रप—A provincial chief. The word occurs in Corpus I. I. vol. II p. XXXIV and pp. 23, 28 (Taxila plate of Patika of the year 78) and in the plate of Vidagdha in 'Antiquities of Chamba', Ins. (āyasthanebhyasthaka) on Pāṇini IV. 2. 104. Vogel (p. 127) boldly asserts that 'the words śaulkika and gaulmika are unknown in Sanskrit Literature' in spite of Buhler's note in E. I. vol. I p. 2 at p. 7 that saulkikas are frequently mentioned in inscriptions. But śaulkika also occurs in Yāj. II. 173 and both words occur in the Mahābhāṣya. Gulma means a post of guards. Vide p. 141 above. The word 'gumike' read in the grant of Pallava Śivaskandavarman (E. I. vol. I p. 2 at p. 5) is correctly held by Buhler to stand for 'gaulmika'.

चाट—This word has given rise to various opinions. Fleet and Buhler translate as 'irregular soldiers'. Vogel (pp. 130-132) points out that Chamba is the only place where the ancient word 'cāta' is still extant in the modern form 'chat' meaning 'head of a pargana'. Grants of villages are often expressed as 'acātabhatapraveśya' (not to be entered by cātas and bhatas). For example, in the Surat plate of Maitraka Vyāghrasena (E. I. XI at p. 221) it is stated that the granted land was not to be entered by cātas and bhatas except for (seizing) robbers and those guilty of harm or treason to the king. Similar words occur in the Betul plates of Sanksobha in Gupta year 199 (acātabhatapraveśyam coradrohakavarjam) in E. I. VIII p. 287. Yāj I 336 states that it is the duty of the king to protect people from the harassment caused by cātas, robbers and kūyasthas and the Mit explains cāta' as persons who deprive people of their wealth after producing false confidence in them. Three quarters of the same verse occur in the Pañcatantra I p. 72 verse 343 Aparārka (p. 792) quotes Brhaspati that 'dangers common to all are those arising from cātas and thieves'.

Prof. Pathak while editing the Abhona plates of Sankaragana dated in Kalacuri samvat 347 in E. I. IX p. 296 quotes the words of Śankarācārya (tārkika-cāta-bhatarājapraveśyam) in his Bhāṣya on Br Up. and Anandagiri's explanation thereon viz. cātas are those that transgress the rules of conduct for decent people and *bhata*s are servants telling falsehoods. Vide the Valabhi grant of Dharasana II in 252 Gupta year (I. A. 15 p 187) and the Palitana plates of the same king and of the same year in E. I. XI p. 80 at p. 83 and the Banskhera plate of Harsa (E.
